REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 6th January 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly ...	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do. ...	475
*3	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Do.	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
4	The Dín Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	925
5	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do. ...	1,000
6	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do. ...	409
7	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
8	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,038
9	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do. ...	575
10	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do. ...	600
11	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do. ...	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*12	The Aranya Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly.	100
13	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly ...	555
14	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do. ...	100
15	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	450
16	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do. ...	260
17	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do. ...	275
*18	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do. ...	200
19	„ Daivadnyă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
20	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
21	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	425
22	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do. ...	140
23	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do. ...	116
24	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do. ...	100
25	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do. ...	285
26	„ Hitechhu	Kaládgi	Do. ...	85
27	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly..	400
28	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
29	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	145
30	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do. ...	130
*31	„ Karnátak Mitră[3a]	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
32	„ Kesari	Poona	Do. ...	3,500
33	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do. ...	125
34	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	300
35	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly ...	220
36	„ Mahárashtră Hitechhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,000
37	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do. ...	250
38	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do. ...	150
39	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do. ...	100
40	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly ...	700
41	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
42	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do. ...	103
43	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do. ...	250
44	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily ...	350
*45	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly ...	200
46	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti).	Do. ...	200
*47	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly ...	200
48	„ Saddharm Dip	Alíbág	Do. ...	600
49	„ Satyă Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	243
50	„ Satyă Sadan	Alíbág	Weekly ...	400
51	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	140
52	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly...	275
*53	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Weekly ...	200
54	„ Shiváji[3]	Poona	Do. ...	200
55	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do. ...	90
56	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do. ...	150
57	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do. ...	240

[1] Maráthi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English artic
[3a] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
58	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly	600
59	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly	250
60	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
61	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
62	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*63	„ Vinoda	Poona	Do.	200
64	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*65	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
66	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do.	400
67	„ Hitechhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
68	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	725
69	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
70	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
71	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
72	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
73	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
74	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
75	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
76	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	950
77	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
78	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
79	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
80	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
81	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do.	900
82	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Monthly	400
83	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
84	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*85	„ Gujarát Quarterly Journal	Do.	Quarterly	200
86	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Monthly	659
87	„ Jáme Jamshed	Do.	Daily	525
88	„ Kaira Vartmán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*89	„ Kaisar-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
90	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
91	„ Nágar Udaya	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
92	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
93	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
94	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
95	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
96	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
97	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
98	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	400
99	„ Stri Bodh	Do.	Monthly	533
100	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Do.	Do.	408
101	„ Tatwa Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár	Umreth	Fortnightly	62
*102	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
103	„ Vartmán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
104	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
105	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	300
106	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
107	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
	URDU.
*108	The Armagán	Bombay	Bi-weekly	200
109	„ Khayir Kháhe Islám	Do.	Fortnightly	300
110	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
111	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases, an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out; and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well-known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Approves of Mr. Gonne's minute regarding the advisability of giving true copies of documents to both parties in appeal cases.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 31st December states:—We have it on the authority of the Gujarâti newspaper that Mr. Gonne has recently urged in a minute the advisability of giving true copies of documents to both parties to suits coming up to Government on appeal from the Political Agent's decision. This may appear a very trifling matter. But to those who know how cases are decided and how appeals are almost invariably dismissed with the curt exasperating formula "Government decline to interfere," as also to those who know how difficult it is for defendants to obtain authenticated copies of proceedings or decisions, Mr. Gonne's action will commend itself as an earnest of the desire of Government to reform the administration of justice in protected States. The Political Agent or his Assistant, the Settlement Officer, the Boundary Officer, or the quasi-conciliator can settle matters under dispute as he likes, often in the dark; and the wretched men immediately concerned may not only have no chance of redress, but very often no material for appeal: nay, they may not know on what ground, by what law or under what treaty the ex-parte decision has been given! We are told of instances in which formal applications for copies of papers have been refused. The judge may send word to the parties that His Honor has decided to do so and so, and the parties must neither ask for papers nor venture to appeal. There may have been times and circumstances when summary and verbal decisions were expedient. But nothing can justify them now. Apart from the injustice of the thing in itself, it leads to intrigue and corruption of the vilest kind, because the parties will spare no effort and expense to obtain the information illegally which they are legally denied. We trust Mr. Gonne will lose no time in making his views known, though it is another question how much these views will be respected by the Báhádurs of Native States in the practical administration of justice.

Disapproves of the appointment of Military Officers as Political Agents at the Courts of Native States.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 31st December approves of the view taken by the Bombay Gazette of the practice of saddling Native Darbárs with Military Political Agents, and says:—We are not sure when and for how long this absurd arrangement was necessary. It will not do of course to say that Anglo-Indian soldiers have never made excellent statesmen. But generally speaking there has been a strong feeling at Native Courts against the appointment of Military Officers, which as a class they have done nothing to allay. The Political Department is packed close with younger sons for whom there is no other future, and what is done by the few really efficient officers to foster real friendship between the feudatories and the paramount power is often undone by these ignorant interlopers. The result is that the relations between the Darbár and the Foreign Office are often exceedingly strained, and if there happens to be an open rupture the Military Political Agents will be primarily responsible for it. The younger men are as a rule ignorant and overbearing, while the best of elderly Political Officers act generally in the capacity of maiden aunts at the head of well-endowed orphan families. In the case of the smaller States it would be no exaggeration to say that the Chiefs, their personalty, and even their territories are practically at the disposal of weak-minded and not unoften venal officers. Lord Ripon has inaugurated a splendid domestic policy, but its success will be incomplete if it fail to embrace a thorough reform in the relations of the Government of India with its feudatories.

Makes remarks regarding the present condition of the Hindus, and suggests remedies for its improvement.

The Saddharm Dip (48) for the Hindu month of Shráwan (August—September 1882) but received on the 24th December last, in an article headed "The Loyalty and Strength of the People of India," tries to prove that the people of India are not wanting in strength and pluck, but that they are reduced to the present state of depression by the overbearing attitude of the rulers towards them, the studious disregard of their interests and the incessant attempts to keep them down by denying every opportunity of making a display of their tact, valour and such other sterling qualities of which they are at present considered as devoid. The case of Native States is not quite different. The Political Agents in charge of Native States being the servants of the paramount power should properly speaking behave as subordinates of the allies of their sovereign, and such was their behaviour in former days. But now matters have assumed quite a different aspect. The Political Agent of the present day is the tutor and the preceptor of the Native Chief and the supervisor-general of the affairs transacted in the State under his charge. He has also another function to perform, and that is to keep a look out on the weak points in the administration and to watch for an opportunity for interference. The question then naturally arises, what is the cause of all this and how should this be remedied? The tendency of the present age is to trace these consequences to want of strength on the part of Natives. A presumption has of late found great favour with all classes that the Native of the present day is devoid of all pluck and life, that he is perfectly reconciled to a state of perpetual thraldom and is dead to anything like unity of interest. But a little consideration will show that this presumption is incorrect. The triumphs achieved by the Native troops during the late Afghan and Egyptian campaigns and the bravery and endurance shown therein have exacted praise even from their worst enemies, and were such as would have done credit to the foremost of nations in Europe. "Opportunities improve a man," says the proverb, and how should the military genius of a people come to the front without an opportunity being afforded to bring it to the test? It is like a plant which if well tended will sprout, bud and flower rapidly, but if left uncared for will waste itself in the desert air. Speaking of remedies for the amelioration of the present condition, the writer says that the effects of long continued oppression show themselves in a rising of the people. But that is not the proper way to improve things. If a ruler is determined to be unjust and persists in oppressing his subjects, their remedy lies in seeking the support of a powerful enemy of his and thus bringing him to his senses. But this step also does not lead to a proper solution of the difficulty inasmuch as there is no certainty that the foreign power whose aid is invoked will prove to be more tolerant, and that the change may not prove to be one from king log to king stork.

Criticises the speech delivered by Sir James Fergusson at Jalgaon.

With reference to the remark made by Sir James Fergusson in his recent speech at Jalgaon that he was glad to find the entire population of that place in a prosperous condition, and that there seemed little need for the Governor to frequently visit that part of the country as he could gather that the local officers were doing their best to consult the wishes of the people and to devise means to satisfy their requirements, the Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 4th January observes that it is essential to consider what has led His Excellency to form this opinion. Sir James visited one of the mills at this place, and a partner of the concern stated in the short address presented by him that the mill industry of that place had received a great stimulus from the assistance rendered by the Government officers. This statement may be quite correct, but it does not vouchsafe the inference that the entire population of Khándesh is happy and that all the officials of the district discharge their duties satisfactorily. The encouragement given by a few officials to one or two cotton mills cannot be sufficient to annihilate the poverty of the entire population of the district. To be able to form a correct notion regarding the exact condition of the people one must take notes of many matters concerning them. A great deal has been said about the wretched condition of the agricultural classes of this Presidency, and complaints have been made of the heaviness of the land revenue assessment and the rigour of levying it. Dr. Hunter in a thundering speech before the Viceregal Council recently denounced the present system of assessment and the mode of its recovery, and this has led the London Times to recommend an enquiry into this important subject. It is desirable therefore that Sir James Fergusson should utilize his present travels for the institution of strict enquiries into the condition of the agricultural population and for forming a correct opinion on the subject. The condition of the Khándesh cultivator does not much differ from that of the agricultural classes in other parts of the Presidency, and a searching inquiry will not fail to elicit the fact that there is still a great field for improvement. It is very satisfactory to find that the Viceroy is making the best of his opportunities for judging of the real wants of the people by visiting without previous intimation small and out-of-the-way villages. This is certainly the only means of making one's self well informed of the condition of the masses, and the Samáchár recommends that Sir James will do well to imitate the example of his superior.

Observes that the course suggested by Sir James Caird in connection with the growth of the Indian population relatively to the means of subsistence is only a temporary shift.

With reference to Sir James Caird's letter to the Times on the growth of the Indian population in relation to the means of subsistence, the Bombay Chronicle (65) of the 31st December observes that the miserable income of the great mass of the people in India is only sufficient to keep body and soul together. Sir James' idea is correct that the land now under cultivation could during each succeeding year be made to produce on an average one per cent. more than the aggregate of its present yield, so that the produce may be doubled in a hundred years and thus may keep pace with the growth of the population; but this by itself would afford a poor solace to the friends of India. At the end of the one hundred years the doubled population would find itself in a pitiable condition. The friends of India must therefore devise some means by which the people may be in a position to multiply the means of subsistence so as to enable them to advance further than they now are from the point of starvation, and acquire a competence similar to that of the moderately wealthy nations of Europe. Public men, whether official or non-official, having at their heart the welfare of India should seriously think of the solution of this problem of the improvement of the material condition of the people.

Disapproves of the law for levying certain taxes from the residents of the camp at Baroda.

The Jáme Jamshed (87) of the 4th January observes that the law recently passed by the imperial legislature for the purpose of imposing certain taxes on the houses and other property in the camp at Baroda has created great uneasiness among its residents. Since A. D. 1800, the year in which this camp was established, till the present day no tax of any kind has been levied on properties situated in it. About 15 years ago Captain Sheppard, the then Superintendent of the camp, proposed to levy some taxes from its residents; but on their appealing to the Bombay Government that officer was directed to desist from carrying out his proposals. Even supposing that the ground occupied by the camp belongs to the British Government, the reasons for making the new law are not obvious. The residents of the camp are poor and unable to bear the burden of taxes. Moreover the right of imposing taxes is said to belong to the Gáekwád. The attention of His Excellency the Governor of Bombay therefore is requested to the subject.

Prays for the concession of representation in the Legislative Councils.

The Gujaráti (84) of the 31st December repeats the old grievance that the non-official members of the different Indian Legislative Councils are the nominees of Government, who make these appointments more to please their favourites than to meet the requirements of the Councils; that most of these members are ignorant of their duties; that the number of non-officials is less than that of officials, who carry a point simply on account of their majority; that inappropriate laws are enacted, and that the observation that legislation without representation is tyranny is made good. The instances of the United States of America and of Italy are quoted, and His Excellency the Viceroy is requested to supplement the scheme of local self-government by the grant of the concession of representation in the Legislature.

Prays for an increase in the number of non-official members of the Legislative Councils of India.

The Samsher Báhádur (97) of the 5th January prays for an increase in the number of non-official members in the several Legislative Councils of India. At present very few Native gentlemen are appointed members, and those appointed are generally subservient to the wishes of the official members. Some of them are even ignorant of their duties. It is therefore natural that legislative enactments should not command the approval of the people. Some of them cannot be fully put into operation, and if they are fully enforced the people suffer. The frequent improvements in them are due to the same cause. When the Government of Lord Ripon has successfully launched the scheme of local self-governmnet, and when it thinks it advisable to give the natives of India a larger share than hitherto in the administration of the country, it is to be hoped that it will grant this prayer, whereby injustice to the people will be prevented.

Complains of the conduct of European officers in not paying sufficiently for what they get on their tours.

A correspondent of the Satyá Shodhak (51) of the 31st December complains of the hardship caused to the people by the tours of district officers. The European officers require green grass for their horses, which is procured through the Mámlatdár, who generally pays the coolies four pice as the price of each head-load. These coolies are sometimes required to travel a distance of 10 or 12 miles and lose a couple of days at a time. Besides they are required to cross small creeks by means of ferries and have to pay a pice for each trip. They also require at least two annas a day for their food. Under these circumstances does it behove Government officers to compel such poor people to sell their head-loads of grass below the price that they would fairly fetch in the market? European officers receive considerable salaries, and it is therefore but just that they should pay the market price for the grass they get. If the poor labourers complain of the insufficiency of the payment, the Mámlatdár's peon is ready to kick them out. In conclusion, the writer expresses a hope that the Collector of the district will take this matter into his serious consideration and remedy the evil complained of.

Complains of the evils of the Arms Act.

A correspondent of the Mahárásht'rá Mitrá (37) of the 4th January, while referring to the havoc recently committed by locusts in different districts, says :—The ryots argue that if they had pistols and other kinds of fire-arms they would have made an attempt to kill the locusts by their means, and that in their absence they were obliged to be the passive spectators of the destruction committed on their own lands and to suffer a serious loss of crops. The present policy of forest conservation has contributed in no small measure to afford refuge to wild beasts that do immeasurable harm to the crop. Will Government consider this subject seriously? It speaks very ill of our rulers that having acquired their kingdom by strength of arms they should lack the courage to entrust them to their subjects.

Remarks in connection with the scheme of sending Native engineers to England to study the technical details of their profession.

The Indian Spectator (l) of the 31st December, while approving of the scheme recently set forth by the Government of India for securing a practical training of Native Civil Engineers, suggests that the maximum age fixed for eligibility should be raised to thirty. Similarly the period fixed for receiving practical training is too short. Three instead of two years would amply repay the trouble of the long and expensive voyage, at the same time affording the candidate better opportunities to ground himself. As far as the spirit of the resolution is concerned, the people are profoundly thankful for it. But it is not explicit as to time, locality and number of candidates. The Supreme Government must notify that election will take place every one, two or three years in such and such provinces and of such and such a number. If the scheme is to do permanent good it must be placed before the public in all its details. It is to be hoped that it will not be a hole and corner arrangement and be extinguished after a year or two.

Disapproves of the contemplated resuscitation of the Cotton Frauds Act.

The Samsher Báhádur (97) of the 29th December does not see the necessity for reviving the hateful Cotton Frauds Act. Cotton merchants have had a very sad experience of the working of this Act, and it is not likely that they will resort to adulteration and thus court the evil once again. There is no necessity for interference on the part of Government, for it is much to the interest of the cotton merchants that they should come to some understanding between themselves. It is to be hoped that the merchants will not give any cause for complaint.

Requests the attention of Government to the prayer of the salt manufacturers of Shiroda.

The Dnyán Prakásh (7) of the 1st January publishes in extenso a memorial addressed to His Excellency the Governor in Council by the inhabitants of Shiroda in the Ratnágiri District on the subject of the closing of their salt pans, and remarks as follows:—The inhabitants of Shiroda pray that the idea of closing the salt pans in their village may be given up on account of the many evils which the step is calculated to produce among the people. Government already realize a revenue from the pans which is three times the profit derived by their owners. The investment of capital, the security of the mortgagees, the convenience of the people who pay the deficiency in the land revenue by drawing upon the income of the salt pans, and the working classes would no doubt receive a very heavy blow by a little effort of the pen on the part of Government. The memorialists have aptly referred to the benign desire at present entertained by our gracious Viceroy to encourage private enterprise, upon which the step contemplated by the Bombay Government will itself serve as a fair commentary. The present may be cited as an additional instance of the high-handedness on the part of Government at the suggestion of their officials. We indeed live in these days amidst a company of officials who are vying with one another in economising or adding to the public revenues. All taxes, both direct and indirect, are notoriously collected with a rigour and high-handedness which puts the bloody laws of Draco in the shade, and this is done under a system of government which has attained the reputation of being one of the most civilized of the present century. Every head officer has done his work and entitled himself to the laurels of Government if he can show that he has either increased or economised the Government revenue. That he does this at the same time presumptively by producing somehow or other greater comfort or convenience to the people is a matter of course. It is indeed much to be regretted that executive officers generally take a one-sided view in all matters. They strenuously neglect facts and see through the spectacles of their subordinates. If the head of any department of revenue has shown a better income it may be assumed as proved that he cannot have done so without trenching upon the purse of the masses to the same extent. They must see how far the ryot is already burdened, how far he is in a prospect of being burdened, and then pause to consider how far it would be prudent to add their own weight to his shoulders. The people already pay dearly for their firewood, their salt, and a great many of the other necessaries of life. [The Hitechhu (26) of Kaládgi and the Satyá Shodhak (51) of the 31st December and the Jagan Mitrá (29) of the 1st January express similar sentiments. The Poona Vaibhav (43) of 31st December also publishes the memorial and requests the attention of the Government of Lord Ripon to the subject.]

Heartily approves of the appointment of the Honourable Mr. Peile to the Executive Council of the Local Government.

The Gujaráti (84) of the 31st December congratulates the Honourable Mr. Peile on his appointment to the Executive Council of the Bombay Government. Mr. Peile can boast of 26 years' experience in this Presidency, and his work in Gujarát and Káthiáwár has elicited the warmest and most unanimous sympathy from the people. He is therefore best fitted for the post of Councillor, and there is reason to hope that his career will surpass that of all his predecessors in brilliancy. His nomination has been made at the instance of the Supreme Government, and since he is one of the supporters of the Viceregal scheme of local self-government, his presence will serve to remove the misunderstanding at present prevailing between the Supreme and the Local Governments. It is to be hoped that such an able officer will by guarding the interests and the rights of the people strain every nerve to gain a good name for himself, and thus justify the expectations of the people. [The Samsher Báhádur (97) of the 29th, the Suryá Prakásh (70) of the 30th December and the Ahmedabad Samáchár (71) of the 3rd January express similar sentiments.]

With reference to the report that with the object of reviving the Mhowra Bill the Government of Bombay have appointed a committee composed of Mr. Sheppard, the Commissioner, N. D., Mr. Mulock, the Collector of Thána, and Mr. Campbell, to ascertain the extent to which illicit distillation is practised in the Thána and Kolába Districts, the Kaisar-i-Hind (89) of the 31st December observes that the bill originated with the reports made by these officers, and it is therefore improbable that any good will result from an enquiry instituted by them. If Government are at all anxious to have correct information in the matter they would do well to appoint persons unconnected with the Revenue and Police Departments to serve on the committee. One or more of the non-official members of the local Legislative Council who opposed the bill might be nominated with advantage. Several of the 35 questions prepared by the committee for the examination of witnesses are leading questions, and it is essential that there should be some independent persons to test the answers.

Requests Government to appoint other than Revenue or Police Officers on the committee which is to enquire about the alleged extensive prevalence of the crime of illicit distillation of liquor in the Thána and Kolába districts.

The Samsher Báhádur (97) of the 29th December does not approve of the outcry raised by several newspapers of Bombay against the continuance of a game law in Káthiáwár. Whatever may be the necessity for its repeal in other parts of India, at any rate it ought to be kept in force in Káthiáwár. It is a matter of satisfaction that Colonel Barton has consulted the wishes of the people in this matter who are glad at its continuance. The majority of the inhabitants of Káthiáwár are Hindus. There is no particular class in that province which solely depends for its maintenance on game and which by the continuance of the game law will be driven to starvation. The people of that part of the country do not like to kill animals for purposes of food. They are engaged in agriculture and manual labour, and they do not consider the law objectionable as it does not interfere with their pursuits. The Baniás, who form the major portion of the inhabitants of Káthiáwár, get excited when birds are shot, and they try their best to protect birds from European officers who are fond of shooting.

Approves of the continuance of a game law in Káthiáwár.

The Káside Mumbai (90) of the 5th January is very glad to learn that the Duke of Connaught wishes to have a command in the Indian army. The bravery shown by the Indian contingent in the Egyptian War and the praises lavished on it have induced His Royal Highness to serve in India. There are no good grounds for Her Imperial Majesty the Queen-Empress to refuse the necessary permission. Indian Military Officers have no objection to his appointment for a short period to a command in the army. The people of India entertain a high opinion of him and are very anxious to welcome him. May he come out to India and see for himself the administration of the country!

Approves of the candidature of the Duke of Connaught for a command in the Indian army.

In noticing the speeches recently delivered in England under the auspices of the East India Association on the subject of India's share of the cost of the war in Egypt, the Lok Mitrá (68) of the 31st December observes that Mr. Hyndman effectually demonstrated the hollowness of the arguments put forward as a justification for requiring this country to pay for the expedition, the line of his arguments being substantially the same as that adopted by the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha. He remarked that for wealthy England to throw the cost of her Imperial war against Egypt on the shoulders of the miserably poor ryots of India would be an act of great meanness that could not fail to degrade the country in the eyes of the whole civilised world. This sentiment, though somewhat strongly expressed, will be generally endorsed. It is satisfactory to find that so many other distinguished English gentlemen are slowly beginning to realise the injustice of burdening India with the expenses of a war admittedly not undertaken for the protection of her interests. Some of the influential English papers too are raising their voice against the unfair proposal; and it is to be hoped that the agitation thus India should not be called upon to pay any portion of the cost of the Egyptian Expedition.

set on foot will still save British statesmanship from the unrighteousness of inflicting this heavy fine on this country. [The Rást Goftár (96) of the same date expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Makes remarks regarding the arrears of work in the Subordinate Judges' Courts at Málvan and Vengurla.

The Vengurla Vritt (61) of the 28th December 1882 says that an enquiry has been set on foot for determining the amount of work in the respective Subordinate Judges' Courts at Málvan and Vengurla. At present there are 80 cases in arrears in the Málvan Court, while the number of cases at Vengurla stands at 125. In the event of its being determined to abolish one of these Courts it would, in the opinion of the Vritt, be advisable to do away with the Court at Málvan and to transfer its present jurisdiction to the Court at Vengurla.

Notices a case against one of the influential merchants of Vengurla.

The same refers to a case in which a respectable merchant of Vengurla named Kalwa Yesha Prabhu Gadekar was sued by one Hari Bálkrishna Pai on a charge of breach of faith. The case was pending for seven months before Mr. Janárdan Ballál Behere, at the end of which period Mr. Wilson, the Collector of the district, decided that the suit was a civil one and that Mr. Behere had tried it unlawfully. The Vritt learns that Mr. Behere has been severely repremanded by the District Magistrate for having issued orders for the attachment of the property of the accused, but this would not appear to be an adequate punishment for subjecting a respectable person to the humiliation of a false prosecution and unlawful attachment of property. Mr. Gadekar has been put to a serious pecuniary loss and has suffered a deal of annoyance in this matter, and it is to be hoped therefore that the High Court of Judicature will take due notice of this case.

Is grateful to the Judges of the High Court of Bombay for the new rules for the examination of articled clerks to attorneys.

The Lok Mitrá (68) of the 31st December says:—We are grateful to Sir Charles Sargent and the other Judges of the High Court for abolishing the oppressive rule enacted during the administration of the late Chief Justice that articled clerks to attorneys of the High Court should have two chances of passing their examination in law, and that failure to pass at the second trial should debar them from ever after being admitted for examination. Under the rules which have been in force since 20th April last persons desirous of becoming articled clerks are required to be graduates of a University, except in certain special cases which need not be taken into account at all as far as Native students are concerned. With such a rule in force the harshness of debarring articled clerks after two opportunities of passing the examination had become strikingly apparent, and we are glad to see that the Judges have done away with such an unnecessary restriction. May we request them to turn their attention to another rule, which if possible is harsher still, by which candidates for the examination of advocates of the local High Court are practically allowed only one opportunity of passing the examination? The best of men may well shrink from such a venture, especially having regard to the very high standard of efficiency insisted upon by the examiners, which however we admit must be maintained; but we fail to see the necessity of such a stringent rule, which can only have the effect of forcing intending Native candidates to go to the trouble and expense of a visit to England, where the test prescribed for being called to the bar does not appear to be very stiff. [The Rást Goftár (96) and the Yajdán Parast (106) of the same date and the Bombay Punch (75) of the 6th January express similar sentiments.]

Expresses approval of the changes made in the rules for the examination of articled clerks.

With reference to the modifications made by Sir Charles Sargent in the rules for the examination of articled clerks, the Indu Prakásh (8) of the 1st January observes that Sir Charles Sargent, the new Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court, ere long promises to be one of the most popular Chief Justices that ever presided on the bench of the highest Court of Judicature in the Presidency. He has abolished that somewhat anomalous rule to which his predecessor had given sanction, that a candidate for the solicitor's examination appearing twice and failing to pass should not be allowed to appear any more. Hereafter candidates for the examination are required to take the B.A. degree, but they may continue appearing for the examination as often as they may like. Sir Michael Westropp's rule hindered many a person from appearing for the examination, and the removal of the unnecessary obstacle is likely to prove a blessing to many people. At all events it is something like an encouragement to Natives desirous of entering that line.

Disapproves of the prohibition to dry fish on land at Siwri belonging to the Port Trust of Bombay.

The Lok Mitrá (68) of the 31st December observes that the resolution passed at the last meeting of the Port Trustees prohibiting the fishermen at Siwri from drying fish on the Trustees' land at that place will cause a hardship not only to the fishermen themselves, who will thereby be deprived of their source of living, but also to the large class of poor people who subsist chiefly on dried fish. The Trustees should have allowed these poor people to dry fish at Siwri as they have been doing so long, and it is a pity that the practice should have been deemed objectionable after so long a time. If the land had belonged to a private individual something could be said in favour of the prohibition; but that the managers of Government land should for the sake of a paltry sum of money deprive a large number of poor people of their only means of support seems very hard indeed.

Complains of the inconvenience caused by ferry steamers not touching at Ratnágiri and other ports.

The Vengurla Vritt (61) of the 28th December complains that the ferry steamers do not at present touch at Ratnágiri and other intermediate ports between Goa and Bombay, nor do they take passengers for such ports. This has been a source of great inconvenience to passengers and calls for the immediate attention of the proprietors.

Suggests the dealing out of statistical information by Government at moderate rates.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 31st December, while reviewing the resolution of the Government of India on the subject of the statistics of the Jail Department in British India for the year 1881, remarks in limine that the number of the volumes of important documents issuing from the various departments and offices of Government, and the high cost that has to be paid for them, have served to keep the people in ignorance of the various subjects that concern them vitally; and suggests that Government may see their way to afford facilities for the attainment of such information as may be embodied in such published volumes by issuing gratis or at a nominal price all documents of interest or importance to the public press, libraries and other social bodies.

Suggests certain reforms in the present jail discipline.

The Dnyán Prakásh (7) of the 1st January, while reviewing a pamphlet by Mr. G. G. Agarkar entitled "Our 101 Days in the Dongri Jail," recommends for adoption by Government the following suggestions made by the writer relating to the reformation of the present jail discipline:—(1) That the prisoners should be allowed a certain percentage of the income derived from the produce of their labour. (2) That the prisoners should be trained in that art or profession which suits them most, as this will ensure their following it on their release from the jail and will serve to wean them from their mean propensities. (3) That the punishment of handcuffing, stocking, &c., which is awarded in cases of minor offences, should be dispensed with and that of starvation substituted in its place as the majority of the offenders committed to prison are prompted to the commission of crime by want of food and raiment. [The Khándesh Vaibhav (33) and the Lamp of Judaism (34) of the 29th and the A'ryávart (14) of the 30th December express similar sentiments.]

Advocates the tolerance of caste distinctions in jails.

The Prabhákar (44) of the 1st January refers to a statement contained in a pamphlet styled "Our 101 Days in the Dongri Jail" published by Mr. G. G. Agarkar to the effect that in the said jail no regard is paid to the distinctions of castes and creeds in the matter of the preparation and distribution of food. The institution of castes is a part and parcel of the Hindu religion and is much respected by all classes. It is therefore a violation of the sacred promises made by Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen in the matter of the noninterference of the rulers with the religious practices of the ruled. It behoves a tolerant Government therefore to remedy this evil and to allow due liberty to all prisoners confined in jails to observe their respective religious professions. The Prabhákar thinks that the introduction of this reform will go a great way in popularizing Government without entailing additional cost on the State.

Requests the Coroner and the police of Bombay to ascertain the real cause of the commission of suicide by a young Pársi lady of the Kharádi family.

With reference to the suicide recently committed by a young Pársi lady of the Kharádi family, the Akhbáre Sodágar (72) of the 1st January observes that it has been deposed to before the Coroner's jury that the deceased was subjected to ill-treatment and did not enjoy peace in her husband's family, and that the quarrels between her father's and her husband's families had reached the Girgaon Police Court. An ugly rumour in regard to this subject is current among the Pársis. The Coroner and the police should therefore leave no stone unturned in tracing the real cause of the suicide, and should make an example of the case by promptly bringing the offenders to justice. It is also to be hoped that the relations of the deceased will not be behindhand to serve the aims of justice by boldly coming forward and bringing before the public all the minute details that may be necessary in leading to a correct opinion on the merits of the event.

Objects to the practice of firing in public streets by Europeans.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 1st January invites the attention of the authorities to the evil of firing in the public streets of Bombay which has recently been made the subject of a communication appearing in the Bombay Gazette, and suggests that the Commissioner of Police should issue orders for the arrest and prosecution of offending parties. It is very likely that the suggestions of the writer in the Gazette will remain on paper, or perhaps, if at all, will lead to some measures being adopted to prevent the evil complained of in the city of Bombay. But in the mofussil matters will remain unaltered. No redress is there granted to the frequent complaints about the lives of Natives being lost by such harmful frolics of Europeans. The offenders being Europeans are allowed to escape scot-free, but the poor Natives lose their lives.

Asks the police of Bombay to find out the magicians who kill men by means of slow poison popularly called muth.

The Jáme Jamshed (87) of the 5th January observes that the magical means of accomplishing the death of an enemy popularly known by the term muth are nothing else than slow poisoning. The so-called magicians who are given to these diabolical practices ply their dangerous trade among the ignorant classes. Many such magicians may be found in Bombay, and if the detective police earnestly sets about the work of hunting them a good number of them will be found out. The detectives ought to take up this work in the interests of humanity and rid the community of these dangerous enemies of mankind.

Comments on a case of unlawful confiscation of property in Bengal.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 1st January gives the particulars, as gathered from the Bengali papers, of a case in which the property of a zamindár of Dozári in the Chitgaon District was confiscated on his death by the orders of the District Officer, notwithstanding the circumstance that the zamindár had by his will directed that his wife should be the sole proprietress of the estate and the guardian of a son aged 7 years, and the lady was prosecuted on the alleged charge of concealing the child, which was taken away by the police, and remarks as follows:—We are not sure that the facts of this case have been properly placed before the public, as in their present form they exhibit a gross miscarriage of justice which is not consistent with the character of the District Magistrate who is known for uprightness and a keen sense of justice. We suggest that measures should be adopted to ensure the possession of full information by the public regarding all such cases in which the conduct of Government officers is calculated to evoke adverse criticism. Reports of such matters should be published in full with an explanation of the reasons that may have led to the decision complained of. Government officers should also see that the public press gets faithful information in all matters, and should lose no time in contradicting any unfounded reports that may be getting an unwholesome currency. But above all the best remedy to guard against such evils is for the Government officials to do their work in a straightforward and legal manner without allowing themselves to be ruled by their bad passions.

The Ohháva (18) of the 31st December does not much relish the contemplated tour of the young Nizám of Hyderabad to Europe, and insinuates that it is simply a trick of the ambitious prime minister to gain a name for himself and an additional lease of power. It is certainly a great misfortune to be left an orphan in early boyhood, and it is much more so in the case of great men. The fact that His Excellency Sir Salar Jung has been placed in charge of the State during the minority of the Nizám does not give him the choice of doing what he pleases with the person of the young prince. It may be that Sir Salar Jung will make himself popular with European officials by such tricks, but it is certain that this policy will be viewed with positive dislike by the subjects of His Highness. What good does the prime minister calculate upon by this tour to Europe beyond the acquisition of some long-worded titles? And for this the State will have to sacrifice an amount of money equivalent to its revenue of several years. Moreover it is very questionable if the delicate health of the Nizám will be able to stand the climate of Europe. It is very discreditable to the prime minister that he should think of serving his own private aims at the sacrifice of the comforts of his master, over whose person he cannot be said to possess any control. Sir Salar Jung will do better to train the young prince in administrative affairs and thus prepare him for the approaching responsibilities.

Does not approve of the contemplated tour of the Nizám of Hyderabad to Europe.

The Bakul (15) of the 31st December expresses its approval of the views expounded by Mr. Dádábhái Navroji in his recent lecture on education touching the extensive employment of Natives in the public service. The Bakul observes that a great portion of the present misery of the educated Natives will be alleviated if the major portion of the fat appointments now monopolized by Europeans are set apart for and conferred on Natives. In the same manner a reduction in the salaries of places that are at present overpaid and the abolition of the superfluous offices will conduce greatly to the improvement of the finances, and will in the course of time make a remission in the burden of taxation feasible. [The Shiváji (54) of the 29th December expresses similar views.]

Advocates the employment of Native agency in administration.

The Gujarát Mitra (66) of the 31st December observes under the head "Local" that the public of Surat are only aware of the hours fixed by the head Post Office for receiving the letters to be "registered," but not of those appointed for the reception of such letters by the railway mail service receiving offices. This ignorance causes great inconvenience to the public inasmuch as letters that miss the hours of the head Post Office are kept over till the next day, though they could be received the same day if presented at the railway receiving office. It is desirable therefore that the Post Office authorities should take proper steps to acquaint the public of Surat and other places of this convenience.

Requests the Post Office authorities to acquaint the public of Surat and other stations of the newly created convenience for getting letters registered in the railway mail service receiving offices.

Forest Laws.

The Rást Goftár (96) of the 31st December observes that at the meeting recently held at Thána for the purpose of making a demonstration against the oppression practised by the officers of the Abkári and Forest Departments there were present, according to the latest information, 9,600 persons besides a large number of Káthodis and Wárlis who had collected in the neighbouring fields. This is the first time that such a large meeting has been held in India, and it resembles "mass meetings" held in England. Representatives from different villages graced the occasion, and the circumstance that they took the trouble of coming from great distances furnishes a reliable index of the enthusiasm and earnestness by which they were swayed. The large numbers present on the occasion proclaim in un-

Requests Government to remove the grievances of the people of the Thána District in regard to the Forest Act.

mistakeable terms that the meeting was a great success, and the degree of the success is heightened by the circumstance that when on the next day after the meeting a deputation waited on the Collector of the district with a petition explaining the grievances of the people that officer immediately promised to withdraw the prohibition placed on cutting and removing dry fuel and leaves from the Government forests, and on lopping the branches of all trees other than teak standing in private lands. The immediate grant of this concession also warrants the conclusion that the complaints made by the people were well founded. Certainly in this matter the persons entrusted with the working of the Forest Act are more responsible for the evil under advertence than the law itself, and the meeting has done well to represent this properly. The policy of forest conservancy is indeed unobjectionable on principle, and it is but just to prohibit the wholesale denudation of forests. But an abridgment of the right of cutting dry fuel and leaves to which the people are used is calculated to inflict a serious hardship on the people by depriving some classes of the means of obtaining their livelihood, others of the means of protecting themselves from the inclemency of the weather, and some more of the means of preparing their lands for cultivation. The authorities plead that they have no intention of interfering with the rights of the people, but that the prohibition complained of has been made in order to prevent thefts from the Government forests. The people are at liberty to cut fuel after obtaining a permit for the purpose on payment of the small fee of one pice. But the anomaly of this system will be apparent when it is known that people have to go long distances to get the pass, and have also to consult the convenience and the pleasure of Government officials, who can issue or refuse the pass at their own sweet will. Considerable time is thus lost before a permit is secured, and a deal of annoyance is caused to the parties concerned, which Government will do well to prevent.

Refers to the large meeting held at Thána for making a demonstration against the Forest Act.

The Khándesh Vaibhav (33) of the 29th December refers to the recent monster meeting held at Thána for the purpose of protesting against the oppression practised by district officers in exercise of the provisions of the Indian Forest Act, 1878, and remarks that the very fact of the convention of such a large meeting gives an idea of the annoyance that has been caused to the people by the working of the forest laws. At the bottom of this whole affair lies a proclamation issued by the Collector of Thána prohibiting the removal of forest produce of any kind from one táluka to another under any circumstances without a permit from the authorities of the Forest Department under the penalty of imprisonment for six months with an alternative of a fine of Rs. 500. It is superfluous to describe the inconvenience caused to the inhabitants of villages situated at great distances from the head-quarters by their having to travel great distances for obtaining a permit from Forest Officers even for carrying head-loads of fuel, leaves, &c. Here the Vaibhav gives an account of the affairs of the meeting and exhorts the people of Khándesh to take a lesson from the conduct of the people of Thána and to lose no time in representing their grievances to Government. [The Ganga Lahari (24) of the 29th December, the Dnyán Chakshu (5) of the 3rd January and the Mahárashtrá Mitrá (37) of the 4th January express somewhat similar sentiments.]

Complains of the inconvenience caused to the people by having to obtain a permit for removing forest produce.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 1st January, adverting to a letter in the Bombay Gazette from a correspondent signing himself "A Forester," who states that permission to take forest produce can be obtained by spending 3 pies and that when such permission is secured there is no objection to removing the produce from the forests, remarks:— It is true that the amount of fee for obtaining a permit is as low as 3 pies, but this convenience loses a good deal of its value by its being coupled with the trouble that has to be undergone in securing the permit. For this purpose the party has to go to the chief station of the district, and if the officer is away he has to follow him all the way through the whole of the district, and even when he meets the officer his convenience and whim have to be consulted in the matter, and all this for a permit of 3 pies! It will be better if such difficulties are removed.

The Hitechhu of Kaládgi (26) of the 31st December entertains serious apprehensions that an enhancement in the tax on fuel is in contemplation, and suggests that the authorities will do well to consider the present state of the people before venturing on such a measure. In the district of Kaládgi wood for the purposes of fuel can be found only in the Government forests in the Bádámi and Bágalkot tálukas. This wood is not fit for purposes of timber and until very lately was allowed to be felled gratis. Subsequently this privilege was abridged and people were allowed to carry fuel on payment of a moderate fee, the imposition of which was not felt by the people on account of their being then better off. This reconciliation of the people to the small tax emboldened Government officers to gradually enhance the fee to such an extent that matters have at last reached a crisis. Fuel is a necessary of daily life, and a family ordinarily requires a cart-load of fuel, which under the contemplated enhanced rate will cost Rs. 3 a month or nearly Rs. 40 a year, of which sum nearly Rs. 15 will go to the Government treasury in the shape of a tax. This indicates a very unsatisfactory state of things and should engage the early attention of Government. [A correspondent of the Kesari (32) of the 2nd January writing from Kaládgi makes a similar complaint.]

Complains of the contemplated enhancement in the tax on fuel.

Affrays between Europeans and Natives.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 31st December says:—To those officials who accuse the Native Press of fomenting class animosity between Natives and Europeans we recommend a perusal of the proceedings of two recent cases of assault and murder respectively in the North-West Provinces. The first case occurred at Shahjanpur, in which three Europeans stood charged with having assaulted a Native woman. Even ignoring the particulars, the most serious counts are so damaging to the defence that the accused can have no escape if justice takes its course. Witnesses for the defence, in fact the defendants themselves, confess to having brutally ill-treated the woman. The Judge stigmatises their conduct as brutal, and yet he lets them off! A higher tribunal ought to take notice of this case. The Judge and jury have signally failed in the discharge of their functions. As to the other case, that of the murder of a Native at Meerut by a European soldier under peculiar circumstances, the Pioneer and the Rást Goftar (96) agree that there has been a grievous miscarriage of justice. We cannot bring ourselves to believe that a Judge like Mr. Douglas Straight could act in any other spirit save of law and justice. But still the fact stands that the perpetrator of a deliberate murder is restored to society because he happens to be a European and his victim only a Native. Be it remembered that these are not solitary instances. The trial of a European accused by a jury of his own countrymen is becoming a tiresome farce, and we ask if such prostitution of British justice as the two cases point to is to continue under Lord Ripon's régime? If it be true that the murderer has not been identified, there can be no difficulty in doing that. Let the guilty man be produced.

Remarks in connection with two recent cases of assault and murder in the North-West Provinces.

The Arunodayá (13) of the 31st December, while referring to the case of the murder of a Native sugarcane seller by a European soldier recently tried by the Allahabad Sessions Court, criticizes the opinions of the Pioneer and the Indian Daily News on the merits of the case and their suggestions in connection therewith, and remarks:—The opinion of the Pioneer that the jurors by acquitting the accused have failed in the discharge of their duty and have brought the fair name of English justice into disrepute is under the present circumstances entitled to much weight. Had our rulers been of the same race with us and accustomed to treat us as their equals such a decision would not have been arrived at, or at least it would not have given rise to such bitter feelings among the Natives. Our rulers are of a different race from us and their interests are antagonistic to ours, as has been exemplified by the recent remission of import duties on piece-goods. We are being treated like a conquered people and are being subjected to humiliation on every possible occasion. The ruling race being accustomed to such high-handed treatment of Natives are sometimes guilty of the murders of Natives, and invariably escape unpunished on the plea that the death was caused by an enlargement of the spleen or an affection of the liver. These circumstances have tended to poison our minds against our rulers, and it does not speak well that the case under advertence should have so terminated and should thus have brought a stigma on the fair name of England.

The Suryodayá (57) of the 1st January, while reporting the particulars of a case recently tried by the Allahabad High Court wherein four Europeans stood charged with the offence of committing rape on a Native woman and were after trial acquitted, expresses its disapproval of the conduct of the presiding Judge in having let off the accused. The accused were charged on two counts, (1) rape and (2) use of force and outrage on the modesty of a woman. The accused denied the first charge but pleaded guilty to the second. It is therefore very strange that in the face of such confession they should have been allowed to go scot-free. The Judge has in this case been guilty of a gross miscarriage of justice, and has disgraced the English rule and therefore deserves to be dismissed. In conclusion, the Suryodayá exhorts the leaders of the North-West Province society to follow up the matter even to the Supreme Council.

Expresses disapproval of the result of the trial of Private Hawkins for the murder of a Native at Meerut.

With reference to the result of the trial of Private Hawkins in the High Court at Allahabad for the murder of Husenbaksh, a sugarcane seller of Meerut, the Yajdán Parast (106) of the 31st December observes that the evidence produced went to show that the accused was guilty of a murderous attack on the deceased, but the European jury who tried him did not consider it sufficient to lead to his conviction and therefore discharged the accused. It is a great slur on impartial British justice that a murder should have been committed in a market and the murderer allowed to escape unpunished. If Hawkins is really innocent, then some one of his comrades must be guilty of the crime, and it is proper that no pains should be spared in finding out the guilty party and bringing him to condign punishment. In all cases in which Europeans stand charged with the murder of Natives, it has been the practice for several years past to treat the event as merely accidental or to attribute it to the insanity of the criminal, and this circumstance has given rise to the belief that in such cases the aims of justice are subordinated to considerations of race.

Recommends that European soldiers should be prohibited from going on shooting excursions in order to prevent a wanton destruction of the lives of Natives at their hands.

In expressing its disapproval of the result of the same case, the Jáme Jamshed (87) of the 3rd January observes that not only the Native newspapers but the Anglo-Indian papers also recommend the adoption of severe measures for preventing the deaths of Natives at the hands of European soldiers, several lamentable instances of the above type having occurred within a very short time. Unless some means are devised for effecting a reform in this direction European soldiers will be encouraged to grow more regardless of the lives of Natives. The Pioneer recommends that in order to prevent the murder of Natives at the hands of European soldiers the latter should be strictly prohibited from going on shooting excursions. It might look improper to make this prohibition, but it ought to be remembered that it is to be made for the protection of human life from wanton destruction, and that beside shooting there are many other harmless sports.

Retirement of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner.

Disapproves of the Government resolution reviewing the career of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner on his retirement from the Civil Service.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 31st December, in an article headed "Hyperbole in Valedictory State Documents," says:—Who may be the author of that complimentary resolution of the Bombay Government on the retirement of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner from the Civil Service? We are tempted to ask the question on public grounds. A State document intended for the public eye ought to be at least free from hyperbolic expressions. The official encomiast entrusted with the drafting of valedictory resolutions, recounting the services of a brother official, should at least take care that he does not shock public opinion. Let us analyse for a moment the second paragraph of the resolution regarding Mr. Ashburner's services. The first two sentences thereof cannot be objected to. His Excellency the Governor in Council is at liberty to make public acknowledgment of whatever personal attention and assistance he may have received from the Senior Member of Council. But we doubt whether the qualifications urged and the praises sung in the third sentence can be unanimously or even generally predicated of Mr. Ashburner. We venture to question the assertion that Mr. Ashburner retires with the complete enjoyment of the respect and esteem of the whole Civil Service. Moreover the statement that Mr. Ashburner, more than any other Civil Servant in the Presidency, has identified himself with the interests of the country and the welfare of its people will be challenged on all hands. A list of his good services would have been welcomed. In the absence of proof one may be excused for saying that the writer of the valedictory resolution has drawn on his own imagination. It may be admitted that in the dark days of the Mutiny the hero displayed "innate qualities of courage and self-reliance." But there is the dark side of the picture which should not be entirely lost sight of. What his former subjects, the people of Gujarát, Khándesh, &c., think of Mr. Ashburner's courage is best known to themselves. Mr. Ashburner's "sympathy with the Natives" and his "attention alike to national and individual interests,"--these and the like are idle phrases. No such fulsome eulogy was called into requisition even in the days of Sir Richard Temple, and it is not a little disappointing that it should have been reserved for such an honest and strictly moral Governor as Sir James Fergusson. There is only one explanation, though a doubtful one. It is this that the resolution may have emanated from an official wag whose practical jokes are not always easy to understand. But if half of what has been here urged in Mr. Ashburner's favour is to be taken as sober truth, then we must confess that he is the very best Civilian that has ever come to India. A little more, and we would have called Mr. Ashburner a god. May it be our good fortune to do so when he finally returns to his native land! We will gladly welcome him back to these shores a year hence. It is open to every man to redeem the past so far as the irrevocable past could be redeemed. And if Mr. Ashburner achieves that feat, he will claim us among the first to do homage to his godlike virtues.

Does not approve of the Government resolution reviewing the career of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner.

In reviewing the career of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner, the Dnyán Prakásh (7) of the 1st January says:—Whatever aspect of useful career the Honourable Mr. Ashburner might present to the official eye, we are really unable to see that so far as his constant association with the natives of India is concerned there is any fragment of his official career which can command either respect or appreciation from the natives of India. So gloomy indeed is the general picture presented by a Civilian coming to India from Europe, that he alone is to be considered as the champion of the Indian cause who does not inflict any positive misfortune upon this country, because great men of sterling worth are not indeed intended by Providence to have anything to do with the people of this country. Under these circumstances we could have paid our highest share of tribute to the Honourable Mr. Ashburner had he only remained a passive member of the Bombay Civil Service. But we are really grieved to state that this great statesman has done to India everything which a good officer ought not to do. Probably no member of the Bombay Civil Service has ever retired in a more consummate enjoyment of the dislike and flat abhorrence from people of every class and rank in this Presidency. He in fact was so jealous of Native worth that whenever official incompetency was exposed to broad day-light he would stigmatize the authors thereof as seditious and disloyal. He bore so bitter an antipathy to the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha, the admirers of whose usefulness are not wanting in numbers in any part of India or in England, that any expressions which may have dropped from his lips derogatory of that body will have left behind him a legacy of exceptionally illiberal and ungenerous monument of a perverse Bombay Civil Servant. In every department of administration the Honourable Mr. Ashburner was conspicuously a ready champion of the official cause and was a servile supporter of all his official subordinates in their whims and humours. His most memorable and distinguished service as a member of the Legislative Council of Bombay was in introducing and supporting the Indian Games Act and the Mhowra Flowers Act. When these Acts were before the Legislative Council of Bombay, he not only bade farewell to every sense of reason and justice, but looked down with contempt upon the whole non-official body of the Council, who, as the faithful informants of the state of the natives of India in all their conditions, raised one uniform voice against the iniquitous and oppressive character of these two measures. The Secretary of State for India in one case and the Government of Lord Ripon in the other responded to the appeal of the non-official members and vetoed the two oppressive measures, so that if there has been any prominent feature in the whole career of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner it is that of gloom and despondency. The only wonder in the whole tone of the Bombay resolution of Saturday last passed in honour of the notorious Councillor is that the Government of Bombay have assumed to themselves an authority to express an opinion on behalf of the people of this country when, properly speaking, they ought to have showered upon him praises only from an official point of view, leaving the public to say their own say in honour of their official idol. This unjustifiable conduct on the part of the Government of Bombay has called forth these views of ours as regards the public career of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner. Had we indeed passed over in silence the Bombay resolution, our silence would have been construed into an endorsement on our part of the views expressed by the Government of Bombay.

Does not approve of the Government resolution reviewing the career of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner.

With reference to the Government resolution acknowledging the services of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner on his retirement from the Civil Service, the Indu Prakásh (8) of the 1st January says:—It reads very little like an official document but very much like the valedictory note of a friend or the farewell notice of a newspaper writer. The official at the Secretariat who wrote it appears to have completely lost sight of his mission, and thus it happens that the resolution poses in the name of everybody,—the Native public as well as the official public. So the resolution goes on to mention how kind and generous Mr. Ashburner was to those in the Government services, how much he sympathised with the Natives, and how useful he has been to His Excellency the Governor himself. Without denying that this praise is undeserved,—and it must be said that with all his faults Mr. Ashburner had some amiable traits of character, though it is doubted whether sympathy for the Natives was one of them,—we can hardly say that this is the official way of acknowledging a retiring officer's services. The Government had simply to record the services rendered by the retiring gentleman to Government, and that is the usual way of doing it. But in the present case the writer of the Government resolution has made a very marked exception.

Expresses its opinion regarding the merits of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner.

The Arunodayá (13) of the 31st December remarks:—The encomium bestowed by His Excellency the Governor on the retiring Member of Council may have been well deserved according to His Excellency's views, but will not be joined in by the Native community in general. Mr. Ashburner may have done good work during the Mutiny, and may have accorded good treatment to those who came in contact with him during his hunting excursions; but as a Collector or Commissioner and a Member of Council he does not appear to have gained the popularity of those with whom he was concerned. On the contrary there are grounds to lead to the supposition that he was unpopular. It now remains to be seen what his successor the Honourable Mr. Peile proves himself to be. It is reported that this gentleman is a staunch supporter of the scheme of local self-government inaugurated by the Government of India. The confirmation of Mr. Nugent in Mr. Peile's place has taken many people by surprise inasmuch as he has superseded many senior members of the service. It may be that Mr. Nugent has by a considerable Secretariat experience gained a thorough competency for the work, but his appointment cannot fail to create dissatisfaction among his seniors.

Condemns the official career of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner.

The Gujaráti (84) of the 31st December animadverts on the folly of the people of Surat in having organized the convention of a public meeting for the purpose of doing honour to the retiring Councillor. It cannot be that the people are ignorant of the fact that the Honourable Member entertained views damaging to the Native character and used to look down upon them with scornful disdain, and that the people of Surat should notwithstanding think of such a measure simply with the view of soothing the sensibilities of such an high official, is utterly disgraceful. Perhaps they entertain a hope that if he is appointed to the Supreme Council hereafter he will gratefully remember his sycophants and do them some good in return. But he is not likely to remember such service. Perhaps he is laughing in his sleeve at the folly of the people of Surat, and though he may count upon the honour he is about to get from them as a means of getting an appointment in the Supreme Council, he cannot certainly look with favour upon such foolish behaviour.

The same observes that there is nothing astonishing in the resolution issued by the Bombay Government reviewing the career of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner in so far as it is the customary complimentary notice of the services of a retiring Councillor. It is however surprising to find it asserted that he showed kindness to the Natives. He never advocated their cause, nor did he secure their good regard by any public act, and it is therefore not very strange that he should have been looked upon as a tormentor of the people, who will not be sorry for his departure. [The Vartmán Sár (103) of the 2nd January expresses similar sentiments.]

Condemns the official career of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner.

The Yajdán Parast (106) of the 31st December observes that while Mr. Ashburner was Assistant Collector he did very little work and trusted his subordinates a great deal. A weekly newspaper recently stated that in the mutinous times of 1857 he was Assistant Collector in Gujarát, and that on a report made to him by a subordinate officer he burnt a village, the inhabitants of which were quite innocent, and thus made them homeless beggars. His friends speak highly of his having introduced Hinganghát cotton into Khándesh while he was Collector of that district; but in doing this he did nothing extraordinary. As Revenue Commissioner, N. D., he did not exercise proper supervision over the Collectors subordinate to him, and was therefore unable to give redress to persons who complained against the work of the latter. In 1877 he entered the Executive Council and rendered good assistance to Sir Richard Temple in carrying out Lord Lytton's imperialistic policy. All revenue laws that oppress the agriculturists so much have been enacted in Mr. Ashburner's time. The Abkári and the Forest Acts, which are so very obnoxious to the poor people, were his creatures, and it was he who brought forward the Game and the Mhowra Bills. He is believed to have taken a part in the unholy work of recovering the arrears of land revenue for the famine years from the ryots who were driven to the extreme verge of indigence. He was foremost in supporting the Press Act and denounced the Native Press and the Native population as disloyal to the British Government. The narrow-minded policy of the Bombay Government in regard to the scheme of local self-government has proceeded from financial considerations, and the blame of it therefore lies on Mr. Ashburner as the head of the Financial Department. The single act of his that has deserved the commendations of the people is the convention of social gatherings of Natives and Europeans at Government House during the short time he acted as Governor. He was strong minded and anxious to conserve the interests of the State, but did not care for the happiness of the people. Government may praise him highly for the services rendered to the State, but ought not to call him a well-wisher of the people. After censuring those who honoured him with festive parties in the name of the public, the Parast observes that the public are not sorry for his retirement from office. [The Hitechhu (67) of Ahmedabad of the 4th January says that Mr. Ashburner has done nothing for the welfare of the Natives. On the contrary he has looked down upon them with disdain and uselessly harassed them. Most of the people of the Bombay Presidency do not wish for his return to India.]

Legislation.

Comments on the Deccan Agriculturists' Amended Bill.

The Native Opinion (9) of the 31st December says:—The Deccan Agriculturists' Amended Relief Bill has again been passed into law, and it may now be said to have acquired a new lease of life at least for the next two years to come. We cannot say that the process of amendment has improved it, though the debate thereon has brought out the one fact more prominently that it is not the Deccan money-lender only but also the system of land assessment on this side of India that is mainly responsible for the present condition of the ryot. This may hold out a chance of the hope that at least on the occasion of the next amendment the enactment of the law itself will be admitted as a serious blunder and the Act expunged from our statute-book. But this depends much more on the kind of legislators we may have then; if we be destined to have a Strachey-Lytton brotherhood for our next Supreme Government, we may rest assured that the law will again be adopted as the most considerate outcome of the deliberations of a most benevolent régime. We only ask our countrymen to awaken themselves to the full significance of the attitude of the present Supreme Government, and lose no time in impressing upon them that any number of new alterations in that law will, instead of improving it, only tend to aggravate the distress of the ryot.

Comments on the amended Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

The Kesari (32) of the 2nd January, while writing about the latest amendment of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act, praises the Honourable Dr. Hunter for the boldness and clearness with which he has exposed the real condition of the Deccan agriculturist. The writer dwells at some length upon the various causes that have led to the present deterioration in the condition of the ryots, among which the most prominent are the supersession of the indigenous productions of the country by foreign importations, the increase of population without a corresponding increase in the means of support, the extinction of the traffic of country carts by improved communications such as railways, &c., and the enhancement of land assessment without due regard to the condition of the soil. Whether these things were unknown to Government or whether they were intentionally ignored is not very clear. It is very strange that in the face of the above facts Government should still be prepared to lay the responsibility of the evil at the door of the poor money-lender and should strive to play a double game by crushing both the lender and the borrower. Though it is true that Mr. Woodward has been appointed by Government to enquire how far the present condition of the ryots can be traced to the authorship of Government, the usefulness of this special deputation admits of doubt if he has secret instructions to follow the advice of Dr. Pollen. May it be that this is simply a trick to shut up the mouths of the adversaries of this measure? [The Pandhari Vaibhav (42) of the 31st December expresses somewhat similar sentiments. The Shubh Suchak (55) of the 29th December expresses similar sentiments and exhorts the people to assist Mr. Woodward in his special duty by offering full information on all the points connected with the present depression in the condition of the agricultural population.]

Comments on the amended Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

The Jagadádarsh (28) of the 31st December is much disappointed to learn that the amendment of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act should have been hurried through the Viceregal Council without any consideration having been given to the question of the oppressive land assessment. When the original bill was first brought before the Council the question of the heaviness of assessment and the rigour of realizing it had formed the subject of discussion, and the Government of India, fully appreciating the importance of this question being solved once for all, had referred it to the Secretary of State for consideration. The Secretary of State replied to the Government of India to say that the information on the subject furnished by them appeared insufficient for the proper consideration of the matter when compared with the fuller particulars given by the Government of Bombay; that the question having already formed the subject of a correspondence with the latter, the Government of India might do well not to evince considerable interest in the matter. The Jagadádarsh is extremely grieved to hear of this reply, and considers it a pity that a Government like that of Lord Ripon should be so snubbed. It is very likely that much of the energy and interest in the welfare of the country exhibited by the present administration will receive a severe shock by this incident.

Criticizes the extension of the provisions of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act to the Native States of Bhor, Oundh, Phaltan and Jath.

The Shubh Suchak (55) of the 29th December makes the following observations in connection with the extension of the provisions of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act to the Native States of Bhor, Oundh, Phaltan and Jath as proposed by the Select Committee appointed to report on the recent Amendment Bill:—It is very astonishing to find that the Select Committee should have without any previous intimation suggested the extension of the Relief Act to these four Native States. When the original amendment was published no mention was made therein of these States, nor are there any grounds for supposing that this step was the outcome of a request in that behalf from their Chiefs. Is it possible that these States should have invited this interference in their administration in the same way as they some time ago quietly surrendered their rights of great value and long standing in connection with the manufacture of salt? This, however, does not appear plausible, as in the former case Government expected to be gainers while in the present one there is no advantage to be derived. Popularly this is construed to be a political trick and the construction seems correct. The Suchak learns that the Political Agent had asked one of the Jághirdárs named above to extend the provisions of the Relief Act to his State, but he had declined to do so, and the circumstance that the same State is among those that have now been brought under the pale of that Act gives sufficient ground for presuming that there is some political secret at the bottom of the affair.

Does not approve of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

The Nyáyá Sindhu (41) of the 1st January, while referring to the recent amendment of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act and the almost simultaneous appointment of Mr. Woodward to report on the extent of the relief secured by the recent legislation for the amelioration of the condition of the Deccan cultivator, remarks that no legislative measure that proposes to favour one party to the prejudice of another is justifiable. Government revenue from stamps has suffered a great deal by the operation of the Relief Act, and it would therefore have been preferable if with the original stamp duty Government had effected a reduction in the land assessment and at the same time made it permanent. This step was calculated to preserve Government revenue from loss under the head of stamps and to afford substantial and lasting relief to the ryots. Even with the present rate of assessment the exchequer suffers not unfrequently by insufficient realizations brought on by bad seasons. This subject should engage the serious attention of Mr. Woodward, who should spare no pains to secure all sorts of reliable information, not from táluka head-quarters, but from distant and outlying villages. The Special Officer should also enquire into the cry that has been raised by money-lenders that their trade with the ryots has suffered a great deal of late. Both the money-lenders and the ryots have become disgusted with the law, which had for its object the improvement of the latter's condition but which the ignorant people attribute to quite different motives. It is high time, therefore, that the minds of the masses should be disabused of such delusions, and the question under advertence being conceived in its proper spirit should be disposed of in a satisfactory manner. [The Ganga Lahari (24) of the 29th December expresses similar sentiments.]

Suggests the suspension of all legislation for the relief of ryots.

The Kalpataru (30) of the 31st December in a communicated article dwells at some length on the practical effects of the working of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and suggests the suspension of all legislation in the matter. The writer describes the cultivator as a dishonest and an ungrateful wretch and therefore not deserving of the protection afforded by special legislation. The money-lenders are equally the subjects of Her Majesty with the ryots, and it is not proper that the law should protect the one class and oppress the other. The sáwkár is a great assistance to the cultivator in all his dealings inasmuch as in times of need he supplies all the pecuniary wants of the latter, and a law that tends to sever this connection of mutual dependence between the two classes and to create ill feeling between them is as useless as it is injurious and calls for immediate abrogation. Let the relations of money-lenders with the ryots be what they may under the circumstances, Government should only see that when matters are referred to them a higher rate of interest than 6 per cent. per annum is not allowed to the sáwkár, and that the ryots do not make payments without having receipts for the amounts paid. If the sáwkár refuses to pass a receipt, the matter should be referred to the patel of the village, who should see that the money is paid to the proper person and that it is duly acknowledged. The office of conciliator should be abolished and the village munsifs should be invested with power to try cases the pecuniary value of the subject-matter of which does not exceed Rs. 25.

The Bombay Pharmacy Bill.

Criticizes the provisions of the Bombay Pharmacy Bill.

The Native Opinion (9) of the 31st December is at a loss to understand what should have brought on the present Pharmacy Bill. Notwithstanding the undeniable fact that the majority of Hindu families generally deal with half-learned medical practitioners and quacks and hakims of different descriptions, there has not been a single instance in which the insufficient and unscientific knowledge of these men has given rise to accidents like the recent Grondona case. Moreover it is very astonishing that in some respects these quacks are more useful to the rural population than those that are trained in the science of English medicine. Though the treatment of the affections of various poisons is known to English Pharmacy, there has not up to the present time been invented a single specific for the poison of a country cobra, while on the other hand the meanest and the most illiterate people in the Konkan know of specifics the efficacy of which is often successfully put to the test. If therefore the present bill is passed into law, and if according to its present interpretation the illiterate people in the mofussil are not allowed to sell their medicines to the public without a certificate as required by the provisions of the new bill, the misery that will result to the masses will be incalculable. It is true that the operation of the present bill is in the beginning restricted to the Town and Island of Bombay, but the provisions are likely to be extended to the mofussil and the truth of what we have said above will then be sadly realized. [The Nyáyá Sindhu (41) of the 1st January expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Disapproves of the Bombay Pharmacy Bill.

The Kaisar-i-Hind (89) of the 31st December observes that the object of the Bombay Pharmacy Bill is stated to be to prevent quacks and uncertificated doctors from dispensing poisonous drugs, but it is doubtful whether the provisions of the bill will fulfil it. On the other hand, it is likely that the medical dispensaries established by educated doctors will be considerably discouraged. Graduates of the Grant Medical College have opened small dispensaries in different parts of the town which are a great blessing to the people. Compounders receiving a small salary of Rs. 15 or 25 per month are at present employed in these dispensaries; but if the bill is passed into law the proprietors of these medical shops will have either to dispense medicines themselves or to employ certificated compounders on higher salaries. Most of the graduates will not be able to do this, nor will a sufficient number of certificated compounders be available for some time. The quacks or Native waidyas and hakims are also of great use to poor people in curing trifling complaints, and it is not desirable that they should be thus put down. But to prevent mischief arising from such men practising their profession, the list of poisonous drugs to be sold by them under the Act should be revised. [The Samsher Báhádur (97) of the 29th December says that quacks do much more harm than compounders of medicines. Hence it is not proper that compounders and sellers of European medicines should be prevented by virtue of the Pharmacy Bill from carrying on their trade without a license. Quacks ought to be the first who should be prevented from so doing.]

The Highway Bill.

With reference to the Highway Bill now lying before the local Legislative Council, the Bombay Chronicle (65) of the 31st December observes that the object of this measure is to make the people pay for a class of local public works the construction and maintenance of which are to be solely at the discretion of Government. If the attempt to pass this bill into a law the object of which is simply to transfer certain fiscal burdens from the provincial exchequer to local funds be successful, it would be a decidedly retrograde move inconsistent with the policy of local self-government. It is to be hoped therefore that when the bill comes on for further discussion in the Council the non-official members will try to divest the provisions of their despotic character, and to invest municipalities or local bodies with the powers that are at present vested in the Government.

Makes remarks on the Highway Bill.

The Gujaráti (84) of the 31st December ironically observes that the Highway Bill is a boon from the Honourable Mr. Ashburner on his retirement from office. Hitherto the local funds contributed to the maintenance of provincial roads, but as the new scheme of local self-government would not permit of this diversion of revenue, this bill has been brought forward to enable Government to call upon municipalities and local boards to pay their share. These roads are for public use and are used by the high officials of the State, and hence it is not right to require a municipality or a local board to pay for their maintenance. The bill is nothing else than a contrivance of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner to nullify the Viceregal scheme of local self-government.

Disapproves of the Highway Bill.

Local Self-government.

In continuation of its article on local self-government reported at pages 9—13 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 16th December 1882, the Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha (3) for October 1882 but received on the 28th November says :—So far as the táluka committees are concerned, we cordially endorse the views of the Bombay Government, which are also in full accord with those of the Government of India, that in the more backward tálukas, of which there are several in this Presidency, the members shall be nominated by Government and not elected. But as regards those tálukas where the system of election in some form or other can be safely tried, the proposed qualifications for voters and for members, but specially those for the latter, will in practice be found to be prohibitive and nugatory. Before laying down one set of tests for all tálukas alike, the Bombay Government, although they took three and a half months to consider the whole subject and to hatch their scheme, do not appear to have taken any pains to ascertain what under those tests the numerical strength of a constituency would be and how many candidates would be available in each táluka. This could have been easily done by the Government, and then it would have found the practical uselessness of laying down one hard-and-fast set of qualifications for all tálukas alike. This slovenliness and negligence are simply unpardonable in such great questions, and afford a sufficient indication of the scanty care and little thought the local authorities have bestowed upon the subject. In this connection we cannot resist the temptation of citing a still more glaring instance of negligence and possibly even of ignorance. Mr. E. P. Robertson, the Commissioner of the Central Division, in his report on the May resolution gravely and soberly recommended the payment of Rs. 10 and Rs. 20 of local fund cess as a qualification for voters and members respectively. The payments of Rs. 10 and Rs. 20 of local fund cess mean Rs. 160 and Rs. 320 of the land assessment !!! Mr. Robertson is an officer of long standing, and has been in his present office for the last seven years. He ought to have been aware, or if he were not he could have easily ascertained it from his office records, that in the tálukas of the Central Division very few persons, if any at all, would be found who would fulfil the conditions proposed by him. Mr. Moore, the Collector of Poona, proposed the same tests, and even went further to propose that a voter should in addition be above 25 years of age and a candidate for membership above 35 years of age. Now what can be the value of such absurd and impossible recommendations of which the Comments on the resolution of the Bombay Government regarding local self-government.

two we have named above are fair specimens? Our only object in citing the foregoing two illustrative cases is to expose the hollow character of the indiscriminate encomium passed upon all officers alike in the opening paragraph of the Bombay resolution. The Bombay Government in the resolution under notice administer a gentle rebuke to Mr. Robertson without however mentioning the latter half of his proposals, which is if possible more absurd than the former, for this simple reason that supposing there were found in a táluka half a dozen people paying Rs. 320 as the land assessment, where lies the necessity and virtue of going through the process of election when the number of seats reserved for election will be very often equal to if not more than the number of persons eligible as members? But while exposing the ignorance of Mr. Robertson, the Bombay Government also have laid themselves open to a similar charge by laying down a set of hard-and-fast tests for all tálukas alike, when they ought to have known well that all tálukas are not similarly circumstanced. Now take for instance the Deccan districts,—we mean Poona, Sátára, Sholápur and Ahmednagar,—the four districts in which a special legislative protection has been extended to the landed classes owing to their being involved as a class in great indebtedness. And under such circumstances how can it be possible to find a sufficient number of persons fit to be members of táluka committees if it be insisted that candidates for that office should possess unencumbered real property in the táluka of the value of not less than Rs. 1,000? Is the Governor of Bombay in Council aware that according to the opinion of the Deccan Riots Commissioners the debt of the agricultural classes in these Deccan districts is eighteen times the assessment, that is, in other words, the amount of that debt represents nearly the entire value of the whole land in occupation? And even in the other tálukas, what an amount of unnecessary vexation would be caused to the subordinate officers charged with the preparation of lists if they are required to undertake such inquisitorial proceedings? And lastly one fails to see the reasons which could have actuated the Bombay Government to propose a different test for membership in the case of the táluka committees when they did not think that a similar separate test for membership was required in the case of the municipalities. Referring to the question of allowing representation to the educated classes, the writer goes on to say:—It is true that the inámdárs, or holders of alienated villages, are in future to be allowed as before to elect one member each for the committees, and that the leading municipalities are to elect one member each in the same way. This dual proposal is satisfactory so far as it goes, but would it not be better if in addition to it the intelligent and fairly educated men who admittedly possess the desire and capacity for self-government were allowed to form themselves into a separate constituency with the right of electing one or two representatives? The intelligent class of public spirited men, to fail to utilize whom is, according to the declared views of the Government of India, "not only bad policy, but sheer waste of power," is not included, so far as rural tracts are concerned, in those who can be expected to satisfy the tests proposed by the Bombay Government for membership in the táluka and district committees, viz., the possession of unencumbered real property of the value of Rs. 1,000 or other property worth Rs. 15,000. The Bombay Government have declined to accept the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha's proposal for allowing these classes two representatives in the district committee on the ground that as they do not contribute to the local funds and can possibly have no interest in its administration they have no right to be represented or even to be elected as members by duly qualified voters. Now may we retort by asking why a man possessing Rs. 15,000 worth of other than real or landed property should be eligible as a member, when he contributes nothing to the local funds and can consequently have no interest in its administration? Does the mere possession of Rs. 15,000 worth of property carry any virtue with it? And if it does, does not the admitted possession of the desire and capacity for self-government carry a greater weight? So far as we are aware, Mr. T. H. Stewart, the Survey and Settlement Commissioner, is the only officer who has done justice to the considerations which the Sabha has repeatedly urged on the attention of the Bombay Government, by frankly admitting that those who are now appointed members of these local boards—and here we may remark that the two new qualifications will practically be found to throw the membership into the hands of that very class from whom the present members are recruited—are not the persons who can be expected to do justice to their office, nor evince much interest in their work. And if our memory fails not, Mr. Stewart distinctly recommended pleaders and other people of a similar class, who are both able and willing to make themselves useful, for such office. The Bombay Government and its district officers as a class have a superstitious dread of these people and regard them as having no stake whatever in the country. May we ask by way of retort what stake, beyond the fact that they are paid servants of Government, the district officers have in the country? As salaried servants of Government, these district officers deem it their paramount duty, and naturally enough, to guard the interests of Government at the sacrifice of the interests of the people. Briefly then the Bombay resolution has failed to make a due provision in the proposed reconstitution of the rural local boards for securing the co-operation of that self-same intelligent class of public spirited men who above all others can hold their own, and who are both able and willing to guard the popular interests against official encroachments. As to the mode of election by wards laid down in the resolution, the Journal says:—Until the people become familiarized with the new system it is indispensable that for some time at any rate the mode suggested by the Government of India in their May resolution (para. 13) should be adopted. The sub-divisional officers, such as Assistant Collectors, Deputy Collectors, and Mámlatdárs, should after preparing the list of votes request those entitled to vote to meet them, or any of them, on a given day at a given place, when, after fully explaining to them the objects and aims of Government in inaugurating this new departure in their policy towards local boards, they should be requested to elect their representatives from amongst those eligible as members. If such a procedure were duly followed on two or three occasions at the commencement, we have not the slightest doubt that there would be no necessity for repeating it afterwards. Lest our meaning may be misunderstood we must here plainly state that we recommend the adoption of this coure, not because the people of this Presidency are indifferent to local self-government, but because the people must be got to realize to themselves the new change in the policy. The evil consequences of the domineering policy pursued by Government, more especially during the last ten years, towards these local boards have been so disastrous and so far-reaching that it will necessarily take some time for the people to realize to themselves the fact that the Government is really anxious to grant them freedom of action; and the best way to undo that evil impression, and to make the people aware that a real change has come over the almost traditional policy of Government, is for the district officers themselves to lead and pioneer the people into the new paths. The Sárvajanik Sabha do not approve of the proposal of the Bombay Government to extend the elective franchise promiscuously to all municipalities. The Bombay Government are evidently playing a deep game, and desire with no benevolent purpose to give the rope to all municipalities alike to hang themselves by. We cannot but view with positive mistrust and suspicion this proposal, for the simple reason that it is vain to expect the Bombay Government and its district officers to give to the new scheme the patient, fair, and indulgent trial that its character as a tentative measure of political and popular education necessarily demands. Were the attitude of the Bombay Government different, and had they loyally and cheerfully accepted the new policy, we should not have viewed the measure with such positive mistrust and suspicion, but would have on the contrary hailed it with gratitude and joy. But as the attitude of the local authorities is so pronounced against the whole scheme we cannot accept this proposal without serious misgivings. But by far the most ridiculous feature of the reform announced in the Bombay resolution yet remains to be noticed. The Bombay Government, while thus nominally extending the principle of election to almost all municipalities, large and small, have practically pitched the qualification so high as to virtually deny the boon to the smaller towns; for when the lists of voters come to be prepared according to the qualification tests laid down in para. 15 of the resolution, it will appear that in the majority of cases no person whatever will be found to be qualified under any of the eight tests proposed, and that where such persons may be found the number of voters will not probably be much larger than the number of members to be elected, while in some cases it will turn out that the number of members to be elected is actually larger than those entitled to vote. It should be remembered that the Government of Bombay have proposed one and the same qualification tests for voters and for candidates for membership. One of these tests is the payment of Rs. 5 of direct municipal taxation and for the municipalities in Sind an alternative test is proposed, namely Rs. 3 of house tax. Now in the first place a superficial reference to the statistical tables appended to the annual Municipal Taxation Reports issued by the Bombay Government would have shown that, comparatively speaking, very little of direct taxation is levied by our mofussil municipalities, their income being principally, if not wholly, derived from octroi duties. In fact both the Government of Bombay and the Government of India have been complaining about this particular feature in our mofussil municipal administration. Quoting statistics in aid of the above observations the writer goes on to say :—It is evident, therefore, that the Bombay Government did not take due note of the real condition of our mofussil municipal finance when they laid down one and the same rigid set of tests for all municipalities alike. This inexcusable miscalculation, not to call it by harsher name, illustrates the indifference with which the whole scheme has been prepared and trifled with. Of a piece with this indifference is the reckless assertion that the Bombay Government firmly believe that the population of the various towns in this Presidency,—nay, in the whole country,—is very much alike and differs only in numbers. His Excellency the Governor of Bombay in Council may be expected to know something of the towns in the Bombay Presidency,—this too, by the bye, he knows little about as we shall show presently,—but what does he know of the whole country? Absolutely nothing. The audacity of the statement is equalled by its ignorance and is surpassed only by the statement contained in several reports of the Bombay district officers to the effect that the people of India are indifferent to local self-government and do not desire more freedom. To say, as the Bombay Government have done, that the general educational status of the mass of population in the city of Poona does not much differ from that of any ordinary mofussil town such as Bhusáwal, Vengurla, &c., is to ignore the fact which was prominently brought to the notice of the Education Commission during their Poona session and upon which Mr. H. P. Jacob, one of the members of the Commission and an experienced officer of the Bombay Educational Department, publicly complimented the citizens of Poona during the course of his reply to the municipal address to the Commission. Strange and incredible as it may seem to the local authorities, the fact is that nearly the whole male school-going population of the city of Poona is now under instruction, and this result has been obtained by adding together the scholars attending the lower division of the secondary schools, Government, aided and unaided, and those attending the primary schools, Government and indigenous, in the city of Poona. We have reasons to believe it to be the deliberate opinion of the Education Commission that there is hardly any other city in India which can show similar results. And yet His Excellency the Governor of Bombay in Council would have us believe that Poona, educationally speaking, is on the same level with Bhusáwal, Vengurla, &c. !!! It would be advisable, therefore, that at the commencement the franchise should be extended to those towns only where its success will be almost assured, and that it should be then extended gradually to the remaining towns under such conditions as the experience gathered in the larger towns may justify. Such a measure as we have suggested above has this recommending feature about it, that while it will satisfy the just and legitimate aspirations of the people it will secure also a larger outer circle of small municipalities which will be filled with emulation and zeal, enabling them after due effort to seek entrance into the inner or, so to speak, privileged circle. It will therefore quite suffice if the proposed Act contains a provision on the model of the Bengal Municipalities Act, that the local Government shall not refuse the concession of the franchise to any town in which one-third of the number of rate-payers have memorialized the Government on the subject. We have a strong faith in the tendency of almost every kind of education towards downward filtration, and accordingly we have not the slightest doubt that within a few years the adoption of our suggestion will be attended by the happiest of results. In connection with the reconstitution of the municipal and local committees it is stated :—The Government of Bombay in their resolution under notice (para. 12) say that the power of nominating members to both municipal and local fund boards thus given to Government will prevent the undue exclusion of representatives of any particular class, creed, caste or interest, and will meet the objections to the scheme of election raised by some of the Collectors. The principle underlying this provision is admittedly very sound, but one question very naturally suggests itself to even a superficial critic, viz., who will guard the guardians themselves? The principle is, as we have already said above, very sound, but it is sound not only as regards the non-official members, but even as regards the official or, to speak more accurately, the ex-officio members. In the proposed reconstitution of these boards the Revenue Officers, who alone were consulted in the matter, have taken good care to monopolize the ex-officio seats to themselves everywhere to the exclusion of the representatives of other services as if they alone, and none of the latter, have a right to be specially represented in the boards. The officers of the Educational, Public Works, and Medical Departments have as much right to be ex-officio members of local boards as the Revenue and Magisterial Officers; for they are by no means less competent than the latter to take an active part in the administration of local affairs. The Government of India in their May resolution (para. 18) say that it does not appear necessary for the exercise of these powers that the chief executive officers of the towns, sub-divisions or districts should be chairmen or even members of the local boards, and that there is indeed much reason to believe that it would be more convenient that they should supervise and control the acts of those bodies without taking actual part in their proceedings. The Government of Bombay have, in the proposed reconstitution of these bodies, gone exactly to the other extreme. Instead of associating with these executive officers the representatives of other services in the administration of the local boards, those very officers who according to the Government of India's views were not desirable even as members of these bodies have been given an exclusive preponderance in their constitution. This arrangement is cliquism, pure and simple, and is anything but worthy of a Government that wants to pose as the champion of unrepresented minorities. In the case of the city municipalities, therefore, we would first of all increase the maximum number of members from 24 and 18, as now proposed, to 40 and 30, and then add the Deputy Educational Inspector, the Head Master of the local high school, and the Executive Engineer to the proposed five ex-officio members. The proposed number would not be unmanageable, for even now the smallest city municipality consists of over 25 members. The arrangement proposed by us would have this recommending feature about it, that while it will secure the fair and adequate representation of the different services in the new boards it will also in the case of the larger towns ensure a useful career to a large number of those who are anxious to take an active part in the management of their local affairs, while the arrangement proposed by the Bombay Government would unduly restrict the field to only a minority of them. In the same way we would, in the case of district committees, give ex-officio seats to the following officers only:—(1) The Collector of the District, (2) the Senior Assistant Collector, (3) the Executive Engineer, (4) the Civil Surgeon, (5) the Deputy Educational Inspector, (6) the Head Master of the district high school or English school. In the case of the town municipalities and táluka committees, we would similarly give ex-officio seats to the representatives of the Public Works and Educational Departments. Anent the question of giving a separate and direct representation to the educational and professional classes the Journal states:—At the commencement it is not desirable in all cases to make all the elected members the exclusive representatives of the mass of rate-payers only, and we think that the only way to secure the gradual training of the best, most intelligent and most influential men in the community is to allow a special and direct representation to the minority represented by these classes, so as to ensure the election of men with the requisite quality against all the well known risks of popular general elections. The Bombay Government in their resolution under notice say that the minority represented by these classes need not be granted a special and exceptional representation for this reason that for such a step no precedent exists in India or in England. May we ask if the special and direct representation of the Bombay Justices of the Peace in the Municipal Corporation of Bombay does not furnish the requisite precedent? If not, on what grounds is that special representation justified? Again, does not the special representation of the leading Universities of the United Kingdom in the British House of Commons furnish another precedent? If not, on what grounds is that special representation also justified? It is only in this way that the general intellectual standard of representative bodies, whether imperial or local, will be elevated, and the services of the ablest and most independent men secured. Canvassing for election is a thing unknown in India, and canvassing votes is considered an occupation not worthy of able and influential men. Under such circumstances to disfranchise the minorities is to put a premium upon the demagogue's profession. In short, to secure the candidature of really able men, a separate franchise in the way we have suggested above must be conceded. We strongly recommend this point to the earnest and careful consideration of the Marquis of Ripon and his Government. As regards the appointment of a non-official president, the writer summarizes his proposals as follows:—That (a) in the first and second class municipalities there shall be a non-official president charged with the duty of supervising the executive work done by the managing committee with its non-official chairman; (b) that the non-official chairman of the general committee shall not be displaced by the above-mentioned non-official president, the former having the full and unrestricted control over and direction of the deliberations of the general committee; (c) that in third class or smaller municipalities, and in district and táluka committees, the chief executive officer of the district or of the táluka shall, for the present at any rate, continue to be the president, and shall supervise the executive administration by the managing board with its non-official chairman; and (d) that even in these boards the non-official chairman of the general committee shall not be displaced by the official president on the occasion of the meetings of the general committee, the former having the full and unrestricted control over and direction of the deliberations of the general body. It would be also necessary to provide in the proposed Acts for a section laying down authoritatively that a person shall not be eligible for more than one of these three offices at one and the same time, as otherwise it would be quite possible to defeat the principal object in having a non-official chairman of the general committee of a local board. If the proposal contained in para. 21 of the Bombay resolution under review be carried out in the manner and spirit suggested above, it would answer remarkably well in practice. Touching the power of control and supervision of local boards to be reserved to the local Government the Journal adds:—Its previous sanction should be required for the imposition of new taxes or the raising of loans, while it should have the power to set aside altogether or modify the orders of local boards in the following cases only:—(a) If the order of the board is calculated to cause a breach of the public peace; (b) if the order in question is calculated to seriously endanger public health; and (c) if the order in question is calculated to injuriously affect the Provincial or Imperial revenues. Except in these three cases the Government should have no power of setting aside altogether or even modifying the orders of local boards; but even this power should, as far as possible, be exercised after allowing the local board in question a full opportunity to show cause why its particular order should not be rescinded or modified. This three-fold power, together with the power of absolute supersession for a time in the event of a continued and persistent neglect of duty by any local board, ought to be quite sufficient for all practical purposes, and ought to satisfy any local Government that is prepared nolens volens to allow the people real and substantial self-government in local affairs. The Bombay Government however in their resolution under notice (paras. 55-56) have indulged in much special pleading for the retention in their own hands of many additional powers, which, if conceded to them, would render local self-government a sham, a delusion, and a snare. The bestowal of "unlimited" powers is more objectionable in the case of Government than in the case of local boards; the boards can be easily controlled, while no such control is possible when Government is inclined to exceed the limits of its legal authority; and the experience of the past twenty years and upwards is clearly against even a partial repetition of the experiment. It is because the Government possessed such unlimited powers, and could make and unmake rules at its sweet will and pleasure, often involving important departures from its own settled principles,—it is because of that circumstance alone, we repeat, that the present scandalous mal-administration was possible. That mistake should on the present occasion be most studiously avoided and the powers of Government control and supervision most clearly defined. We have already proposed what powers should be vested in Government; it would not be improper to distinctly lay down what powers the Government should under no circumstances possess. For the success of the scheme it is essentially necessary that the Government should not possess the power suo motu of directing the imposition of any tax whatever, or of directing the expenditure from the revenues of local boards upon any particular object. In these two respects at any rate the power of the local boards must be absolute, subject of course to the provisions of the Act, in which the objects upon which the local revenues can and ought to be spent should be in the clearest terms laid down. With regard to the power of absolute supersession, howsoever temporary, of any local board, the local Government ought not in our opinion to exercise it without the previous sanction of the Supreme Government, and the reasons are obvious. Even if the Bombay Government had cordially and loyally accepted the policy of local self-government as their own, it would not have been advisable to leave such a discretionary power to them, for this simple reason that none but those who have initiated any particular policy can be the best judges of its successful working or otherwise, or can be expected to sympathetically devise all those intermediary measures which contribute to the eventual success of a policy. But the hostile attitude of the Bombay Government towards the policy for which they think this Presidency is not yet ripe affords the strongest argument against their being allowed the power they lay claim to. We are perfectly aware that there is not the slightest chance of the Bombay Government persuading the Government of the Marquis of Ripon by all their subtle and plausible arguments to yield the point. The noble Marquis and his Government have evidently taken full measure of the real motives of the Bombay Government and have treated their contention with contemptuous and dignified silence. The truth is that a central Imperial Government is better qualified than a subordinate local Government to take a large and broad view of such acts of magnanimous policy, for this simple reason that such a central Government is not open to the influence of those narrow impulses and weak prejudices and mean temptations to which local Governments are usually so prone. Questions involving large principles and momentous issues are better left for disposal to a central authority which is removed far above local prejudices. To sum up, the Bombay Government must not be invested with any powers beyond those which we have described above if the new local boards are to have a fair trial, and when these guarantees, which are of the utmost vital importance, are vouchsafed, we believe that the rural local boards will work very satisfactorily even under the presidency of the district and sub-divisional officers. In conclusion, the Journal states in connection with the proposed transfer of provincial roads to district committees under the new scheme that the receipts from tolls on provincial roads ought to be bodily transferred to the district committees, and the Government in the Public Works Department should have no discretionary power to vary the grant to district committees for the maintenance of these roads. The financial independence of the local boards, whether urban or rural, cannot be too scrupulously secured by legislative guarantees; otherwise it would be possible for any future Government by mere executive action to so starve the local resources as to cripple the usefulness of these bodies as an instrument of political and popuar education. This financial independence is as important as the deliberative independence which we have already dealt with above, and when this dual independence is once secured everything will naturally follow as a matter of course.

Remarks on the question of non-official president under the new local self-government scheme.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 1st January says:—It seems some sycophants in office (they are of course Natives) have got up in certain places a movement, or what looks like one, having for its object the selection of the higher local officials as chairmen of the local fund committees in spite of the intentions of the Government of India to the contrary. The utimate motive of the scheme is to show that even the Natives are desirous that such places should be held by officials, and that Lord Ripon's view is not in this respect at least the view of the Native public. One should guard against confounding this movement with anything spontaneously arising from the public. The people, it may be admitted, are likely to be carried away by such exhibitions of official power, but that should not lead any of us to suppose that they think quite differently from Lord Ripon. The first two or three years of the new scheme are sure to be attended with confusion, mistakes, and bickerings, and there will not be wanting Native officials, who have grown grey in place-hunting, endeavouring to spoil the scheme just to please some unsympathetic official placed above them. But this would take place anywhere. The Times of India desires that some further light should be thrown on this movement. But the movement is not one of any importance except that it counts as its secret supporters some of those very gentlemen, who, when the Bombay Government wanted to make out a case against the feasibility of Lord Ripon's scheme, danced to the tunes of their masters.

Discusses the question of the competency of Natives to fill the office of president of local and municipal boards.

The Dnyán Bodhak (22) of the 31st December, in an article headed "Local Self-government and the Bombay Government," discusses the question of the fitness or otherwise of Natives to perform with ability the functions of presidents of municipal and local boards, and remarks that His Excellency the Governor has no means of knowing how the Collector and other district officers manage their business. There will be found very few officers who are able to work without the assistance of their Native subordinates, the generality of them being accustomed to entrust their work to Natives. Besides, European officers have no opportunities of being so well acquainted with the manners and customs of the Natives as they themselves have. This shows clearly that Native subordinate officers are well versed in their duties, and that their European superiors are in all respects guided by their advice. The latter being in a superior position generally take the full share of the credit awarded for good work, but it will not therefore be safe to conclude that on this account they can well be styled competent and clever. If the Natives were not considered qualified to be presidents under the new scheme, it is not very easy to conceive how they should have been filling the posts of High Court Judges, Joint Sessions Judges, Subordinate Judges, Deputy Collectors and Mámlatdárs with credit to themselves and to the service. Moreover the very circumstance that the Viceroy has suggested the advisability of appointing Native presidents speaks volumes in their favour. In conclusion, the Bodhak expresses great satisfaction at the management of the working of the new scheme having been entrusted to the Honourable Mr. Peile.

Disapproves of the qualification prescribed for a landholder to vote or become a member of a local board.

The Gujarát Mitrá (66) of the 31st December observes that the Bombay Government have ruled that all persons holding or occupying land paying an annual assessment of not less than Rs. 48 are entitled to vote in the election of members for the local boards or to be members of those committees. This ruling is quite inappropriate. Suppose a Koli or a Dubla agriculturist holds 16 bighas of land assessed at 3 rupees per bigha, and is therefore entitled to vote or to become a member of the board; suppose also that a landed proprietor who is well educated and intelligent possesses a field of 300 bighas paying a quit-rent of 2 annas in the rupee under the summary settlement, and yet he is ineligible to vote or to become a member of a local board because he pays only Rs. 37½ to Government. This illustration shows the anomaly of the prescribed test, and to remedy it it will be better if Government rule that a person holding land, say upwards of 25 bighas, is entitled to vote or become a member of a board. The present ruling threatens to make the scheme of local self-government a farce by excluding deserving men from any share in the management of local affairs and facilitating the admission of worthless and ignorant people, and thus paving the way for a virtual centralization of power in the hands of an official president.

Prays for the concession of a city municipality to the town of Kapadvanj.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 6th January states that the people of Kapadvanj presented a memorial to the Collector of Kaira praying that they might be allowed the privileges of a city municipality under the local self-government scheme. The Collector thereupon convened a general meeting of the municipal commissioners in order to ascertain their opinion in the matter, and they expressed a unanimous opinion that the prayer was just and deserved favourable consideration. The Collector however has not yet informed the petitioners of the decision of the authorities on the subject. Many towns in the Deccan comprising a smaller population than 10,000 have been promoted to the rank of city municipalities; whereas though the towns of Kapadvanj, Jambusar, Dholka, Balsár and several others contain a population of more than ten thousand souls none of them have been raised to that position. The reasons for this exceptional treatment of Gujarát towns are not apparent, nor are those for which Nadiád and Viramgám alone have been favoured with the concession.

Education.

Remarks in connection with the success of missionary schools and colleges and the withdrawal of Government from higher education.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 31st December, in writing on Mr. West's paper on education, observes:—We fully agree with Mr. West that it is a great advantage that mission schools exist in Presidency cities and other large towns all over the country. In Gujarát these institutions have long since been pronounced to be most beneficial. Be their propagandism what it may, it is unquestionably a fact that they are on the whole conducive to the good of the people. Their managers may have an eye to the proselytizing of Natives, but still the indirect good which their system of education confers on those who avail themselves of it cannot be gainsaid. The general result of a training at one of these establishments is the elevation in some degree of the moral standard and the intellectual status of the pupils. But we cannot agree that young men educated at missionary schools or colleges are always better-behaved than those who have received their education at Government institutions. Missionary schools are also daily growing more popular, the St. Xavier's especially, owing to the due subordination of their distinctive propagandism to the ordinary secular instruction whereby their success at University examinations is tested. A healthy competition prevails between these and Government schools and colleges. Those who cannot afford to pay the somewhat heavy fees at Government colleges naturally flock to the institutions maintained by the charity of Christians. As a rule there is greater sympathy and even amity between masters and pupils of these Christian schools than between professors and head masters and their pupils in State schools and colleges. The causes of the popularity of missionary institutions in mofussil towns are the same. The cases of conversion are so few and far between, that parents have now-a-days but little fear of their boys' heads being turned by instruction imparted in them. Fifteen years ago the aversion to these institutions was great. But this feeling is wearing out rapidly. We take this to be a good sign of the future of education in the country. This is our experience on this side of India. But we may presume that mission schools are earning equal popularity in other provinces of the Empire. And so far we are disposed to believe that they are an unmixed good. Thus the religious neutrality of the State leads indirectly to the progress of education. When the State withdraws itself from higher education it gives latitude to private institutions. But the only establishments which are hitherto successfully carried on by private enterprise, as far as higher education goes, are those belonging to the various missionary bodies. These would then be left masters of the situation. In fact, they would enjoy the monopoly of imparting higher education. These missionary institutions would then take advantage of their position and dictate their own terms. The closing of Government colleges would be an opportunity they have hitherto sought for but in vain. Education being appreciated by the generality of Native parents, boys must be sent to some college. The only institutions that would be available would be missionary. These would make the admission of scholars dependent on stated rules and regulations. And that such rules would embrace a curriculum of religious instruction in Christianity is obvious. The want of non-Christian institutions giving higher education would be at once felt, and the Native community would not be slow, as Mr. West says, to fill the gap. Hence the withdrawal of the State from higher education, on this ground alone, would be productive of mischief. It will be another quarter of a century, perhaps more, before Native private enterprise can boast of collegiate institutions. We have not yet learnt to sacrifice private interests for public good. Private philanthropy in educational matters, save in one or two brilliant instances, is unknown in the Presidency. If Natives consult their true interests, they must habituate themselves to that practice of self-denial and the power of combination which ultimately lead to national success. But in this respect Government must do something more than it has hitherto done. It should set an example. Mr. Dádábhái Navroji has strongly urged the same point in his recent lecture. He has shown by statistics how little Government has done in the matter of higher education and what it ought to do. If the people are in future to be called upon to make greater sacrifices in educational matters, it behoves Government to set them an example.

Approves of the proposal of Professor Oxenham for establishing a middle class examination in connection with the University of Bombay.

After expressing its hearty approval of the proposal made by Professor Oxenham for establishing a middle class examination in connection with the Bombay University, the Lok Mitrá (68) of the 1st December observes that no one who has had any experience of the enormous waste of time, labour and money involved in the process now so generally pursued of qualifying students for a University career for which they have no aptitude at all and to which they so thoughtlessly resort, will fail to appreciate to the fullest extent the value of the Professor's scheme. It is to be hoped that the studies for this new test will be so arranged and regulated as to enable students in case of need to turn them to the greatest account by being able to fall back on the middle class examination in the event of their failing to pass the Matriculation test. The establishment of a middle class examination will be one of the most valuable results of the appointment of the Education Commission. [The Bombay Chronicle (55) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Observes that the Native school-masters and their assistants are subjected to great hardship by the prohibition to take private pupils.

A correspondent of the Kaisar-i-Hind (39) of the 31st December dilates upon the small salaries received by Native school-masters and their assistants, and the extent to which their earnings from private tuitions used to assist them. He then laments over their miserable condition brought on by the ruling of the Educational Department by which they have been prohibited from taking private pupils, and observes that they have had to suffer this inconvenience on account of the greed of some European professors. The prohibition is not much felt by the European teachers as they get considerable salaries, but it bears hardly on the Natives.

Recommends that Native ladies should be taught medicine for practising among women in India.

The Lok Mitrá (68) of the 31st December observes that it has repeatedly been pointed out that qualified lady doctors would supply a long felt want in this country, and that their services would be a source of infinite blessing to the women of India. Miss Collett, the Superintendent of the Female Training College at Ahmedabad, narrated to the Education Commission the sad tale of distress resulting from the want of competent lady doctors and nurses to treat the women of this country. A lady writer in a recent number of the Contemporary Review advocated the organisation of a regular service for securing the services of lady doctors for India, but the project was too extensive to be capable of speedy execution. Undoubtedly there is a vast and profitable field in India for competent lady doctors, and though very few have hitherto entered the field it may be hoped now that the subject is attracting so much attention both here and in England that the number will be largely increased. Native girls may well take up the profession of medicine. Already they are manifesting a laudable desire to advance their studies, and some of them more venturesome than their sisters have studied as far as the entrance examination of our University. They will be doing themselves and their country a world of good if they persevere in their studies and qualify themselves for examinations in medicine. It is time that the subject should be taken up seriously in this country. Difficulties and obstacles there will be at the commencement, but with judicious management they will be easily surmounted. Government will not, it is to be hoped, be backward in advancing such a good cause.

Municipalities.

Complains of the insufficiency of pumping engines for the extinction of fire.

The Din Bandhu (4) of the 31st December complains of the insufficiency of pumping engines used for the extinction of fire. Recently several huts situated near the Fleming Mills on the Parel Road caught fire and were thoroughly destroyed before the police and the engine could come for rescue. To avoid such occurrences the Din Bandhu suggests that every street and lane should be provided with suction pipes to admit of water being easily accessible, and that a pumping engine should be stationed on the Parel Road near the Great Eastern Mill so that it may be of great service in case of fires in that locality.

Expresses an opinion regarding the reported nomination of Mr. Raghunáth Náráyan Khote to the Chairmanship of the Municipal Corporation.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 1st January says :—Mr. Raghunáth Náráyan Khote is, it is said, likely to be appointed Chairman of the Municipal Corporation for the ensuing year. It would be a happy selection undoubtedly, for Mr. Khote has been all along an active member of the Municipal Corporation and Town Council. But though comparisons are odious it may not be amiss to observe that Mr. Navroji Fardunji has superior claims to the honour. Some however doubt whether Mr. Navroji would be a good Chairman. They think he has capacities for leading a debate and not for managing one. But we do not see why having shone in one direction Mr. Navroji should not shine in another. Mr. Mandlik did well as Chairman, and Mr. Navroji is equal to Mr. Mandlik in ability and activity.

Does not approve of the address presented to His Excellency the Governor at Ratnágiri.

Referring to the recent trip of His Excellency the Governor to Ratnágiri, the Native Opinion (9) of the 31st December observes :—Although it cannot be denied that the advent of big officers like the Governor serves as an opportunity for the people to ventilate their grievances through the medium of addresses of welcome, still it not unfrequently happens that only the glowing side of the picture is presented to the gaze of such high functionaries by the endeavours of district officers, who strive to throw aside the proper suggestions that may have been made by some of the ryots and thus show that the people are well off. In the recent address of the Ratnágiri Municipality great prominence was given to the circumstance that by the establishment of municipalities the A'mba Ghát Road was constructed and greater conveniences were secured in regard to water-supply, but the fact was studiously ignored that the extravagant expenditure incurred in the carrying out of these works has served to increase the burden of taxation on the ryots, and in the town of Ratnágiri itself has been the cause of a rise in the house tax equal to about a fourth of the income of some of the tax-payers. It is currently reported that an address embodying the above and similar other particulars and signed by about 400 or 500 persons was prepared for presentation to His Excellency the Governor, but that it was kept back through the intervention of a big Government official. The expenses of the construction of the A'mba Ghát Road had to be met by a loan from Government which has to be repaid in thirty years by annual instalments of Rs. 15,000 from local funds, and it is likely that the amount of the instalment will have to be augmented as the expenditure has greatly exceeded the estimates. Besides there is no guarantee that the vast outlay will be sufficiently met by receipts which can be calculated upon with any amount of certainty, as it is likely that that part of the country will shortly be traversed by a railway which if constructed will prove that the above expenditure was quite unnecessary. This shows the inadequacy of the praises bestowed on district officers in connection with the A'mba Ghát Road, and also speaks for the unreliable nature of the addresses that are being presented everywhere.

Refers to the question of starting a bonded warehouse at Poona.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 31st December, while acknowledging the receipt of certain papers from the Press Commissioner on the subject of bonded warehouses, refers to a proposal of Mr. Moore for the construction of a warehouse for the city of Poona, and remarks :—Mr. Moore is a very resolute man, and as such does not like to yield even if he comes to know that he is mistaken on a particular point; he does not yield lest he should be open to the serious charge of yielding to Native public opinion. When the imperative resolution of the Government of India came to be discussed at a general meeting of the Poona Municipality convened for the purpose of framing modified rules for the refund of octroi duties, Mr. Moore expressed an opinion that a bonded warehouse would obviate the necessity of all that bother. But the commissioners would not listen to him, and it was made quite clear by one or two of them that a bonded warehouse in this city would be utterly useless. But he does not like to receive the light, and recommends the advisability of having a bonded warehouse for the city somewhere near the railway station. We are quite sure that even if the municipality does sanction such a warehouse, in time it shall have to be condemned and given up.

Railways.

Recommends the construction of a railway from Nadiád to Kapadvanj.

The Gujarát Mitrá (66) of the 31st December recommends the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company to lay down a line from Nadiád to Kapadvanj in preference to one from Dákor to the latter town. It is true that the distance between Dákor and Kapadvanj is 20 miles, while Nadiád is 27 miles from the latter town and is separated by two rivers, which will have to be bridged over, and that therefore the cost of the line between Nadiád and Kapadvanj will be heavier than that of a railway between Dákor and Kapadvanj. But there are numerous prosperous commercial towns on the proposed line between Nadiád and Kapadvanj, while there are few or none along the line between Dákor and Kapadvanj. It is therefore to be hoped that the Railway Company will prefer to lay down the line from Nadiád.

Does not approve of the employment of European and Eurasian boys by the G. I. P. Railway Company on higher salaries in preference to Natives.

The Arunodayá (13) of the 31st December, alluding to the employment by the G. I. P. Railway Company of European and Eurasian lads on Rs. 50 to Rs. 70 for work that can be done by Natives for a remuneration of Rs. 15 or 20, wonders how the attention of the Government of Lord Ripon should not have yet been directed to the subject. It is no doubt an improvement that Government should decline to guarantee a certain percentage of interest in the case of newly started railway lines, and had the G. I. P. Railway Company been in the same predicament it would not have ventured to incur the heavy expenditure entailed by the employment of European agency when the work could as well be done by Natives at a comparatively less cost. It is clearly the duty of Government to see that the Company does not impose enhanced rates of fare on the public to make up for an extravagant expenditure in the direction pointed out.

Native States.

Makes a defence of the officials of the Cambay State.

The Vartmán Sár (103) of the 2nd January says that the outcry raised against the officials of the Cambay State is much exaggerated. The petition of Mahádev Parjárám and fifty others to the Subha in the adjoining Baroda district and to the Collector of Kaira does not cite any instance of oppression whatsoever. The petition only states that the present officials of Cambay oppress the people and that they were happy in the time of the former Nawábs. The petitioners ought to know that the policy of the former Nawábs was unenlightened and that they involved the State in debt. The present Kárbháris have greatly reduced the debts of the State and have pursued a reformed policy. They have made the Stamp Act applicable to the State. They have dismissed old and illiterate officials and employed better men in their place. They have instituted a municipality and are gradually effecting reforms in other departments. These reforms do not command the approbation of the people who regard the Kárbháris as their enemies. If tyranny was exercised upon the people, they ought to have first petitioned the Nawáb, and failing to receive justice from him they should have memorialised the Political Agent. If they did not succeed there, then they should have petitioned the Bombay Government. The desertion of their homes and the seeking of refuge in a foreign territory will not be productive of good results. The people may have suffered unbearable troubles, but the way they have adopted for getting redress is improper. There appears to be some instigation at the bottom of these disturbances, which must be carefully looked into. About a year and a half ago the people of Cambay created a similar disturbance from trivial causes. It is likely that the reforms introduced by the present administrators have come in the way of the illegal practices of several persons, who have therefore instigated the people to create such commotions. It is necessary that effective measures should be adopted to suppress them.

Mentions several instances of the oppression exercised on the people by the officials of the Cambay State.

The Hitechhu (67) of the 4th January, in giving some particulars of the disturbances in Cambay, observes that it is rumoured that the Diwán and other persons misappropriate the property of the Nawáb. It happened that a loaded cart broke down near the village of Mogari in the A'nand sub-division, and the suspicions of the local deputy constable being aroused he examined the cart. It was found that the cart contained property of the value of about Rs. 50,000 belonging to the Nawáb. If this be true, the foolishness of the Nawáb is apparent. The tyrannical Diwán has prevented the people who have left the State from taking away with them articles of food from their homes at Cambay. A strike took place in Cambay after the departure of the Nagarsheth from the city. As the local officials outraged the modesty of the wife of Gulábgar Báwa of Siddhnáth Mahádev, near Cambay, she threw herself into a well. The sepoys took her out alive from the well, made her naked and branded her private part. It is said that the perpetrator of this wicked deed is some superintendent of the Customs Department. If this statement be true, it is most horrible. Its truth ought to be ascertained. The petitions received by the Collector of Kaira amount to more than two hundred. Some of them contain statements which criminate the Kárbháris and other officials of the State. Some petitions complain of rape, and one of them presented by a widow is regarding the great oppression exercised on her. The refugees have been mercilessly driven away from Kaira by the local faujdár. It is said that this is done at the instigation of Dámodar. This allegation however is incredible. It is to be regretted that the Kaira officials should have thus suddenly dispersed them. Why should the British Government and its officials delay in attending to the outcry of about 7,000 people? Undoubtedly great oppression must have been exercised on them; otherwise they would not have deserted their homes and sought refuge in a foreign territory. The Hitechhu then gives several instances of oppression exercised by the Cambay officials on the people, instances similar to those already reported from the Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 29th December last (vide page 14 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 30th December 1882). The Hitechhu adds that the people are maltreated and the modesty of women outraged. Nothing can be said with certainty regarding the last complaint, but at any rate the Bombay Government ought to patiently enquire into the matter. The people did not expect any good from the present Nawáb even while the late ruler was alive. His sudden elevation to the throne has resulted in this state of affairs. He is illiterate and his Kárbháris are the source of these troubles. The Bombay Government ought to make speedy arrangements for the settlement of the affairs of the State and remove the tyrannical Kárbháris from their office. [The Kaira Vartmán (88) of the 3rd January says that Dámodardás and Bálábhái greatly oppress the people. If the Diwán oppressed them they would not fail to complain against him. The thing is that the Diwán and the Kárbháris act in concert with one another. The Diwán ought to protect the people. The Nawáb is frank but careless. He ought to take care of his subjects, otherwise his negligence will compel the British Government to interfere. The Broach Samáchár (77) of the 4th January gives the text of the petition of the people of Cambay to the Kaira Collector. It considers the condition of the people as pitiful, and adds that owing to their exodus from Cambay very few artizans and traders are now left in the city.]

In publishing the petitions made by one Pandya Mahádev Parjárám and fifty others to the Collector of Kaira and His Highness the Gáekwád complaining to the former of the oppressions practised on them by the officials of the Cambay State and seeking temporary protection from the latter, the Rást Goftár (96) of the 31st December observes that if the report be true that more than 5,000 subjects of this State have left their homes and exposed themselves to the inclemency of the weather and sought refuge from the Gáekwád, then the fact of their having deserted their homes speaks unmistakeably for the magnitude of the hardships which the people have been subjected to. There is scarcely any instance of so many subjects of a Native State having left their homes in a body. A correspondent states that they have been compelled to do so on account of the oppressions practised by an official of the State who was deprived of some of his property by robbers. It behoves Government therefore to ascertain the true cause of the discontent. [The Gujaráti (84) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Requests Government to ascertain the true cause of the extensive discontent prevailing among the subjects of the Cambay State, a large number of whom have left their homes.

A correspondent of the Gujaráti (84) of the 31st December mentions the causes which have induced a large number of the subjects of the State of Cambay to desert their homes. These reasons are the same as those described by the correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 29th idem (vide page 14 of the Report on the Native Papers for the week ending 30th December 1882).

Mentions the causes of the extensive discontent prevailing among the subjects of the State of Cambay.

A correspondent of the Akhbáre Sodágar (72) of the 3rd January, writing from Kaira under date the 29th December, states that the Collector left the place by the Ahmedabad mail train. At nine in the morning Mr. Hamir Miya, the City Inspector of Police, arrived with ten policemen and told the Cambay ryots to leave the place. The latter promised to do so after taking their meals; but the policemen used their clubs and severely hurt two men, and thereupon all the ryots left the place and went and encamped in the village of Haniyára situated in the territory of the Thákor of Utliya. These people have nominated some persons from among themselves to represent the matter to the proper authorities. It is said that Messrs. Dámodar and Fakrudin induced the faujdár of Kaira to drive away the Cambay ryots from that place.

Treatment of the Cambay ryots at Kaira.

In noticing the arrival of 5,000 subjects of the Cambay State at Váso, a correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 6th January observes that several of their companions who had gone to Kaira have, under the advice of the Collector of that district, returned to their respective villages. The people who have gone there severely complain of the conduct of Mr. Dámodar, the head of the Revenue Department of Cambay. It is said that he is willing to make many concessions in order to conciliate the people, but they are not willing to come to terms. They appear to stick to their wish to see every tyrannical official dismissed from the service of the State. It is said that they have resolved not to return to Cambay until their prayer is granted either by the Nawáb or the British Government. Not having received any reply to the telegram sent by them to His Excellency the Governor of Bombay, some of their leaders have gone to Ahmedabad to consult some vakils. Mr. Kalyándás Kirpárám of Bombay has sent a telegram advising the leaders to go there. The news from Cambay is that the Nawáb regrets this condition of his subjects and has severely censured the Diwán. These people have, so far as provisions, &c., were concerned, received a better reception in the Gáekwádi State than in the British territory.

Reports the arrival of the dissatisfied subjects of the Cambay State at Váso.

With reference to the desertion of their homes by a large number of the subjects of the Cambay State, the Jáms Jamshed (87) of the 6th January observes that the cause of the misunderstanding between the Nawáb and his subjects is, as stated by the dissatisfied Bohoras, that the late Nawáb Hashan Anwar Alikhan presented a piece of land to their community for being used as a burial ground, that it was accordingly used, and that there are five graves in it. Notwithstanding this free gift, the present Nawáb has resumed it and disposed of it as agricultural land. The authorities of Cambay however assert that the land in dispute was never given away by the late Nawáb, but was surreptitiously used by the Bohoras as a burial ground, and the State has simply reoccupied its own property. This being the case, the complainants ought to have tried proper means to remove the misunderstanding which has arisen between them and their ruler; but instead of doing this some seven thousand Bohoras have left the State and taken shelter in a village under the Baroda State. They complained to the Collector of Kaira against the proceedings of the Nawáb and that officer advised them to return to their homes. The above circumstances do not warrant the interference of the British Government in the affair, and the people will act wisely if they return to their homes.

Observes that the real cause of the misunderstanding between the Nawáb of Cambay and his subjects is a dispute about a piece of land, and advises the complainants to return to their homes.

Mentions the several wants of the people of Dabhoi.

A correspondent of the Ahmedabad Samáchár (71) of the 3rd January observes that on his visit to the Second Class Munsif's Court at Dabhoi he found several clerks engaged in idle gossip, while some were absent. The Judge came to the court at 4 P. M., decided a case or two, postponed some cases, and went away. The people do not entertain a good opinion of him. With regard to the Customs Department the writer observes that there are only three clerks in the Department, and as they are unable to keep pace with the work the mercantile population is put to much trouble and inconvenience. The writer proceeds to suggest that separate privies should be constructed for males and females, and that they should be kept clean, which is not the case at present. The tank and the fortress should also be repaired.

Gives instances of oppression practised in the Gondal State.

The Gujaráti (84) of the 31st December gives further instances of oppression practised in the State of Gondal. It states:—(1) That Rawji Jhawerchand, the grandson of Wacheráj Pánáchand, the late Diwán of the Gondal State, is an old servant and has rendered important services, but was charged with the theft of wheat worth a rupee, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment with fine. (2) An anonymous petition was received against Dhru Bhagwánji Dáhya of Dhoráji, regarding which an enquiry was instituted. Dhru took a copy of it to see what complaints were made against himself. Kála Wálji, a kárkun of the Mámlatdár of Dhoráji, permitted the petition to be copied and Máneckchand Punja copied it. All the three officers have been dismissed from service. Though the Political Agent has ruled that no notice should be taken of anonymous petitions, yet the above-mentioned course has been followed in this matter. (3) The Gujaráti gives the substance of a petition made by Premchand Withal of Sultánpur to His Excellency the Governor, in which the petitioner complains that the police and some other authorities of the State have done him great injustice.

Berár Affairs.

Discusses the question of separating the Judicial from the Revenue Department.

Writing about administrative centralization in the Berárs, the Varhád Samáchár (59) of the 1st January says:—We have often in these columns pointed out the necessity of separating the Judicial Department from the Revenue Department and keeping it on an independent basis. The more we see of the working of these departments and the more we think on the matter, the more we are convinced of the absolute necessity of division of work. From some inquiries we have of late been making we have been able to gather facts which would still further demonstrate the correctness of our views. These we wish to place before our readers with such comments as the importance of the subject requires. We also take advantage of this opportunity of pointing out the anomalies which exist in the judicial administration of the province. To begin from the top. Everyone who cares to take an interest in judicial administration must have marked the tremendous increase of work in the Resident's Court since the last year and a half. There was a time when it was considered a rare sight to see an appeal conducted before the Resident. That was a time when the interests of Berár and the needs of justice were subordinated to political matters. Even so late as the last year of Sir Richard Meade's tenure of office we find that only 3 civil appeals and as many criminal appeals were admitted out of 32 and 16 presented. But in his and Mr. Saunder's time the rule was not to admit an appeal at all. The principle which guided them, it appears, was not to allow any increase in judicial work. In fact that business was, if not disliked, only allowed a precarious existence, and one might say that if the inclinations of these gentlemen had been consulted they would have swamped it out altogether. But with the advent of Sir Steuart Bayley came better times. During the last year about 50 civil appeals were presented and out of them 15 were rejected during the time of Sir Richard Meade and 17 or thereabouts during that of Sir Steuart Bayley. Of criminal appeals there were 32 presented and 17 were cases under Section 296 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Sir Steuart Bayley had a peculiar way of despatching work. He had two days in the week for judicial business, and on those days he would sometimes hear as many at 6 or 7 appeals and in addition do admission work. In the year 1882 the increase is still more remarkable. During this year the number of appeals presented was, civil 50 to 60; under extraordinary powers 20 to 25; criminal appeals 40 to 45; extraordinary criminal applications 15 to 20; under Section 296 of the Criminal Procedure Code 6 or 7; and in 4 or 5 cases papers were sent for by him. The number comes to above 150. If to these be added the number of revenue appeals, about 35 or 40, the total comes to 190 or thereabouts. These figures must startle everyone. The inference as to the regard shown by the former Residents for judicial work is plain. But a thing of the greatest importance to us is that the judicial work thrown on the Resident is sufficient to occupy more than half the time of an ordinary judge. The Resident is not and was never intended to be a mere judicial functionary. He is above all a political officer. He is the envoy of the British Government at the Court of the Nizám. The functions which he must discharge in the first instance are political. The existence of administrative and judicial powers in the same person is a mere accident and forms no part of the differentia or property of the original functionary. But such has been the course of events that political functions have now assumed almost a subordinate position. Administrative and judicial work occupy at least as much as if not more of his time as political. Such concentration of so widely different powers in one individual must produce their evil effects. A great portion of the work must be shirked or the officer must work himself always at red heat with the chance of leaving heavy arrears with all that. Mr. Jones has chosen the lesser evil. But it is an evil after all. He works day and night. But what can one man do? It is simply impossible for one man, whatever may be his gifts, to discharge at one and the same time such functions as Resident at the Court of the Nizám, local Government for Berár, and High Court for Berár and the Residency Bazár and Cantonment. The result is that though Mr. Jones has been working as no Resident ever worked, there are very heavy arrears. To our own knowledge there are some files which have been waiting disposal for months. To get out of this difficulty there is only one way, and that is decentralization. The judicial work, which has increased so much and which must necessarily take a large portion of the time of an officer bent like Mr. Jones upon doing everything conscientiously, must be entrusted to another officer. We in fact propose that the scheme of having a separate High Court for Berár, which it was once talked the Government of India was thinking about, should be carried out.

Dwells on the relative merits of the Akola and Amráoti High Schools and recommends an addition to the salary of the Head Master of the latter.

The Pramod Sindhu (46) of the 1st January dwells at some length on the relative merits of the two High Schools in the Berárs, viz., Akola and Amráoti, as exhibited by the results of the Matriculation Examination ever since their establishment. The article purports to show that Mr. Vishnu Moreshwar Mahájani, the present Head Master of the Amráoti High School, deserves the whole credit for the good work hitherto done by the two schools. The Akola High School showed very good results till the year 1877, i. e., till Mr. Mahájani was the 1st Assistant there, and ever since that time has fallen in the background. The Sindhu quotes figures and facts to support its assertion and remarks that Mr. Mahájani has not only made the High School at Amráoti superior to that of Akola, but has raised it to such a level that it can fairly compete with the best schools in the Bombay Presidency. In spite of these labours Mr. Mahájani has been obliged to continue on the same reduced salary as he drew when he first became the Head Master. The Director of Public Instruction on one occasion expressed his regret for having reduced the salary of the Amráoti Head Mastership. But this much is not sufficient and the Director should strive to do something more. The registered number of boys in the Amráoti High School is greater, the attendance is larger, and the fee receipts are more considerable than those at Akola, and still the remuneration of the Head Master is lower. It cannot be that the Director is ignorant of these facts, but he is perhaps unable to see his way through the awkwardness of having to retrace his own steps.

Complains of the prevalence of drinking and requests that it should be checked.

The Varhád Samáchár (59) of the 1st January complains of the extensive prevalence of drinking among the Natives. The Natives are unable to understand their interests in this matter, while the rulers are not alive to the prejudicial effects of this vice, or if they are, they have not the courage to face a reduction in their revenue which will be the necessary consequence of an abated demand for liquors on the part of Natives. The Bombay Government, while lately imposing a tax on liquors, justified it on the ground that it served to keep a check on the vice of drinking by enhancing the price of the luxury. But the Government have not only failed to adopt measures to make the purchase of liquors difficult, but have on the contrary set a premium on the vice of drinking by permitting the opening of shops even in small lanes and thus making the luxury easily accessible. Here the Samáchár proceeds to cite the instance of Secunderabad, and quotes figures showing the average amount of liquor consumed by the people and the incidence of this indirect tax on the purses of the people, and laments over the condition of the people, the future of which it looks upon with horror.

RAOJI B. PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
13*th January* 1883.

BOMBAY : PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

RECEIVED
6 FEB 83
VIA BRINDISI

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERAR
For the Week ending 13th January 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly ...	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do. ...	475
*3	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Do.	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
4	The Dín Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	925
5	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do. ...	1,000
6	„ Dnyánodayá	Bombay	Do. ...	409
7	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
8	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,038
9	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do. ...	575
10	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do. ...	600
11	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do. ...	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*12	The Aranya Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly	100
13	„ Arunodayá	Thána	Weekly ...	555
14	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do. ...	100
15	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	450
16	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do. ...	260
17	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do. ...	275
*18	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do. ...	200
19	„ Daivadnyá Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
20	„ Daivadnyá Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
21	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	425
22	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do. ...	140
23	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do. ...	116
24	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do. ...	100
25	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do. ...	285
26	„ Hitechhu	Kaládgi	Do. ...	85
27	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	400
28	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
29	„ Jagan Mitrá	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	145
30	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do. ...	130
*31	„ Karnátak Mitrá[3a]	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
32	„ Kesari	Poona	Do. ...	3,500
33	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do. ...	125
34	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	300
35	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly ...	220
36	„ Mahárashtrá Hitechhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,000
37	„ Mahárashtrá Mitrá	Sátára	Do. ...	250
38	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do. ...	150
39	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do. ...	100
40	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly ...	700
41	„ Nyáyá Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
42	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do. ...	103
43	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do. ...	250
44	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily ...	350
*45	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly ...	200
46	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti).	Do. ...	200
*47	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly ...	200
48	„ Saddharm Dip	Alíbág	Do. ...	600
49	„ Satyá Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	243
50	„ Satyá Sadan	Alíbág	Weekly ...	400
51	„ Satyá Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	140
52	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	275
*53	„ Sharabh	Alíbág	Weekly ...	200
54	„ Shiváji[3]	Poona	Do. ...	200
55	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do. ...	90
56	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do. ...	150
57	„ Suryodayá	Thána	Do. ...	240

[1] Maráthi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles.
[3a] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued:
	MARA'THI—continued.
58	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly	600
59	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly	250
60	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
61	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
62	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*63	„ Vinoda	Poona	Do.	200
64	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*65	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
66	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do.	400
67	„ Hitechhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
68	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	725
69	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
70	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
71	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
72	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
73	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
74	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
75	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
76	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	950
77	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
78	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
79	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
80	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
81	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do.	900
82	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Monthly	400
83	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
84	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*85	„ Gujarát Quarterly Journal	Do.	Quarterly	200
86	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Monthly	659
87	„ Jáme Jamshed	Do.	Daily	525
88	„ Kaira Vartmán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*89	„ Kaisar-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
90	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
91	„ Nágar Udaya	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
92	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
93	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
94	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
95	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
96	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
97	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
98	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	400
99	„ Stri Bodh	Do.	Monthly	533
100	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Do.	Do.	408
101	„ Tatwa Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár	Umreth	Fortnightly	62
*102	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
103	„ Vartmán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
104	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
105	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	300
106	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
107	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
	URDU.
*108	The Armagán	Bombay	Bi-weekly	200
109	„ Khayir Kháhe Islám	Do.	Fortnightly	300
110	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
111	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases, an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out; and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well-known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Suggests certain reforms in the present administration.

The Bakul (15) of the 7th January says :—It is many a time asserted that the representation of India in the English Parliament by means of elected Native members will serve as an effectual remedy for many of the evils that are at present made so much of, but it is far from certain that such a concession even if allowed will materially improve the present state of things. The fact inter alia that the Indian Government during the time of Lord Lytton paid very little regard to the Parliament at home corroborates this misgiving. Instead of wasting our energies in this direction it will therefore be more beneficial if an endeavour is made to secure similar representation in India itself. The only way in which this can be accomplished is by expanding the scope of the present Viceregal Legislative Council, and giving it the form of a Parliament. This Council should offer seats to the scions of the ancient royal families, and the rest of the seats should be reserved for the members elected by the people. With such a Council at the centre, the necessity for separate local Councils will disappear. It cannot be denied that the extent of this country is very great and its customs and manners very varied, and that for these reasons there exists the necessity of different laws for its different parts. But this difficulty will be obviated if the Viceroy's Council is made to comprise representatives of different parts of the country as also of the different races and creeds. The present local Legislative Councils are not only not beneficial to the cause of the ryots, but are positively mischievous. The members of these local Councils are generally not of the required type, and are given to nodding indiscriminate assent to the proposals of their brother-officials, though they can boast of a Ráo Báhádurship or an ancient pedigree. If gentlemen gifted with independent spirit and strength of views are at any time appointed members merely through a sense of constraint, they do not receive proper support from their colleagues, who look down upon them with contempt and distrust, and are obliged to bear the brunt of official displeasure. It is the present constitution of the Council that makes it possible for such legislative measures as the Game and Mhowra Bills to receive the sanction of Government—measures which it were better for all concerned should not be passed than that they should be rejected by superior authorities. To cure these evils the formation of a central Legislative Council for the whole of India based on the principles of local self-government is the only remedy. The next reform concerns the management of the revenues of the country. Unless the natives of the country are allowed a share in such management, there is no guarantee that their money will not be allowed to be wasted in an illegitimate manner. The question however is whether they are prepared for such a responsibility. A notion has gained firm ground among the rulers that with all their learning the natives of India are devoid of administrative capacities. A Native officer with much experience and of long standing cannot rise above the grade of a Deputy Collector, while an Englishman fresh from England and with a very scanty knowledge of the country is considered fit to assume the reins of the government of a district. The way in which these green officers discharge their duties is too well known to need any comment. Signing of official papers, abusing their subordinates, and indulging in sport are the only occupations of these learned civilians, and such officers are credited with proficiency in administrative work! A little consideration will however show that this notion is false. The Natives have a glorious past to boast of. Before the establishment of the British supremacy they ruled the destinies of a considerable portion of mankind. It is absurd to suppose that those capacities which were once their birthright should now have disappeared. So long as the names of statesmen like Nána Phadnavis, Haripant Phadke, Sakhárám Bápu and others adorn the page of history, the Natives need not entertain any fears of their being denounced as devoid of administrative abilities with any shadow of foundation. Our people expect to rise by degrees, and the competency acquired by such gradual advancement is too obvious to be ignored.

The Arunodayá (13) of the 7th January says:—It is reported that the Government of Lord Ripon has in contemplation the appointment of a Native member in the Viceregal Legislative Council, and that it is proposed to entrust the duty of election to the Bengal Zamindárs' Association. If this report has any foundation of truth and if the proposal is practically carried out, it will mark a new epoch in the British administration of India. Surely Lord Ripon deserves great credit for having inaugurated the policy of local self-government, and it is a matter of pleasure that he has also become alive to the inconsistency of allowing the people to choose their own representatives in the unimportant matters of road repairs, &c., and at the same time denying them a voice in the framing of laws on which their welfare mainly depends. It seems to be the noble intention of the Marquis to introduce a new and agreeable reform by allowing the people the privilege of electing their representatives in the Legislature similar to that already granted in connection with municipal and local committees; and if the numerical strength of such elected members is kept equal to that of those appointed by Government, the people will have left no cause for being dissatisfied with the present administration. The necessity for such concessions exists even under a Native administration, and when the rulers are foreigners and therefore ignorant of the requirements of the ruled, the necessity is doubly felt and needs to be recognized. The evils of legislation without representation are numerous, and the best specimens of them are the Mhowra Bill and the Abkári and the Forest Acts. The cry for the representation of India in Parliament or for the constitution of a separate Parliament for India is ill-advised, as neither of these concessions, if granted, will confer any lasting benefit on the people. Of a piece with the above is the suggestion that all executive officers except those of the rank of Governors, Commissioners, &c., should be appointed from the Native classes. It is absurd to entertain the idea that the English people have come to rule over India from purely disinterested motives, and it is idle to suppose that they will confer higher places on Natives to the exclusion of their own people. It would therefore be wise to strike on a plan at once beneficial to the governed and not prejudicial to the interests of the governors, and if the present Government are seriously intent upon ameliorating the condition of the people they cannot hit upon a better plan than that proposed to be adopted by Lord Ripon. [The Bombay Chronicle (65) and the Yajdán Parast (106) of the 7th January, the Akhbáre Sodágar (72) of the 9th and the Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 10th idem make similar remarks.]

Discusses the desirability of appointing an elected Native member in the Viceregal Legislative Council.

The Gujarát Mitrá (66) of the 7th January is rejoiced to find that the clause in the old Criminal Procedure Code which empowered appellate courts to enhance the sentence passed on a criminal by the lower courts has been cancelled. After repeating some of the arguments frequently brought forward in support of the abolition of the clause and several times noticed in the weekly summaries, the Mitrá expresses its deep gratitude to Lord Ripon for having made the long desired improvement. There is also another clause which requires modification, and it is very gratifying that its amendment is under the consideration of the Viceroy. The old Code authorized the appellate court to order the re-trial on appeal of an accused person if it thought that he had been undeservedly allowed by the original court to escape punishment. This clause is permitted to remain in the new Code to prevent miscarriage of justice in a case in which the original court may through a mistake or other cause have released an accused person who deserved punishment. Such a miscarriage however can be prevented without recourse to a re-trial, by taking severe notice of the wrongful conduct of the magistrate by whom the accused is let off. A close watch on the proceedings of lower magisterial courts will be necessary, and it is to be hoped that the Viceroy will sooner or later see his way to amend this clause also.

Makes remarks on the provisions of the new Criminal Procedure Code.

The Gujarâti (84) of the 7th January concurs with the Bombay Gazette that the time when it was considered expedient to appoint Military Officers to the post of Political Agents at the courts of Native States has gone by. These officers have sometimes been guilty of great injustice and as a class have failed to be good administrators. They generally assume an overbearing demeanour, and some young men adopt such a line of intercourse with the Native courts to which they are accredited that their presence, instead of fostering a good feeling between the British Government and their allies, breeds secret disaffection. A Political Agent in a Native State is an autocrat of the first water. He looks down with disdainful scorn upon everybody around him, and his behaviour betrays a high sense of self-importance. He does not condescend to take off his hat in a Native court, and evinces an utter disregard to the Native ruler, no matter if he is a Nawáb or a Thákor. He does not know the provisions of the criminal law and he does not care to have the evidence of witnesses to lead him to a decision nor the advice of learned counsels. He can afford to be pleased or displeased with the Chiefs according to his own sweet will, and can make and unmake them as he likes. He can compel a Chief to accept an illiterate person as his Diwán. He is not bound to listen to anybody and desires that everybody will keep his wisdom to himself. He carps at everybody and has no regard for anybody's character. When he goes on tour in the districts he exacts hospitality from the Diwán, and any remissness on the part of the latter is visited with displeasure.

States that it is not advisable to saddle Native States with Military officials.

In noticing the letter addressed by Sir James Caird to the Times on the problem of the population of India in relation to its food supply, the Lok Mitrâ (68) of the 7th January observes:—Sir James is of opinion that there are more alternatives than one to meet the situation, and of the two remedies which he suggests one at least is feasible. Population cannot steadily outgrow the supplies which support it; and if it does not gradually adjust itself to the means of subsistence it leads to their improvement. Increased productiveness will thus be the result of an increased population, and Mr. Caird is hopeful that by proper encouragement and by the application of suitable remedies the productiveness of the Indian soil can be doubled in a hundred years. There are also large tracts of land which can be brought under cultivation. But neither of these alternatives is feasible without the aid of capital. As long, however, as the present ruinous rates of interest on loans to agriculturists prevail, it is idle to expect that sufficient capital will be attracted in this direction. If therefore Government can succeed in reducing these rates of interest it will have taken an important step in the solution of the problem. The contemplated establishment of agricultural banks is a move in the right direction and will result in a larger amount of capital than hitherto being invested in the soil with a view to ensure increased production. Besides encouraging the construction of railways and irrigation works the Government can therefore, as Mr. Caird points out, most opportunely come to the aid of the people by the establishment of agricultural banks. Mr. Caird also shows that the present system of administering public justice imposes upon the Indian cultivator a heavy tax which adds a distinct weight to the already heavy burden of the land assessment. He calculates that the present duty from court-fee stamps adds 40 per cent. to the land revenue paid by the poorest cultivators, who form about a fourth of the smaller class of landholders, and who chiefly, if not solely, contribute to the revenue under this head. This is a state of things which urgently calls for remedy, and it is to be hoped that it will receive the earnest consideration of Government now that an economist of Sir James' eminence has evinced an interest in the matter.

Makes remarks in connection with Sir James Caird's letter to the Times on the problem of the population of India in relation to its food supply.

The Bakul (15) of the 7th January refers to the representations recently made to Government by the people of Ratnágiri complaining of the closing of salt-pans in that district and the inconvenience caused by the absence of common pasture grounds, and observes that the people have been reduced to a miserable condition by the stoppage of salt manufacture. It may be that the Government are gainers in the bargain, but this subordination of the interests of the ryots to fiscal considerations is reprehensible in the case of a civilized government. The utter disregard to the sources from which reduction can advantageously be effected and the tendency to increase the tax on a necessary of life, coupled with the adoption of measures for making it procurable with difficulty, indicate unmistakeably the direction in which the present British administrators are steering their course. What is left for the people under the circumstances is to take joint action and to represent the matter to the Viceroy through the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha.

Complains of the closure of salt-works in the Ratnágiri District.

Says that the good done by the exemption from duty of salt required in the manufacture of soap is neutralized by the restrictions placed on its use.

The Prabhákar (44) of the 10th January observes that the exemption from duty of salt required in the manufacture of soap and candles is not an unmixed good. In fact the advantages secured by the exemption are neutralized by the restrictions placed on the use of salt. Government have directed that such factories shall not keep in store more salt than is required for ordinary consumption, and that the salt water remaining after soap has been prepared shall not be made into salt. Provision is also made for the appointment by local Governments of officers who will see that the restrictions above specified are duly observed and who will be paid by the proprietors of the factories. What is gained by the purchase of salt at a cheaper rate is thus lost in paying for the supervision by Government officers, and the evils of such supervision which are patent are the only acquisitions in the bargain. [The Bombay Chronicle (65) of the 7th and the Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 8th January make similar remarks.]

Approves of the instructions issued by the Government of India to the Government of Bombay for the establishment of agricultural banks.

The Lok Mitrá (68) of the 7th January heartily approves of the letter addressed by the Government of India to the Government of Bombay giving an outline of the scheme for working agricultural banks, and observes that the suggestions made in it are practical and if carefully carried out will go a great way towards ensuring the success of these interesting institutions. [The Bombay Chronicle (65) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Makes remarks on the "Agricultural Improvement" and "Police Administration" sections of the General Administration Report.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 8th January 1883 quotes extracts from the General Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency for 1881-82, and observes with reference to the section "Agricultural Improvements" that the creation and encouragement of a desire for agricultural knowledge among the educated Natives is the greatest desideratum of the present day. To furnish such classes with an agreeable occupation and to ensure the reclamation of waste lands it is necessary to import European agricultural implements, to establish a factory for the preparation of manure of the English quality, and to invite Natives of mature understanding to prosecute their studies in that line, due measures being taken to provide them with the means of subsistence. When the students acquire a mastery over the subject they should be allowed gratis the use of some fields for a certain number of years. This will infuse in the students a kind of interest for their work and secure efficiency in a short time. The Model Farms of the present day admit and train the illiterate children of the cultivating classes, but these when they grow up leave the farms before they are sufficiently grounded in the subjects taught, and resuming their profession carry it on in the rustic style of their forefathers. The instruction imparted to them is thus wasted on them. To remedy this state of things the Indu Prakásh recommends the adoption of its proposals, which in its opinion are calculated to afford to the educated Natives an opportunity of showing their general aptitude and at the same time to help the cause of agricultural improvements. With reference to the remarks on "Police Administration," the Indu Prakásh observes that the information furnished under that section does not appear to have been the result of a careful investigation. The statement that crime has diminished does not appear to be borne out by the present circumstances. The population of the country is increasing and with it the difficulty of securing proper means of livelihood, while the progress of knowledge does not appear to have kept pace with it. The statement that tendency to crime has abated cannot therefore be reconciled with these facts. There may have been a decrease in the number of crimes actually investigated, but this falling off can be attributed in some measure to the unwillingness of the people to take their complaints to the police, for which the various newly fledged technicalities of the law and the uncertain manner of police investigation are mainly responsible.

Makes comments on the recent travels of His Excellency the Governor.

The Suryodayá (57) of the 8th January dwells at some length on the advantages of travels, and is grieved to find that His Excellency the Governor does not utilize his various trips in the way he should. On the occasion of his recent visit to Jalgaon in the Khándesh District His Excellency, in reply to an address presented by some mill-owners, remarked that the people of Khándesh looked very happy. It is very strange that the Governor should have been guilty of such a generalization. His Excellency was surely led away by the satisfactory management of the mills and the imposing appearance presented by the labourers therein. If His Excellency had taken pains to visit remote villages and to make personal enquiries regarding the comforts and the requirements of the people, he would have been able to judge correctly of the condition of the masses. Such enquiry would have elicited the fact that the people are groaning under the burden of miseries for which the recent havoc by locusts and the heavy land revenue assessment are responsible. The forest laws also have taken a part in aggravating their miseries. The Governor made similar remarks in replying to the address presented to him at Ratnágiri and expressed his sympathy with the policy of local self-government. But did he pay any attention to the difficulties arising from the stoppage of salt-works in that district, or did he suggest any remedy for them? In brief, the travels of His Excellency have not been attended with the desired benefit to the people; on the contrary his remarks are calculated to do immense harm to the cause of the ryots. His Excellency is the local representative of the British Crown and such glowing utterances on his part are sure to beguile the outside public and to make the possibility of redress very distant.

Suggests that measures should be taken for giving fuller information to the people regarding the cultivation of jute.

The Arunodayá (13) of the 7th January hears that Government intend to encourage the cultivation of jute all over India, and that the Bombay Government is taking measures to try the experiment in some of the sea-coast lands. With this view the Collectors of districts have been directed to notify the intentions of Government and to invite people to undertake the experiments on very favourable conditions. It is not however clear how the agricultural classes can be expected to take the initiative until they are properly informed of the details of the concessions offered and the conditions imposed by Government. It is therefore imperatively necessary that Government and its officials should give publicity to the requisite information by means of local newspapers and through the patels and kulkárnis of different villages. Every cultivator is influenced by a desire to grow a new and valuable crop on his land, and it is not likely that this information if generally made known will be altogether lost on that class.

Makes suggestions in connection with the treatment of lepers.

The Bodh Sudhákar (17) of the 3rd January, while referring to the question of the prevalence of the disease of leprosy in the different districts of this Presidency, observes that it is difficult to trace with any degree of accuracy the causes of this disease. It is gathered from the statistics on the subject that the disease is altogether absent in some districts, while it is most prevalent in others similarly situated with regard to their physical position. It is therefore desirable that a committee of experienced and well informed medical men should be appointed, who should examine the physical conditions of different places as regards climate, water-supply and articles of food with a view to some sound conclusions being arrived at regarding the adaptability of particular climates for the treatment of the disease of leprosy. Patients of a certain age and with similar symptoms should be stationed at different places in the different parts of the Presidency, and the practical effects of such an experiment should be utilized by the committee in coming to a decision. Any expenditure without the above preliminaries will be a sheer waste of money.

Remarks on the causes of the mental deterioration of the present generation of Indian Civil Servants.

Referring to the letter of its Bombay correspondent published by the London Times on the mental and moral deterioration of the present generation of the Indian Civil Servants, the Indu Prakásh (8) of the 8th January gives a description of the present state of the Civil Service as compared with what it was in the early days of British rule, and remarks as follows :—Hard workers and real administrators are the exception because hard work and real administration have been rendered optional; easy-going men are the rule. The reason is that the scope for the exercise of administrative faculties has been rendered limited by the mode of government, and as long as things so continue the Civil Servants must go on deteriorating, physically and mentally, and fall unfortunate victims to the dull monotony and temptations of a solitary life in the mofussil. Happily things promise to improve. The political reforms of Lord Ripon's Government are opening a new era in the history of British rule in India, and Lord Ripon has very appropriately observed that far from reducing the power and influence of Civil Servants those reforms are calculated to bring into action the best faculties of their minds. To rule is easy but to administer difficult, and it is one of the merits of Lord Ripon's reforms that they give work to the ruling as well as the ruled classes. All that talk against the competitive system of examination is idle. If we get crammers now, we got patronised men formerly; and selection by examination is better than selection by patronage. The present race of Civilians are more educated and the country now wants educated men. The fault is not of the system according to which candidates are selected for the service. The evil lies in the dull and practically irresponsible system of administration which allows the useful faculties of the mind to rust and calls that government which is mere routine. The remedy lies in doing everything to endow the people and the Civilians with the means of political life. Some men may consider it a virtue to ignore the condition of the Civil Service as we have depicted it. But it goes without saying that the Civil Service is no longer in popular estimation what it once was. The correspondent of the Times has correctly appreciated that fact; and sad as the conclusions are at which he has arrived, there is some consolation in the thought that the country is entering on reforms that will retard the deterioration of the Civil Service while improving the political condition of the people.

Comments on the career of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner.

The Shiváji (54) of the 5th January comments on the career of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner, and while doing so takes the retiring Councillor to task generally for his unfriendly conduct towards Natives and particularly for the Game and Mhowra Bills of which he was the originator. The honourable member has indeed achieved a name for being the most inveterate enemy of the people, and in this he finds no other equal than Sir James Fergusson himself. By the departure of Mr. Ashburner the people of India will be relieved of one of their worst foes, and this feeling of relief will meet with a parallel only on the occasion of the retirement of Sir James. It is a matter of satisfaction however that the Honourable Mr. Peile has taken the place of the retiring member, and it is to be hoped that he will justify the expectations which the people have formed of him.

Comments on the steps recently taken by Government for giving general publicity to all measures of public importance.

The Mahárásht'á Mitrá (37) of the 11th January observes that the public have every reason to be satisfied with the means recently adopted by Government for securing due publicity to all measures of general importance. But it is a matter for regret that the scheme does not under the present circumstances bear good fruit. The editors of vernacular newspapers are generally ignorant of the English language, and having therefore to consult the convenience of other people are unable to give a prompt rendering of the resolutions occasionally received from Government. It is of great importance that such resolutions should be placed before the public as early as possible to admit of their subject being carefully studied by the people and also to allow of their placing their objections against the measure before Government in time. If therefore Government supply purely vernacular papers with Maráthi translations of the resolutions intended for them, it would serve the aims of Government by facilitating a prompt publication of the information dealt out. The second point for consideration is, how should the information supplied to such vernacular newspapers reach the masses? As matters stand at present, the village people have no access to the newspapers published in the district and sometimes are even totally ignorant of their existence. Their idea of the world is confined to the nutshell of their little village, and thus they are virtually debarred from a knowledge of the most ordinary changes and reforms going on around them. That this state of things should not be remedied under the present administration that boasts of civilization is simply disgraceful. It is but just that Government should devise means by which the rural public would be helped to a knowledge of things tending either to their welfare or their misery though it be at their own expense. A portion of the income of the local funds should be devoted to the propagation of such knowledge, and it is certain that the editors of district newspapers will not hesitate to undertake the desired work with a small pecuniary assistance from Government. There is also another point in connection with the mofussil printing presses that requires serious consideration. It is not very clear why in spite of the existence of various printing establishments throughout the whole of the Presidency the Government should have gone to the enormous expenditure of maintaining a Central Press in Bombay. Any sensible man will admit that the complaints of district officers against the work done by private presses being not of the required type and not executed with due punctuality, which in fact were the main causes of the establishment of this expensive Press, are not well founded. It is impossible that if encouragement is offered to private establishments they will not strive to improve the standard of the work executed by them. We suggest, therefore, that the Government of Lord Ripon should direct the utilization of the private presses throughout the whole of the Presidency for the execution of all the Government printing work. Such a step will lead to a general improvement in the status of the Native Press and will give a strong impetus to private enterprize. It is said that the expense of printing in the Central Press is $2\frac{1}{2}$ times that in the other presses. Why should Government undertake to maintain such an expenditure?

Comments on Sir William Wedderburn's proposal regarding the publication of a central Native magazine.

Commenting on the suggestion recently made by Sir William Wedderburn regarding the publication of a central Native magazine, the Indu Prakásh (8) of the 8th January says:—The Government of India has on more than one occasion emphasised its desire to raise the status of the Native papers by consulting their views. There is no more any longing for gagging them. More courteous attention is paid to them than used to be paid before Lord Lytton's Gagging Act. Thanks to Lord Ripon, the Native editors are now enabled to have access to public documents which some time ago could not reach farther than the tables of the privileged Anglo-Indian editors. It is nevertheless true that some anomalies continue to exist. The Secretariat of the Government of Bombay has not yet had time to think of abolishing the system according to which the editors of the Bombay Gazette and the Times of India get their copies of the annual Administration Reports soon after they are issued and some months before the editors of other papers. As another instance may be cited the partiality with which the several numbers of Mr. J. M. Campbell's Bombay Gazetteer are distributed. The two English dailies of Bombay get them, but the Native papers do not. It is however fair to assume that this system too will sooner or later die out. At any rate it is a significant sign of the times that the Native Press is better cared for now both by the Government of India and the Local Governments. A corresponding sense of their duty has also begun to be felt by those of the Native editors who some time ago appeared to think that anything or everything they should say would hold water. The reckless writer has sobered down into a preacher of moderation and good sense. The fiat of the Viceroy and his colleagues in Council has developed a feeling not only of their importance but also of their responsibility among all the Native editors. They no longer feel that they write with halters round their necks or with the secret fear in their minds that some dark official is waiting to pounce upon them the moment he finds that they have said something distasteful to him. It used to be said of Sir Richard Temple that he took the weekly provender supplied to him by the Reporter on the Native Press with great avidity, not indeed for the purpose of consulting Native opinion but with the object of giving some additional work to the overworked Superintendents of Police or Police Commissioners, whom he meant to create censors of the press. We have not heard that Sir James Fergusson bestows the same kind of attention on the subject, and we take it that His Excellency bears a nobler feeling towards those who, amidst good and evil reports, act as interpreters of public opinion.

Approves of Sir William Wedderburn's proposal for establishing a periodical for the purpose of communicating the sentiments of the leading Native newspapers to the Government of India.

In noticing the letter addressed by Sir William Wedderburn to the Bombay Gazette proposing the establishment of a monthly or fortnightly publication for the purpose of communicating in a concise and intelligent form the views of the people of India as expressed in the leading Native newspapers to the Government of India, the Lok Mitrá (68) of the 7th January observes that the proposal is worthy of the attention of all who are able to help in the fulfilment of the laudable object. There is no machinery at present in existence which can adequately and faithfully reproduce for the use of Government the sentiments of the people of the country as represented by the leading organs of the Native community. A step in the right direction will have been taken if the proposal of Sir William is carefully worked out. In India there are so many dialects that it is impossible for the Government to be acquainted with the utterances of the public in all of them. A feeble attempt at acquainting the Government with the opinions of the Native Press is made in the shape of weekly reports on the Native Press, but the reports so prepared can lead to no practical good. [The Hitechhu (67) of Ahmedabad, the Deshi Mitrá (81) and the Dátardun (80) of the 11th January express similar sentiments.]

Is glad that the report that the Queen-Empress induced the Duke of Connaught to withdraw his application for a command in India has been contradicted.

The Lok Mitrá (68) of the 7th January is glad that the report that in consequence of remonstrances from the Queen the Duke of Connaught has withdrawn his application for a command in India has been officially contradicted. When it was first announced by the Standard that His Royal Highness was desirous of having a command in India with a view to add to the experience of his profession, the announcement was hailed with satisfaction by the whole country, and the people would have been disappointed if the Queen had discountenanced the proposal. The social and political advantages of the step contemplated by the Duke are so many and so obvious that it is a relief to be informed that the Queen will not stand in the way of their being secured. [The Bombay Chronicle (65) and the Yajdán Parast (106) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Expresses gratitude to the Judges of the Bombay High Court for the new rules for the examination of candidates aspiring to become solicitors or advocates of the Court.

The Lok Mitrá (68) of the 7th January notes with satisfaction that the Judges of the Bombay High Court have done away with the rule by which candidates for the examination of advocates of the High Court were allowed only one opportunity of passing the examination. The rule, says the Mitrá, was most arbitrary and iniquitous, and has deservedly received its death-blow at the hands of the present Chief Justice and the other Judges of the Court. Last week the Mitrá expressed its gratitude to the Judges for abolishing the rule by which articled clerks were precluded from having more than two chances of appearing at the examination for solicitors of the High Court. These concessions furnish a very fair index of what may be expected from the administration of Sir Charles Sargent. [The Gujarâti (84), the Yajdân Parast (106), and the Satyâ Mitrâ (98) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Prays for the reduction of fees charged by solicitors and advocates of High Courts.

The Akhbâre Soddgar (72) of the 8th January also makes similar remarks, and adds that the fees charged by the advôcates and solicitors of High Courts are exorbitant and ruinous to the parties who engage their services. If these fees are reduced the legal advisers and advocates will not suffer any appreciable loss, as parties frequently take and act upon the advice of incompetent persons in order to avoid the heavy expenditure of consulting duly constituted legal practitioners, entailing thereby considerable trouble on the Court and ultimate loss on themselves. The rule that two advocates shall be engaged by a party in a long cause also necessitates a heavy expenditure and needs to be amended.

Suggests the abolition of the restriction of age on candidates for district pleaders' examination.

The Bakul (15) of the 7th January expresses satisfaction at the abrogation by the present Chief Justice of the rule enacted by his predecessor by which candidates for the solicitors' examination were debarred from appearing a third time, and observes that the Chief Justice will also do well to abolish the restriction of age on the candidates for the district pleaders' examination and thus forward the cause of many competent persons whom the restriction has served to keep back. The public also should lose no time in representing the matter to the Chief Justice by means of a memorial on the subject.

Recommends the transfer of a few cases from the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge to that of the Second Class Subordidate Judge at Surat.

The Gujarât Mitrâ (66) of the 7th January observes that the work of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Surat has considerably diminished of late, and recommends the District Judges to transfer some cases to that officer from the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge.

Expresses great satisfaction at the result of the re-trial of the Samdhiála forgery case.

The Yajdân Parast (106) of the 7th January observes that the final result of the Samdhiála forgery case and of the enquiry made into the conduct of Mr. Bhavánidás Wajráni, the public prosecutor, furnishes one more instance of how arbitrarily the Political Agents sometimes act. Colonel Phillips' conduct in this matter was, to say the least, disgracefully arbitrary. He wanted to cast a slur on the character of the vakil and the proceedings of the Court, and to exercise a check on their freedom of action. It was however gratifying that Government appointed an independent Judge to try the case over again and to enquire into the public prosecutor's conduct, and it is still more gratifying that the re-trial and enquiry have resulted in the exoneration of the Court and the vakil from all blame, and that Government have restored the vakil to his office.

Makes comments on a recent case of murder of a European soldier by a brother-soldier tried at the Bombay Criminal Sessions.

Anent the acquittal of Private Hawkins who was recently tried at the Allahabad Sessions on a charge of murder, the Indu Prakâsh (8) of the 8th January observes :—With a view to prevent such murders the Pioneer proposes that sporting parties of soldiers ought to be put a stop to as long as there are some European jurors who think it honourable to let their conscience go to sleep when pronouncing a European charged with murder not guilty. Some such remedy must seem necessary. The other day a European soldier was tried at the Bombay Criminal Sessions on the charge of murdering a brother-soldier. The evidence was unimpeachable, and had the accused been a Native the sentence would have doubtless been one of death. But the jurors, of whom the majority were Europeans, differed, and the majority convicted the man of the offence but strangely enough recommended him to mercy on the very unintelligible ground that there was no evidence before them to show that before he committed the murder the prisoner had not borne a good character. In fact anything passes for reason and good sense when a European happens to be on trial. Did the Anglo-Indian papers in Bombay condemn this recommendation of the jury? Was not the ground on which that recommendation was based a most silly ground? And yet when a Vallabháchárya Mahárája was imprisoned and his devotees prayed for reprieve in his case, they laughed at the whole thing and said, "What an ignorant people these are!" Ignorance, however, is some excuse; but what of persons who, knowing that they are talking nonsense, do not scruple to talk it when a European's life is to be spared?

Comments on the liberality with which titles are now-a-days conferred.

The Mahárashtra Mitra (37) of the 11th January hears that the Honourable W. W. Hunter has been rewarded with a knighthood for his labours in connection with the Education Commission, and says:—Why should the Government have shown him such consideration? What extraordinary feat has he achieved for which he deserves such a reward? Why then should not Messrs. Lee-Warner and Telang be equally favoured? It is very desirable that Government should not make the honour of knighthood as cheap as that of the titles of Khán Báhádur and Ráo Báhádur. Government have of late conferred the ex-officio title of Ráo Sáheb on conciliators, but this measure is calculated to cast a slur on the hereditary recipients of that title, who now deserve to be raised higher.

Suggests that Dr. Blaney's services should be rewarded by Government with a C.I.E.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 8th January, while referring to Mr. Raghunáth Náráyan Khote's being rewarded with the title of C.I.E., says:—By the bye, how is it we miss the name of another distinguished townsman among the new C.I.E.'s? Dr. Blaney has been one of the most active members of our municipal bodies; he has devoted considerable attention to the sanitary condition of the town; and he has otherwise been a most useful citizen. The public of Bombay would have been glad to see his services recognized by Government.

Recommends that the services of Mr. Navroji Fardunji may be acknowledged by Government by the bestowal of a title.

A correspondent of the Rást Goftár (96) of the 7th January observes that since Mr. Raghunáth Náráyan Khote has been rewarded with the title of C.I.E. for the services rendered by him to the municipality of Bombay, how is it that some other members of the same corporation who have proved themselves more useful to it than Mr. Khote have not received a similar reward? Mr. Navroji Fardunji has been connected with the corporation ever since its creation, and had worked in the municipality before that. The services rendered by him have been superior to and more important than those performed by any other member. It is true that he did not try to please the authorities but opposed them in the interests of the public and was ever ready to expose their shortcomings; but this line of policy instead of detracting from his merits gives him a stronger claim for the due acknowledgment of his services by Government. His strenuous exertions for securing political rights to Natives and introducing social improvements among the Pársis ought also not to be forgotten. The Rást Goftár endorses the above sentiments. [The Bombay Punch (75) of the 13th January also expresses a similar wish.]

A'bkári.

Makes certain suggestions with regard to the commission appointed to report on the Mhowra Bill.

The Dnyán Prakásh (7) of the 8th January, in an article headed the "A'bkári Policy of the Bombay Government," says:—The fate which the Mhowra Bill of the Bombay Government suffered at the hands of the Government of India is well known to all. It was the most crushing of all the defeats sustained by the Government of Sir James Fergusson during the last two and a half years of its existence. That legislative measure was pushed through without sufficient information, as anybody who cares to read the debates that took place on the occasion of the first and second readings of that bill will readily admit. The letter of the Government of India vetoing that measure conclusively shows that, had the Government of Sir James

Fergusson made sufficient inquiry in the matter, the inexpediency of legislative interference would have become as apparent to the Bombay Government as to the non-official classes and to the Government of India. As a post facto step the Bombay Government is doing now what it ought to have done before the introduction of the bill into the local Legislative Council in June last. A paragraph has recently been going round that the Bombay Government have appointed a special commission of inquiry and charged it with the task of ascertaining by personal investigation the desirability or otherwise of any legislative interference. A set of questions has been issued and circulated among those competent to furnish reliable information. We trust that the people concerned will readily come forward with all their information and thus convince the Bombay Government of the great hardship which not only their contemplated policy would have caused but even the present policy as inaugurated by the A'bkári Act of 1878 has actually caused. The non-official members of the local Legislative Council who in June last strenuously and with a singular unanimity opposed the passage of the Mhowra Bill should take the lead on the present occasion and lay before the commission all the available information. It is not yet publicly known who constitute this commission of inquiry, and whether there is any representative of the non-official classes on the commission. We fear there is no non-official member on the commission, and it is a trite observation to say that an inquiry into the results of the fiscal legislation of Government if conducted by a purely official commission will not command popular confidence and respect. This observation of ours is especially true of the traditional ábkári policy of Government, which under various pretexts has taken good care to immensely increase its ábkári revenue by means of the increased facilities thrown in the way of a people known from time immemorial for their almost total abstinence. Several conscientious Revenue Officers have repeatedly admitted the truth and justice of our charge against Government, and we have not the slightest doubt that if one or two really representative non-official gentlemen were associated with the official commissioners in the present inquiry, the whole truth would come out most prominently, and Government would be compelled to hang their heads down in utter shame. We have thrown the above out as a hint, so that if it be not yet too late one or two representatives of the non-official classes may yet be appointed on the commission. [The Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 9th January makes similar remarks with regard to the appointment of non-official members on the commission.]

Criticises the questions prepared for enquiry into the surreptitious distillation of liquor from mhowra blossoms.

With reference to the committee appointed to collect evidence of the extent to which illicit distillation from mhowra blossoms is carried on, the Kaisar-i-Hind (89) of the 7th January observes that several of the 35 questions which have been prepared for the examination of witnesses are of such a nature that the replies to them will lead to no other inference than that smuggling is carried on to a considerable extent. These questions are prepared on the assumption that the crime of illicit distillation considerably prevails, while that is the very point that needs proof. In support of these assertions the Kaisar quotes questions numbered 3, 5, 8 and 17, and makes some observations on them. The subordinates of the Police and Revenue Departments, Jághirdárs and landholders will probably be called to give evidence; but considering their position in relation to the authorities and the threats they will probably receive from minor Government officials in connection with their evidence, it seems probable that their statements will not be impartial. Nor is it likely that Government will appoint on the committee any persons to represent the people. Under these circumstances it is desirable that the leading men in táluka towns should offer their own evidence to the committee so as to expose the real state of things. It is rumoured, with what truth it is not known, that a big official went to a Pársi pátil in the Thána District, and put to him some of the questions referred to above; but as the replies did not meet his expectations he left the place in disgust observing that the pátil's evidence was quite worthless.

Legislation.

The Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

Disapproves of the debate on the amended Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 7th January observes :—The recent debate in the Supreme Legislative Council on the technical amendments in the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act was every way disappointing from the non-official point of view. Its character shows clearly how, in spite of tall talk and elaborate resolutions on the extreme desirability of publicity in legislation, Lord Ripon and the majority of his colleagues can at times act as bureaucrats. Several new matters as submitted by the Local Government, inclusive of Dr. Pollen's report and Mr. Lee-Warner's paper on the Bombay revenue system, were considered by the Select Committee. Of these the public at large knows absolutely nothing. Copious extracts from Dr. Pollen's report were read by many of the speakers, but to all intents and purposes it is a sealed document to the outside public. If those intimately concerned in the relief of the Deccan ryots are at all to be heard, and if their advice is at all to receive that just hearing which is so necessary for arriving at a conclusion, then we submit the Imperial Legislative Council has here proved a defaulter. It has failed to make public Dr. Pollen's report and Mr. Lee-Warner's paper. Nay more, the press was not supplied with a copy of the Local Government's latest despatch on the subject,—the despatch on which the Select Committee drafted its final report and submitted the same to the Council for consideration. Beyond the amendments which were proposed at the Council, the public and the press at large know nothing. And yet Mr. Hope says that his colleagues had given the most careful consideration to the representations from the outside public! He must remember that whatever these representations, they were all made irrespective of what is contained in Dr. Pollen's report. Had that important State document, to which the Viceroy and the Local Government have attached such great value, been placed at the disposal of the public before the amendments finally came for the consideration of the whole Council, matters might have taken a different turn. Those who presented memorials would have thrown more light on the subject. Perhaps they would have had the opportunity of confirming or contradicting Dr. Pollen's statements. By discussing the report in a secret conclave the Select Committee and the Council have placed the public critics at a disadvantage. And yet they speak in the same breath of allowing the press and the people every opportunity to state their views on important State measures! After all we may have only the semblance and not the substance of publicity in matters of imperial legislation. No important bill, whether in the Imperial or Provincial Council, should be at all proceeded with until each and every official paper embodying official views on the subject is made public. The official views can then be fairly pitted against the non-official views, and the healthy criticism arising from such a discussion among the public will really educate our Councillors. Otherwise we may see the present farce going on as before, at any rate till a statesman of even greater moral courage than Lord Ripon at once knocks the Councils on the head and reforms them altogether on a constitutional and really representative basis. The amendments passed will not improve the condition of the Deccan agriculturists. What is radically wrong cannot be made right by any quantity of tinkering. As Dr. Hunter justly remarked, the Act is a novel piece of Indian legislation, and since it has hitherto failed to realise the object of its authors, they are for amendments and re-amendments. But even after all these are passed, how will the ryots stand? Will their prospects be a whit the better? Will they soon be relieved of their debts when a law is passed which ruins their creditors and makes them dishonest? The amendment touching the compulsory invitation by conciliators was in contravention of the principle of the bill. In fact, the very idea of conciliation excludes that of compulsion or direction. Compulsion can only be expedient when voluntary means have failed. But as stated by Dr. Pollen the system of conciliation has worked very well on the whole. We entirely agree with Mr. Crosthwaite that the introduction of the proposed clause and the extraordinary force that was given to the agreement made before the conciliators would virtually upset the Act. We cannot but regret to read the remarks which the Viceroy made in support of the amendment. He was undoubtedly not a free agent. If the Viceroy had but cared to give greater consideration to the subject, he would have agreed with Dr. Hunter and Mr. Crosthwaite in the objections they so pointedly brought forward. That there was a serious division in the Council on the subject and that the majority voted against it, is in itself an index of the weakness of those who supported the amendment. The chief reason assigned by the Viceroy was the fact that the amendment was supported by the two members of his Council representing Bombay and was consistent with the wishes expressed by the Government of Bombay. Herein lies Lord Ripon's mistake. The views of his two colleagues and those of the Local Government are official views. The Viceroy has more than once publicly declared that he was neither for hasty legislation nor for legislation on which the voice of the people at large had not been heard. If he had been consistent in this matter he would have postponed the debate and invited the opinion of the public. But he did nothing of the kind. Later on the Viceroy speaks of the amendment in a qualified manner, and urges that no objection whatever had been felt to this provision by the gentleman whose name had been very frequently referred to in the discussions and whose opinion on this question was of great importance. But His Excellency forgets that after all Dr. Pollen is only the official apologist of Mr. Hope and of the Bombay Government together. We have from the outset demurred to an official like Dr. Pollen, however able and conscientious, being nominated for the duty. For we are convinced that despite all his honest efforts to view the practical working of the Act without bias, he would be unconsciously led to look at matters through official spectacles. Because Dr. Pollen is an official apologist, there is the greater reason and justice for the Viceroy to refrain from putting implicit confidence in his report. Had he done so he would have voted with the majority. We endorse Mr. Crosthwaite's sensible suggestion that we ought to have very much greater experience of the working of the Act than hitherto. Longer trial is necessary and that by an independent commission composed of a judicial officer, who shall not be an apologist of the Local Government, and two non-official members of extensive local experience. As it is, we cannot refrain from expressing our opinion that the Council has made a great mistake in again tinkering the bill for the third time. Its labour will be entirely lost. And we should not be surprised if before another two years the bill has to be recast de novo. Dr. Hunter and Messrs. Ilbert and Crosthwaite deserve the thanks of the public for their honest and manly utterances on the occasion.

Says that the present distressed condition of the Deccan ryots is owing in a measure to the increased land assessments and the rigidity exercised in its collection.

The same paper, in writing on that portion of Dr. Hunter's speech in the Supreme Legislative Council which relates to the hardship caused by enhanced revenue assessments in the Deccan, refers to Sir William Wedderburn's recent brochure on the condition of the ryots and observes:—We have throughout maintained that the distressed condition of the Deccan peasants for years past must be attributed in a great measure to the increased land assessments and the cruel rigidity with which Revenue Officers have collected it. The peasant's want of thrift and his extravagance on marriage and other social occasions are indeed but minor causes of his present state of finance. The fact is, as Sir W. Wedderburn has rightly observed, that the officials backed up by a misguided Government have throughout ignored the right principle of assessment as laid down by Sir Charles Wood in his despatch of 1864 and have invariably attempted to prove that enhancement of assessment has had nothing to do with the present poverty. But the truth is slowly asserting itself and taking strong hold of all unbiassed minds. And we take it to be a happy augury of the future that the debate in the Supreme Council has brought this question to the front. The Viceroy was no doubt strictly within his rights as President when he stated that the important point raised by Dr. Hunter was not relevant to the bill. But it is to be sincerely hoped that His Excellency will not allow this most vital phase of the question affecting the whole of India to be thrust aside. Dr. Hunter has laid the cultivators of the country under life-long obligations by his boldness in exposing the evil that lies at the root of all agricultural distress. He has not exaggerated the real cause of the present condition of the ryots. He bases his opinion on that of Dr. Pollen himself, the special Judge whom Government has deputed to watch the Agriculturists' Relief Act. That officer, though to a great extent an official apologist, is constrained to admit that "the ryots are overburdened with an intolerable load of paper debt outstanding against them, and that in average years the ordinary Deccan ryot does not gain enough from the produce of his fields to pay the Government assessment and to support himself and his family throughout the year." It is to be hoped that Dr. Hunter's speech will lead to a reform in our land revenue system, and as a first step towards it we fully endorse his suggestion for the nomination of an impartial commission. Those who ridicule the idea of a third commission ought to remember that hitherto the commissions have been mostly of official bodies. For the representation of the grievances of the people we require the people's representatives and not officials accustomed all their lives to view things through official glasses. We hope that the inquiry will not be postponed to some indefinite date. It is the shelving of it for years past that has so painfully aggravated the difficulty, and righteous will be that Government that can boldly confront the question and solve it. [The Lok Mitrá (68) of the 7th January expresses similar sentiments.]

Criticises the speech of Dr. Hunter on the occasion of the passing of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act Amendment Bill.

With reference to the Honourable Dr. Hunter's speech on the occasion of the passing of certain amendments in the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act, the Bombay Chronicle (65) of the 7th January observes that the Bombay land revenue system can hardly be held mainly responsible for the miserable condition of the Deccan peasantry. The disappearance of the four causes out of the five, which according to Dr. Hunter contributed to their prosperity three quarters of a century ago, has not certainly been caused by the revenue system which is in the opinion of English, Anglo-Indian and Native experts the best that can be adopted in the interests of the State and the agriculturists. If there be faults in the mode of working that system the same should be mended, and efforts in this direction have already been made by the local authorities during the last ten years. From the time of Sir Philip Wodehouse to the present day the Government of Bombay have been solicitous to see that the peasant is not hard-pressed by the demands of the collectors of revenue in bad seasons. Remissions and postponement of the demands of the State have been so frequently allowed that the Secretary of State and the Government of India have begun to regard them in the light of ill-advised liberality towards the ryots and an injustice to the tax-payers in general. The Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act was never proposed by its authors as the only measure for the amelioration of the peasant's miserable condition. The Honourable Mr. Hope and other supporters of the Act have been from the first strongly impressed with the idea that generous administrative measures in addition to liberal legislative enactments were required to better his condition. The provision of public works as a protection against the effects of the famine; the partial or entire remission of revenue demands that the ryots might be unable to meet owing to unfavourable seasons; the efforts made to establish agricultural banks and to spread primary education throughout the country;—these are sufficient proofs of the anxious attention paid by the Local and the Supreme Governments to the amelioration of the condition of the Deccan peasantry. Dr. Hunter recommends that a commission should be appointed to enquire into and report upon the Deccan ryot's condition. But it ought to be remarked that there is ample information on the subject on the records of Government, and the only course that seems desirable under the circumstances is to help the State to proceed steadily and vigorously in the direction of the reforms and improvements it has already inaugurated.

The Bombay Pharmacy Bill.

Discusses the provisions of the Bombay Pharmacy Bill.

The Native Opinion (9) of the 7th January makes the following observations and suggestions on the Bombay Pharmacy Bill in continuation of those contained in its article on the subject reported at page 21 of the Report on Native

Papers for the week ending 6th January 1883:—The disease of carbuncle is also one of those for which European doctors have as yet not been able to invent a specific, while the Native practitioners are said to be acquainted with an effective treatment of the same. This treatment requires the use of dátura (thorn-apple) which is included in the list of poisons given in Schedule D. of the proposed bill. If therefore the present bill is passed into a law, the loss to which the sufferers from the above-mentioned disease will be subjected by being deprived of the services of Native waidyas will be very considerable. This and the instance cited in our last article go to show the practical inconveniencies that will follow in the train of the legislative measure that is now in contemplation. Of the poisons enumerated in Schedule D. of the bill nine have from time immemorial played an important part in the Native Pharmacy. These are: Quicksilver, white arsenic, vermilion, bachnág (root of gloriosa superba), Nux Vomica, datura (thorn-apple), minium, opium and white sublimate of mercury. Some of these are known to be the ingredients of medicines that are ordinarily and in everyday life administered even by illiterate women with perfect safety. The prohibition of the use of such poisons will result in a practical barring of Natives from access to such convenient and useful preparations. The new law though affecting the practitioners of English as well as Native medicines will not prove equally injurious to both. There are thus two defects in the present law: 1st, it exhibits a narrow-sighted policy inasmuch as there is no equality in the advantages secured and the disadvantages suffered by the parties affected by it; and, 2nd, it shows a tendency to favour one class to the prejudice of another. There is another point in connection with this subject which requires a passing remark. It is customary among the Hindu women to use a kind of red preparation for a sort of painting on their forehead and in this preparation vermilion (a poison) is an important ingredient. If then the sale of vermilion is restricted by law the feelings of an important section of the population will receive a shock. Looking only from a medical standpoint the evils of this new legislation are not few. In the city of Bombay there is a population of about 800,000 souls, while the number of practitioners of English medicines is not only not proportionate but positively very small. Moreover the poverty of the people does not allow of their utilizing the services of such advisers as the charges for the medicines prescribed by them are generally very heavy. There are also some classes, especially among the Gujaráti section of the community, who though able to pay for treatment according to the European fashion have objections on grounds of superstition against English medicines, and it is difficult to conceive how these classes will fare under the new state of things. There are also other considerations which form a not unimportant factor in the formation of the predilection of the people for Native against European medicines. The graduates that come out of the Grant Medical College and others of their class are generally Europeanized in their ideas and manners, and their behaviour is distasteful to Natives, who prefer a poor and mild waidya to an overbearing and a blustering doctor. Waidyas as a rule also show greater regard to their patients and are more anxious for their well-being than doctors whose connection ends with the payment of the necessary fees. Native waidyas are sometimes found to attend gratis and to give medicines free of charge, while the same is not the case with doctors. We are however far from insinuating that under the present régime there are no institutions which afford the means of securing medical advice and treatment free of charge. There are the Jamsetji Jijibhoy and the Gokuldás Tejpál Hospitals. But it is a matter of regret that their aid is not sought for except by patients suffering from protracted, dangerous and incurable maladies. The regulations in these hospitals regarding the examination of patients and the dispensing of prescriptions and the attendant necessity of waiting for a considerable time before the medicine can be had, make it impossible for the large mill-going population of this city to take advantage of these institutions and they are left to depend solely on the assistance of Native waidyas. There is another anomaly in the provisions of the present bill which requires to be exposed. The bill provides for the appointment of a committee to consist of the Government Medical Storekeeper, the Chemical Analyser, and a third officer who may either be the holder of a diploma of some university or one whose name has been registered under the British Pharmacy Act. The committee is thus to be constituted of medical men practising entirely in European medicines, two of them at least being Europeans, and the farce of the examination by such a committee of Native waidyas is evident when it is borne in mind that the examiners are not conversant with the language of the examinees, that they bear a natural hatred to the latter and are utterly ignorant of the elements of Oriental medical science. These difficulties can be obviated by the appointment of a committee of competent waidyas and hakims for examining persons professing to be such, but it is very questionable whether the present state of society has reached such a stage as to allow of the entertainment of a proposal of this stamp. The above is a discussion of the provisions of the new bill as based on the popular conception of its object and scope, and if this conception is at all consonant with the real object of the law, it is to be hoped that out of regard to the condition of the masses Government will be pleased to give up all idea of legislation in this direction.

The Highway Bill.

Criticises the provision of the Highway Bill and expresses disapproval thereof.

In noticing the report of the Select Committee on the Highways Bill, the Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 13th January observes that the persons whom the bill proposes to tax will have to pay double taxes, and although such persons belong to the well-to-do classes it is not right to burden them in this manner. The object of the bill is to levy a tax on the owners of horses and carriages residing within municipal limits whenever they would use the roads constructed from the local funds. The bill also proposes that if it be thought improper to make owners of horses and carriages pay a tax every time they use the local fund roads, the municipalities in which they reside may pay a lump sum to the local funds for such use. In the first place the alternative is objectionable. It is not just that all the rate-payers of a municipality should pay for the occasional use by a few of them of the local fund roads. If, on the other hand, it be conceded that the persons that use the roads should pay the cess, the question arises, why should the people who live outside the municipal limits but use the municipal roads not be called upon to pay a cess for the use of these roads? And if municipalities insist upon this the authorities will have to give in. The rich people residing within the municipal area will not feel the new burden, but it will be unbearable to poor villagers; and it is not right for Government to be instrumental in imposing a new burden on the latter. It is true that the Government mean to benefit the people by bringing forward the bill, but the disadvantages resulting from it will outweigh the good. The best course therefore will be to throw out the bill. Government moreover argue that because the people residing in cities and towns use the local fund roads for their horses and carriages, those roads require to be kept in good order at a considerable expense. This may be true; but the persons who use these roads for their carriages do not ask Government to keep them in good repair, and if they make such a request they may be told that the roads were intended for the use of country carts only. In expressing his disapproval of the bill an officer has suggested that a city or a town, together with the villages in its vicinity, should be included within the limits of a municipality and the municipal taxes collected from the residents should be devoted to the improvement of the city or town roads as also of the highways passing by the villages. This suggestion ought not to be adopted inasmuch as according to the opinion of Sir James Caird the villagers already pay into the Government treasury in one shape or another 40 per cent. of their income, and the additional burden of a municipal tax will be quite unbearable. The Select Committee has made some changes in the original bill, and it remains to be seen whether the modified bill meets with the approval of its originators and supporters in the Council.

Local Self-government.

Expresses disapproval of the delay in the publication of the Local Self-government Bills.

The Shubh Suchak (55) of the 5th January is very anxious that the new bills for working the local self-government scheme should be published as early as possible. There is nothing objectionable in their being submitted to the Viceroy for approval, but why should they not be placed before the public so that the latter may lay before Government any objections they may have to offer to their provisions? Is there any legal difficulty in the way of their being thus published? If laws are made for the people, it is not very clear why they should be kept so secret. Their subject-matter is of no political importance. It is however very likely that this Government, having been from the beginning opposed to the scheme, have inserted in the new bills certain provisions to suit their own views. But it is certain that the Viceroy with the good of this country at heart will not fail to strike out such provisions and thus frustrate the intentions of this Government. The new scheme comes into operation from the 1st April, and there is very little time left for the publication of the bills with a view to the opinion of the public being elicited in connection therewith. There is also another point concerning this subject which deserves a remark. It is said that the appointment of Mr. Peile in the Executive Council was made by the Secretary of State at the instance of the Marquis of Ripon. The Viceroy has great hopes that his new scheme will receive considerable support from this new member, and it remains to be seen how far these hopes will be realized. The Local Self-government Bills were framed before the advent of Mr. Peile, and had it been otherwise the people would have had an early opportunity of judging of the liberality or narrowness of the views of the new Councillor. It is reported in some quarters that the views of the Local Government on the new scheme have of late undergone a change. If so the people of this Presidency deserve to be congratulated on the event. It would not however be safe to form a judgment in the matter until the new bills are placed before the public, and if the change referred to has been brought on by pressure from above there are reasons to suspect that the views of the Local Government will not altogether lose their original turn.

Recommends that the members of municipal boards should be allowed remuneration for their services.

The Gujarát Mitrá (66) of the 9th January observes that the Bombay Government have in connection with the local self-government scheme proposed the payment of certain fees to the members of the táluka and district boards, but have altogether ignored the claims of the members of municipalities for a similar consideration, no reason having been assigned for the exclusion. The public spirit of the inhabitants of municipal towns and cities will receive a great stimulus by the offer of remuneration for services rendered to the public. The plan is followed even in Bombay, which is the foremost city in the Presidency. While there is so much dearth of profitable occupation on the one hand and of public spirit on the other, it would be too much to expect that many persons should be willing to sacrifice their time for the mere sentiment of administering public affairs. It cannot be denied that there are many gentlemen who have for years together rendered substantial services without any remuneration. They and others like them may well be encouraged to adopt the unselfish course. The system of remuneration is however needed under the new scheme, as the functions pertaining to self-government are to be made more obligatory and more responsible than they have been hitherto, while there is naturally a great anxiety to infuse into the public a desire for the management of civic affairs.

Hopes that Sir James Fergusson will show a greater liberality of views than he has hitherto done in regard to the scheme of local self-government.

While praising Sir Alfred Lyall for the zeal and enthusiasm evinced by him in making arrangements to put the scheme of local self-government in working order in the provinces under his charge, the Lok Mitrá (68) of the 7th January expresses its sorrow that Sir James Fergusson has not shown similar sympathy with the cause of the new scheme. Sir James Fergusson is still diffident and hesitating. His speech at Ratnágiri was not, as we pointed out at the time, calculated to inspire us with hopes that a departure from the policy enunciated in the famous resolution of September last would be adopted. However, now that Mr. Peile is in the Council, we may expect that Sir James will show a greater liberality of views and satisfy the expectations formed of his administration.

The Vengurla Vritt (61) of the 4th January says that the new scheme of local self-government though very beneficial in its conception is not likely to do much practical good. The present local fund committees have spent very large sums on public buildings which require to be constantly repaired. This obligation created by the past committees must be satisfied by the coming committees. The latter will thus be deprived of all power of using their resources according to their discretion, and the advantages expected from the new scheme will be nullified.

Comments on the advantages from the local self-government scheme.

Municipalities.

The Prabhákar (44) of the 11th January states that the Executive Engineer for the municipality of Bombay has notwithstanding the express order of the Secretary of State for India to the contrary insisted upon raising the height of the dam at the Tulsi water-works from 6 to 10 feet. This proposal is very objectionable inasmuch as the present capacity of the tank will not bear the additional water, which may lead to the bursting of the tank. It is indeed very astonishing that in the face of this possibility and the peremptory order of the Secretary of State the municipality should be trying to hold its own. The expenditure is at present calculated at 12 to 13 lákhs of rupees, and it is proposed to meet it by a loan. When the water-works at Tulsi were first constructed, the municipal officers informed the Corporation that scarcity of water would never thenceforth be felt and that no further expenditure was required on the works; and in a very short time the authorities have begun to be apprehensive of a scarcity of water and to recognize the necessity of making certain additions to the works. It is to be hoped that the Town Council and the Corporation will observe great precaution in sanctioning this expenditure.

Does not approve of the proposal to raise the height of the dam at the Tulsi water-works.

The Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 13th January refers to the representation made by the people of Khándesh to Sir James Fergusson during his recent tour in that province that they sadly needed water-works, charitable medical dispensaries, and means of inter-communication, but being unable to provide them unaided they required help from the State, and alluding to the observation made by the municipality of Dhulia that it would be glad to get a loan from Government at a moderate rate of interest in order to supply its wants, observes that Government have thrown on the shoulders of municipalities many works that ought to be performed by the State. Notwithstanding this unjust transfer if the people show their willingness to execute them and desire to have a loan from Government to help them their request should receive every consideration. It is however to be regretted that Sir James refused to grant it. His Excellency observed that if munipalities were unable to execute expensive useful works charitable millionaires ought to provide them, and alluded to a munificent sum recently given by a Native gentleman for the construction of a bridge in the Ratnágiri District. Generous persons are not to be found everywhere, and it would not be right to allow much-needed useful public works to remain unexecuted until such persons come forward to supply them. If Government cannot provide these works, they should not be backward in rendering due help to municipalities to execute them.

Government ought to render help to municipalities to execute much-needed useful works.

The Poona Vaibhav (43) of the 7th January says that the conduct of the municipal officers of Poona in ordering the removal of houses in connection with the new project of the construction of markets before the orders of Government on the subject were received is very objectionable. The execution of this project will be attended with innumerable evils. According to the present plan the new market will be approached by six main roads, and for the making of these roads many houses will have to be demolished. Besides the conversion of small lanes into broad streets will deprive the former of their privacy and thus cause inconvenience to the female section of the community. In the same manner the expansion of the roads will serve to encourage the practices of thieves, and thus lay the people under an obligation to build new and strong houses to protect themselves. It is to be hoped that Government will consider this subject with an unbiassed mind.

Does not approve of the project for the construction of markets in Poona.

Remarks in connection with the Poona markets project.

The same paper observes that the representation of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha in the matter of the project of the construction of markets for the city of Poona is probably under the consideration of Government. It may have been forwarded by Government for the report of the president of the municipality, who may have argued that the representation has not the approval of the majority of the members of the Sabha and may have cited the names of Messrs. Gádgil and Gokhale as being its opponents. But to guard against such a misinterpretation of facts, the Vaibhav states that the memorial had the consent of the whole population of Poona and was passed by the select committee of the Sabha, and recommends that the Government will take into consideration this circumstance before relying on the report of the president. Another point for consideration in regard to this subject is, how should Government look with favour on those proposals of the Poona municipal committee which are calculated to tighten the hands of the committee that will come into power under the new self-government scheme? A drainage scheme for Poona has recently been started, and in proposing this scheme the present municipality recommends to the future municipality the adoption thereof. If in this case the present committee consider it unsafe to take upon themselves the responsibility of the measure, it needs explanation why they should not observe a similar precaution with respect to the market question.

Condemns the electric lights introduced into Surat.

A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (87) of the 13th January observes that the large amount of money spent on the electric lights introduced into Surat appears to have proved a waste. They burn more dimly than kerosine lights after midnight. The Collector and the Commissioner of the Division ought to discontinue the lights and turn their attention to providing a water-supply for the town.

Dwells on the inconveniences suffered from the landing place at Surat not being repaired.

A correspondent of the Kaisar-i-Hind (89) of the 7th January observes that nearly two years ago the landing place at Surat was pulled down in order to build it anew, but the work has not yet been taken in hand. The people are experiencing great inconveniences from the absence of a proper place to bathe and wash their clothes. Several persons bathe in the river at a place at some distance from the town, but it is feared that serious accidents may occur to some of them. In the proximity of the landing place the bank is precipitous in several places, and it is difficult to save a person who may accidentally fall into the river at these spots. The landing place ought therefore to be repaired at once.

The public garden of Surat needs not to be enlarged.

The Gujarát Mitrá (66) of the 7th January observes that the Commissioner, N. D., is supposed to have expressed his desire to the secretary to the municipality and Mr. Aderji, the City Magistrate, to see the public garden of Surat extended. If this report be true, it ought not to be forgotten that the present small garden is quite sufficient for the wants of the city and only requires to be well kept up. When there is greater need for the means of a water-supply being organized, the municipal funds ought not to be wasted on the unnecessary extension of the garden.

Censures the municipality of Balsár for not prohibiting the stacking of grass in the town and for failing to keep a serviceable fire-engine.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 12th January states that on the occasion of a fire which broke out at Balsár on the 9th idem destroying five stacks of grass the municipal fire-engine was found useless, as its hose was cracked and could not carry water. Three years ago a similar fire broke out in the hay stacks on the same spot, and it seems very strange that the municipality did not prohibit the stacking of grass in the town. It is also very unsatisfactory that it does not keep a fire-engine that can render effective service.

The Ahmedabad Samáchár (71) of the 10th January complains of the carelessness of the Ahmedabad Municipality in the removal of night-soil. The halálkhors place their open round baskets full of night-soil on public streets. Night-soil carts which now pass late in the day through populous parts of the town should be run either early in the morning or made to go by unfrequented roads. The public privies ought also to be kept clean. The halálkhor cess is unequal in its incidence, for a single widow and a large family have to pay the same amount. The municipality ought to attend to this complaint about night-soil with a view to the prevention of an outbreak of cholera in the hot season.

Complains of the negligence of the Ahmedabad Municipality in the removal of night-soil.

Railways.

With reference to the question whether it would be more convenient to lay down the proposed extension of the railway to Kapadvanj from Nadiád than from Dákor, a correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 12th January states that the distance between Dákor and Kapadvanj is 20 miles, but there are only one or two unimportant villages between the two places; whereas the distance between Nadiád and Kapadvanj is 27 miles, while there are several important trading towns and villages between them, such as Bilodara, Mahuda, Sunj, Bháner, Torna, and others. After describing the productions of the last-named places and the great trade they carry on, the writer recommends the Railway Company to extend the railway from Nadiád rather than lay it from Dákor to Kapadvanj. [The Hitechhu (67) of Ahmedabad of the 14th January makes a similar recommendation.]

Recommends that the proposed extension of the railway to Kapadvanj should be made from Nadiád and not from Dákor.

Native States.

A correspondent of the Rást Goftár (96) of the 7th January, writing under date the 27th December from the city of Bisáu, in the State of Jeypur in Rájputána, states that for the last year and a half a Jodi Thakráni, accompanied by some villainous rogues, has been in that city. They go about armed and have rebelled against the State. They have taken possession of the artillery and some other State offices. They made an armed attack on the customs' office, drove away the State servants, and have commenced to levy duties forcibly. Since the Jeypur authorities have not yet moved in this matter, the citizens have become sore afraid of disorder becoming more rampant and are leaving the city with their moveables. [A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 9th January makes a similar report.]

Complains that disorder prevails in the city of Bisáu in the State of Jeypur in Rájputána.

The Gujarát Mitra (66) of the 7th January observes that the subjects of the Cambay State are a quiet people, and the circumstance that being so they should have raised such a great uproar against the authorities of the State shows that they have been instigated to take the step by somebody. But those instigators have not satisfied the British officer at Kaira that such oppression as they loudly complain of does really exist in that State. The allegations they have made only show that what they consider as oppression is merely the stringency of the law. There was no law in Cambay for using stamped paper for documents and it has been recently introduced; intestate property has been of late made liable to attachment; and the houses of suspected persons are allowed to be searched for the recovery of stolen property. These things have frightened the people, but the fright is groundless. An honest person has to fear nothing, and the people of Cambay ought not to expect the loose administration of the late Nawáb's time to continue under the present régime. Supposing that some particular officer or officers committed oppression they ought to have sought redress from the Diwán, and until it was refused should not have taken Observes that the people of Cambay who have created the great commotion have no substantial grievances to complain of.

the extreme step they have adopted. By doing what they have done they have exposed themselves to the charge of disloyalty, and have failed to convince the authorities of the existence of their grievances. In the matter of the measurement of land the agriculturists took a similarly wrong course. It was decided by the State authorities that all lands should be measured and that the measurements should be recorded; but one of the villages opposed this measure and assaulted the officials. The Diwán however overlooked the offence and did not punish the offenders. He is meek and kind, and the people want to take an unfair advantage of his good disposition. If the people of Cambay have some real grievances, the Cambay authorities ought to institute a searching enquiry into them and redress them if necessary.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitrá specially deputed to report on the real state of affairs at Cambay gives in detail the various complaints of the people and remarks that they are unfounded. The people left their homes on account of the threats of excommunication with which they were intimidated by the instigators, of whom Mahádev Parjárám is the head. They have however now returned to Cambay though the local markets are still closed.

The Hitechhu (67) of Ahmedabad of the 11th January publishes the substance of a letter written by an official of the Cambay State to his friend wherein that official contradicts some of the statements made by the Hitechhu in its issue of the 4th January (vide page 34 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 6th January 1883).

Remarks on the complaints against the officials of the State of Cambay.

The Gujaráti (84) of the 7th January states on the authority of a correspondent that nearly 15,000 men of Cambay accompanied by the Nagarshet have left the place. Three of these men died on the road on account of severe cold. Mr. Dámodardás, the Revenue Commissioner, and Mr. Fakrudin, the Faujdár of Cambay, went to Kaira to conciliate the people. The Collector of Kaira received numerous petitions complaining against the oppressions, but he has not disposed of them. Thirty-five of the petitions complained of intestate property having been forcibly confiscated, and all of them complained of the oppression practised by Mr. Dámodár. Sixty-five petitions dwelt on the tyranny exercised over agriculturists, and one referred to the violence committed upon a woman. The Collector advised the petitioners to return to Cambay, but as there was no guarantee that they would not on their return be subjected to further oppression they have collected a lákh of rupees to enable them to take measures for obtaining redress. They ought not to return to their homes until the oppressors are dismissed from office and new Kárbháris are appointed in their places. [The Suryá Prakásh (70) of the 6th and the Ahmedabad Samáchár (71) of the 10th January suggest the appointment of a commission to enquire into the dissatisfaction prevailing among the people. The Lok Mitrá (68), the Bombay Chronicle (65) and the Yajdán Parast (106) of the 7th January recommend the institution of a careful enquiry into the grievances of the people of Cambay.]

Prefers certain complaints against the officials of the Gondal State.

The Gujaráti (84) of the 7th January gives the following instances of the oppression practised by the officials of the Gondal State, in order that the Political Agent may institute enquiries into them:—(1) When an enquiry was instituted into the petition made by Joshi Dámodar Manji charging Báwa Miya and others with having received bribes, the fact was brought to light that the writer of the paper was Gowardhan Keshawji, of Dhoráji, who was thereupon apprehended and imprisoned for a night, and Major Nutt was induced to take security for good behaviour in future. Gowardhan was formerly Wahiwátdár of Shuwedi, but was degraded without cause, and was afterwards dismissed from office at the promptings of Báwa Miya. It is injustice to ask Gowardhan to give bail without obtaining, as required by the Criminal Code, evidence in proof of his bad character, and especially when the magistrate stated that he was a well conducted person. (2) Mr. Lalubhái Ambálál, a sanadi pleader in the Agency Court, was the vakil of Joshi Dámodar, and in order to prevent him from appearing and conducting the case at Gondal he has been accused of making away with the evidence in a certain murder case, so that if he appeared at Gondal he might be apprehended and imprisoned. Mr. Lalubhái accompanied Joshi Dámodar to Bombay in order to petition Government on the subject, and thereupon Major Nutt was persuaded to write to Colonel Barton to cancel his sanad for some trifling reason, and the latter officer having called upon Lalubhái to give an explanation the same has been furnished. Thus Báwa Miya and his partizans unnecessarily annoy persons who prefer complaints against them. (3) Although the cultivators have fallen into a wretched condition on account of the famine of Samvat 1934, they are called upon to pay a heavier assessment than is usually paid by them. They petitioned against this procedure, but having received no reply they have begun to give up their holdings and to migrate to another State. (4) Every case in which Mr. Lalubhái Ambárám is a vakil is decided against the party who may have engaged him. His client is told to give him up, and if he does not listen to the advice he is harassed with a criminal charge. Jiwáidár Deshábhái Keshája of Dhoráji was harassed in the same way, the charge brought against him being trumpery. And yet to please Báwa Miya his friend the Nyáyádhish held that the charge of forgery was proved and sentenced the accused to one day's simple imprisonment.

Mentions some complaints preferred against the officials of the Gondal State, and requests the Bombay Government to appoint a commission to enquire into them.

The Gujarát Mitrá (66) of the 7th January observes that two parties have been formed in the State of Gondal, one consisting of Hindus and the other of Mahomedans. The latter party, being in office, exercises tyranny over the Hindus. It is said that Major Nutt recently visited the State, but the result of the enquiries made by him into the subject is not known. The people of Dhoráji are said to have requested some leading men of Bombay to move the Bombay Government to relieve them from the oppression to which they have been subjected; and Joshi Dámodar has petitioned Government complaining of oppression. Mr. Wámanráo was a first class magistrate in this State, but not liking to court the favour of Báwa Miya and his party he has resigned his office. Either through fear that Mr. Wámanráo might expose their misdeeds or with the intention of taking revenge on him for resigning his office against their wishes, the officials of the State are trying to harass him by instigating a person to complain against his conduct. Injustice appears to have been done in the case of Premchand Vithal of Sultánpur. For six months an attempt was being made to bring some accusation against him, and when neither witnesses nor evidence could be had, he was placed before the Munsif for the purpose of being proceeded against. When the Munsif was about to release him on bail, Mr. Miya Ismáel, the Superintendent of Police, applied for and obtained permission from the Sar Nyáyádhish to take the accused under his custody. Attempts are made to harass the witnesses who gave their evidence in favour of Premchand. The Bombay Government ought therefore to appoint a commission to enquire into the various complaints preferred against the officials of the State. [The Indian Spectator (1) of the 7th January makes similar remarks with reference to the case of Premchand Vithal.]

Berár Affairs.

Discusses the question of separating the Judicial from the Revenue Department.

In continuation of its article on "Administrative Centralization," reported at page 36 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 6th January 1883, the Varhád Samáchár (59) of the 8th instant says:—Some 10 months ago the rumour was rife in legal circles that the Government of India intended a great change in our judicial administration. It was said that the Resident was to be relieved of his judicial functions, that the anomaly of two special appellate courts was to be done away with, that the Judicial Commissioner was to be entrusted with all the powers of a High Court, that the salary of the place was to be increased, and that the services of a person of judicial training and experience were to be secured for that place. This proposal if carried out would be hailed with joy by all. We are very strongly of opinion that the change above indicated is necessary and that for more reasons than one. We earnestly hope that this idea which has suggested itself to Government will not be allowed to be dropped. We understand that some of the officers who were consulted could not conceive how it could be carried out in Berár. The following is a plan which will avoid the difficulties which those gentlemen find. We take it for granted that the status and salary of the Judicial Commissioner will have to be raised to attract qualified individuals. The salary will have to be made the same as that of the Commissioner. But then the difficulty is, to whom to entrust the powers of Session Judge at present held by the Judicial Commissioner and what arrangement is to be made about first appeals. We think, and there are many persons in Berár who hold the like opinion, that Small Cause Courts are not required for the province. We would suggest that these Courts be abolished, that two Courts, one for West Berár and one for East Berár, be created having the powers which District Judges' Courts have in the Bombay Presidency. These same Courts should also be constituted Session Courts. The Deputy Commissioners should be relieved of all their civil work and this should be transferred to those two district Courts. The scheme we have suggested meets the difficulties brought forward. We venture to add that it has also the merit of striking at the root of the evil of administrative centralization. We have shown above how centralization is productive of evil consequences in the Resident's Court. If we descend lower and look to the Courts of the Deputy Commissioners we find the same evil and in an aggravated form. The Deputy Commissioner is the Collector of the District, the Magistrate of the District, and the District Judge. He is also the conduit-pipe through which the correspondence of the Deputy Inspectors with the Director of Public Instruction is maintained. He has to look to district forests and to municipalities. A person whose task is so multifarious, whose attention is required to so many different matters, can certainly be least expected to devote proper and sufficient attention to any. The result of concentrating so many powers in one person is most mischievous so far as judicial work is concerned. The Deputy Commissioner is an executive officer and most of his time must be taken up by his duties as Collector of the District. Judicial work is comparatively neglected. In Akola, to take an example, the Deputy Commissioner is generally engaged from 11 to 3 in disposing of correspondence. At 3 be comes to Court. If there be any criminal case it must be and is attended to first. Civil work, appellate and original, must stand over. Parties and witnesses must go on attending Court from day to day without doing anything. It is not the fault of the Deputy Commissioner that this happens; it is the fault of the system. It is the fault of those who impose upon an already overburdened officer a task so important as the administration of justice.

RAOJI B. PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
20th January 1883.

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

INDEX.

	Page.
PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—
Agricultural banks, establishment of—	6
Appointment of an elected Native member in the Viceregal Legislative Council...	4
Civil Service of India, mental and moral deterioration of the members of the—	8
Criminal Procedure Code, remarks on the amended—	4
Cultivation of jute, full information regarding—	7
Duke of Connaught, candidature for an Indian command of the— ...	10
Examination (Solicitors'), new rules for the—	10
Do. (District Pleaders'), abolition of the restriction of age for the—	11
Fees, reduction in Solicitors' and Advocates'—	11
Forgeries; re-trial of the Samdhiála — case	11
General Administration Report, remarks on the—	6
Lepers, treatment of—	7
Military Officers: appointment of — as Political Agents	5
Population of India and its food supply	5
Public servants: comments on the career of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner	8
Reforms in the present administration, suggestions regarding— ...	3
Salt: closing of salt-pans in the Ratnágiri District	5
Do. Exemption from duty of — when used for manufacturing soap and candles	6
Titles, remarks on the bestowal of—	12
Do. Recommendation of Dr. Blaney for a C.I.E.	12
Do. do. of Mr. Navroji Fardunji...	12
Tours of Government officers: His Excellency the Governor's tour ...	7
Trials of Europeans: remarks on a case lately decided by the Bombay High Court	11
Transfer of cases from the First Class to the Second Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Surat	11
Vernacular Press: comments on the means of securing greater publicity to measures of public interest	8
Vernacular Press, proposal to embody in one publication the views of the—
The Indu Prakásh	9
The Lok Mitrá	10
PART II.—A'bkári—
A'bkári policy of the Government of Bombay, comments on the— ...	12
Mhowra flowers, surreptitious distillation of liquor from—	13
PART III.—Legislation—
Bombay Pharmacy Bill	16
Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act, debate on the amended—
The Indian Spectator	14
The Bombay Chronicle	16
Deccan Ryots and the land revenue assessment...	15
Highway Bill, comments on the provisions of the—	18
PART IV.—Local Self-government—
Local Self-government, advantages of—	20
Do. do. Bills, delay in the publication of—	18
Do. do. The views of Sir James Fergusson on— ...	19
Municipal Boards, question of remuneration to members of the— ...	19
PART V.—Municipalities—
Electric lights, the introduction into Surat of—	21
Garden at Surat, extension of the—	21
Municipality, complaint against the Balsár—	21
Municipalities, the necessity of Government aid to—	20
Night-soil: removal of — by the Ahmedabad Municipality	22
Poona market scheme, remarks on the—	20
Repairs to the landing place at Surat	21
Water-works at Tulsi (Bombay), raising of the height of the dam at the—	20

	Page.
PART VI.—Railways—
Railway extension from Dákor	22
PART VII.—Native States—
Bisáu, Jeypur, disturbances in—	22
Cambay, disturbances at—
The Gujaráti	23
The Gujarát Mitrá	22
Gondal, mismanagement in the State of—
The Gujaráti	23
The Gujarát Mitrá	24
PART VIII.—Berár Affairs—
Administrative centralization, remarks on the mischief of—	24

RECEIVED
14 FEB 83
INDIA OFFICE
BRINDISI

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 20th January 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly ...	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do. ...	475
*3	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Do.	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
4	The Dín Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	925
5	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do. ...	1,000
6	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do. ...	409
7	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
8	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,038
9	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do. ...	575
10	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do. ...	600
11	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do. ...	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*12	The Aranya Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly.	100
13	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly ...	555
14	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do. ...	100
15	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	450
16	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do. ...	260
17	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do. ...	275
*18	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do. ...	200
19	„ Daivadnyă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
20	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
21	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	425
22	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do. ...	140
23	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do. ...	116
24	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do. ...	100
25	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do. ...	285
26	„ Hitechhu	Kaládgi	Do. ...	85
27	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly. .	400
28	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
29	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	145
30	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do. ...	130
*31	„ Karnátak Mitră[3a]	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
32	„ Kesari	Poona	Do. ...	3,500
33	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do. ...	125
34	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	300
35	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly ...	220
36	„ Mahárashtră Hitechhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,000
37	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do. ...	250
38	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do. ...	150
39	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do. ...	100
40	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly ...	700
41	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
42	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do. ...	103
43	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do. ...	250
44	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily ...	350
*45	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly ...	200
46	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti).	Do. ...	200
*47	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly ...	200
48	„ Saddharm Díp	Alíbág	Do. ...	600
49	„ Satyă Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	243
50	„ Satyă Sadan	Alíbág	Weekly ...	400
51	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	140
52	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly...	275
*53	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Weekly ...	200
54	„ Shiváji[3]	Poona	Do. ...	200
55	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do. ...	90
56	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do. ...	150
57	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do. ...	240

[1] Maráthi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles.
[3a] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
58	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly	600
59	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly	250
60	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
61	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
62	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*63	„ Vinoda	Poona	Do.	200
64	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*65	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
66	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do.	400
67	„ Hitechhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
68	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	725
69	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
70	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
71	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
72	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
73	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
74	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
75	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
76	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	950
77	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
78	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
79	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
80	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
81	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do.	900
82	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Monthly	400
83	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
84	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*85	„ Gujarát Quarterly Journal	Do.	Quarterly	200
86	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Monthly	659
87	„ Jáme Jamshed	Do.	Daily	525
88	„ Kaira Vartmán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*89	„ Kaisar-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
90	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
91	„ Nágar Udaya	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
92	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
93	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
94	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
95	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
96	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
97	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
98	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	400
99	„ Stri Bodh	Do.	Monthly	533
100	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Do.	Do.	408
101	„ Tatwa Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár	Umreth	Fortnightly	62
*102	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
103	„ Vartmán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
104	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
105	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	300
106	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
107	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
	URDU.
*108	The Armagán	Bombay	Bi-weekly	200
109	„ Khayir Kháhe Islám	Do.	Fortnightly	300
110	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
111	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases, an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out; and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well-known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Prays for a reform in the constitution of the India Council.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 14th January, in an article headed "The India Council—A costly Failure," observes:—Bureaucracy has taken a firm root in the Indian soil. From purely selfish motives the broad lines of State policy have been set at nought. Between the India Office on one side and bureaucracy on the other, the people of this country have suffered grievous wrongs. It was thought that the substitution of the India Council for the defunct Court of Directors would effect much administrative and other reforms. At first the tendency was to import into the Council constitutionally trained members of independence and force of character. At any rate, the majority of the members composing that body were entirely free from official influence. This was insisted upon by Mr. Bright, who, more than any other British statesman, had a great deal to do with the passing of the first East India Bill of 1858 in the manner it was passed. But gradually as things began to fall into a groove and party exigencies necessitated a frequent change of Secretaries of State, much of the good that was expected from the Council began to fade. Now and then when an energetic and self-reliant Secretary like Lord Cranbourne or the Duke of Argyll ruled at the India Office some independence was shown, some grievances of the people were properly looked into and certain remedies suggested. But this spirit became more prominent on the whole owing to Parliamentary warfare, whereby Indian politics came to be considered from a party point of view. The chief paid less attention to grave Indian matters referred to him from this country for decision, and allowed all general matters to be settled by his Council, with this effect that Indian politics were decided according to the views of those who had a preponderance in the Council. And as long as there remained at the board men of such sterling independence as Sir Erskine Perry, the bureaucrats were opposed with a zeal and energy for which we may now look in vain. The disinterestedness of a Councillor like Sir Erskine went a great way to modify the final decisions of the Council. If his opinion was not always carried out, at any rate it was respected. But for the last few years vacancies in the Council have been filled in a manner to give every well-meaning friend of India cause for dissatisfaction if not for alarm, and to-day we see the Council packed full of elderly Anglo-Indian officials. This state of affairs is prejudicial to Indian interests. The Council, instead of being a fairly impartial guide to the Secretary of State, has become a misleading entity. In all fairness it ought to be an impartial representative exponent of the views of officials on one side and of non-officials on the other. It is unnecessary to call attention to the fact that it is now made up of persons who did not a little mischief to the people in this country when in power, as for instance General Strachey who may be called the very embodiment of despotism. Save Sir Barrow Ellis and perhaps Sir Ashley Eden and Sir William Muir, we do not know of any other Councillor who has at heart the interests of the people of India. Is it a wonder then if the Council as a body fails at this eventful juncture in Indian politics and finance, when we have entered on a new path of administrative reforms, to represent the true opinion prevalent in the country? At the present moment we hear that the majority of the Council is strongly opposed to the scheme of local self-government as inaugurated by Lord Ripon. The bureaucracy in the country which has been constrained in obedience to imperial orders to accept the scheme is working up the demi-gods who sit at the Council board in Westminster. Its views are lustily re-echoed there. Have the Indians true friends in the Council to oppose their sinister influence? Unfortunately for us Lord Hartington is transferred. A Secretary of State of strong views has been replaced by another whose interest in India is not of the strongest and whose experience may be said to be nil. Let us earnestly hope that Lord Kimberley may not grudge us the boon which a far-sighted statesman has conferred on the people. Again in matters of finance the India Office members are anything but progressive. Home charges are so great that they have been repeatedly taken exception to. Jobberies of all sorts are carried out in stores, contract, freight and other matters. The India Office people view with disfavour the policy of private enterprise, for it strikes at the root of patronage. Thus jobbery and patronage, or rather the abuse of patronage, which once so scandalized the reign of the Court of Directors and which Mr. Bright denounced in no measured terms for years together, may again prosper. So that what we now see is simply this—a substitution of one set of despots for another. To render the Council truly representative should be the endeavour of all Natives interested in the progress of local self-government. Let all India take up the subject. In the reform of the constitution of the India Council will in a measure lie their future hopes of self-government. It may not be generally known that all save four out of the existing members of the India Council are in the receipt of a pension paid from the Indian revenues in addition to the ordinary salary drawn also from Indian revenues as members of Council; and it is obviously a grievous mistake to suppose that a body of fifteen, twelve of whom are ex-officials belonging to the most favoured sections of officialism and of whom eleven are State pensioners, is, has been in times past, or ever will be a true representative of Indian opinion. Officialism has been the bane of India, and unless it is exterminated from the chief Council of control there can be no hope of any genuine reform in this country. Imagine in this nineteenth century a House of Commons consisting of 570 ex-officials of the voting classes, the aristocracy and the squirearchy, of whom 482 were drawing pensions from the State, and only a modest troop of 88 independent members, and say if such would be a true representative of present opinion in England. And yet twelve State pensioners in a body of fifteen representing officialism pretend to guide the Secretary of State on behalf of the twenty millions of India by passing off their own opinions as the public opinion of the masses!

Comments on the appointment of Lord Kimberley as Secretary of State for India.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 15th January congratulates the people of India on the appointment of Lord Kimberley as the Secretary of State for India. Lord Hartington though very clever did not take any interest in Indian affairs and was in the habit of throwing his work on his subordinates. This led to a great delay in the settlement of many important matters relating to India. It is a matter of satisfaction that the portfolio of the India Office has been transferred to other hands. Lord Kimberley is known to be very hardworking and can also exact work from his subordinates. The present Viceroy has in view many administrative reforms, and it requires a very sharp Secretary of State to ensure their prompt introduction. There are various matters requiring the earnest attention of Government, and prominent among these are the admission of Natives to important posts in the public service, the establishment of the competitive Civil Service in India, reduction in the present administrative expenditure, encouragement of indigenous arts and industries, &c. Lord Ripon has begun to keenly appreciate the benefits of reforms in these directions, and if Lord Kimberley were to share that appreciation half of the proposed work might be considered as accomplished. It is a matter of regret however that the new Secretary will take at least four or five years before he can take such an interest in Indian affairs, and it will then be time for him to be employed somewhere else. The succeeding Secretary will then be as inexperienced as ever. As a remedy for this anomaly the Indu Prakásh suggests that the post of Secretary of State for India should be conferred on the most competent of the retired Governors and Governors General of India. The necessity of any time being wasted by the new comer for securing a due appreciation of the importance of the work and the nature of the duties will thus be avoided. Such Secretaries will naturally have the courage of their opinions and will not have to look to their Councillors for help. By inaugurating such a policy a world of good will be done to India, and England will have discharged one of its important duties to this country. If the present Viceroy is ever appointed the Secretary of State for India there is every reason to expect that this country will immensely benefit by the appointment. Such a course is not likely to be prejudicial to the cause of England, and it behoves the Prime Minister to try the experiment.

Comments on Mr. Lee-Warner's note on the present system of land revenue assessment.

Referring to the views regarding the system of land revenue assessment prevailing in the Deccan propounded by Mr. Lee-Warner in his recent note on the subject, the Indu Prakásh (8) of the 15th January says :—The view taken by Mr. Lee-Warner is purely one-sided. We do not deny that the amount of assessment levied under the present system is less than that levied in former times. But we ask, has there been no change in the circumstances? Has the productiveness of the soil remained undeteriorated? Is the rainfall as regular as it was before? Is there under the present régime the same freedom as regards the use of forest produce for ráb and other agricultural purposes and the same facilities for grazing cattle as once existed? Does the principle of proportionate assessment based on the degrees of productiveness of the soil, which proved a safeguard against the ryots running into debt for the satisfaction of the Government demand, find any favour with the present administration? No. There are none of the above redeeming features to the present system, and if due allowance is made for the conveniences which existed in former times the fact stands in bold relief that the present assessment is much heavier than that formerly prevailing. As a corroboration of the assertion that the present assessment is moderate is quoted the smallness of the pressure required for the realization of the land revenue. But on this subject the opinion of European officers must be accepted with great caution. The patels and kulkarnis are the only officers who can speak with any amount of accuracy on this subject, and next to them the mámlatdárs. But these officers are generally averse to carry to the ears of their superiors any difficulties that they may have experienced in collecting land revenue lest they should be declared incompetent to manage the duties entrusted to them. In fine, the higher officers are generally in the dark as to the real state of the masses and as to the inconveniences caused to them by Government measures, and their judgment on such matters is formed from appearances merely. The same may be said of the tours of inspection undertaken by Sir Richard Temple in the districts affected by famine and of the results of their examination recorded by the celebrated Famine Commission. The labour of the Education Commission also may follow suit. Such attempts at ascertaining the grievances of the masses, though well meant, turn out fruitless being misdirected for want of proper information regarding the real circumstances. So long as this state of things continues there is very little chance of any good resulting to the people from such undertakings. These subjects should engage the attention of able but independent Natives and their utterances will prove of great value. If the Government are at all anxious to possess accurate and trustworthy information regarding the condition of the peasantry they should try to secure it direct from the sufferers without any official medium, and measures for the amelioration of their condition should be subsequently considered. From the information in our possession we are at present able to say that in many districts the land assessment is too heavy for the present depressed condition of the cultivator. Mr. Lee-Warner seems to argue that if the peasant's occupation was not paying he would not pursue it. But the fallacy of this argument would be apparent if we considered the general tendency of human nature to continue in the accustomed groove as far as possible. It is to be hoped that the Government will take this subject into their earnest consideration and will not allow their judgment to be warped by the optimist views of their official advisers.

Criticises Mr. Lee-Warner's note on the Bombay land revenue system.

Referring to the same subject the Jáme Jamshed (87) of the 18th January says :—Dr. Hunter is strongly of opinion that the poverty and the present wretched condition of the Deccan agriculturist are mainly attributable to the oppressive method of collecting the land revenue assessment. Mr. Lee-Warner, on the other hand, states that the Deccan peasant is generally happy, that his holding is a very valuable property, that he can easily pay the land tax from his earnings and can even save for future contingencies, and that his happy condition is the result of an agreeable system of land revenue assessment. We know very well what weight to attach to the views thus propounded by Mr. Lee-Warner, inasmuch as they clash not only with the opinions entertained by men of Sir William Wedderburn and Dr. Hunter's eminence but with those of the celebrated Famine Commission. This Commission has given a very miserable picture of the Deccan cultivator, and we feel confident that the Supreme Government will treat the opinion of an inexperienced officer like Mr. Lee-Warner with silent contempt. If however any proof were required regarding the misery of the Deccan agriculturist, there is no better plan than to appoint a commission to enquire into the subject or to depute competent persons to ascertain the real state of things. Mr. Lee-Warner further asserts that the agriculturists in British territory are better off than those in alienated villages. He almost admits it as a self-evident truth, but it would have been better if he had backed up his assertion by some statistical data. We cannot make ourselves believe that the British ryots are better off than the Inámdárs' tenants, but even supposing they are, it cannot be denied that the former have not the privilege enjoyed by the latter by which they can resort to the civil courts in cases of dispute with their landlord. It is true that Inámdárs and other landholders sometimes try to rack-rent their tenants; but if the latter demur to pay the rent demanded recourse is had to the civil court for the settlement of the dispute, and if the court is satisfied of the unreasonableness of the demand the Inámdár is made to moderate it. The Zamindári system has of course some defects, but they are not calculated to inflict so much hardship on the people as Mr. Lee-Warner supposes. Persons of greater experience than Mr. Lee-Warner have ascertained by personal enquiries that the agriculturists in alienated villages live a more comfortable life than those in the British territories. Landholders show mercy to their tenants in times of unfavourable seasons, which the British Government seldom does. The Inámdárs' tenants may in some cases have to pay a heavier land tax than the ryots in British territory, but they are seldom evicted for default in the payment of their instalments. Can Mr. Lee-Warner assert that the process of eviction is not followed in the British territory? The system of assessment prevailing in the Bombay Presidency is certainly not so objectionable as the mode of collecting revenue. If the system is properly worked it is sure to produce good results, but under the régime of the present Revenue Department there is no chance of its achieving even partial success. Either impelled by a solicitude to increase the Government revenue or being influenced by the belief that the Deccan agriculturists are well off, the revenue officials try to tax the poor ryot beyond his capacity, and it is certain that so long as this state of things continues there will be no end to the miseries and complaints of the agricultural classes. The fact of the introduction of the Bombay land revenue system into Berár and Mysore cannot justify the assumption that the system is generally very satisfactory. The system in itself may be good, but those who are entrusted with its working have by their folly brought it into ill odour. The successful working of the system in Berár and Mysore may be attributed to the prudence of the authorities there, but this circumstance does not necessitate the inference that it can be a success even here under different conditions.

Concurs in the remarks made by Mr. Lee-Warner in his note on the Bombay land revenue system.

The Bombay Chronicle (65) of the 14th January makes a summary of Mr. Lee-Warner's note on the Bombay land revenue system, and observes that the facts and figures cited by him refute several of the serious allegations made by Dr. Hunter at the second reading of the Bill to amend the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act in condemnation of the revenue system and its working. Mr. Lee-Warner's statements will tend considerably to shake the view regarding the baneful influence of the system on the condition of the cultivators.

Makes remarks on the concession recently allowed to the people of Bengal of electing a member for the Viceregal Legislative Council.

In an article headed "An Important Concession," the Dnyán Prakásh (7) of the 18th January says:—The Government of the noble Marquis of Ripon has given another very important earnest of its sincere and unfeigned desire to concede the political privilege of self-government to the millions of India, if such an earnest were at all wanted in the case of so large minded and honest an administrator. The tenure of office of one of the Bengal Native members in the Viceregal Legislative Council is drawing to a close, and it is now definitively announced that the Government of India have in view of the forthcoming vacancy requested the two great landholders' associations in the Bengal Presidency—the British Indian Association of Calcutta and the Behar Landholders' Association—to recommend the name of a fitting successor to the retiring member. It is also announced that the associations named above have recommended the Honourable Kritodas Pal, Rai Bahadur, C. I. E., the editor of the Hindu Patriot of Calcutta, for the distinguished honour of representing Bengal in the Viceregal Legislative Council. A more fitting selection could not have been made. The honourable and distinguished journalist has well merited the high honour now conferred upon him, and his selection for the honour is a very high compliment to the Native Press of India of which he is the acknowledged head. His selection at any time would have been happy, but at the present juncture it is peculiary appropriate, because during the course of the current year an important measure,—we are alluding to the Bengal Rent Bill,—is coming on for discussion in the Viceregal Legislative Council. The Bengal Rent Bill is a measure which, it is feared, will prejudicially affect to a very great degree the status and interests of the great zamindárs or landholders of Bengal, who are the very back-bone of the prosperity of the senior Presidency, and which, as a necessary consequence and a corollary as it were of the former result, will also prejudicially affect the interests of the ryots in whose interests to all appearances the measure is professed to be taken. The nomination of non-official or, as they are termed, additional members of the Viceregal and the local Legislative Councils has been by an Act of Parliament vested in the hands of the several Governments and the formal substitution of election for nomination cannot be thought of until the Act of Parliament is in the first instance amended. It will be thus seen that whatever the leanings and inclinations of the noble Marquis of Ripon on the subject,—and there can be no doubt as to what those leanings and inclinations are in the face of so many unmistakeable proofs,—His Lordship is powerless for inaugurating any formal bold departure from the existing practice. An amendment in the existing Act of Parliament cannot be thought of at present, for the difficulties in the way of the enactment are great and many, though it is now more clear than ever that such a departure in the existing practice must be inaugurated at no very distant date. In the meantime, however, so far as lies within the power of an individual statesman of broad views and generous sympathies, a good beginning has been made by the noble Marquis of Ripon probably with the concurrence of his advisers both here and in England. If for the present,—we mean for some time to come,—the same practice is followed in every case by the Government of India and by the subordinate local Governments who are allowed the appendage of a Legislative Council, a great advance will have been made towards the final solution of an important question of reform in the domestic administration of India. A non-official member of the Supreme Legislative Council or of the Presidential Legislative Council has no sinecure post; he must be one in whom the people whom he is supposed to represent and whose interests he is supposed to guard must feel confidence, even though he may be in all other respects qualified for the post. And what more ludicrous exhibition can be conceived than that of the Government thrusting upon the people as their representative a person or persons who are not only conspicuous by the utter absence of intelligence and ability, but who do not even possess their confidence. Lest we may be misunderstood we must emphatically disown the slightest intention on our part of insinuating even most distantly that the Government makes such nominations deliberately and with a set purpose. We are willing to admit that the want of correct and reliable information is at least the principal if not the sole cause of such appointments. Be that however as it may, we trust in conclusion that the subordinate Presidential Governments will have the goodness to follow the noble and generous example set to them by the Government of India. [The Mahrátta (2) and the Lok Mitrá (68) of the 14th January make similar remarks.]

Expresses its gratitude to Lord Ripon for some of his administrative acts.

The Vidnyán Vilás (104) for January says that the people of India cannot sufficiently thank the Viceroy for the broad lines of reforms he has laid down for the amelioration of their condition. It will not be incorrect to say that the administration of the present Viceroy finds no parallel in Indian history. When the noble Marquis assumed the reins of government he found that Lord Lytton had left to him the legacy of Afghan complications, but having by the dint of his energy and zeal settled those affairs he set about in earnest to introduce changes into the domestic administration of the country. He began his work with the repeal of the Vernacular Press Act, and backed up this step by adopting measures for the dissemination among the press of information regarding all proposed legislation with the view of eliciting the opinion of the public before any measures were passed into a law. Practical effect has been given to this intention by the distribution among the press of copies of the project for the establishment of agricultural banks in the Deccan with the opinions of the Members of Council thereon. It has hitherto been the practice to realize the full amount of Government revenue even in times of bad crops, and for this purpose Revenue Officers had recourse to the confiscation of all the property of the cultivator; but His Excellency has put an end to the hardship consequent on such measures by directing wholesale or partial remissions of land revenue assessment and ordering postponement of collection according to the yield of the crops. He has refused to sanction the enactment of the Mhowra Bill out of commiseration for the misery of the people who use the flowers as their food during a portion of the year. He has stimulated Native industries by directing as far as practicable the use of indigenous articles of store in all public offices. He reduced the tax on salt and entered his emphatic protest against the cost of the Indian contingent of the Egyptian Expedition being thrown on India. He has instituted an enquiry into the defects of the present system of education, and has appointed a commission for making suggestions on the subject. To crown all he has launched the scheme of local self-government with the view of giving a practical training to the people in the management of their own affairs. In conclusion, the writer exhorts the Indian public to show themselves worthy of the consideration shown to them by the noble Viceroy and to spare no pains in furthering the cause of the reforms so generously inaugurated by the Marquis. They should also try to encourage His Excellency in his noble undertakings by embodying their appreciation of his doings in a sort of monument and thus immortalizing the name of the Viceroy in this country. [The A'rya Dnyán Vardhak (82) for the month of Paush, Samvat 1939, expresses similar sentiments.]

Expresses sympathy with the movement for presenting a memorial for securing an extension of the Viceroy's term of office.

The Prabhákar (44) of the 18th January expresses its entire sympathy with the movement for presenting a memorial to the Empress of India praying for an extension of the term of the Viceroy's office. Lord Ripon has already inaugurated many administrative changes on a grand scale and some are still in contemplation. These reforms are not only beneficial to the interests of this country but are calculated to strengthen the relations between England and India. To bring them to a successful issue will require patient labour for a considerable period, and no one else than their originator can be expected to develop them with a paternal solicitude. The Marquis of Ripon has gained a name for being a benefactor of the Indian people, and there is nothing unnatural in the latter endeavouring to secure for him a longer term of office. [The Dátardun (80) of the 18th January expresses a similar wish.]

Says that the unfavourable tone of the Conservative papers of England regarding Lord Ripon's administration is attributable to selfish motives.

The Dátardun (80) of the 18th January says that while the blissful and glorious policy of Lord Ripon has caused universal joy, the Conservative papers of England have begun to raise an outcry against it. This tone of the Conservative newspapers is attributable to their selfishness, for their attacks are dictated more by party spirit than by a regard for truth. How can they afford to look with equanimity on the fact that while Lord Lytton, who represented their party, earned discredit and disgrace by his administration of India, Lord Ripon should acquire popularity and engage the affection of the natives of this country? The people of India ought to view this burst of party feeling with pity and not with anger.

Comments on the General Administration Report.

The Prabhákar (44) of the 19th January does not think that the public will place much reliance on the glowing remarks regarding the general condition of the Presidency embodied in the Bombay Administration Report for 1881-82. The observations regarding the removal of restrictions on trade evidently refer to the remission of import duty on piece-goods. This measure has not only been not productive of any good to the Indian trade, but has been highly prejudicial to its interests and for this the people are very sorry. It has been many a time represented that the removal of the duty levied in England on silver and other metals imported into that country from India will result in an immense benefit to the latter, but the cry has been persistently ignored. Government have made no allusion in the Report to the loss by unfavourable rates of exchange. This country has to pay annually four krors of rupees to England on account of Home charges and loss by exchange, and it is very strange that Government should not have taken any measures to prevent the loss.

Observes that the grievances of the people of Thána and Kolába deserve to be redressed.

The Lok Mitrá (68) of the 14th January observes that the people of the Thána and Kolába districts complain of the hardship caused by the strict operation of the forest laws, and it cannot be said that their grievances are imaginary. Complaints of the severity with which these stringent laws are sought to be enforced are gradually waxing louder. Not long ago the Mitrá reported the proceedings of a monster meeting held at Thána to memorialise the Viceroy against the hardships to which they were subjected by some recent rules issued by the Collector under orders from the Local Government by virtue of the powers conferred by the Forest Act, and the inhabitants of Alibág have followed suit. On Sunday last a meeting attended by over 2,000 men was held at Alibág, at which it was resolved to take steps to petition the Government to relieve the people from the oppression of the recent forest rules and to raise the funds necessary for the purpose. It is impossible not to sympathise with a movement of this kind in which large numbers of poor people feel constrained to join. The mere fact of so many people from distant parts of the country combining to take the only action open to them shows that the rules against which they complain tell heavily on them. It was resolved at the meeting to appeal to the Collector in the first instance, and in the event of his declining to grant them the relief prayed for, to move the Government of Bombay. It is feared, however, that it will be necessary for the people to lay their complaints before the Viceroy. The rules in question owe their promulgation to the Local Government, the Collector acting merely as their instrument, and to judge from the general disinclination of the Government to reconsider their decisions, however hasty or ill-advised, it is idle to expect that the representations on this subject will meet with the consideration they deserve. By all means let abuses be corrected and the rights of Government protected, but let not the people be oppressed by extreme and injudicious severity in matters so vitally affecting them. [The Yajdán Parast (106) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Remarks on the inconveniences caused by the closure of salt-works and pasture grounds in Ratnágiri.

The Belgaum Samáchár (16) of the 15th January, referring to the memorial recently submitted to Government by the inhabitants of Ratnágiri on the subject of the inconveniences caused by the closure of salt-works and pasture grounds, says:—The hardship caused by the stoppage of the manufacture of salt is too manifest to require any comment. Salt is one of the necessaries of life to the rich as well as to the poor, and the cry about its dearness is one of long standing. Its manufacture afforded employment to thousands of labourers, and it was the life of the traffic by pack bullocks formerly carried on between the ghâts and the Konkan. Traders above the ghâts used to bring different commodities to the Konkan on bullocks and carried back salt. This natural means of intercourse proved very advantageous to the Konkan, which cannot produce any articles necessary for the subsistence of the people. Since the manufacture of salt at Ratnágiri has been stopped there has been no inducement left for up-country traders to carry on their dealings with the people in the Konkan, and even if they are now continued the articles brought are of necessity sold at higher rates on account of the double charges of carriage. Another pernicious effect of the present scarcity of salt is the increase in the number of lepers in the district. People use less salt than is necessary for purposes of ordinary health, and this is assigned as the cause of the more extensive prevalence of leprosy in Ratnágiri than in other districts. Government have lately begun to show much concern regarding the treatment of this disease, but it is very strange that they should not have yet been able to strike at the root of the evil. Taxes are levied both in England and India for administrative purposes. The burden in the case of the former country falls heavily on the richer classes and lightly on the poorer classes. In India however the case is quite the contrary, as the poorer classes feel the pressure of taxes the most. With reference to the second portion of the prayer, viz. that regarding pasture grounds, the Samáchár observes that it is not the complaint of the people of Ratnágiri only but of the whole district. Before the introduction of the revenue survey many tracts of land were allotted for grazing purposes, and this accounts in a great measure for the attention formerly paid by people to the breeding of cattle that used to be fed on grass six months in the year without any expense to the owner. The survey however has made such grazing lands very scarce. All village lands have been numbered and given for agricultural purposes, a portion being nominally set apart as the common pasture ground. It is a matter of regret however that the portion thus set apart is as useless as if it were not allotted for the purpose, inasmuch as its rocky nature prevents the growth of grass thereon. If the Government cherish the interests of the poor at their heart, they will do better to show more substantial liberality by allotting tracts of such land as will fulfil their object, for the use of the village cattle. But if they have not the courage to make a sacrifice of revenue in this behalf they may recoup themselves from the local funds.

The Lok Mitrá (68) of the 14th January observes that the resolution of the Government of India directing the issue of duty-free salt for industrial and agricultural purposes has been hedged round with so many restrictions that the remission of duty will scarcely be regarded as a concession, and there will be no matter for surprise if no attempt is made by manufacturers to avail themselves of the privilege. The Government of India propose that a preventive department shall be maintained, at the expense of the manufacturers, to guard against the possible loss to the Government from the subsequent illicit use of the salt for unauthorized purposes. The expense of keeping this establishment will counterbalance any advantage which the manufacturers may expect to derive from the proposed remission of salt duty, but even if a margin of profit be left, the vexation and annoyance of supervision by Government officers is so great that those concerned will decline to take advantage of the concession. The extreme severity with which the salt and ábkári laws are administered is a subject of general comment, and it is too much to expect that in the face of such an evil the manufacturers will come forward to avail themselves of a paltry gain. If the Local Government could manage to prescribe the strength and cost of an establishment within moderate bounds, and arrange that the parties concerned should not be put to unnecessary trouble, the exemption might be availed of and the object of the Indian Government attained in a great measure. [The Surat Akhbár (69) of the 15th January says that no great advantage will accrue to the natives of this country from the operation of this resolution as long as salt is not made as cheap as it is in England. Fishermen ought also to receive the boon conferred by the new resolution.]

Observes that the resolution of the Government of India to allow the use of duty-free salt for certain manufacturing and agricultural purposes is not likely to be taken advantage of on account of the restriction imposed on its use.

The Daivadnyá Dipika (19) of the 10th January, while referring to the movement set on foot by Sir William Wedderburn for the establishment of an organ of vernacular papers with the object of facilitating a knowledge of their views by the English authorities, observes that it will be better if the practice formerly observed of distributing the Government Reports on Native Papers to some particular journalists is renewed with the modification that the privilege should be extended to all English, Anglo-Indian and vernacular newspapers. Such a step will lead to greater care being observed by the Reporter in preparing his summaries, and will furnish the editors with an opportunity of seeing if their utterances have been faithfully placed before Government, and if not of taking timely measures in that behalf.

Proposes the distribution of the Government weekly Reports on Native Papers to the vernacular and English press.

Does not approve of the limit of age in the new scheme for encouraging a study of practical engineering by the members of the Public Works Department.

The Khándesh Vaibhav (33) of the 12th January approves of the scheme recently set on foot for encouraging the acquisition of a practical and technical knowledge of engineering among the members of the Public Works Department, but observes that the Government of India have not done well in prescribing a limit to the age of the candidates desiring to take advantage of the scheme.

Complains of the injustice caused to criminals by being sent away from Sátára before the period for appeal expires.

The Mahárashtra Mitra (37) of the 18th January states that great injustice is caused to criminals committed to the Sátára Jail by their being sent to join the convict gangs employed on the irrigational works in progress at Rajewadi before the expiration of the period allowed for presenting appeals. It is the duty of Government to afford all possible facilities to prisoners for enabling them to take the necessary steps against the sentences passedon them, but the circumstance of their being transferred from the Sátára Jail has the contrary effect. Similar injustice is also caused by the transfer of convicts who have appealed but have not known the decision of the higher authorities. In the case of such authorities ordering the release of any prisoners, the latter are not in a position to take early advantage of the order, and are thus kept in unlawful confinement for the time the order takes to reach the Superintendent of the gang. It is to be hoped that Government will be convinced of the injustice thus caused and will take measures to prevent it.

Complains of the unsafe condition of the bridge across the river Mánd in the Pátan Táluka of the Sátára Collectorate.

The Mahárashtra Mitra (37) of the 18th January requests the attention of the authorities to the unsafe condition of the bridge constructed across the river Mánd for the use of the inhabitants of Chanphal in Pátan Táluka of the Sátára Collectorate. The construction has from the beginning been very defective, and danger to the lives of the passengers was always expected. Recently the middle arch of the bridge has fallen and a horse with its rider has narrowly escaped a fall into the river. This bridge is used morning and evening by boys attending the school, and it is therefore very desirable that instead of the breach only being repaired the whole bridge should be reconstructed at the cost of the Local Funds before the setting in of the monsoon. Otherwise the safety of many lives will be jeopardized.

Expresses disapproval of the proposal to invest the Judge of the Poona Small Cause Court with higher powers.

The Kesari (32) of the 16th January states that the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Poona has preferred an application for being invested with powers to decide suits for claims up to 1,000 rupees, and it is reported that the First Class Subordinate Judge at the same place has expressed an opinion that the work of his Court will greatly diminish by the grant of such powers. The usual number of suits for claims between 500 and 1,000 rupees in the district of Poona is 150 to 175, of which 60 to 70 suits are filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Poona during the course of a year. If this information is correct, it is not very clear what appreciable reduction will take place in the work of the Subordinate Judge's Court by the transfer of such a small number of suits. Besides there are three Subordinate Judges working at Poona and it cannot reasonably be asserted that the work is still very heavy. As the decisions of the Court of Small Causes will be final in the cases adverted to, it is not proper that the Judge should be invested with the powers asked for. [The Mahrátta (2) of the 14th January makes similar remarks.]

Complains of the prevalence of cattle-disease in A'njarla.

A correspondent of the Vengurla Vritt (61) of the 11th January, writing from A'njarla in the Ratnágiri District, gives an account of a meeting held there for adopting measures for reporting to Government the extensive prevalence of cattle-disease in that village which has had the effect of depriving the inhabitants of almost all their cattle.

Approves of the new nominations of Fellows of the Bombay University.

The Yajdán Parast (106) of the 14th January observes that for a long time past persons who exerted themselves in furthering public welfare and advancement were excluded from honours in the gift of Government because they would not condescend to curry favour with the authorities, while worthless persons were favoured. Among such honours were the Fellowship of the Bombay University and the office of Justice of the Peace. The consequence of the indiscriminate bestowal of these high honours was that their value was lowered in public estimation. It is however gratifying that in this year's nomination of new Fellows of the University Government have appointed worthy persons who ought to have received the honour long before this. There is not a single person in this list to whose appointment any objection can be raised.

Objects to certain changes being made in the book entitled "Karanghelo," the copyright of which belongs to the Educational Department.

The Gujaráti (84) of the 14th January observes that in 1864 Mr. Nandshankar Tuljáshankar wrote a historical novel entitled "Karanghelo," and sold its copy-right to the Educational Department. Three years ago some Christian missionaries objected to the book being included in the school series, because it contained allusions to ghosts, to the practice of sati, to love affairs and other so-called objectionable matters. The missionaries therefore suggested that the portions of the book treating of the above subjects should be expunged. The Director of Public Instruction thereupon appointed a committee to report upon this book, but as the majority of the members were missionaries it was decided that the objectionable parts should be taken out. The author of the book was asked to perform this work, and it was intimated that if he did not do it the book would be reprinted after the necessary omissions. The author refused to do this work and the Director has set to the work of revising the book as advised by the committee. It ought to be remarked however that the objections brought forward by the missionaries are frivolous. The work is a tale of the 14th century when the practice of sati or self-immolation prevailed extensively, and it would not be right to deny a place to the description of such practices in the book. The most entertaining portions of the book are those to which objection has been taken, and if those portions are taken out the book will lose all attraction. As it is, the book has not produced bad impressions on young minds, and ought to be allowed to remain in its present form. Moreover the purchaser of a copy-right has no authority during the lifetime of the author to modify the text against the wishes of the latter.

Remarks on the question of the mental and moral deterioration of the Indian Civil Service by the present faulty system of examination.

The Bakul (15) of the 14th January refers to the recent letter to the London Times from its Bombay correspondent regarding the mental and moral deterioration of the members of the Indian Civil Service, and ridicules the idea entertained by the correspondent that the deterioration has been the result of the variety of subjects introduced into the curriculum of the Civil Service Examination and the system of cramming resorted to by candidates for satisfying the difficult tests. This is indeed a very skilful trick for securing the abolition of the examination and preparing the way for selection by patronage. It is to be hoped that this subject will receive the attention it deserves. It is of paramount importance that the Government should hereafter strive to import into the higher services men of superior calibre and greater learning to ensure a satisfactory administration of the intricate new scheme.

The Jáme Jamshed (87) of the 15th January observes that the work of selecting delegates for the Pársi Matrimonial Court at Poona being entrusted to the Sessions Judge of that station appointments are sometimes not very happy. The Judge is not much to blame in the matter, as he is not well acquainted with the Pársi community of the place. It is desirable therefore that the work should be entrusted to that community.

Recommends that the Pársis of Poona should be empowered to appoint delegates to the Pársi Matrimonial Court of that station.

A'bkári.

The Kaisar-i-Hind (89) of the 14th January observes that the present ábkári policy of Government and the manner of working it cause great hardship to the people. After giving some of the details of the working, the Kaisar remarks that competition among the farmers serves to raise the amount of revenue contracted for to an enormous degree, and this increase in revenue leads the officials to represent to Government that an enhancement in the duty on liquor does not produce any inconvenience to its consumers. The contractor having agreed to pay an enormous amount for the contract, he adulterates liquor, uses false measures, and resorts to other shifts to annoy his village neighbours in order to reimburse himself. He keeps in his service several persons to keep a sharp look out on the surreptitious distillation of liquor. Being generally a rich individual, numerous poor people are under obligations to him, and they give him every possible information on the subject. The interests of the contractor and of the A'bkári Department being coincident, they work together for the detection and suppression of illicit distillation. The oppressive A'bkári Act, the sharp contractor and the wilful inspectors thus working together sometimes tyrannize over the poor people.

Describes the evil effects of the working of the A'bkári Act.

The Gujaráti (84) of the 14th January says that by the appointment of the commission to enquire into the extent of illicit distillation of liquor from mhowra flowers the Bombay Government intend to convince the Government of India of their indiscretion in having rejected the bill on the subject, and to show that so long as the Mhowra Bill is not enacted into a law surreptitious distillation of liquor will continue unchecked. The persistence shown in this matter by the Honourable Mr. Ashburner may one day be crowned with success, and the long dreaded misery of such a legislative measure may be brought on the people.

Disapproves of the appointment of the commission to enquire into the illicit distillation of liquor from Mhowra blossoms.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 14th January says :—It is strange that the committee appointed by the local authorities to inquire into the causes of illicit distillation of liquor in Thána and Kolába and to suggest preventive remedies is entirely composed of official members. We respectfully ask why it should not have on its board at least one non-official member. A Native gentleman familiar with the wants and requirements of these districts would have proved a valuable accession to the strength of the committee as it at present stands. As the committee is also entrusted with the task of ascertaining whether or not and how far the mhowra flower is used by Natives as an article of food, the presence of a Native member seems indispensable.

Says that a Native gentleman ought to have been appointed a member of the committee nominated to inquire into the causes of illicit distillation of liquor in the Thána and Kolába districts.

Legislation—Agricultural Banks.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 14th January says:—The letter recently addressed by the Government of India to the Local Government may be taken as an earnest of its desire to obtain a practical solution of the difficulties in which the peasantry in the Deccan has been involved for years past. The suggestions and proposals made therein are on the whole worthy of adoption. It formulates the cardinal principles on which Government is willing to give a fair start to an agricultural bank and plainly sets out the limits of such assistance. In short it gives practical effect to the principles and proposals which Major Baring so succinctly announced in his speech the other day during the debate on the Agriculturists' Loan Bill. The local knowledge and experience of Sir William Wedderburn and the Native gentlemen who have interested themselves in the matter are invited in order to ascertain how far the proposals made satisfy the wishes of those capitalists who are said to be prepared to establish an agricultural bank. It will thus be seen how solicitous the Government of India is to move with caution and deliberation in this affair. In this solicitude and willingness to listen to those who shall have eventually to deal with the ryots lies the success of the crude scheme. A free interchange of views is most likely to give us in the end a workable scheme. The writer then proceeds to discuss the scheme in detail, and while alluding to the process of liquidation suggests that no hard-and-fast limit be made to the time within which the liquidator will consider the case of each individual ryot and ascertain who are his creditors. Generally a month may be quite adequate, but it may not be so in some cases. If liquidators were to peremptorily exclude the claims of a creditor who may happen to send in his claim a little later than a month it would cause great hardship.

Approves of the letter of the Government of India on the subject of the establishment of agricultural banks in the Deccan.

Comments on the establishment of agricultural banks.

The Bakul (15) of the 14th January is not very sanguine that any appreciable good will result from the proposed establishment of agricultural banks. The indebtedness of the ryot will not meet with any material relief unless the heavy land assessment is reduced and made permanent and unless a system of allowing remissions of revenue invariably during bad seasons is resorted to. The agricultural banks may continue to hold on so long as the interest of Government in their operation remains unabated. But when that ceases it is far from probable that they will enjoy an uninterrupted existence. This misgiving receives corroboration from the experience which people in the Konkan districts have gained regarding the feeble aid rendered by Government to the Khots in the recovery of their outstanding balances of revenue from their tenants. The new scheme provides for the liquidation of a ryot's debts by means of an advance from Government. This advance has to be recovered with interest at the time of the land revenue collections. If the cultivator is again in need of money the amount of the payment is to be regulated by the value of his land, which is tantamount to saying that if the value of the land is not sufficient to guarantee the payment of the required debt he is not to receive any more money from Government, nor is he at liberty to seek the aid of a sáwkár. The condition of the ryot therefore with all the advantages secured by the agricultural banks will be as wretched as hitherto. It is very much to be regretted that the Government having a rather too watchful eye on their purse cannot seriously think of reforms which experienced men like Sir James Caird, the Honourable Dr. Hunter and Dr. Pollen have agreed with influential Natives in proclaiming as essential. Such a narrow-sighted policy is not in keeping with the general tenor of the administration of a thoughtful Viceroy like Lord Ripon.

The Prabhákar (44) of the 13th January alludes to the same subject and remarks that the rate of interest to be charged on advances to agriculturists is very high and needs to be lowered.

Local Self-government.

Makes remarks on the introduction of local self-government into Bombay.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 15th January, referring to the discussion in the Municipal Corporation on the subject of the introduction of the scheme of local self-government into Bombay, says:—It may indeed be a question whether Bombay should be allowed the benefits of the local self-government scheme by the abolition of the elections by the Government and the Justices. Mr. Navroji Fardunji is of opinion that the reform should be begun in that direction, but there is reason to fear that he goes much farther than most of us would do or would be justified in going by the facts underlying the whole question. The rate-payers have indeed been well weighed and proved not wanting. Their elections have not been open to any sensible abuse and the gentlemen they have hitherto sent to represent them in the Corporation have been well chosen. But at the same time it would be giving the experiment a wider trial than it deserves if the Justices at all events were taken out of the field and the rate-payers allowed to be masters of the situation. The general run of people is not infallible, and elections by the masses, in whose case pecuniary considerations and not education are the criterion of their elective capacity, are open to abuses which should be guarded against. Such abuses have not shown themselves as yet, but they may show themselves at any time. It is all the more necessary, therefore, that there should be something like a provision against these contingent evils and abuses of elections by the people. The system should be so modelled that the representation of intelligence and education would be ensured to some extent. Elections by the Government, it must be admitted, are not quite representative in this direction, but elections by the Justices are not open to any objection and of them can it be least advanced that they send men to the Corporation wedded to some unpopular hobbies or official crotchets. Indeed, these latter elections have made up the sum and substance of the Corporation. Educated and able men, desirous of sitting in the Corporation but at the same time anxious to avoid the troubles of close and private canvassing for votes, look up to the Justices, and the Justices are exactly the persons that can appreciate education and intelligence more than either the rate-payers or the Government. At the same time it is difficult to see why the Government should continue to have a share in the elections. Mr. Dosábhái Frámji thinks that if Government were put out of the field Europeans would find it hard to get into the Corporation, and that without the assistance of Europeans we cannot hope to get on successfully with our municipal institutions. The latter view is probably sound; indeed we think it would be unfair to introduce any changes that would have the effect of debarring Europeans from the Corporation. But it is not easy to see how that effect would arise from Government not taking any part in the elections. Government now send 16 nominees. If 8 of these are given to the University and 8 to the mercantile community of Bombay, there is every chance that Europeans will get in as before. It is easy to hit upon other points of reform in the present constitution of the municipality. We hardly see why the Government should be allowed to appoint a certain number of Town Councillors. The Corporation can very well do that work, and having sent its representatives to the Corporation, Government like the rate-payers and the Justices should have nothing to do with the constitution of the Town Council. Further, the Chairman of the Town Council should be appointed by the Corporation. He may be an official or not, as it is absurd to rule that no official member of the Corporation or Town Council shall be elected Chairman. As long as officials are allowed to be in the two bodies, they should not be debarred from what should be the right of every member. But the election of Chairman ought to rest with the Corporation alone, and if the district committees and boards are to have that privilege, it would be unreasonable to withhold it from the Bombay Municipal Corporation. The Municipal Commissionership should also undergo a change. As the law now stands with reference to it, we are under an anomaly. We are governed, so to say, as to our civic rights by popular representatives, but the working is all done by an officer chosen by the Government not in, but without the consultation of, the Corporation.

Makes certain suggestions in regard to the extension of the scheme of local self-government to the municipality of Bombay.

The Jáme Jamshed (87) of the 28th January observes that the coming elections being the first after the publication of the scheme, it was expected that the citizens would evince considerable earnestness and that hot contests would go on at electioneering booths, but little competition appeared on this important occasion. For this the present system of election is more at fault than the voters. While a Justice of the Peace is entitled to give sixteen votes, a rate-payer though he may be paying the rates in all wards can vote for one ward and can give one vote only. A Justice of the Peace need not be a rate-payer to entitle him to vote. Why should he then exercise more rights than a rate-payer? For securing a proper representation to the rate-payers it is desirable that a rate-payer should be allowed to give as many votes as the specified number of representatives which his ward is entitled to return, and that a rate-payer who pays rates in more than one ward should be entitled to give votes for each of those wards. This suggestion will appear quite reasonable when it is remembered that if a Justice of the Peace is a rate-payer he can give his vote in both the capacities. Again while thousands of rate-payers can return thirty-two representatives only, it seems an unreasonable arrangement that about two hundred and fifty Justices of the Peace should be entitled to send in sixteen representatives. Considering the gradually increasing population of the city and having regard to the fact that the work of the Corporation has occasionally to be postponed for want of a sufficient number of members to form a quorum, it appears necessary that the Corporation should be composed of eighty representatives, out of which sixty-four should represent the rate-payers, eight should be delegated by the Justices, and the remaining eight should be nominated by Government. Mr. Grattan Geary is afraid that this arrangement will lead to the Corporation being entirely composed of Hindus, but the fear is groundless inasmuch as if sixty-four seats are allotted to rate-payers the number of representatives for each ward will be larger than it is now, and if a rate-payer is entitled to give as many votes as the number of the representatives returnable by his ward, it is impossible that the Corporation should be composed entirely of Hindus. Moreover, many Europeans are entitled to get into the Corporation either as Fellows of the University or as Justices of the Peace, and their friends can vote for them. It is further desirable that the pecuniary standard of qualification for votes should be reduced by half to allow of their number being increased. There is no need of effecting an alteration in the present number (12) of the councillors, nor should the right of Government to appoint four of them be curtailed. The Chairman of the Town Council should nevertheless be appointed by the Corporation, who might as well be invested with authority to appoint the Municipal Commissioner. However, as the appointments hitherto made by Government to the latter office have been quite satisfactory, the existing arrangement need not be disturbed for the present. [The Lok Mitrá (68) of the 14th January makes somewhat similar remarks.]

Approves of the suggestions made by Mr. Gokuldás Jagmohandás in regard to the application of the scheme of local self-government to the Bombay Municipality.

The Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 15th January approves of the recommendation made by Mr. Gokuldás Jagmohandás that the right of appointing sixteen members of the Corporation nominated by Government be transferred to the Fellows of the University of Bombay, and the Corporation empowered to appoint the Chairman of the Town Council and also the Municipal Commissioner. The Samáchár enters into a few arguments to show that the above arrangement would, if adopted, be beneficial and would not lead to any of the evil consequences apprehended by some of the members who opposed it.

Criticizes the reply given by Sir James Fergusson to the address presented to His Excellency at Násik.

In an article headed "The Governor on Local Self-government," the Indu Prakásh (8) of the 15th January says:—The reply of Sir James Fergusson to the address presented to him by the inhabitants of Násik pretty clearly indicates the line in which the Government of Bombay mean to work out the local self-government scheme. The elective franchise is to be given but not fully. Half the nominees are to be elected by the people, the other half by the Government, the nomination of the chairman resting with the Government and the chairman being an official. It may be doubted whether this will in any way improve the status of the district municipalities or promote the objects of the Government of India. Sir James has indeed stated that this shall be the mere beginning of greater reforms and the further extension of the elective rights to the people. But even assuming that the object of the Government of Bombay is no more than to train the people first and give them the rights afterwards, the objection stands that so long as the official element preponderates it will have the upper hand and the popular representatives will learn nothing but submission to what the official majority may dictate. Training is certainly necessary, but a training which begins by keeping everything practically in the hands of the officials is hardly the sort of training required. His Excellency alluded in the same speech to the necessity of giving competent Natives a fair share in the administration of the country. Without their co-operation or assistance, His Excellency thinks, a foreign Government would find it hard to be popular in India. We thank Sir James for giving expression to this opinion and thus recognizing the value of the services and usefulness of Native officials. [The Makrátta (2), the Native Opinion (9) and the Lok Mitrá (68) of the 14th January express similar sentiments.]

Makes remarks on His Excellency the Governor's reply to the address of the inhabitants of Dhulia.

The Arunodayá (13) of the 14th January criticizes the reply given by His Excellency Sir James Fergusson to the address presented to him by the inhabitants of Dhulia. While remarking on the prayer of the inhabitants regarding the concession of the elective franchise and the powers of local self-government, His Excellency observed that it had formed the subject of all the representations he had received on the subject, but that in his opinion European officers were better fitted for the new responsibilities than the Natives. This is indeed a very curious remark. The people do not appear to be guilty of any error in having urged these considerations on His Excellency's notice; on the contrary in doing so they were acting strictly within their rights, but the Governor seems to have been annoyed with the repeated prayers of his subjects, which it must be said is inconsistent with a sense of his duty. The mere fact of the people praying for such concessions gives the lie to His Excellency's opinion regarding the incompetency of the Natives, or it at least serves as a fair index of their ambition to acquit themselves to the fullest of their capacities. If this is so and if the Supreme Government are in favour of encouraging such aspirations, why should the Local Government be backward in responding to the call of their superiors? It is indeed very likely that the devolution of power on inexperienced hands will give rise to a few errors in the beginning, but as the recipients of the new responsibilities advance in experience they will in course of time become thorough masters of the situation. What ground has His Excellency to make the assertion that the Natives will not be able to do as much justice to the task imposed upon them as Europeans? His Excellency has had no special opportunities of becoming better acquainted with the work of Native officers than the Viceroy. Both these officers landed on the shores of India at nearly the same time, and if the latter with his experience of Native character and abilities has entertained a very favourable opinion about them, it is not very clear why Sir James should have arrived at a different conclusion. Sixty years back the people of this Presidency were carrying on their administration independently of any foreign supervision, and is it consistent to say that their descendants of the present times, with all the occidental training and enlightenment, are not even able to manage the unimportant work of road repairs? And granting that they are unable, how does the circumstance reflect on the fundamental principles of British rule in India? The people must in the absence of anything better hail with gratitude even the partial concessions which His Excellency is prepared to grant, but it requires explanation why Sir James should incur the odium of the people by denying them more liberal privileges for which he has the sanction of his superior authorities. Let His Excellency but attempt to secure a due appreciation of the capacities of the people by a frank dealing with them, and he will find that they are not wanting.

Complains of the delay in the publication of the Bombay Local Self-government Bill.

The Subodh Patrika (10) of the 14th January says:—The Bombay Local Self-government Bill does not appear yet to be anywhere, but this is now the middle of January and if the measure is to come into force from 1st April next it is surely time to push matters through in order to avoid undue haste in the end in a matter of so much importance and involving such grave practical issues. It is therefore to be hoped that the authorities will publish betimes at least the main lines of the measure they contemplate so that the Native public, the most concerned and interested in the question, may have time to consider and declare its views thereon. [The Gujarát Mitrá (66) of the 14th January makes a similar complaint.]

The Jagadddarsh (28) of the 14th January hears that the Collector of Ahmednagar has proposed the division of the town of Nagar into four wards, each part electing three commissioners for the municipality. It is reported that the municipal committee intend to resolve that persons eligible to vote in one ward shall not vote for a candidate residing in another ward. This does not accord with the orders of Government, which allow the election of any candidate by any voter. As the proposals of the committee if carried out will cause great inconvenience to the voters it is suggested that measures should be adopted for passing a resolution at once consonant with the views of Government and convenient to the public.

Does not approve of the intention of the Ahmednagar Municipality to restrict election by voters to candidates in their wards.

Education.

After expressing satisfaction with the appointment of the Education Commission, the Vidnyán Vilás (104) for the month of January observes that the people of India have not as yet reached a stage of civilization sufficiently advanced to enable them to conduct the important work of educating themselves without State aid. Government should not therefore abandon the work of education for the present, and should adopt measures to bring up the people to that state of efficiency whence they might aspire to be independent. With this view Government should encourage Native industries and commerce, promote Natives to higher and more responsible posts under the State, curtail unnecessary State expenditure, encourage improvements in agriculture and stimulate the discovery of mineral products, reduce the burden of taxation and otherwise assist in the material progress and prosperity of the people. Rich persons ought to assist Government in the work of education, the main burden of which ought however to lie on the State for some time. The different standards of the school course, English as well as vernacular, are stiff and children find it hard to get through them. Much time is thus wasted without any adequate recompense for the trouble taken. The system of instruction followed in the time of the late Board of Education was more beneficial than the present mode, as can be seen from the better and more satisfactory results achieved by the former. Means should be adopted to impart higher education in the different vernaculars and to place it within the reach of a large number of the people, and every nerve should be strained to spread primary education among the masses. Due attention should also be given to the establishment of schools for technical education.

Makes a few observations in connection with the Education Commission.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 14th January, in an article headed "Principal Oxenham and the results of Arts Colleges," attributes the decrease in the percentage of successful candidates from the Deccan and the Elphinstone Colleges in the Previous and the Final B. A. Examinations in the year 1881 to a falling off in the teaching of the Colleges and an increased severity on the part of examiners, and not to a generally inferior character of the candidates, and observes:—Let Mr. Oxenham examine the official returns of the results of his College, and he will find that the greater number of failures generally occur in English and Mathematics, and sometimes in Physics. The causes of the failure of candidates in Physics are obvious, for there is a sad want of apparatus in the Deccan College for imparting instruction in this experimental science to a large class of 80 or 100 students. This want should be speedily supplied by the Director of Public Instruction. An efficient lecturer in this subject should also be appointed. As regards Mathematics, the defect in teaching cannot be obviated so long as the Director is determined, in spite of the complaints of the students and the public, to leave the subject in the hands of the present Professor of Mathematics in the Deccan College. With respect to this branch of study the students suffer from two kinds of disadvantages, inefficient teaching and a stiff examination. As to English, the system of teaching it is greatly defective. The real difficulties of the students do not lie so much in understanding English passages as in expressing the meaning in their own language, and it is this which is required in higher examinations. But English composition is almost totally neglected in our Colleges. The English of the Previous Class, which requires the greatest attention, is most neglected, and when students fail in this subject the Professors, with the exception of a few candid ones, are ready to throw the entire blame upon the inefficiency of the poor matriculated students. Professors of English should give weekly exercises in English composition and return them duly corrected. If this cannot be done owing to the large number of papers to be examined, fortnightly or at least monthly exercises ought to be given if the Professors wish that the Previous Class should show bright results. The ruling of the Department of Public Instruction is to the same effect. Monthly examinations must also be held, in which students might be examined in the work done during the month. This practice was regularly followed in the Deccan College when Dr. Kielhorn was Principal. If Englishmen expect idiomatic English from candidates, it is their duty to teach it at the commencement of the College course. If Previous Classes are large, Government should appoint one or two able Natives to teach the text-books and ask its high-salaried Professors of English Literature to devote their attention to composition. The Director of Public Instruction should examine the truth of these facts in the light of the statistics of the results of University examinations, and should speedily remedy the defects existing in the present system of collegiate instruction.

Complains of the defective system of teaching English in Government Arts Colleges.

Railways.

Want of employment of indigenous capital in the construction of railways in India.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 14th January in a communicated article gives figures to show the almost total absence of Native capital in the guaranteed railways of India, and remarks:—These figures bring to light the fact that four out of nine guaranteed railways are not at all open to Native capitalists and conclusively prove the meagreness of their share. This is very much to be deplored. The facts that Government have assured a certain percentage of interest to the shareholders and others, that the plant and material of the railways exist as security in India for the capital invested, that Government has been anxious to open up the country in all directions for trade and consequently to prove good their guarantee for the interest, ought to have induced Native capitalists to come forward. Perhaps the thirst for more interest or the fear of the instability of the British Government in India or the ignorance of the real facts may have held them back. Perhaps no opportunity was given them to come forward in sufficient numbers. Perhaps the assistance of foreign capital in Indian undertakings was deemed politically necessary and important for strengthening the British sway; for even under the enlightened rule of Lord Ripon we have witnessed the event of the capital for the Southern Marátha Railway being almost wholly raised in England, as if the natives of India were either unwilling or unable to contribute. The injustice and the financial responsibility of this step were duly pointed out by even the Anglo-Indian press. But the voice of the press was unheeded. Policy and expedieney proved superior to it. The Liberal Ministry represented by the most liberal Viceroy is desirous to promote Native enterprise, and is at the same time willing to negotiate with firms in Europe for the construction of railways in India. The anomaly between the desire and the action is quite apparent. It cannot be that the people of India have not sufficient capital or ability to undertake the construction of railways. We believe they have not been taken into confidence by Government. The foreign administration of railways gives no scope for the display of Native talent, and hence they are naturally disinclined to embark in a business in which they have no representation equivalent to the amount of capital invested, and which is managed by a board of directors not in India but in England. The writer then quotes some figures to show that nearly three-fourths of the foreign capital employed on Indian railways is sent back to the country in which it is raised in the form of the purchase money of stores and the wages of foreign labour, and remarks:—India's debt to other countries is thus increasing. The finances suffer. The Indian tax-payer is groaning under the burden of taxation.

It ought therefore to be now the policy of Government to construct railways in India through Native management and by means of indigenous capital, stores and labour. Some difficulties will at first be experienced in inducing Native capitalists to form themselves into companies for the construction of railways and for the supply of stores required for them. But it must be remembered that India is in this respect making good progress. The instincts of a statesman like Lord Ripon ought to realize this fact and give an impulse to Native capital in this direction. It is to be hoped that the foresight and enterprise of Indian capitalists will be awakened and that Government will kindly do everything to stimulate them to action.

Recommends that the new railway station at Navsári should be built on that side of the line on which the town is situated.

The Gujarát Mitrá (66) of the 14th January again requests the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway to build the new station at Navsári, the construction of which has recently been sanctioned, on that side of the railway on which the town is situated. The Mitrá once more briefly alludes to the inconveniences suffered by passengers from and to Navsári in having to cross the line in order to reach the station building, and hopes that the Company will attend to the convenience of the public.

Municipalities.

Suggests certain measures for securing due publicity to the orders of the Bombay Municipality.

The Din Bandhu (4) of the 14th January regrets that the municipality of Bombay does not take proper steps to secure due publicity to all its orders of general interest. It has hitherto been the practice to inform the public of such matters by means of advertisements appearing in the English and Gujaráti dailies and some of the Maráthi weeklies. But has the municipality ever taken care to ascertain how far the object of such advertisements is satisfied? The present arrangements are not calculated to do much good, and it would be better if instead of having recourse to newspapers for acquainting the public with such matters the municipality were to go to the expense of printing the information in the shape of hand bills, distributing them to the public at large, and also pasting them in all public places, streets and by-lanes. If however the municipality cannot provide funds for this increased expenditure, the advertisements in question should be caused to be published in each and every newspaper published in the city irrespective of its language of publication, and the proprietors of such papers should be requested to distribute gratis copies of such advertisements to persons who do not subscribe to their papers.

Native States.

Government ought to pay due attention to the mal-administration of Native States.

The Gujaráti (84) of the 14th January says that in all complaints regarding Native States the British officers appear to be more at fault than the Diwáns. Prior to the last ten years the subjects of Native States used to assert that they were happier than the subjects of the British Indian Government. They had to pay a small duty on salt, they obtained justice in the old time-honoured way, paid a light land revenue assessment and were governed by good officials. As if not brooking this state of things the British officials insisted upon the appointment of Diwáns according to their wishes in pursuance of the terms of treaties. They increased the salt duty, enhanced the land assessment, and exercised pressure for securing the introduction of municipal institutions. These measures have served to dissatisfy the subjects of Native States. The difference between the Native States and the British Indian territory is simply that, while in the former changes are forced upon the subjects nolens volens, in the latter they are so gradually introduced as not to allow the creation of alarm among the people. This state of things is very unsatisfactory. The subjects of Native States should as far as possible be allowed a voice in the matter of such reforms. No redress is granted to the complaints of the people, and the authorities are as it were encouraged in their misdeeds by the persistent denial of justice to the aggrieved parties. So long as the Native Princes do not become alive to the necessity of enacting laws in keeping with their old customs, the British laws being rejected as unsuitable, and so long as the arbitrary conduct of the Diwán is unchecked, there is no chance of an improvement in their status. At present the British Government is wilfully conniving at the affairs of Native States that loudly cry for interference.

Does not approve of the contemplated tour of the Nizám to Europe.

The Khándesh Vaibhav (33) of the 12th January does not look with favour on the contemplated tour of the young Nizám of Hyderabad to Europe. It is very strange that before the young prince has even experienced the heat and cold of the weather at Hyderabad he should be packed off to England. It is not clear what object the prime minister has in view in making such a proposal. The Nizám is yet ignorant of the affairs of his dominions, and it is but just that he should try to acquire a knowledge of them and should undertake a tour to the important centres of civilization in this country with the object of studying the different administrations prevailing in them. Should there be any necessity for a trip to Europe even after this, it may be taken with advantage.

Notices the mismanagement in the Kadi and Pátan districts of the Baroda territory.

A Gujaráti correspondent of the Suryodayá (57) of the 15th January states that 50,000 bighas of land have been misappropriated from the Kadi and Pátan districts in the Baroda territory by the bordering States. One Mr. Devidás is the officer entrusted with the work of the settlement of boundary disputes, and he has been getting promotion notwithstanding that he has given away a number of villages unlawfully. None of the superior officers care to look carefully into the matter. The Subha of Kadi has allowed outstanding balances of lákhs of rupees to remain unrealized, and still he has been temporarily promoted to the post of Sar Subha. It is to be hoped that the Gáekwár will take care to appoint honest officers in the administration of his territories.

Complains of the prevalence of misrule and anarchy in Káthiáwár.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 14th January remarks:—Káthiáwár is distracted by intrigues and counter-intrigues. Mr. Peile checked the tendency to intrigue and self-aggrandisement with an iron hand. Colonel Barton began well enough, but he has become a tool in the hands of his A'ryan advisers. There is an intense feeling in the province against one or two Daftardárs. These men have not only brought the British name into disrepute, but have actually caused a split among the European officers. Thus in addition to what the simple Káthiáwári calls a military law in the province, there is also a strongly marked party-government. One party belongs to this Colonel, another to that Major. The result is that what is done by one party is undone by another. The only officials in whom the public had confidence and who detected and punished intriguers with unsparing rigidity have been transferred. Messrs. Candy and Beaman have gained by their transfer, but the moral effect of the removal will be anything but salutary. At any rate the intriguers have been secured a new lease of life and they will no doubt make the best of it. Meanwhile princes and people alike of this protected province have a most uneasy time of it. They are at the mercy of the unscrupulous and the incapable. They may have to put up with a game law and other special temporary arrangements, their letters and telegrams may be tampered with, their disputes may be settled as per Daftardári promise. One Rána may be coerced into accepting the Daftardár's nominee as his Diwán, another Rája may have to make room for an engineer who serves as an informant to the Political nominator, a third must entertain a supernumerary doctor who may be no other than a spy. All this and much worse is possible in such protected provinces. The ruling idea with Government is to make its representatives absolute masters of the situation in order to keep up British prestige! But this state of affairs must end somewhere. Efforts are already being made; a Native barrister who has made his name conspicuous in connection with Káthiáwár politics has represented matters to Government in their proper light. We would strongly urge members of the provincial bar to submit a united protest against the misrule and anarchy to which Káthiáwár is said to have been so far abandoned.

Says that the people of Káthiáwár are glad at the transfer of Colonel Barton from that province.

The Gujarátí (84) of the 14th January observes that the whole of Káthiáwár is rejoiced at the transfer of Colonel Barton to Aden. The people look upon his departure in the light of the removal of the cause of mismanagement prevailing in the Native States in that province. Colonel Barton's administration never commanded the approbation of the public, and, since the complications of Porbandar, was looked upon with displeasure both by the Native Princes and the Bombay Government. The Colonel is naturally of a kind disposition and has a reputation for liberal views, but the political atmosphere of Káthiáwár seems to have worked in him a marvellous change. His relations with Native Princes were in many respects agreeable. His views were generally favourable to the Chiefs but unfavourable to their subjects, and yet he spared no pains to put down with a high hand a prince that questioned his authority. He possessed immense influence in the States under his charge and consequently the subjects of those States were dissatisfied with his administration. The reason of this transfer is said to be as follows:—The Bombay agent of the Rána of Porbandar wrote in a letter to the prince that he should not pay the fine inflicted on him by the Political Agent and should not dismiss the Diwán, Mr. Nagindás, as the Rána had power to appoint as his Diwán any person he liked; that the Bombay Government would not interfere in the matter and would not be displeased if the Rána retained his Diwán. This letter was registered in the Bombay Post Office, but instead of reaching the hands of the Rána was received by Colonel Barton. The Political Agent then sent for the prince and threatened him that if he did not dismiss the Diwán he would be punished by the Bombay Government. This threat frightened the prince, who at once promised to dispense with the services of Mr. Nagindás. He then asked his Bombay agent to communicate to him the contents of the letter, and when he became aware of them he got much annoyed and called upon the Post Master General of Bombay to deliver the registered letter addressed to him. On making inquiries the Post Master General learnt that the letter was kept by Colonel Barton, who stated that the emergency of the case induced him to receive the letter. The Post Master General is said to have censured Colonel Barton for his misconduct. The Bombay agent of the Rána intended to proceed against the Political Agent, who in the meantime left the province on furlough, and before his return the Rána's agent died. It is reported that the Bombay Government have on this account been displeased with Colonel Barton, and as a punishment have transferred him to Aden. It would be well, observes the Gujaráti, if the vacant post were conferred either on Mr. Candy or Lieutenant-Colonel Watson, who have already gained a favourable opinion of the people of that province. [The Deshi Mitrá (81) of the 18th January says that the Bombay Government ought to lose no time in ascertaining whether the statement made by the Gujaráti regarding Colonel Barton having tampered with a registered letter addressed to the Rána of Porbandar by his Bombay agent is true or not. If it be true Colonel Barton ought to be removed from his post so that other Political Agents may take a lesson from it. The result of the enquiry ought to be made public, otherwise it will be thought that Government screen their officials from punishment and thus encourage them in their misdeeds. If Colonel Barton is quietly transferred from his present post, the silence of the Bombay Government will be considered shameful.]

Complains of the oppression exercised by Kárbháris of the Native States of Káthiáwár on the people.

The Vartmán Sár (103) of the 16th January, in a communicated article headed "Cries for Justice from Káthiáwár, No. 1," complains of the oppression exercised by the Native States of Káthiáwár on their subjects and requests the Local and Supreme Governments to attend to the matter. The people are reduced to a state of slavery. The capricious rules framed by the arbitrary officers of the Political Department and the carelessness of Native potentates have aggravated the evil. Mean Kárbháris, judges and other officers of Native States do not scruple to harass the people. Most of the Rájas are puppets in the hands of their Kárbháris. There is no help for these Rájas, for if the Kárbháris, who are the favourites of the Political Agent, were to complain against them to the Agent, the princes are sure to be reprimanded. The Agent would sometimes not hesitate even to hold out a threat of dethronement. As the Agent does not listen to complaints against the Kárbháris, and as many of the Native kings are given to luxury and indolence, the Kárbháris are left the masters of the situation and molest the people.

Remarks in connection with the disturbances at Cambay.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 14th January observes:—Too much has been made of the popular demonstration at Cambay. The Nawáb has an opponent in his brother, who once aspired to the throne. He appears to be surrounded by the old Kárbháris and other discontented spirits ready to make some capital out of differences between the people and the State. The present administration is more or less composed of outsiders, who have to keep pace with the general progress of the country and to introduce levies in conformity with treaty arrangements with the paramount power. Now, as is well known, the people of the more backward Native States have a superstitious dread of progress of any kind. In the present case a proposal for municipal improvement seems to be at the bottom of the disturbances. There may have been some mismanagement on the part of subordinate officials; but the talk about a Hindu lady having been looted of a lákh of rupees and the other stories about murder and rapine are not to be credited. There is not the least doubt that some of the unhappy people do feel aggrieved. It would be better for these men to make their grievances known to the proper authorities. The Cambay Darbár would do well not to thrust reforms on an unwilling people. The populace is perhaps the most peace-loving in Gujarát, and no amount of instigation could have roused them into such opposition. The occurrence deserves notice for more reasons than one and we hope matters will not be hushed up at this stage. [The Samsher Bdhádur (97) of the 19th January expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Gives a defence of the officials of the Cambay State against the loud complaints raised by its people.

The Gujarát Mitrá (66) of the 14th January states, on the authority of the information furnished by its special correspondent, that some scheming persons of Cambay have misled the people of that town and induced a large number of them to leave the place. The correspondent enquired of some of the refugees from Cambay why they had left the town and was informed that they had followed the example set by the Mahájans and were sworn to do so. On further enquiry he gathered that the people considered that the municipal and the intestate property departments oppressed them considerably, and that great pressure was exercised on them in the matter of the collection of a fund for the repair of the Mándla tank. The Mitrá quotes some facts and figures showing that the so-called grievances in regard to the above matters were the lawful acts of the officials of the State, which were distasteful to the people. The Mitrá further quotes some measures adopted by the administration for the improvement of the State and for the amelioration of the condition of its people. These reforms have dissatisfied the leaders of the different classes of the people, who have been deprived of the illegal gains secured to them by the mismanagement which existed under the rule of the late Nawáb. The leaders have incurred a grave responsibility in having incited the people to leave the city and to act in the manner they have done, and they will have to rue it.

Wishes to get from the Diwán an account of the receipts and expenses made on the occasion of the marriage of the Nawáb of Cambay.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (76) of the 20th January states that the people of Cambay desire that among other enquiries the expenses incurred by the Diwán on the occasion of the marriage of the Nawáb in Shráwan last should be ascertained. In this marriage the Diwán entertained the leaders of eighty-four villages of the State, and received large sums of money as chándla or presents. He also withheld one month's pay of all servants of the State and received presents from vakils, merchants, and other subjects. An account of all these receipts ought to be taken from the Diwán.

Gives a few instances of oppression practised by certain officials of the Gondal State.

The Gujaráti (84) of the 14th January gives two more instances of oppression practised in the Gondal State;—(1) The Deputy Faujdár of Mahika took some provisions from the village without paying for them. The villagers complained against this act of oppression to Mr. Ismáel Miya, but the Deputy Faujdár and he being friends the latter did not take any notice of the complaint for a long time. He made the complainants dance attendance on him during his tour and made them follow him for 46 miles. When he saw that their patience could not fail, Mr. Ismáel imprisoned the complainants, starved them for a day, and released them when they by a written application withdrew the complaint. (2) The police and some Memons made a serious assault on Kansára Harjiwan Parsotam and several other residents of Dhoráji, who filed a complaint against the assaulters in the magistrate's court. Before the day on which the case was to be heard the Memons had an interview with Mr. Báwa Miya, who got the Joint Administrator to issue an order directing the magistrate to induce the complainants to withdraw the complaint and in the event of their refusal to proceed against 183 other Hindus. The complainants refused to withdraw, and thereupon 25 out of the 183 persons were apprehended and proceeded against though all of them were innocent. The complainants thereupon withdrew their complaint.

Complains of oppression exercised by the officials of the Gondal State.

The Hitechhu (67) of Ahmedabad of the 18th January gives the text of a petition against Miya Ismáel, the Police Superintendent of Gondal, Shirastedár Báwa Miya Pir Miya and Mahálkari Báwa Miya, presented to Colonel Barton, and says that Major Nutt does not listen to any complaints against his Musalmán Shirastedár. The Musalmán element predominates in the State and there is no wonder if that party oppresses the people. The British authorities ought to institute minute investigations into the causes of the complaints against the Mahomedan State officials.

Complains of the oppression exercised by the Dhrángadra State on the girássiás of the village of Satápar.

The Samsher Báhádur (97) of the 19th January in a communicated article complains of the oppression exercised by the Dhrángadra State on the girássiás of Satápar. Some men were sent by the State on the 20th December last to the village of Satápar with a view to attack the inhabitants. These men began to plunder hay-stacks, and utilized the hay for the food of their horses without the permission of the owners. They tried to arrest several girássiás and besieged the village. A tálukdár having escaped from the village to the Wadhwán camp, sent a telegram on the 21st to the Bombay Government setting forth the grievances of the inhabitants of Satápar and asking for protection. The Political Agent of Káthiáwár was also informed of this act of oppression while he was at Bhávnagar on tour. On the very day that a reply was received from the Bombay Government the men left for Dhrángadra after having plundered some grain. It is nothing short of tyranny that the Dhrángadra State should thus attack its bháyáts and try to commit a breach of the public peace. It is to be hoped that Sir James Fergusson will institute careful enquiries into this matter and protect the rights of the girássiás, as evil results will otherwise ensue.

Berár Affairs.

Discusses the question of separating the Judicial from the Revenue Department.

The Varhád (Berár) Samáchár (59) of the 15th January, in continuation of the articles reported in the last two summaries, says:—But the neglect of judicial work and the trouble and expense which suitors have to undergo are not the only evils which result from the present system of administration. There is yet another drawback of a very grave character in this system. Judicial work is of a very special character. Ex necessitate rei laws cannot but be very complex and cannot well be handled but by those who are trained to the work. In India the ordinary difficulties which beset a person called upon to dispense laws are further aggravated by the peculiar circumstances of the country. Here a judge is called upon to administer laws not belonging to one system of jurisprudence only, but there are systems of jurisprudence which he has to deal with. Those systems of jurisprudence which require years of study to comprehend and master are in our province entrusted in the majority of cases to persons who do not bring with them any previous knowledge of the subject. The main thing which distinguishes civilization from barbarism is the substitution of moral force for physical force in settling disputes between man and man. The chief function of a government is the protection of the life and property of its subjects. And this is how moral force and the chief function of government are treated! Well if the persons who are called upon to give justice do not possess any previous qualifications, do they and can they after they are entrusted with the work bring themselves up to the proper mark? We must admit that as a class they are actuated by every desire to master the new subject placed before them, and all that they can do they try to do. But it is not possible that that proficiency and knowledge which a regular and a special training alone can give can be acquired by the study of a few hours snatched from the little leisure an officer gets after a day's hard work. The most that they are generally able to do is to get up the Acts and the Codes. Few have a knowledge of the general principles of law. Still fewer ever read the High Court Reports. The result is that our bench is not as strong in legal knowledge as it should be. That this is lamentable all will agree. The only remedy for this is the separation of the Judicial Department from the Revenue Department. There is one more evil yet, the result of the present administrative system, which from the suitors' point of view is a very great one. The majority of our judges are required to move out. The Judicial Commissioner goes in camp from October to April. He has also to go to the six zilla towns whenever there is sessions work. The Deputy Commissioners being District Collectors must move in their districts in the travelling season. Most of the Subordinate Judges are táluka officers. We have thus a complete system of travelling courts, which are simply ruinous to suitors. They and their witnesses have to run after the Courts. Over and above the costs imposed by law they incur an enormous extra expenditure by having to run about from place to place. To their pleaders also they have to pay much more than what would be necessary if suits were tried at the towns where courts are located. It is often boasted in high official circles that in Berár justice is speedier and cheaper than in other parts of India. But as a matter of fact justice is nowhere dearer. The present system of wandering courts appears most unreasonable. There is some colour of truth in saying that Deputy Commissioners being district officers must move out in their districts. But what earthly necessity is there for the Judicial Commissioner to do so? Moving from village to village, from one end of Berár to another, with a train of suitors and pleaders, appears quite unnecessary and unjustifiable. As for doing his work of inspecting and examining the records of the courts subordinate to him, that can be easily done if the Bombay system is adopted. Judges there never take cases out of the court town, and still they do their duties of inspection and supervision. Again there are many more Assistant Commissioners and Extra Assistant Commissioners than we know what to do with. In the Akola District there are six Assistant Commissioners and two Extra Assistant Commissioners who are both civil judges and táluka officers. Why should not a better system be introduced? Why should civil work be entrusted to an officer who has to move in camp?

RAOJI B. PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
27th January 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Appeals: Injustice caused to criminals in the Sátára Jail by their being sent to work with convict gangs before the expiry of the period for— ... 11

Appointment: Approval of the—of Lord Kimberley as Secretary of State for India 4

Books: Objections to certain changes being made in a Gujaráti book called "Karanghelo" 12

Bridge: Dangerous condition of the—across the river Mánd in Sátára District... 11

Cattle-disease: Prevalence of—in Anjarla in the Ratnágiri District ... 12

Civil Service of India: Mental and moral deterioration of the members of the— 12

Fellows of the Bombay University: Approves of the recent nomination of— 12

Forest laws: Hardships caused by the strict operation of the—on the people of the Thána and Kolába districts 9

General Administration Report: Comments on the— 9

India Council: Prays for a reform in the constitution of the— ... 3

Land revenue assessment: Comments on Mr. Lee-Warner's note on the present system of—

The Bombay Chronicle 6

The Indu Prakásh 5

The Jáme Jamshed 5

Pársi Matrimonial Court, Poona: Suggestion to empower the Pársi community of Poona to appoint delegates to the— 13

Public Works Department: Disapproves of the limit of age in the scheme for encouraging a study of practical engineering by the members of the— 11

Reforms in administration: Approval of the—introduced by Lord Ripon. 7

Do. do. Disapproval of the tone of the Conservative papers denouncing the—introduced by Lord Ripon 8

Report on Native Papers: Distribution of—to the vernacular and English press 10

Salt: Complaints against the closing of salt-works and pasture grounds in Ratnágiri 9

Do. Exemption from duty of—when used for manufacturing soap and candles 10

Small Causes Court, Poona: Disapproves of the contemplated investiture with additional powers of the Judge of the— 11

Term of office: Approves of the extension of the—to Lord Ripon ... 8

Viceregal Legislative Council: Concession of the election of a member to the—by the Landholders' Association at Bengal— 6

PART II.—A'bkári—

A'bkári Act: Evil effects of the working of the— 13

Mhowra flowers: Disapproves of the nomination of a committee to enquire into the surreptitious distillation of liquor from— ... 13

Do. do. Urges the necessity of appointing a Native gentleman on the committee to inquire into do. do. 13

PART III.—Legislation—

Agricultural banks: Approves of the letter of the Government of India on the establishment of— 13

Do. do. Comments on the establishment of— 14

PART IV.—Local Self-government—

Local Self-government Bills: Delay in the publication of the Bombay—... 17

Do. do. Question of election by voters being limited to particular wards in the Ahmednagar Municipality. 18

Do. do. Remarks on the introduction of—into the city of Bombay:—

The Bombay Samáchár 16

The Indu Prakásh 14

The Jáme Jamshed 15

Do. do. Sir James Fergusson's views regarding—as expressed in his reply to the address presented at Násik 16

Do. do. do. do. at Dhulia ... 17

	Page.
PART V.—Education—
Arts Colleges: Defective system of teaching English in Government—...	18
Educational Commission: Observations regarding the—	18
PART VI.—Railways—
Navsári Station: Suggestions regarding the construction of the — of the B. B. and C. I. Railway	20
Railways in India: Want of employment of indigenous capital in the construction of—	19
PART VII.—Municipalities—
Bombay Municipality: Suggestion of certain measures for securing due publicity to the orders of the—...	20
PART VIII.—Native States—
Baroda: Mismanagement in Kadi and Pátan Districts	21
Cambay: Defence of the State officials against the loud complaints raised by the people of—	23
Do. Disturbances at—	23
Do. Necessity of the publication of the receipts and expenditure incurred on the occasion of the marriage of the Nawáb of— ...	23
Dhrángadra: Oppression on the girássiás of Satápar by the State of— ...	24
Gondal: Complaints of oppression exercised by the officials of the State of—
The Gujaráti	23
The Hitechhu	24
Káthiáwár: Colonel Barton's transfer hailed with joy by the people of—...	22
Do. Misrule and anarchy in—	21
Do. Oppression exercised by the Kárbháris of the Native States of—	22
Native States: Mal-administration of—	20
Nizám's tour to Europe: Disapproval of the—	21
PART IX.—Berár Affairs—
Administrative centralization: Remarks on the mischief of— ...	24

RECEIVED
20 FEB 83
VIA BRINDISI

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 27th January 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly ...	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do. ...	475
*3	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Do.	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
4	The Dín Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	925
5	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do. ...	1,000
6	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do. ...	409
7	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
8	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,038
9	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do. ...	575
10	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do. ...	600
11	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do. ...	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*12	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly.	100
13	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly ...	555
14	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do. ...	100
15	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	450
16	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do. ...	260
17	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do. ...	275
*18	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do. ...	200
19	„ Daivadnyă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
20	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
21	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	425
22	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do. ...	140
23	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do. ...	116
24	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do. ...	100
25	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do. ...	285
26	„ Hitechhu	Kaládgi	Do. ...	85
27	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly.	400
28	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
29	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	145
30	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do. ...	130
*31	„ Karnátak Mitră[3a]	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
32	„ Kesari	Poona	Do. ...	3,500
33	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do. ...	125
34	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	300
35	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly ...	220
36	„ Mahárashtră Hitechhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,000
37	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do. ...	250
38	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do. ...	150
39	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do. ...	100
40	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly ...	700
41	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
*42	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do. ...	200
43	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do. ...	103
44	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do. ...	250
45	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily ...	350
*46	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly ...	200
47	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti).	Do. ...	200
*48	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly ...	200
49	„ Saddharm Díp	Alíbág	Do. ...	600
50	„ Satyă Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	243
51	„ Satyă Sadan	Alíbág	Weekly ...	400
52	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	140
53	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly...	275
*54	„ Sharabh	Alíbág	Weekly ...	200
55	„ Shiváji[3]	Poona	Do. ...	200
56	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do. ...	90
57	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do. ...	150
58	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do. ...	240

[1] Maráthi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles.
[3a] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
59	The Swadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
60	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[E]	Akola	Weekly ...	250
61	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do. ...	175
62	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do. ...	200
63	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do. ...	300
*64	„ Vinod	Poona	Do. ...	200
65	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly ...	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*66	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly ...	200
67	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do. ...	400
68	„ Hitechhu	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	349
69	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	725
70	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do. ...	600
71	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do. ...	137
	GUJARA'TI.
72	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly ...	25
73	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily ...	750
74	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly ...	304
75	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do. ...	500
76	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly ...	500
77	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily ...	950
78	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly ...	700
79	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do. ...	60
80	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	600
81	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly ...	525
82	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do. ...	900
83	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Monthly ...	400
84	„ Fursad	Do.	Do. ...	100
85	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly ...	400
*86	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly ...	200
87	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do. ...	659
*88	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	200
89	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily ...	525
90	„ Kaira Vartmán	Kaira	Weekly ...	115
*91	„ Kaisar-i-Hind	Bombay	Do. ...	200
92	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ..	700
93	„ Nágar Udayá	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	300
94	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly ...	200
95	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly ...	381
96	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly ...	200
97	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do. ...	225
98	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do. ...	1,814
99	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	200
100	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	400
*101	„ Saurásháhtrá Darpan	Junágad	Monthly ...	200
102	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do. ...	533
*103	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do. ...	200
104	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do. ...	408
105	„ Tatwa Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár	Umreth	Fortnightly ..	62
*106	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
107	„ Vartmán Sár	Surat	Weekly ...	200
108	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly ...	738
109	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	300
110	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly ...	500
	KA'NARESE.
111	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	150
*112	„ Karnátak Vritt	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
	URDU.
*113	The Armagán	Bombay	Bi-weekly ...	200
114	„ Khayir Kháhe Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly .	300
115	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly ...	160
	PERSIAN.
116	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly ...	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases, an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out; and the short a (अ – u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well-known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Approves of the memorial from the Indian Association to the Secretary of State for India praying for certain concessions to facilitate the admission of the Natives into the Covenanted Civil Service.

With reference to the memorial from the Indian Association to the Secretary of State for India praying for certain concessions to facilitate the admission of the natives of India into the Indian Covenanted Civil Service, the Lok Mitrá (69) of the 21st January observes that the requisitions preferred in the memorial are so fair and reasonable that it is a wonder they should at all require to be urged with so much earnestness. What can be fairer than that the Indian Civil Service Examination should be held in India, and that the Indian candidates should not be required to undergo the trouble and expense of proceeding to England to pass an exceptionally severe examination? And yet the people of India have had to beg for the privilege over and over again! All that the natives of India want is that the competitive examination for the Indian Civil Service should be held in India, leaving it open to all to compete for it at the same time, and if the natives of the country are then beaten on their own soil they will have no cause for complaint. But if the authorities are not prepared to go the length of establishing the examination in India alone, let them at least hold an examination in India simultaneously with the one in London. This is the least they can do, and the memorial has urged this point with clearness and propriety. The recommendation to restore the maximum limit of the age of candidates to the old level is also extremely sensible, and in the opinion of experienced authorities the raising of the limit by two years is imperatively demanded by the requirements of the service. It remains to be seen what consideration Lord Kimberley accords to this well considered memorial. [The Bakul (15) and the Satyá Shodhak (52) of the 21st January make somewhat similar remarks.]

Approves of the memorial prepared by the Bombay Branch of the East Indian Association praying for an extension of Lord Ripon's term of office for another five years.

The Lok Mitrá (69) of the 21st January observes that the memorial which is being prepared by the Bombay Branch of the East Indian Association for submission to Her Majesty the Queen praying for an extension of Lord Ripon's term of office, furnishes the most satisfactory proof that can be afforded of the gratitude of the people of this country towards Lord Ripon, and of their hearty appreciation of the far-seeing policy so nobly inaugurated by him. The beneficent and extensive measures of reform initiated by Lord Ripon in the different branches of administration require very patient and careful fostering to ensure their successful operation. Every one of these measures is so far-reaching in its consequences, that if carefully carried out it will conduce not only to the welfare of the country but also to the stability of the British Empire in India, the thoughtless predictions to the contrary of some Conservative papers notwithstanding. For the accomplishment of such reforms a term of five years is evidently insufficient, and no other Viceroy can be expected to evince the same solicitude in the matter as the nobleman who has set them agoing. There are instances in which succeeding Viceroys, far from developing the policy of their predecessors, have undone their good work built up with laborious care. It is not often that the country is so fortunate as to have a statesman of Lord Ripon's views and sympathies at the helm of affairs, and the desire of the people to have Lord Ripon for a few years more to rule their destinies is therefore perfectly natural. [The Suryá Prakásh (71) of the 20th, the Gujaráti (85) of the 21st and the Hitechhu (68) of Ahmedabad of the 25th January express somewhat similar sentiments. The Bakul (15) of the 21st January and the Jagan Mitrá (29) of the 22nd also approve of this movement.]

Makes a defence of Lord Ripon's administration of India from the attacks of the Tory Press of England.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 21st January, in an article headed "Tory Politics—India's Perils," refutes at some length the arguments advanced by the St. James Gazette in an article headed "Retiring from Government in India" and by the Saturday Review in its article on "Indian Public Opinion," and makes a defence of the liberal policy pursued by Lord Ripon in the administration of India. It is indeed unfortunate that the two great parties in English politics have learnt to make

India their battle-cry whenever it suits their purpose. At the present moment the interests of the country are liable to be endangered by the action of a certain section of the Tories, that section which owns Lord Lytton for one of its leaders and the editor of the St. James Gazette as another. Vague rumours have been heard from time to time regarding the attitude of this class of British politicians, who are in sympathy with the official classes here—those servants of the State who sullenly resist the much needed reforms inaugurated by Lord Ripon. From the present policy the official classes seem to apprehend the extinction of bureaucracy, which has taken a deep root in the Indian soil. And since the Indian bureaucracy finds itself powerless to combat Lord Ripon's views in an open, straightforward manner, it tries to play the part of the assassin. Knowing well that non-official public opinion in India, European and Native, is most favourable to the Government of India, it has set about making a stir in England, and that through a section of the Tory Press. That the Tories, taken as a party, are in favour of a system of government by secret treaties and conventions it is unnecessary to say. It is also vain to expect any good from them to the people of India when they are in power. Whatever good they have done to this country must be generally ascribed to accident. The Tory party is now in a disorganized state and the Liberal Ministry is expected to be able at least to run out the usual Parliamentary lease. In this case it is therefore not surprising that the Tories should become impatient. But ere they return to power they must appear before their electors and really they have nothing to preach about. The great Irish questions have for the time been settled. Affairs in Egypt are rapidly recovering their normal state. Hence, what remains is but Lord Ripon's administration of India, especially when Anglo-Indian officials are in silent opposition. In the article headed "Retiring from Government in India," the writer gives vent to political spite to his heart's content. The personal vilification of Lord Ripon is beneath notice. His Excellency should feel complimented by abuses from such writers. To give publicity to such a senseless utterance as "Lord Ripon is about as unfit a person as would have been possible to choose for the place he holds" in the columns of a respectable journal is simply outrageous. But worse than political abuse is the absurd denominational cant of which Lord Ripon is made a victim. The simultaneous appearance of such articles on Indian matters in the two Tory journals is very significant. It shows that a political clique has organized an attack. But it is a harmless organisation. [The Suryodaya (58) of the 22nd and the Subodh Patrika (10) and the Satya Shodhak (52) of the 21st January express similar sentiments.]

Says that the cry against the armies of Native States is unfounded and ill-advised.

The Native Opinion (9) of the 21st January says:—Once more the cry has been raised against the existence of the armies of Native Princes and Chiefs. But this time it is not as comprehensive as usual. The proposal is to reduce by half the army of His Highness Mahárája Sindia and to take the opportunity of the accession of the Nizám to the gádi to apply shears to his army also, leaving the other Native States to be dealt with at some other time. This proposal mainly hinges on the assumption that a force of some fifty thousand soldiers is being efficiently trained after the European mode of military discipline in the Native States, and that such a force may some time prove dangerous to the stability of the British Empire in India. This presumption of supposed danger is quite spurious, and looking to the strength of the British army both in India and elsewhere, the presumption seems to be the outcome of a heated imagination rather than that of a cool and sagacious judgment. For the very writer, after advocating a gradual dissolution of the Native army, says in the very same breath that the British rule in India is strong enough to suppress all internal disorders, and that it is practically impossible that the Native Chiefs can unite their armies against the British forces. The truth of this remark is unimpeachable, and whatever opportunities Native Princes may have for unification, the desire in them to retain their present state of semi-independence is too powerful to persuade them to make an attempt in this direction. But the question is whether this impossibility of unification is the only argument in favour of the preservation of the armies of Native States. Every reader of Indian history knows full well that the Native Chiefs retain the present number of their armies under solemn treaty rights sanctioned with all the ceremony of an international and moral law, and which deserve to be respected by the parties concerned. Such plighted faith it is not easy for a Government which has on various public occasions declared its desire to recognize the binding force of all treaty engagements to break. But allowing for the sake of argument that political expediency requires that such treaty rights should be violated and that the armies of Native States should be abolished, the question which naturally suggests itself is, will the British Empire in India be rendered the more firm by such abolition? Some Anglo-Indians may look upon the day on which these armies come either to be reduced or abolished as a red-letter day in the history of India, but to our thinking the Indian Government cannot be a whit better for such abolition or reduction. The whole army of the Native States, as given by the Pioneer, at present stands at 380,000, the majority of which are retainers only fit for dancing attendance on the various Chiefs on public occasions or for doing police duties. According to the account of the same paper, out of this apparently large number of four lákhs not even fifty thousand men are regularly trained after the manner of the Native sepoys and sowárs, and yet no opportunity is ever allowed to pass without representing to the British public that the abolition of this untrained force is of paramount importance for the maintenance of the Indian Empire. Proposals either for the abolition or the gradual extinction of the armies of Native States have often been made; but, so far as we know, these proposals do not seem to have as yet influenced the action of the Government in the matter. But if any such untoward step comes to be taken, it will necessarily entail great difficulties both on the Indian Government and the Native States. To say nothing about the plighted faith of the British Government with regard to treaty rights, if the proposed abolition is carried out, about four lákhs of people will be thrown on the world without any means of living, and the probable result may rather be imagined than described. These people know no other profession; they have been taught from their childhood to look to this kind of service as the only means of making livelihood, and if they are deprived of these means no one should feel surprised if they betake themselves to plundering, highway robberies, and dacoities. The prospect of such difficulties in any part of the country is not pleasant to contemplate; such contingencies must throw the Native States into disorder, while they may throw the British Government on its own resources both to prevent the dacoit bands from frequenting its territories and to exterminate them in the Native States. This means the enlargement of the British army and the consequent increase in military expenditure. By abolishing these armies the Government would be undertaking the responsibility of keeping peace in the Native States, which responsibility must primarily rest with the States themselves. The British Government guarantees the safety of the Native States from foreign aggression only; and to take up any additional responsibilities, when the States themselves are in a position to take care of themselves, is not very desirable. On the contrary, we think these rabble armies need a remodelling and a systematic training after the European fashion to enable the Native Chiefs to preserve order in their own territories and to put this Government in a position to disband the large contingent force it is always required to keep at its elbow. The British Government in India is too strong to require any such additional force, while the loyalty of Native Princes has been successfully tested by events like the Mutiny and the late Afghan War. Under these circumstances the abolition of the armies of Native States is a beginning at the wrong end only. We hope that before any such proposals are seriously entertained by Government, it will first consider the question whether a breach of the treaty rights is consistent with its oft-repeated declarations respecting such rights, and whether the abolition of these armies will benefit it in the long run. [The Gujaráti (85) of the 21st and the Prabhákar (45) of the 24th January express similar sentiments.]

Suggests a reform in the remuneration of Native soldiers.

The Mahárâshtra Mitrá (37) of the 25th January says that the Native sepoy has by his achievements during the late Egyptian Campaign established beyond doubt his title to heroism. It is a matter of regret, however, that his general appearance does not favourably impress the enemy. The cause is worth the search and requires careful attention. This want of smartness in outward behaviour is traceable either to insufficient remuneration or to the absence of permanent interest in the service. This interest can be created only by rewarding meritorious service by the grant of jághirs or similar watan property, and it behoves the Military authorities to give the subject the earnest attention it deserves. The recognition of the services of Native officers by the bestowal of the titles of Ráo Báhádur and Khán Báhádur is not calculated to infuse that amount of interest in the service which can be created by more substantial gifts and which is essential to its efficiency. The system of making military service hereditary and compulsory in certain families holding watan property from Government will prove greatly beneficial to the State and will create a sympathy between the soldiers and Government. This system was followed with good results by Mahomedan and Hindu rulers. Besides being calculated to ensure the stability of the British rule, it has this recommending feature about it that in course of time it will render it unnecessary for the British Government to import European soldiers from England and thus lead to a considerable saving in expenditure.

Suggests a radical reform in Indian law and the procedure of law courts.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 21st January, in a communicated article headed "A Radical Reform in Indian Law—An appeal to Government and the People," disapproves of the complex and costly procedure of Indian law courts and ascribes the increase in the litigious propensities of the people of India partially to the operation of ill-conceived laws. The Stamp, the Court Fees, the Registration, and the Pleaders' Acts, and in fact all the revenue laws now in existence, have been hastening with awful rapidity the transfer and division of property. The existence of courts and of laws which they administer is a temptation to quarrelsome people which the growing profession of pleaders and mukhtyárs goes to strengthen. The present painful state of circumstances has to be put up with until either the suitors themselves become alive to the general effect of their conduct and determine not to step into law courts, or the Government with a generous heart dispense free justice to the overburdened population, simplify the procedure of the courts of law, and devise practical measures for checking litigation in all its phases. But there is no hope of an immediate change either in the disposition of suitors or the attitude of Government towards them. Some of the principles of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act ought to commend themselves for general adoption in India, such as conciliation, appointment of village munsifs and village registrars, final disposal of suits at the first hearing, restriction of appeals, and a strict and impartial revision of cases. Government should cease making money out of litigation. It is immoral and, from the people's point of view, impolitic. Appeals should not be allowed except in rare cases, and almost all the appellate courts should be abolished. Conciliation and arbitration should be extended as much as possible all over India. High courts and district courts should be abolished as being unnecessary and costly out of proportion. Native judges should decide Native, and European judges European cases. Native-European cases should be decided by a bench consisting of a European and a Native judge. Cases should be conducted only by Native pleaders, and such other checks as may be necessary ought to be introduced to reduce judicial work to the lowest possible limit. This is certainly not an Utopian idea. It is practicable if Government adopt it. Those who follow the current of events might remember how the proposal for agricultural banks was considered by responsible authorities as beyond the pale of practical politics, and how the opposition has disappeared on the adoption of the proposal by the Government of India. Government have only to remember that their strength lies in the affections of the people, that their educated or influential leaders have to be pleased by meeting the legitimate demands they make and by the adoption of measures they suggest with a view to the permanent happiness of the governors and the governed. The progressive well-being of Government and the people requires that the energy of the latter should be directed otherwise than in quarrels, and the goal of all endeavours should be to accomplish this result as soon as possible.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 21st January observes:—Lord Ripon has made a practical beginning with elective representation in the country. We can regard the Honourable Mr. Kristodás Pál's elevation to the Viceroy's Council at the recommendation of the Landholders' Association in no other light. We earnestly hope that Sir James Fergusson also will invite the Sárvajanik Sabha, the East Indian Association, or the Chamber of Commerce to recommend a Native member for His Excellency's Council.

A suggestion to Sir James Fergusson regarding the election of a Native member of the local Legislative Council.

The Poona Vaibhav (44) of the 21st January does not approve of the refusal of His Excellency the Governor to accept the address that was proposed to be presented to him by the Sárvajanik Sabha at Násik. Such associations are the only medium through which the grievances of the people can be properly ventilated, the representations of officials being generally one-sided. This conduct of the Governor furnishes a fair index of the interest taken by him in the welfare of the people! May it be that His Excellency has become disgusted with the very appellation of "Sárvajanik Sabha" on account of the constant trouble that the body in Poona bearing a similar name gives to Government officials by demanding redress to the grievances of the people?

Does not approve of His Excellency's refusal to accept the memorial from the Násik Sárvajanik Sabha.

The Nyáyá Sindhu (41) of the 22nd January refers to the recent visit to Ahmednagar of the Nizám of Hyderabad, and remarks that the officers of the British Government treated the event with cold indifference. The Nizám is one of the oldest allies of Her Majesty, and considering the attention generally paid by His Highness's Government to the comforts of the British officers that happen to visit his dominions and the large sums spent for their reception, the conduct of the Ahmednagar authorities cannot but be considered as wanting in courtesy. It would have been better if the authorities had sanctioned a small sum for preparations for the reception of His Highness.

Comments on the indifference shown to the Nizám of Hyderabad on his recent visit to Ahmednagar.

The Shubh Suchak (56) of the 19th January, while referring to the remarks in the General Administration Report for 1881-82 regarding the average yield of crops in the Presidency, says that the remarks have been inserted probably with the view of giving the lie to the cry that has recently been raised regarding the heavy rates of assessment prevailing in the Deccan. The glowing account given by Government is certainly very surprising. But how can the circumstance that the soil in certain parts of the district of Sholápur is of a very good quality justify the inference that the soil throughout the Presidency is of the same quality? The results given by Government do not show that any account has been taken of the expenses of agriculture. The agriculturist is required to borrow money from sáwkárs for the preliminary expenses of preparing the land for cultivation and has to repay it with interest. He has also to spend considerable sums on marriages and other ceremonies. Government have set down the requirements of a peasant's family at 2,000 lbs. of grain, but this amount will hardly suffice for an ordinary family. He has moreover to feed a large number of cattle which are necessary for agricultural operations, and the restrictions placed on the rights of pasture by the Forest Act have had the effect of making the feed of cattle very expensive.

Makes remarks on the General Administration Report.

The Arunodayá (13) of the 21st January is informed that fever is doing immense havoc in the Málvan Táluka of the Ratnágiri Collectorate, and that excepting the little activity shown by Government in stamping out the disease when it first made its appearance there have been no measures adopted for the purpose of affording relief to the distressed. It is said that the disease originated in the condensation of the atmosphere by the thick jungles in the táluka and its saturation by the sudden and profuse fall of dew. If this is the real cause of the disease, as it probably is, it is very strange that Government should not have adopted measures to avert the evil. Perhaps Government were not apprised of the real cause till now, and it is to be hoped that they will rouse themselves for immediate action. The easiest remedy that would appear to meet the case is to set fire to all the jungles surrounding the affected parts and thus to purify the air by removing the moisture. Such a proposal will not ordinarily be countenanced by Government, inasmuch as it will involve a loss of forest produce, but having regard to the amount of mischief to human life caused by the prevalence of the disease Government should in all fairness subordinate fiscal considerations to those of protecting the lives of their subjects. Besides, it is believed that such fire will only destroy hay and small shrubs and trees and will leave intact the more valuable and grown up trees. It is therefore just that Government should adopt this or other similar remedy for exterminating the disease that has gained such a firm footing in that part of the country.

Complains that fever is raging in the Málvan Táluka of the Ratnágiri District.

Complains that His Excellency the Governor during his recent tour in Khándesh did not redress the grievances of the people.

The Arunodayă (13) of the 21st January understands that the people of Khándesh who have been reduced to a state of destitution by the recent inundation of the river Girna expected that their sufferings would be alleviated by His Excellency the Governor on the occasion of his recent visit, but that they have been sorely disappointed. It was quite natural that the people should have formed such expectations, and it would have been just if the Governor had satisfied them. But looking to the general tendency of officials to turn a deaf ear to such complaints, there was every likelihood that the grievances of the people of Khándesh would fall flat on His Excellency's ears. It may be that His Excellency had no means of ascertaining the feelings of the people and that the local officers were responsible for having thrown the complaints of the people in the background.

Tries to answer the several questions issued by the Mhowra Bill Commission and suggests remedies for discouraging the vice of drinking.

The Arunodayă (13) of the 21st January tries to answer in detail the various questions proposed by the Commission appointed to enquire into the extent of illicit distillation of liquor from mhowra flowers, and suggests that the Government will do well to disabuse their minds of the false impressions that have been brought about by the reports of their Revenue and A'bkári Officers, before devising any measures to deter the people from their present illegal ways of satisfying their vicious habit of drinking. The Government should recognise it as their duty to wean away the people from this vice, and with this view should set about the task of making raw toddy sell as cheap as possible and placing increased facilities in the way of procuring it. When the raw juice is easily available the consumption of spirituous liquors will deteriorate and Government will have discharged its duty to the masses. The removal of restrictions on the use of liquors is one way of checking the vice, and it seems advisable to give the experiment a fair trial.

Suggests the construction of a Town Hall for Sátára.

The Mahárashtră Mitră (37) of the 25th January, referring to the proposals recently made by the Collector of Sátára for the repair and utilization of the old palace at that place, suggests the advisability of furnishing a Town Hall for the use of the inhabitants, which should also serve the purpose of a museum by being made the receptacle of portraits of former princes, old weapons, old records, &c., and requests the attention of the authorities to the suggestion.

Suggests the removal of the toll-bar at Sátára.

The Shubh Suchak (56) of the 29th January requests the attention of the authorities to the inconvenience caused by the location of the toll-bar near the tunnel at Sátára, and suggests that before the new toll contract is sanctioned, arrangements should be made to remove the toll-bar further from the town.

Complains of the want of a dharmshála at Dhámner near Sátára.

A correspondent of the Bodh Sudhákar (17) of the 24th January complains of the inconvenience caused to travellers by the want of a dharmshála, either permanent or temporary, at Dhámner near Sátára. This village is situated on a bank of the Krishna, and travellers from Sátára to Oundh generally halt here to bathe and cook their food, but there is at present no shelter to protect them from the scorching sun or the pouring rain.

Complains of the disregard for convenience of passengers shown by the servants on the ferry steamers owned by Messrs. Shepherd & Co.

The Din Bandhu (4) of the 21st January says that the officers from the captain down to the meanest crew employed on the steamers owned by Messrs. Shepherd & Co. and plying between Bombay and Goa have gained a notoriety for indifference to the convenience and comforts of the passengers, and that notwithstanding the fact that several boats and other vessels have been smashed by collision with the ferry steamers and that several lives have been lost, Government have treated the matter with indifference. So late as the 5th of January last the steamer Savitri struck against a country craft near Kálavashi at day-break. A captain in the service of the company once carried away forcibly the Sar-Kárkun of Jaitápur because he would not allow the captain to carry on his unlawful practices. It is meet, therefore, that the Customs and Police Commissioners should adopt measures for securing an immediate investigation in all cases where any injury is done to human life or property.

Suggests the adoption of a system of supervision of subordinate courts by District and High Courts.

The Bodh Sudhákar (17) of the 24th January refers to the enquiry that has been instituted by the District Judge of Khándesh into the charges of corruption and miscarriage of justice brought against the Subordinate Judge of Jalgaon, and says that regular tours of supervision by District and High Court Judges will have a very salutary effect on the working of the mofussil subordinate Courts. The higher judicial functionaries are generally averse to take the trouble of inspection, and this encourages lower Courts to do their work in an irresponsible and irregular manner. If measures are taken to secure a proper revision of the work of the subordinate Courts such cases as the one adverted to will occur very rarely.

Complains of the want of knowledge of the Maráthi language in the Hospital Assistant at Khed.

A correspondent of the Poona Vaibhav (44) of the 20th January, writing from Khed in the Poona District, complains of the inconvenience caused to the people of that place by the Hospital Assistant in charge of the dispensary being ignorant of the Maráthi language, and requests the authorities concerned to appoint a Maráthi-knowing officer.

Disapproves of the appointments of Lord Kimberley and Mr. Cross as Secretary of State for India and Under Secretary respectively.

The Yajdán Parast (110) of the 21st January observes that the recent ministerial changes in England have not proved beneficial to India. Lord Kimberley has already shown himself incapable of wielding Indian affairs, and the appointment of Mr. Cross as Under Secretary has served to aggravate the feeling of dissatisfaction at the first appointment. When Lord Kimberley's appointment was announced it was expected that the defects of that arrangement would be made up by the nomination of a competent Under Secretary. But the people have been sorely disappointed. Lord Kimberley has been given an assistant as ignorant of Indian affairs as himself and a second rate politician like his principal.

Approves of the work done by Mr. Woodward in connection with his special duty.

The Kesari (32) of the 23rd January thoroughly approves of the work that is being performed by Mr. Woodward in connection with his special deputation to ascertain the cause of the Deccan ryots' misery. Mr. Woodward is a very clever and kind gentleman. He has a very good knowledge of the Maráthi language, and this serves him in good stead in eliciting every information from the cultivators regarding the causes of their depressed condition. His relations with the money-lender are equally agreeable.

Is not altogether pleased with the new Justices of the Peace.

The Rást Goftár (98) of the 21st January observes that it is very gratifying that in the new nominations to the office of Justice of the Peace wealth as well as merit appear to have met with due consideration. However it is to be regretted that patronage and influence should have played not an unimportant part in this affair, as can be gathered from the appearance among the nominees of many names that ought not to be there and the absence of others whose title to the honour required recognition. Mr. Curven, the editor of the Times of India, has shown himself deserving of the honour by his high abilities and public spirit, and his claims should have been recognized before those of his inferiors who have been nominated this year. The satisfactory feature of this year's nomination nevertheless is that the merits of Native gentlemen connected with the public press have not been altogether ignored. [The Jáme Jamshed (89) of the 22nd and the Yajdán Parast (110) of the 21st January express somewhat similar sentiments.]

Disapproves the principle on which some recent appointments of new Justices of the Peace for the town of Bombay have been made.

After noticing the recent appointments of new Justices of the Peace for the town and island of Bombay, the Lok Mitrá (69) of the 21st January observes that the nominations during the past few years have been so objectionable and betray such a lamentable lack of discrimination that the honour has lost much of its value and has ceased to be coveted by sensible men. Time was when the honour was looked upon in the light of a compliment to the intelligence and public spirit of the recipient; but latterly the qualifications for the honour have dwindled down into mean adulation and brazen impudence. [The Gujaráti (85) of the 21st January is surprised at the large number of Pársis among the new nominees and makes similar remarks.]

Approves of the new nominations to the honorary office of Justice of the Peace.

The Bombay Chronicle (66) of the 21st January observes that the list of the new Justices of the Peace appears to have been made most judiciously. It comprises the representatives of all classes and interests in the city of Bombay.

Makes remarks on the remission of the enhanced sentence passed on the Vaishnav Mahárája.

The Native Opinion (9) of the 21st January, while referring to the recent remission of the enhanced sentence passed on the Vaishnav Mahárája in October 1881, observes that Government would have secured the good graces of the Vaishnav community by cancelling the punishment passed by the lower authorities. Such an act would have gone a greater way in inculcating the guilt of the Mahárája on the minds of his devotees than the punishment which he is made to suffer. A line of demarcation is generally recognized by all nations between the rights and liabilities of the general public and those of the higher or privileged classes, and though the guilt of the Mahárája may not admit of doubt, still by treating his case exceptionally Government would have achieved a name for commiseration and leniency.

Condemns the official career of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner and the attempt to commemorate his name in India.

In noticing the departure of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner, the Yajdán Parast (110) of the 21st January observes that his administrative acts never met with the approval of the people of this Presidency. Some of the legislative measures which first emanated from him have been the occasion of considerable distress to the poor. The termination of his connection with the administration and his departure from these shores have therefore been hailed with joy by the people. Some of his personal friends have come forward to start a fund for commemorating his name in this country, but their conduct is an insult to public opinion, as it is equivalent to expressing an approval of the distasteful acts of a wilful officer who spared no pains to do everything that was prejudicial to the interests of the people, and thus encouraging officials of his stamp to follow the course they have hitherto taken. [The Indu Prakásh (8) and the Jáme Jamshed (89) of the 22nd January and the Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 24th idem express somewhat similar sentiments. The Bombay Chronicle (66) and the Lok Mitrá (69) of the 21st January and the Dátardun (81) of the 25th take occasion of the departure of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner to condemn his official career.]

The Bombay Land Revenue System.

Comments in connection with the Bombay land revenue system.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 21st January, in writing on Dr. Hunter's speech in the Supreme Legislative Council on the subject of the Bombay revenue system, remarks:—The principal point for consideration is the relation which exists between the Bombay revenue system and the poverty of the bulk of our agriculturists. It appears to have been assumed by the defenders of the revenue system that Dr. Hunter ascribes the poverty of the ryots solely to the rigidity of the system of assessment. Nothing however can be farther from the truth. If Dr. Hunter has made one thing more clear than another it is this that the present indebtedness of the Deccan peasantry is not the result of one or two solitary causes, but that it is the natural outcome of the changes in the economic position of the country consequent upon British conquest. The rigidity of the present system is but one of these causes, and as such has its own share in bringing about the present miserable condition of the ryots just as the extinction of home industries by foreign competition has its own. Neither Dr. Hunter nor the Deccan Ryots Commission have maintained that the revenue system is the exclusive cause of the present crisis. Complete redress cannot be had without a thorough change in the economic position of the country, which is a work of time and labour and must be worked out intelligently by the people themselves. Till then the grievances must be dealt with one by one. In acting upon the recommendations of the Deccan Ryots Commission, Government attempted, and successfully to a certain extent, to relieve the ryots of the pressure of the sáwkárs by passing the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act in 1879. Two years' trial has shown that the Act, though good in its own way, has not materially assisted the peasant in clearing off his debts, and it is necessary that we should look to other remedies. Those charged with the administration of the Act suggest that "much can be done for the insolvent ryot of the Deccan by modifications in the present rigorous system of collecting the assessment, by more liberal and elastic rules of grant and recovery of takávi advances, and perhaps by the gradual introduction of agricultural banks." But the administrative officers appear to be strongly opposed to such a change. They maintain that the complaints against assessment are groundless and imaginary. These officials judge by quite a deceptive standard. The question of the rigidity of the revenue system is not to be decided absolutely but in connection with the surrounding circumstances. Although the present assessment be not heavy in a country where the cultivator has a good demand for his produce and enough capital to carry on or extend his trade, it cannot be said to be so in a country the economic condition of which is quite the reverse of the above. Heavy and light are but comparative terms, and in calling an assessment heavy or light we must compare it with the means of the people on whom it is imposed. Thus the taxation per head in this country, though but a fraction of what it is in England, cannot be said to be a light one. The error of those who maintain that our assessment is not heavy can be partly traced to this fact.

Comments on Mr. Lee-Warner's views regarding the revenue system prevailing in this Presidency.

The Native Opinion (9) of the 21st January tries to refute in detail the views of Mr. Lee-Warner regarding the system of land revenue assessment prevailing in the Deccan as expressed in his recent note on the subject. The first of the reasons adduced by Mr. Lee-Warner for holding that the assessment of land revenue in the Bombay Presidency is light, is that the rates levied in the Bhor State are higher than those levied in the British territory. This is no doubt a fact, but the circumstances in the two cases are not similar. In the British territories the rates of assessment are levied according to the scale prescribed at the time of the survey and without regard to the circumstance of the land being cultivated or allowed to lie fallow in particular years, while in the Bhor State the practice is different. The ryot is not expected to till the whole of the land in his possession every year, nor is it advisable for him to do so according to the recognized principles of agricultural science, and the Native States therefore levy the assessment on the portion of land that is cultivated during the year.

The assessment thus levied when calculated with reference to the whole land in the cultivator's possession does not appear to bear heavily on the cultivator, nay it is even lighter than that in the British territories. The cultivators in Native States have moreover the advantage of free pasturage of cattle which is not enjoyed by their brothers in the British territory. Mr. Lee-Warner's second argument is that the fact that the ryots can spare enough for making gold ornaments speaks of the ease with which they bear the Government demand. Mr. Lee-Warner may have been led to form this impression by the preparation of ornaments by the people during a marriage season, but the impression is not at all correct. In England and other countries an increase in marriages is observable in times of plenty, but the same is not the case in India. The people of this country require particular auspicious occasions in particular months for the celebration of marriages, and their unreformed ideas lead them to involve themselves in deeper miseries by such contracts. Marriage connections in India are not as easily voidable as those in England, and therefore when people once get entangled in them they find it difficult to get out. The third ground of Mr. Lee-Warner relates to the difficulty of getting hired labour for the execution of irrigational works. The reasoning in this case is equally faulty. The people of India have strong prejudices against leaving their homes for serving in a distant part of the country. They may be taxed with ignorance and indiscretion in the matter, but it is wrong to infer from this that they are well-to-do and therefore do not care for employment. People have got very vivid but sad recollections of the forced impressment of labour in famine times and the insufficiency of the wages under the cruel administration of Sir Richard Temple, and they therefore hesitate to leave their homes for employment. The fourth point relates to the credit of the ryot with his sáwkár. An enquiry into the number of holdings possessed by money-lenders under deeds of purchase from the cultivators will suffice to elicit the fact that the ryot's credit has been reduced to a very low ebb. Under the new law the sáwkár finds it difficult to recover the loans advanced to agriculturists, and he therefore declines to lend any money without having a deed of sale of the holdings in the ryot's possession. It is not certain when such holdings will revert to the ryot, but the latter sees no prospect of regaining them according to law. Because the agriculturists have resorted to this shift for satisfying Government demands it is incorrect to conclude that they are happy. Though the sáwkár takes from the ryot a deed of purchase as a security for the money he lends, still his connection with the latter being constant he does not allow the ryot to starve for want of food. But the Government officers are not capable of so much goodness, and having to obey the commands of their superiors they devise all means fair or. foul to realize Government dues and thus inflict great hardship on the people [The Bakul (15) of the 21st January and the Mahárásht'á Mitrá (37) of the 25th make somewhat similar remarks.]

Comments on Mr. Lee-Warner's views on the land revenue system prevailing in the Bombay Presidency.

Writing on the same subject, the Arunodayá (13) of the 21st January says that whatever truth there may be in the remarks of Mr. Lee-Warner so far as the district of Sátára is concerned, they do not hold good in the case of the other districts in the Presidency. Even ignoring facts, Mr. Lee-Warner's view seems incorrect on principle. The temporary nature of the assessment is evidently not calculated to inspire a belief that the land in one's occupation will continue for ever, and the inconsistent conduct of Government on various occasions tends to strengthen this uncertainty. Did not the Government violate the promise made by one of their responsible officers, not orally but by means of a written notification, whereby the people of the district of Kánara were given to understand that the assessment levied on their lands was permanent and not liable to enhancement? And did they not thus involve the poor people in the vexation and expense of a law suit? Do the Government, while enhancing the assessment on land diverted from agricultural to garden purposes, pay any regard to whether or not the amount spent by the owner on the improvements effected has been repaid with interest? Who ascertains the amount of expenses incurred in reclaiming waste lands? Notwithstanding the recognition by authorities at different times of the owner's proprietary right to trees of all kinds growing in his soil, have not the Government acted in opposition to it? And though some persons have successfully fought for their rights in the civil courts, do not the Government consider those decisions as applicable to the particular cases dealt with and deny similar concessions to the owners of neighbouring lands? If Mr. Lee-Warner were to consider the above and similar other instances in which the Government have practised deception on their subjects, he would be convinced that the people have had ample cause to doubt the earnestness of the word plighted to them, and it is but natural that such a state of things should lead to a feeling of uncertainty of situation in the mind of the cultivator. This feeling of uncertainty, coupled with an increase in assessment, superinduces a feeling of indifference to the condition of the soil and leads to a deterioration in its fertility. Mr. Lee-Warner's argument that the high price required to be paid by Government for land purchased from cultivators bespeaks the prosperous condition of the ryots and the valuable nature of the property possessed by them, is as fallacious as it is specious. The general value of landed property cannot be determined with reference to particular localities. Plots of land yielding similar incomes fetch different prices in different places. Where the agricultural population is in excess of the normal number that can be fed from the soil, there is a keen competition among the people and the price of land is high, but the case is quite the opposite in localities differently circumstanced. Mr. Lee-Warner objects to the introduction of the zamindári system into the Deccan. This system, though not thoroughly unobjectionable, is much superior to the system now in vogue. By the introduction of the zamindári system the poorer classes of the peasants will indeed be deprived of their lands, but the richer classes that do not cultivate lands themselves will have to seek their aid in carrying on agricultural operations, and the poorer classes will take the position occupied under the present system by that class of cultivators who farm lands on contracts. The introduction of this system will also serve to stimulate agricultural improvements and will materially contribute to ameliorate the condition of the peasantry that is at present going to the farthest brink of ruin. Mr. Lee-Warner's apprehensions about this system endangering the stability of the British rule are too groundless to need a refutation. [The Jagan Mitrá (29) of the 22nd January makes similar remarks.]

Observes that the zamindári system of Bengal should never be introduced into the Bombay Presidency.

The Bombay Chronicle (66) of the 21st January observes that the peace of this Presidency is likely to be endangered if the authorities reduce the Bombay ryot to the condition of the Bengal peasant by substituting the zamindári for the ryotwári system of land revenue. The latter system is decidedly the better of the two both as regards the rights of the State and the welfare of the cultivator. The Bombay Gazette was right in saying the other day that the Marátha peasantry would not long allow itself to be rack-rented under a permanent settlement introduced on the lines of the Bengal system, and the State would have to face a portentous political danger. All impartial judges advocate the adoption of means for the amelioration of the condition of the cultivators, but do not look upon the substitution of the permanent zamindári for the Bombay ryotwári system as calculated to accomplish the desired end. The Chronicle is glad that able English journalists on this side of India are convinced of the correctness of this view of the subject.

Legislation—Agricultural Banks.

States that a revision of the system of assessment is the only remedy for improving the condition of the ryot.

The Poona Vaibhav (44) of the 21st January says that notwithstanding the various measures adopted by Government for the improvement of the wretched condition of the Deccan agriculturist, the evil has yet remained unremedied. This clearly shows that the Government have as yet been unable to strike at the root of the evil, and that the external appliances used by them are calculated to produce no substantial good. According to the view of Government the roguery of the money-lender is at the bottom of the agriculturist's depression, but there are also other causes which deserve to be considered. Persons having constant dealings with the peasantry are of opinion that the pecuniary requirements of this class of people are not regulated by considerations of time. They have recourse to the sáwkár on all occasions, and therefore the establishment of agricultural banks with the restrictions attendant on their use will not contribute much to their good. The regulations of these banks require that a month's previous notice shall be given by every agriculturist requiring a loan from a bank, and this restriction will be looked upon as inconvenient by men who are in the habit of borrowing money from the sáwkár even on a shorter notice. The inconvenience will be most felt in the case of loans required for marriage expenses. The loans are moreover to be allowed on the security of the holdings of land otherwise unincumbered, but if they were once incumbered the ryot's position would be very odd inasmuch as he would not meet with relief either from the agricultural banks or from the sáwkár. What then with the Relief Act and the agricultural banks, the condition of the ryot will remain unaltered. The only remedy for the evil is that suggested by Dr. Hunter in his recent speech in the Viceregal Council. The soil is the chief means of subsistence to a cultivator, and the heavy assessment levied thereon must either be reduced or made permanent. The system of a revision of survey after every 30 years should be abolished and provision made for the remission of Government dues in times of bad crops. These reforms, accompanied by measures for the restoration of friendly feelings between the sáwkár and the ryot, will make the people happy and will serve as a stimulus to improvements in agricultural operations.

Local Self-government.

Complains of the delay in the publication of the Local Self-government Bills.

The Dnyán Prakásh (7) of the 22nd January is at a loss to understand the cause of delay in the publication of the Local Self-government Bills. The new scheme will come into operation from the 1st of April and there are now only two months left. Properly speaking the bills ought to have been passed by this time to allow of the interval being properly utilized for the election of new members. There is therefore reason to apprehend that there has arisen a fresh conflict of views between this Government and the Government of India, and this apprehension is corroborated by the simultaneous cry that has been raised in England by the Conservative party to which Sir James belongs against the policy pursued by Lord Ripon. It is really a misfortune of this Presidency to be governed at this important juncture by a narrow-minded ruler averse to entrusting new responsibilities to the people. That backward provinces like the Central should have gone ahead of this enlightened Presidency in the matter of promulgating its plans for working the novel scheme cries shame upon the Government of Bombay. It is high time either that the bills should be published or the causes of the delay in their publication should be placed before the public.

Is glad that the working of the local self-government scheme in the Bombay Presidency has been entrusted to the Honourable Mr. Peile.

The Lok Mitrá (69) of the 21st January is glad that the Honouarble Mr. Peile has been entrusted with the task of carrying out the local self-government scheme in this Presidency. This difficult and responsible work, observes the Mitrá, could scarcely have been delegated to an abler or more sympathetic official, and it may now confidently be expected that the scheme will be enforced in accordance with the views and wishes of Lord Ripon. Ever since the nomination of this distinguished and energetic officer in the place of Mr. Ashburner hopes have been entertained that the timid and half-hearted policy hitherto pursued by Government will be gradually discarded, and it is gratifying that Sir James Fergusson has selected such a faithful and trustworthy guide to conduct him to the desired goal.

Describes the nature of the application of the Viceregal scheme of local self-government to the Bombay Municipality.

With reference to the discussion in the Municipal Corporation on the question of the extension of the scheme of local self-government to the city of Bombay, the Lok Mitrá (69) of the 21st January observes that the citizens of Bombay have had a very good schooling in the art of self-government since 1865. That they have acquitted themselves creditably has been repeatedly acknowledged by the Imperial Government and the Secretary of State, and Lord Ripon has not been slow in his resolution of 18th May last to hold up the Corporation as a model to other city municipalities. The question then is, in what manner should the elective franchise be extended? In this respect, we fear, Mr. Gokuldás's suggestion to sweep away the Government nomination of sixteen members was rather premature. Neither was his remedy quite specific. As it was, this suggestion was made the subject of much unfounded denunciation. It gave an opportunity to some gentlemen who must needs view matters through the tinted glasses of officialism to cry out wolf, when there was no necessity to raise such an alarm. They jumped to the conclusion that Mr. Gokuldás's avowed object was to sweep away European members from future Corporations! By what process of logic they arrived at this conclusion is a mystery. The fact is that all sensible men deplore that owing to the mass of electors being uneducated a number of citizens enter the Corporation who are scarcely deserving of the honour, while a large number of really qualified and competent men from whom a better selection could be made are thrown into the background. It is not possible in a city like Bombay, with a motley population, that any such undesirable results as those apprehended by some people can ever happen. It is true that the people are not yet up to the mark. If they were, some of them would not have been so stupid as to reject Mr. Mandlik when he appeared for the Kámáthipura ward, and altogether leave out in the cold Mr. Martin Wood when he offered himself two years ago as a candidate. This state of things needs to be reformed, and efficient redress cannot be vouchsafed without a thorough overhauling of the present system of election. Introduce a clause raising the standard of a voter's qualifications to a higher level; make it a rule that persons who are unable to follow the proceedings of the Corporation and to take part in them should be disqualified from taking seats; let University graduates be qualified to vote like Fellows of the University;—and the elective system will have undergone a wholesome modification. If the system of self-government is to be introduced into Bombay in reality and not in name, it is necessary that the number of members elected by the Justices and rate-payers should be increased. This increase will not bring about the exclusion of the non-official European element. That the official element must be eliminated is only a question of time, and the sooner it is done the better. If Lord Ripon insists on municipalities in the semi-civilized mofussil districts having non-official chairmen and a preponderance of the non-official element over the official, there is the greater reason why the city of Bombay, which is already acknowledged to be the best tutored in India in the art of local self-government, should have a constitution cleared of official members. The enlightenment and independence of the citizens are sufficient to warrant the assurance that the civic affairs will be admirably managed without the assistance of police commissioners, hospital doctors, and official builders of roads and bridges. There is in Bombay a large number of independent European physicians, engineers, lawyers and merchants, holding liberal views and perfectly well qualified to take seats which are now occupied by State officials. If the spirit of self-reliance is to be encouraged, then it is essential that the official element should be entirely excluded. It hampers the action of the Corporation. Nay, in certain important matters like the drainage scheme it has been positively mischievous. But for the official element that was powerful in the Corporation of 1878 the present extravagant and mischievous system of drainage would never have been carried out. It is to be hoped that those members of the Corporation who are so diffident about the plausibility of the scheme under discussion will honestly attempt to reconsider the matter as citizens and not as the servants of Government whom they fancy they must loyally obey in all matters, official and non-official. By all means let them form their independent opinion on the subject without allowing it to be biassed by the dictates of the autocrats at the Bombay Castle who have already suffered so much for want of their capacity to comprehend the generous spirit of Lord Ripon's May resolution. [The Rást Goftár (98) and the Kaisar-i-Hind (91) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Comments on the discussion in the Corporation regarding the extension of the scheme of local self-government to the city of Bombay.

The Native Opinion (9) of the 21st January says:—The transfer of the sixteen seats from Government to the University cannot exclude, as apprehended by Messrs. Geary, Dosábhái and Khote, the European element from the Corporation, because a large number of the Fellows are Europeans and they would naturally be persuaded to vote in favour of their comrades. A similar process would be followed by the European Justices of the Peace, and consequently the result would not be as disastrous as it is apprehended it would be. But even admitting that such wholesale transfer is not desirable under the circumstances, an equal division of these seats among the University Fellows and the mercantile community cannot be in the least objectionable. Under such an arrangement, while an equitable number of seats for Europeans may be secured, the object of the new scheme, i.e., a greater extension of the elective franchise among the rate-payers, may also be gained. By extending the privilege to the University not only birth and wealth but even education will be represented in our civic body. Under Lord Ripon's scheme mofussil municipalities and local fund boards are to have non-official chairmen, and it would be surpassingly strange were the Government still to continue to possess the privilege of appointing a Chairman of the local Town Council. The Chairman of the Corporation is elected from amongst the members, and it is but just and reasonable that this appointment also should rest with them. With regard to the appointment of the Municipal Commissioner, Mr. Gokuldás's proposal deserves great and careful consideration. The question of appointing the Municipal Commissioner from amongst those who are not the members of the heaven-born service was once or twice raised, but at the time the mere mooting of it was considered objectionable. It is often urged in favour of the present arrangement that a very great responsibility is attached to the post, and that therefore Civil Servants who have acquired considerable experience as members of the executive service are the most eligible persons for it, but this line of argument is not very convincing. We all know that since we were accorded a new municipal constitution some of the Native members of the Corporation have served as Chairmen of that august body with the greatest credit to themselves and to the Corporation. And if what we urge above is a fact, can it be argued that those very persons or some of their equals in the Corporation have not the ability necessary to do the work of our chief municipal executive? It may however be said by some, with a great deal of truth indeed, that where high emoluments are attached to any post Natives are invariably considered incompetent to hold it.

Education.

Criticises a portion of Sir James Fergusson's speech at the last Convocation of the Bombay University.

The Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 25th January refers to the remark made by Sir James Fergusson in his speech at the last Convocation of the Bombay University that out of the 548 candidates that came up for the Matriculation Examination prepared by private tuition only 67 have passed, and that this appears to be a poor result when compared with the total number of the candidates as also with the number of successful candidates presented by public schools, and observes that His Excellency has drawn from the above and other facts the conclusions that the standard for the Matriculation Examination is not exceptionally high, but that the candidates are generally not well prepared for the examination, and that proper discrimination is not exercised in their selection. It must however be remarked that the complaint raised on all sides and pressed on the notice of the Education Commission that the present standards are too high, is well founded. It has been shown on more occasions than one that the different standards are not fixed with due regard to the age of the boys that study them. The consequence is that the young students find it very hard to study the standards, and many of them experience much difficulty in making a satisfactory progress. Some persons form their opinion on the subject by simply looking at the result of the Matriculation Examination. But to have a correct idea of the extent to which the brains of young boys are taxed by the present school studies, due notice must be taken of the number of boys who give up their school course before coming up to the Matriculation standard. A very large number of students find themselves unable to prosecute their studies, and leave the school before gaining any appreciable efficiency in a particular branch. It is therefore necessary that Sir James Fergusson as Governor and Chancellor of the University should direct his attention to the heavy studies of the different standards and initiate a reform in the present system.

Criticises Sir James Fergusson's speech at the last Convocation of the Bombay University.

In noticing the Chancellor's speech at the last Convocation of the Bombay University, the Jáme Jamshed (89) of the 25th January observes that Sir James Fergusson regrets the unsatisfactory nature of the result of the Matriculation Examination because very few students compared with the large number of the candidates that presented themselves successfully passed the test. It must however be remembered that even this number, small as it is considered to be by the Chancellor, was passed by a lowering of the usual standard for reasons which are not known to the public. Out of the 572 successful candidates not even 72 can be found competent to talk decent English, and yet His Excellency regretted that a larger number was not passed. This incompetency of the candidates may be attributed to their own fault as well as to the defective standard of examination. The University examinations, particularly that for Matriculation, simply encourage cramming. Proper attention to the study of English is not paid because the students have to mind many other subjects. A colloquial knowledge of that language should be insisted upon, and if a certain number of marks are allotted to proficiency in the branch a sure step will have been taken to remedy the evil adverted to, and the complaint made by the Professors of Colleges that the matriculated students do not generally possess a sufficient knowledge of English to qualify them for higher branches of studies will be nowhere. It is surprising that while the Professors put forward this complaint they make no suggestions for its removal. No good results can be achieved by opening the doors of higher education to students who possess such a poor knowledge of English. The suggestion to start a separate examination qualifying people for admission into the public service is not appropriate, as there is no reason to suppose that Government have no faith in the Matriculation test and as there are numerous matriculated students in want of employment. Interest and patronage play an important part in the disposal of vacancies in Government offices, and if an inflexible rule is laid down that matriculated students and University graduates alone shall be employed, it will prove a great stimulus to higher education. Sir James's allusion to religious teaching in colleges was ill-advised and calculated to lead the Natives to attribute to His Excellency a secret desire to favour the teaching of the principles of Christianity in Government colleges. The institutions maintained by missionaries do not find favour with the Natives because a knowledge of Christianity forms an important factor of the programme of studies prescribed for the students, and if Government schools and colleges were made to teach religion they would meet with a similar fate.

Makes certain suggestions for increasing the popularity of the Rájkumár College at Rájkot.

The Jáme Jamshed (89) of the 24th January observes that the Rájkumár College at Rájkot is undoubtedly a great blessing to the young princes of that part of the Presidency, but it is to be regretted that a sufficient number of them do not take advantage of the institution, and many of them are so unfortunate as not to be able to appreciate the benefits of education. There are now only 35 students in this college, which is indeed a very small number considering the period for which the college has been in existence. It is therefore proper that Government should strain every nerve to infuse into the young princes a liking for education and to create an interest in them for the curriculum of the college studies. This latter object can be attained in some measure by organizing excursions of college students during the Christmas holidays to places of general interest. The impressions produced by the thousand and one sight-seeings cannot fail to give an agreeable turn to their minds, and a knowledge of the ways and means of different sets of people cannot but improve their general tone. The annual ceremony of the distribution of prizes to the college students should also be celebrated with more show and greater éclat than hitherto. His Excellency the Governor and other high officials of the British Government and the ruling princes and Chiefs of the province should take part in the annual exhibition, which may well be accompanied by festivities, sports and literary entertainments. These additions will impress the students most favourably and will serve to attract many other princes who are at present idling away their time in ignorance.

Recommends an increase in the emoluments of the staff of the Sávantvádi English School.

A correspondent of the Jagan Mitrá (29) of the 22nd January dwells at some length on the satisfactory results exhibited by the Sávantvádi English School under the administration of its present Head Master and recommends that the working staff should be encouraged by means of an increase in their emoluments. He further suggests that the school should be raised to the status of a High School.

Railways.

Ill-treatment and overcrowding of passengers on the Rajputána-Málwa Railway.

The Hitechhu (68) of Ahmedabad of the 25th January complains of the ill-treatment suffered by passengers on the Rajputána-Málwa Railway at the hands of some of its employés. Third class carriages are generally overcrowded and travellers are rudely treated. The convenience of third class female passengers is not at all cared for. Carriage doors are not opened for them and they are sometimes closely packed in carriages. It sometimes happens that owing to their ignorance of the names of different stations and the carelessness of the railway officials in responding to their calls, passengers are taken beyond the station to which they may have been booked and have to pay an excess fare. If they are not fortunate enough to avail themselves of a train to bring them back to their proper destination, they are obliged to wait till the next day in roofless quarters and to suffer great hardships. On occasions of fairs carriages are overcrowded, and female passengers are the greatest sufferers. Carriages reserved for females are sometimes allowed to be used by male passengers and males and females have to travel together. The railway authorities ought to speedily attend to this matter and provide separate apartments for males and females. The arrangements for the supply of water at the stations on the line are also defective. Though two men are employed by this railway at every station for supplying drinking water to passengers on the arrival of trains, want of proper supervision has made the good results arising from such an arrangement almost nugatory. The B. B. and C. I. Railway allows water to be sold and does not keep any paid servants for this purpose.

Recommends the construction of a railway line from Nadiád to Modása viâ Kapadvanj.

A correspondent of the Rást Goftár (98) of the 21st January is glad that the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Company intend to construct a branch line to Modása, and describes in detail the great commercial importance of this town. Through this place large quantities of goods of different kinds pass on to the different trading towns in the vicinity. The connection of this place with Kapadvanj will therefore secure extensive goods and passenger traffic. The writer then points out similar advantages from the railway branch being laid from Nadiád to Kapadvanj instead of from Dákor to the latter town. [The Gujarát Mitrá (67) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Recommends the opening of a station at Niládongar near Sopára on the B. B. & C. I. Railway line.

The Gujaráti (85) of the 21st January wonders why the authorities of the B. B. & C. I. Railway do not comply with the prayer of the people of Sopára to have a station at Niládongar. If a new station is opened at that place the inhabitants of Sopára will be saved the considerable inconvenience which they suffer in the rainy season, while the Railway Company will secure the large traffic which is now carried on by sea. The Gujaráti hopes that Mr. Duxbury will not fail to grant the above prayer.

Municipalities.

Considers the result of the last rate-payers' elections in Bombay as satisfactory.

The Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 24th January observes that although considerable enthusiasm was not apparent at the last rate-payers' elections in Bombay, yet the result is not discouraging. The reason of the absence of eagerness in this matter of great local importance is that a portion of the rate-payers are not yet able to realize to themselves the necessity of returning competent representatives to look after their civic affairs. Compared with the two previous elections the last polling day presented a gratifying figure. On the first occasion eight hundred rate-payers presented themselves at the polling offices, while on the last about nineteen hundred persons recorded their votes. Again, more enthusiasm prevailed among the people on the last occasion than on the two previous occasions, and although the important defect of voting for incompetent candidates in preference to competent ones has not completely disappeared, yet it has been considerably removed. Thus the last elections may not on the whole be considered unsatisfactory. [The Akhbáre Soddgar (73) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Disapproves of the new drainage scheme for Bombay.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 21st January styles the meeting held to hear Dr. Blanc lecture on the new drainage scheme for Bombay an official demonstration. It says:—Admitting the ability and soundness of Dr. Blanc's general views and admitting the truth of Mr. Melvill's remarks as to offensive sights and smells, we are forced to say that neither the one nor the other weakened the opposition led by Dr. Blaney and the Honourable Ráo Sáheb V. N. Mandlik in the smallest degree. The position of the opponents is as firm as ever. Let their facts be disproved; let their deductions be refuted; let their experiences be explained away; and we will be among the first to welcome the official scheme. As it is, the intelligent public of Bombay has already grasped the situation. They know that there is a choice of evils before them; to put up with offensive sights and smells and perhaps more serious inconveniences, or to sink borrowed money on uncertain experiments and court irreparable mischief. Bombay prefers the lesser evil. The presence of the Governor at the lecture naturally added to its importance. But it also completed the official character of the meeting. This was unfortunate. We believe Sir James did not mean to take a side; but all the same, His Excellency deftly invited the audience to approve things ascertained beyond doubt. Alas! where is the thing which the officials ever ascertain beyond doubt? Take this drainage scheme. Has it not from the beginning been a question unsolved—full of doubts and uncertainties, vaguely experimental in its most advanced stage? At least this official advocacy of the scheme has been purely negative thus far, whereas the opposition has in a variety of ways proved its utter uselessness. It was therefore unfortunate that the Governor of Bombay should have said anything at the meeting to give colour to the suspicion that the lecture was an official counterblast and the meeting an official demonstration. But His Excellency tried to make up for this irregularity by advising that what was going to be wasted must be utilized. And how are the officials going to do this? The contents of the sewers they are determined to empty into the sea, wasting so much valuable manure and contaminating the air by way of wise economy! [The Native Opinion (9) of the 21st January makes similar remarks.]

Want of road repairs and lights at Coppersmith Street, Mázgaon.

The Káside Mumbai (92) of the 24th January complains of the bad state of the road and want of lights in the western portion of Coppersmith Street at Mázgaon, called Navgar. Though the residents of that part of the town pay the municipal taxes the lanes are not kept clean. It is much to be regretted that the local municipal inspectors should allow such a state of things to continue. Why are not the stones and earth dug out from the hill where the Mázgaon Reservoir is being constructed utilized for road repairs? It is to be hoped that the municipal authorities will attend to the matter.

Condemns the conduct of the Ahmedabad Municipality in preferring a bill of about

The Hitechhu (68) of Ahmedabad of the 25th January condemns the conduct of the local municipality in preferring a bill of about Rs. 1,000 against the young Gáekwád of Baroda for expenses incurred on the occasion of his recent visit to that city in keeping the roads clean and making other preparations. The bill has been paid by the Gáekwád. A subscription list was started by the leading citizens of Ahmedabad for giving His Highness a fitting reception and a good sum of money was subscribed for the purpose. Moreover the servants of the municipality were duly rewarded by the Gáekwád for the trouble they had been put to in keeping the roads clean. This procedure of the municipality is therefore discourteous and disgraceful, and is nothing less than an insult to the Mahárája. If there was no necessity for incurring this expense, or if the municipality had no means of doing so, the very fact of its having incurred the expenditure notwithstanding shows the arbitrary conduct of its chairman. Have not Governors who have visited the city been entertained at the expense of the municipality? The late Khanderáo Gáekwád was not asked to pay anything when he came on a visit to the city. It is said that this bill has been preferred against the Gáekwád because he did not contribute any amount towards the Kákaria Tank Fund. If this be true, the conduct of the municipality is most detestable. It is discreditable that the local authorities should try to exact money from every royal visitor for the Kákaria Tank, and if failing in their object in the present instance they have adopted this device, they have indeed brought the city into great disrepute. The young Mahárája has given several donations for the benefit of the inhabitants of Ahmedabad and Gujarát.

Rs. 1,000 against the Gáekwád of Baroda for expenses incurred at the time of his recent visit to that city.

Native States.

Comments on the contemplated visit to Calcutta of the Gáekwád of Baroda.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 22nd January observes that there is a rumour on the tapis that the young Gáekwád intends to pay a visit to Calcutta very shortly with the object of consulting the Viceroy on the solution of some administrative embroglio and that Sir T. Mádhav Ráo accompanies him. The Mahárája of Indore had to pay a similar visit to Simla some time ago. The necessity for such personal interviews arises mainly on account of the absence of any set of rules regulating the relations of Native principalities with the paramount power. Not to speak of the present condition of Native Princes, which is one of thorough dependence, as can be gathered from various circumstances, history shows that about eighty years ago the Governor General forced a Diwán on the Nizám of Hyderabad against his will. Though the reasons that may have prompted the Nizám to submit quietly to the fiat of the paramount power cannot be conjectured at this distance of time, the fact is evident that the British Government have from a very long time established the policy of directing according to their own ideas the affairs of Native States. If the British Government have thus reserved to themselves the power of nominating the Diwán, they should as well have undertaken the responsibility of the administration. But this consistency is not generally observable. Whatever the causes underlying the mystery, a want of cordiality between the prince and his Diwán is invariably seen to exist everywhere. Such a state of things would not exist if there were fixed laws which could guide the princes in carrying on their administration and the British officers in seeing that it is properly managed. As for this political move on the part of the Mahárája of Baroda though its object cannot be stated with any degree of accuracy, it is believed in well informed circles that Sir T. Mádhav Ráo has no intention of returning to the Baroda administration and that he will therefore not accompany the Mahárája to Calcutta. It is said that the Mahárája wishes to consult the Viceroy in the matter of the initiation of a policy calculated to place his administration on a firm and uniform basis and avoid all division of interests. A minor's territory is generally managed by a prime minister appointed by Government. He makes rules to suit his own ideas of a well conducted administration and imports new officers whom he can trust. These rules and officers prove to be of great use during the administration of the Government nominee, but on the expiry of his tenure of office and on the prince coming in power they are seen in a different light. Having the force of their former prestige, however, they cannot be easily done away with, but the prince's desire to have new laws and men gets gradually strengthened and he naturally has recourse to the highest authority for a solution of the difficulty. Such consultation has the effect of inspiring in the prince the assurance that he has the support of the Supreme Government in the inauguration of the reforms which he may think to be essential. May it be that this is the secret of the Mahárája's contemplated visit to Calcutta? That Sir T. Mádhav Ráo managed the affairs of the State satisfactorily is evident from his published reports, and that the Mahárája has appreciated his services is testified by the munificent reward given him by the Mahárája. It is therefore very strange that complications should have arisen in connection with such an administration soon after the Mahárája assumed the reins of his dominion. As the British Government have invested the Mahárája with full powers of administration, it is but just that he should be allowed to exercise his will unfettered by any external pressure. But there is another side of the question which requires attention, viz., how should the Mahárája have thought of effecting changes in the administration which according to all accounts and the expression of his own opinion was hitherto satisfactorily managed? Both these sides may have their pros and cons, and it is very delicate to decide between them. It is very desirable, however, that the Mahárája should be advised to adopt a line of policy at once in keeping with the old constitution of the State and not distasteful to his ideas. The Mahárája is probably aware that it is generally wise to allow salutary advice to get the better of self-will, and there is reason to believe that he will allow himself to be guided by this maxim. Lord Ripon also has proved himself to be an advocate of this country, and there is every likelihood that His Excellency will suggest a plan beneficial to the interests of the State, agreeable to the feelings of the Mahárája, and not prejudicial to the prestige of the British Government.

Comments in connection with the affairs of the Native States of Káthiáwár.

The Vartmán Sár (107) of the 23rd January, in a communicated article headed "Cries for justice from Káthiáwár, No. II.," complains of the policy pursued by Political Agents and their Assistants in their relations with the people of Káthiáwár. The rules framed by the officers of the Political Department are very defective and contradictory. When an appeal is made to the Bombay Government from the decision of the Political Agent, Government asks for a report from the very officer who has decided the case. It is impossible to expect that the officer in question will admit his shortcomings or the injustice done by him. Sometimes Political Agents and their Assistants become mere tools in the hands of their scheming Shirastedárs and the rich people very often succeed in carrying their point. Though the people are very much oppressed by Native potentates and their corrupt kárbháris, they are required to seek redress of their grievances from their very oppressors. It is inexplicable that the Political Department should have framed such rules and the Government should have sanctioned them. The concession of such arbitrary powers to Native Princes is baneful to the welfare of their subjects.

Requests Government to enquire into the truth of the rumour that Colonel Barton intercepted a letter addressed to the Rána of Porbandar.

With reference to the rumour that Colonel Barton intercepted a letter addressed to the Rána of Porbandar in connection with the dismissal of his Diwán, the Gujaráti (85) of the 21st January requests Government to enquire into the truth of this report and to take the Political Agent severely to task if he is found guilty of the alleged indiscretion.

Some subjects of the Junágad State have become outlaws and have annoyed the people of Verával.

The Gujaráti (85) of the 21st January states that news has been received from Junágad that about six hundred men of the Mahika caste, the residents of Shergadh and other places, have become outlaws and have oppressed the people of Verával, many of whom have gone to Bombay to escape the oppression. It is stated that an Arab Pathán is bent upon killing a certain official of the State.

RAOJI B. PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
3rd February 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Appointments: Disapproval of the — of Lord Kimberley as Secretary of State for India and Mr. Cross as Under Secretary 9
Armies of Native Princes: Disapproval of the proposal to abolish the —... 4
Bombay Legislative Council: A suggestion to Sir James Fergusson regarding the election of a Native member of the — 7
Covenanted Civil Service: A prayer for certain concessions to facilitate the admission of Natives of India into the — 3
Deccan ryots: Approval of the deputation of Mr. Woodward to ascertain the condition of the — 9
Dharmshála: Want of a — at Dhámner near Sátára 8
Fever: Prevalence of — in the Málvan Táluka of the Ratnágiri District. 7
General Administration Report: Remarks on the — 7
Justices of the Peace: Approval of the recent nominations to the office of—. 10
Do. do. Disapproval of do. do.:—
The Lok Mitrá... 10
The Rást Goftár 9
Law: Suggestions for a radical reform in Indian — and the procedure of law courts 6
Mhowra Bill Commission: An answer to the questions issued by the — and suggestions for checking the vice of drinking 8
Násik Sárvajanik Sabha: Disapproval of Sir James Fergusson's refusal to accept the memorial from the — 7
Native soldiers: Suggestions for a reform in the remuneration of — ... 5
Nizám of Hyderabad: Comments on the indifference shown to the — on his recent visit to Ahmednagar... 7
Public servants: A condemnation of the official career of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner and of the attempt to commemorate his name in India 10
Do. do. Want of a knowledge of Maráthi in the Hospital Assistant at Khed 9
Reforms in administration: Disapproval of the tone of the Tory papers denouncing the — introduced by Lord Ripon 3
Remission of sentence: Remarks in connection with the — passed on the Vaishnav Mahárájs 10
Steamers: A complaint regarding the management of Shepherd &Co.'s —. 9
Subordinate Courts: A suggestion for the adoption of a system of supervision of — by District and High Courts 9
Term of office: Approves of the extension of the — to Lord Ripon ... 3
Toll-bar at Sátára: A suggestion for the removal of the — 8
Tour in Khándesh: Disappointment of the people of Khándesh at the inattention shown to their sufferings by Sir James Fergusson during his recent— 8
Town Hall for Sátára: Construction of a — 8

PART II.—The Bombay Land Revenue System—

Bombay land revenue system: Comments on the — 11
Land revenue assessment: Comments on Mr. Lee-Warner's note on the present system of —
The Arunodayá 12
The Native Opinion 11
Zamindári system of Bengal: Disapproval of the introduction into the Bombay Presidency of the — 13

PART III.—Legislation—

Agricultural banks: Comments on the establishment of — 13

PART IV.—Local Self-government—

Local Self-government Bills: Delay in the publication of the Bombay—... 14
Do. do. in the Bombay Presidency: Approval of the nomination of Mr. Peile to work the scheme of — ... 14
Do. do. Remarks on the introduction of — in the city of Bombay—
The Lok Mitrá... 14
The Native Opinion 16

Page.

PART V.—Education—

Bombay University: Comments on Sir James Fergusson's speech at the recent Convocation of the —
The Bombay Samáchár 16
The Jáme Jamshed 17
Rájkumár College, Rájkot: Suggestions for increasing the popularity of the — 17
Sávantvádi English School: Increase in the emoluments of the staff of the — 18

PART VI.—Railways—

Branch line to Modása: Construction of the — of the B. B. & C. I. Railway... 18
Railway station: Recommendation for the opening of a — at Niládongar near Sopára on the B. B. & C. I. Railway 18
Rajputána-Málwa Railway: Ill-treatment and overcrowding of passengers on the — 18

PART VII.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad Municipality: Condemnation of the conduct of the — in preferring a bill against the Gáekwád of Baroda for expenses incurred at the time of his recent visit to that city 19
Drainage scheme for Bombay: Disapproval of the new— 19
Rate-payers' election: Expression of satisfaction at the result of the recent— 19
Road repairs and lights: Want of — at Coppersmith Street, Mázgaon ... 19

PART VIII.—Native States—

Gáekwád of Baroda: Comments on the contemplated visit to Calcutta of the — 20
Junágad: Outlawry in — 21
Káthiáwár: Comments on the affairs of the Native States of — ... 21
Porbandar: A request to Government to enquire into the truth of the rumour that Colonel Barton intercepted a letter addressed to the Rána of — 21

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

RECEIVED
28 FEB 83

[CONFIDENTIAL]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 3rd February 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly ...	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do. ...	475
*3	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Do.	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
4	The Dín Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	925
5	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do. ...	1,000
6	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do. ...	409
7	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
8	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,038
9	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do. ...	575
10	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do. ...	600
11	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do. ...	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*12	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly.	100
13	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly ...	555
14	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do. ...	100
15	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	450
16	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do. ...	260
17	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do. ...	275
*18	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do. ...	200
19	„ Daivadnyă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
20	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
21	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	425
22	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do. ...	140
23	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do. ...	116
24	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do. ...	100
25	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do. ...	285
26	„ Hitechhu	Kaládgi	Do. ...	85
27	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly. .	400
28	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
29	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	145
30	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do. ...	130
*31	„ Karnátak Mitră[4]	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
32	„ Kesari	Poona	Do. ...	3,500
33	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do. ...	125
34	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	300
35	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly ...	220
36	„ Mahárashtră Hitechhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,000
37	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do. ...	250
38	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do. ...	150
39	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do. ...	100
40	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly ...	700
41	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
42	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do. ...	800
43	„ Pándhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do. ...	103
44	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do. ...	250
45	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily ...	350
*46	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly ...	200
47	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do. ...	200
*48	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly ...	200
49	„ Saddharm Díp	Alíbág	Do. ...	600
50	„ Satyă Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	243
51	„ Satyă Sadan	Alíbág	Weekly ...	400
52	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	140
53	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly...	275
*54	„ Sharabh	Alíbág	Weekly ...	200
55	„ Shiváji[3]	Poona	Do. ...	200
56	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do. ...	90
57	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do. ...	150
58	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do. ...	240

[1] Maráthi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles.
[4] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
59	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
60	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly ...	250
61	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do. ...	175
62	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do. ..	200
63	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do. ...	300
*64	„ Vinod	Poona	Do. ...	200
65	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly ...	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*66	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly ...	200
67	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do. ...	400
68	„ Hitechhu	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	349
69	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	725
70	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do. ...	600
71	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do. ...	137
	GUJARA'TI.
72	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly ...	25
73	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily ...	750
74	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly ...	304
75	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do. ...	500
76	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly ...	500
77	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily ...	950
78	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly ...	700
79	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do. ...	60
80	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	600
81	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly ...	525
82	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do. ...	900
83	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Monthly ...	400
84	„ Fursad	Do.	Do. ...	100
85	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly ...	400
*86	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly ...	200
87	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do. ...	659
*88	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	200
89	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily ...	525
90	„ Kaira Vartmán	Kaira	Weekly ...	115
*91	„ Kaisar-i-Hind	Bombay	Do. ...	200
92	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ..	700
93	„ Nágar Udayá	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	300
94	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly ...	200
95	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly ...	381
96	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly ...	200
97	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do. ...	225
98	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do. ...	1,814
99	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	200
100	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	400
*101	„ Sauráshtrá Darpan	Junágad	Monthly ...	200
102	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do. ...	533
*103	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do. ...	200
104	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do. ...	408
105	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár	Umreth	Fortnightly..	62
*106	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
107	„ Vartmán Sár	Surat	Weekly ...	200
108	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly ...	738
109	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	300
110	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly ...	500
	KA'NARESE.
111	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	150
*112	„ Karnátak Vritt	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
	URDU.
*113	The Armagán	Bombay	Bi-weekly ...	200
114	„ Khayir Kháhe Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly .	300
115	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly ...	160
	PERSIAN.
116	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly ...	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases, an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out; and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well-known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Expresses a hope that the complications in Burma may not come to a crisis.

The Arunodayá (13) of the 28th January gives an account of the affairs in Burma as gathered from the Rangoon Times, and expresses deep regret at the turn which the complications in that country threaten to take. India has been reduced to a state of poverty, and notwithstanding the optimist views of the well wishers of England and their followers which are not borne out by facts, the misery has been gradually aggravated by the increased burden of State expenditure. While the people were in a state of embarrassment and were anxiously trying to find their way out of the heavy burden with which the late ministry thought it fit to saddle them by unnecessarily waging a war with Afghanistan, the coming of the present ministry into power served to inspire the people with the confidence that the latter will not add to the distress of this country by similar indiscretion. The conduct of the present ministry, however, in waging a war in Egypt and making India pay a portion of the expenses has proved that the confidence was misplaced. The people received a terrible shock from this policy of the ministry, and they have scarcely recovered from it, when the Burmese complications are beginning to show themselves. There is every reason to think that Lord Ripon, who has initiated various administrative reforms proper for times of peace, will prevent matters from coming to a crisis, but having regard to the circumstance that Mr. Gladstone does not think it fit to follow the lines of policy advocated by him when out of office, it cannot be stated with certainty that the present embroglio will not result in a war.

Is afraid of the advance of Russia in Central Asia.

The Káside Mumbai (92) of the 2nd February says that the Russians are steadily advancing towards India. Their influence in Central Asia has been greatly enhanced by the subjugation of the warlike Turcoman and Usbeg tribes. They have been able to possess themselves of almost all the territories of Central Asia owing to the want of any hindrance or check to their progress. General Shernaif, the new Governor General, is following in the footsteps of his predecessor, General Kaufman, and making rapid advances. He is scheming to win over to his side the rulers of Khiva and Bokhara by sending envoys to their court. What remains for the Russians to do after securing their friendship is to invade India. With this view they would either foment troubles in Afghanistan or cement their friendship with the Shah of Persia, who is already their ally. It cannot be said with certainty that the Amir of Afghanistan would not become a tool in their hands for the accomplishment of their heart's desire. It is possible that India may have in a short time to face a Russian invasion.

Makes remarks on the sentiments expressed by Mr. Cross before his Bolton constituents.

In noticing the first speech of Mr. Cross in his capacity as Under Secretary of State for India addressed to his constituents at Bolton, the Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 3rd February observes that the Under Secretary expressed his satisfaction at the abolition of the import duties on European cotton goods. The abolition of the duties has been proved beyond doubt to be prejudicial to the interests of India and fraught with injustice to the people, and it is but natural that the Indian public should be dissatisfied with such utterances. But this speech is not sufficient to enable the people to form their opinion regarding their new Under Secretary. It appears that he was compelled by circumstances to express such views. The Manchestrians have served their selfish interests in this matter, and to protect them they generally try to bring great pressure to bear on the ministry. Nay they threaten to injure a ministry by withdrawing their support and lending it to the opposition if any of the ministers cross their interests. The Manchestrians have been largely benefited by the abolition of the import duties and would not brook any condemnation of it. The other views of the Under Secretary were satisfactory. Lord Ripon has undertaken to achieve the necessary reforms in several matters, and it behoves the Under Secretary to lend his support to the policy pursued by him.

Approves of the action taken by the Indian Association in the matter of representing the inconveniences of the present system of competitive examination for the Indian Civil Service.

The Native Opinion (9) of the 28th January says:—We heartily commend the action taken by the Indian Association of Calcutta in regard to the competitive examination for the Indian Civil Service, and unless all our associations and bodies politic in the country join in a matter of such paramount importance to us, the Indian public will have lost a golden opportunity of getting this particular grievance set right. The Liberal Ministry is now in power, and if our claims to a fair proportion of justice in the matter be legitimately pressed upon the British Cabinet and Parliament, there are, we believe, some chances of our success. The difficulty in our way of being able to effectively represent our case has now been removed, and what could not have come to be considered as a great drawback in the case of Indian candidates under other circumstances has been doing an amount of incalculable mischief to those very candidates for whose special behoof a short-sighted Secretary of State in a freakish mood reduced the limit of the age of candidates. At the time the step was taken by Lord Salisbury the Government of Lord Northbrook strongly protested against it as a measure fraught with great danger to the future prospects, mental and physical, of the Civilian recruits annually sent out to this country, and the prophecy has borne its bitter fruit. The reduction of the limit of age from twenty-one to nineteen years has affected prejudicially both the physical and mental calibre of the junior class of our Civil Servants, and complaints have often been heard of some having lost their sanity, others having been incapacitated by an undue strain upon their constitution, others again having been compelled to retire merely on the score of physical unfitness. The object of the change was the accomplishment of University education after passing the competitive examination. After the competitive examination a candidate is allowed to remain in England only two years, and most of this time is spent at the India Office. How the candidate can find time to attend to his University studies is not very plain to us. To our mind this plea of University examination appears to have proved only a means to an end. So far as India is concerned the limit of age is a practical bar to the Indian candidates, and the examination returns to hand show that since the introduction of the Salisbury rule only one has passed. But what Lord Salisbury put forth at the time as the principal object of the change was more effectively carried into execution when the limit of age stood at twenty-two. Examination statistics show that in 1858 ninety per cent. of the passed candidates were University men, i.e. men from Oxford and Cambridge. In 1874 only fifteen per cent. were from the Universities, and since that time the number of British graduates appearing at the examination has gradually decreased. If the real object of the new rules was to secure University education, the purpose was evidently better served under the old rules than it is now. Then no such constitutional disabilities were ever complained of, and the Civilians were as hale and stout as they ever could be. What the new rules have effected is not a supply of better men than formerly, but a race of men mentally, physically and educationally incapable—men who cannot stand a comparison with some of the best specimens of Hailebury and the competitionwallas of the older generations. In the place of competition it is now attempted to conciliate the people by nomination,—a system which has long since been found unsuitable and condemned in England. The people do not approve of it; on the contrary, they have been asking for admission into the service after the candidates had qualified themselves by passing the necessary examination. But the Government hitherto have not listened to their prayer. The nominations that have been made under the system are mostly unsatisfactory, and are calculated to defeat the noble object of the British Government, namely, the admission of Natives into the higher branches of the great Indian services. If the British Government in England really consider Natives as one of the principal factors of the Indian administration, the raising of the limit of age from nineteen to twenty-two and the establishment of a branch competitive examination in this country are necessary. The raising of the limit of age is not only necessary in the case of Natives, but also in that of British candidates, as has now been found both by authorities here and some people in England. The British public will remember that it was in 1833 or thereabouts that an Act of Parliament was passed for the admission of our people into the higher departments of the State, and how every makeshift has since been availed of to evade the noble object of Parliament. We only hope that along with the question of age the prayer that a branch competitive examination should also be held in India will meet with a favourable consideration.

Comments on the abstract budget and the revised estimates of the Bombay Presidency.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 28th January says:—It is a most unfortunate circumstance that the public at large know so very little about the plan, policy and regulations which guide the administrations of this vast country. This ignorance is partly due to want of education, partly to the aversion which responsible officers of State have to making their plans and policies known to the public, and partly to the difference of language between the rulers and the ruled. The result is that mischievous apathy and indifference to such matters on the part of the public leave no check upon official conduct. This is the more vividly marked when we happen to know that local Governments often do things contrary to official orders, and continue their practice until a generous Viceroy or a just Secretary of State finds out the flaw and sets matters right. In a notification of the Financial Department, dated 15th January 1883, the Government of Bombay published the abstract budget and the revised estimates of the Bombay Presidency. This notification is published agreeably to Rule XI. of the rules published by the Government of India in their resolution No. 1709, dated 22nd March 1877, the resolution referred to being itself a modification of certain rules made by the Government of India in 1870. The note under review most grievously falls short of the aim of the Supreme Government expressed in Rule XI., inasmuch as it does not give us any idea as to what the estimates for 1883-84 are to be. This omission cannot be attributed to carelessness. So far as can be judged, the omission was unavoidable, inasmuch as the different adjustments and transfers of items of both revenue and expenditure between the Supreme and local Governments have not yet been come to. If it was so, it was necessary that the note under review should have said something to that effect. The present policy of the Government of India is to consult public opinion on all matters of legislation, and we hope the attention of His Excellency the Viceroy will soon be directed to the contents of paragraph 19 of the resolution of 1870, so as to require the Local Government to lay a financial exposition before the Legislative Council. Before introducing any change in the constitution or the number of the members of Legislative Councils, we would ask Government to give the members of Council the power of questioning on different matters relating to administration. We would also like that a financial exposition be made every year in February or March. We do not mean that we would be quite satisfied with what little we ask for and that we would not like to have a Council of 64 as the Bombay Gazette suggests. Before asking for such a large concession, which will most probably not be made, Government should be pleased to give us what little we ask for and which will suffice for our present wants.

Refutes the statement made by Mr. Lee-Warner in his note on the Bombay land revenue system that the Deccan ryot is growing prosperous.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 28th January says:—Mr. Lee-Warner's note on the Bombay land revenue system is more a one-sided defence of the optimist views held by the Local Government on the present condition of the Deccan ryot than an impartial review of the revenue system. He thinks that the Deccan ryot is fast becoming prosperous, that his land is gaining in value, and that the revenue assessment is simply a fleabite. But if these be the conclusions he has come to from his personal experience, how are we to reconcile the statement of Dr. Pollen, the ablest and most trusted adviser of the Bombay Government and the special officer appointed to watch the operations of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and the revenue system in vogue? Dr. Hunter in his speech stated, on the authority of Dr. Pollen, that the ryot was still steeped in debt and that his condition was far from prosperous. Either Dr. Pollen is right or Mr. Lee-Warner. That the public must place greater reliance on the opinions of the former is obvious, for he is responsible for his statements. While Mr. Lee-Warner has confined himself to the Sátára District, Dr. Pollen has reported on the whole of the Deccan. Even admitting that the condition of the ryot in Sátára is what Mr. Lee-Warner so pleasantly depicts, it cannot be predicated that therefore the ryot in the Deccan generally is on the highway to prosperity. Further when severe criticism has been passed in public journals on the Act and on the condition of the agriculturists, is it not natural that a confidential officer deputed by Government should try to ascertain as many facts as possible which may go to disprove such criticism? And after all what is the premiss which justifies Mr. Lee-Warner in drawing the inference that the Deccan ryot is fast improving pecuniarily? It is this—that he could acquire unimproved land on behalf of Government only at 20 or 24 times the value of Government assessment. This test, which he takes as conclusive, is neither infallible nor even ordinarily reliable. Purchasers, be they Government or private individuals, when intent on acquiring land which they happen to know would turn out profitable, scarcely take the weight of the annual assessment into consideration. Precisely the same thing has occurred in the villages in Sátára. The owners knew that land was to be acquired for a public purpose. Hence they were firm in demanding a large price. As the test is fallacious, the theory of light assessment necessarily falls to the ground. The second argument urged by Mr. Lee-Warner in support of his statement as to the prosperity of the Deccan ryot is the happy agricultural condition of the soil just now. But one swallow does not make summer. To judge of the better condition of the ryot from this particularly good year is not right. In order to arrive at a true conclusion other facts have also to be taken into consideration. Has the ryot washed off his past debts? Is his land freed from the grip of the mortgagee? If these two conditions have accompanied the fact of bountiful crops, then we are willing to accept Mr. Lee-Warner's picture of the prosperity of the Deccan peasant. Unfortunately for him, Dr. Pollen has given us an entirely opposite account. The loads of debt are still the same or only partially removed, and the crops have been insufficient to meet the Government assessment in full. In the absence of proof, Mr. Lee-Warner's theory that the Deccan ryot is growing prosperous must be considered a pure invention.

Makes suggestions regarding the reconstitution of Legislative Councils.

Referring to the concession of election recently allowed to the people of Bengal in the matter of the appointment of a member in the Viceregal Legislative Council, the Arunodayá (13) of the 28th January observes that it is imperatively necessary that the principle of election should be extended to the local Legislative Councils to allow of their constitution, which in its present state is very defective, being placed on a sound basis. The policy of not allowing the people of the country a voice in its administration, though justifiable on the grounds of expediency in the early days of the British rule, appears very mean and detestable at the present day. In times of Native rule the people of India possessed rights and privileges of all descriptions, but on the introduction of the British Government they doubted whether they could lay claim to the same rights and privileges and therefore remained silent in the matter. But the experience that they have gained of the present administration has taught people to recognize the necessity of their possessing such rights and privileges and to claim them as their due. It cannot be denied that all the Legislative Councils as at present constituted count one or two Natives among their constituents, but the advantages meant to be secured by this arrangement are rendered nugatory by the selection of members being generally inappropriate for various reasons, and, where the selection is happy, by the attempts made by such members to represent the popular side of the questions before the Councils being frustrated by the preponderance of the official element. The proceedings of various legislative measures like the Mhowra Bill bear ample testimony to the faithfulness of the above picture. As a remedy against this evil, a reconstitution of the local Legislative Councils at Bombay, Madras and Calcutta on the model of the district and táluka committees framed under the local self-government scheme seems to be necessary. The number of members in these Councils should be 32 or 64, to be nominated by the Government and the people in equal proportions. In the same manner a moiety of the members of the Viceregal Council should be formed by proportionate nominations from the local Councils. Such an arrangement will secure the proper representation of the people, not only in the local Legislature, but also in the central one. It is to be hoped therefore that Lord Ripon will see his way to inaugurate this reform with the least practicable delay in the same manner as His Lordship initiated the policy of local self-government. [The Kesari (32) of the 30th January makes similar remarks.]

Suggests a reform in the constitution of the Legislative Councils.

The Shivdji (55) of the 26th January says that the constitution of Legislative Councils in Ceylon is more satisfactory than that of similar bodies in India, and the reason is that the former are more representative in their character than the latter, while the people there, on account of their constant contact with European planters, are more jealous of encroachments on their rights than the people of India. The people in this country do not care to fight for their rights with firmness of purpose and are generally disposed to give way to official pressure. This leads to the exercise of oppression by the official classes under the cover of law. This state of things, reprehensible as it undoubtedly is, bids fair to improve gradually, and the public are being awakened to a sense of the injustice of the treatment accorded them by the rulers. It is therefore time that no stone should be left unturned in bringing about a reformation of the present system of Legislative Councils. [The Panchánan (42) of the 28th January also requests Government to follow the example of the Ceylon administration in the matter of respecting the rights of the people and giving them a voice in the management of their affairs.]

Wishes that the Indian Legislative Councils should be thrown open to the representatives of the different classes of the people.

The Jáme Jamshed (89) of the 1st February is highly grateful to Lord Ripon for entertaining a desire to admit a representative of the agricultural classes in the Imperial Legislative Council, and hopes that the subordinate administrations will follow His Lordship's good example. After describing in brief the great advantage that the country will derive from the amelioration of the wretched condition of the agriculturists, the Jáme observes that under the existing constitution of these Councils a single representative of the agricultural classes is not likely to prove very valuable. It is desirable therefore that the representatives of the different classes of the subjects should be admitted into them in sufficient numbers.

Approves of the policy adopted by the Government of India in asking the public of Bengal to elect a member for the Viceregal Legislative Council.

The Bakul (15) of the 28th January, while referring to the appointment of Mr. Kristodás Pál in the Viceroy's Legislative Council, takes the opportunity of pointing out the defects in the present constitution of the several Legislative Councils. The policy adopted by the Viceroy in the matter of this appointment points to the interest taken by him in the welfare of this country. If the Governor of this Presidency follows suit, he will undoubtedly confer much good on the people.

Does not approve of the tone adopted by the Conservative papers against Lord Ripon's policy.

The Kalpataru (30) of the 28th January regrets that the Conservative papers should have adopted such a spiteful tone against the noble policy of Lord Ripon, which instead of endangering the foundations of British rule in India as apprehended by them will tend to ensure its stability. If England ever loses her hold on India, it will only be by such narrow views as those entertained by the editor of the St. James Gazette. What jealousy and what selfishness this! Are the people of India no better than domestic animals? Does it behove noble Englishmen to say that the people of India should neither aspire for money nor independence, but should remain content with what is doled out to them by their rulers? If Englishmen grudge the minor concessions proposed to be granted by the noble Marquis, what truth is there in the oft trumpetted utterances that they will willingly retire from the government of India after making the people wise enough to manage their own affairs? Under such circumstances the future of India is indeed unimaginable.

The Rást Goftár (98) of the 28th January observes that it is highly desirable that Government and the people should join in ascertaining the truth in the important matter of illicit distillation of liquor from mhowra flowers, and hence the suggestion coming from some quarters that independent private gentlemen should be appointed on the committee appointed by Government is by no means inappropriate. The committee at present consists of the Commissioner, N. D., the Collector of Thána and the Collector of Customs, who are no doubt able and faithful servants of Government, but had some independent private gentleman like Mr. Dádábhái Nawroji or Mr. Káshináth Trimbak Telang been appointed on the committee, the labours of the committee would have secured the confidence of the public. The writer then tries to answer some of the questions issued by the commission and arrives at the following conclusions. (1) Before the passing of the A'bkári Act various circumstances joined in affording facilities to the poorer classes to obtain pure and at the same time cheap toddy. (2) The absence of duty on mhowra liquor also contributed to the sale of good liquor at a low price, and to keep the people from the use of cheap but poisonous European liquors which are now used in large quantities. (3) On the whole there is no evidence that can warrant the assertion that crimes were more frequent before than they are now. On the contrary it is natural that crimes should have increased since the passing of the A'bkári Act of 1878 on account of the restrictions imposed by the Act on the use of liquor.

Tries to answer some of the questions issued by the commission appointed to inquire into the illicit distillation of liquor from mhowra flowers.

The Arunodaya (13) of the 28th January says that the proceedings of the commission appointed to ascertain the extent of illicit distillation of liquor from mhowra flowers are void ab initio. The very officers who have been appointed to sit on the commission were the originators of the bill that was introduced into the local Legislative Council by the Honourable Mr. Ashburner and was subsequently rejected by the Government of India, and it is therefore apparent that their nomination was improper. When one has formed his opinion on a particular subject, it is but natural that he should try to support it through thick and thin, and he only catches at arguments corroborating his view. With all their attempts to free their minds from the ideas and impressions they have already received, Messrs. Mulock and Sheppard's enquiry cannot be looked upon as unbiased and impartial. It is therefore necessary that the commission as at present constituted should be dissolved and a fresh one appointed composed of members representing in equal proportions the interests of Government and the people.

Suggests the appointment of a fresh commission to enquire into the illicit distillation of liquor from mhowra flowers.

The Yajdán Parast (110) of the 28th January is much concerned at the report that in the coming budget the license tax will be increased, as the total receipts for the last year were far short of the expenditure. This tax, observes the Parast, is already a heavy burden on the people, who have been anxiously waiting to see it removed and who will be exceedingly sorry to find its burden aggravated. The authorities have been driven to this step because they committed themselves to the impolicy of abolishing the import duties on cotton piece-goods in the interests of the selfish cotton manufacturers of Manchester.

Is sorry to hear the report that the burden of the license tax is likely to be increased.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 28th January says:—Sir Lepel Griffin's bitter denunciation of the marriage system among modern Hindus has thrown the priest-ridden orthodox into consternation. Apart from the higher spiritual considerations, early marriage means the physical ruin of a people. But the consummation of the nuptial troth at nine and ten is nothing less than an outrage on womanhood. Infant marriage leads to enforced widowhood; and if the latter evil is to be at all lessened in a perceptible degree, the former must be discountenanced. In the absence of special legislation the exclusion of married students from holding scholarships might serve as a partial check to a limited extent. It would of course be a serious disability; but there are instances on record in the history of other nations to go upon. As to the social extinction of widows, we honestly believe that popular sentiment in India is opposed to it. But the Hindus are a timid race, and priestly influence is still predominant. A reform from within is therefore not possible for many long years to come. What William Bentinck did forty years ago must be done over again. The Government must take the sense of enlightened representatives. If they will only make known their desire to learn how public sentiment stands with regard to this problem, they will soon be overwhelmed with the conviction that has been expressed so often and in such a variety of ways that the prevention of enforced widowhood is but a logical consequence of the abolition of sati. If the Government of the day are not ashamed of the action of their predecessor, when a ruler as enlightened as the present put down a barbarous rite, then they must carry Lord Bentinck's policy to its legitimate conclusion. The suppression of sati will otherwise prove a very doubtful blessing. Such is the opinion of nine-tenths of the parents of widowed daughters. Lord Ripon is doing a great deal for the political and material advancement of this long neglected country. But what are the chances of a Hindu citizen appreciating political freedom with a widowed daughter or sister at home weighing down his spirits and embittering his existence? The hour has come for remedying this greatest social evil in India, and the man too has come, if he will only turn his attention to it awhile. It is a pity that men like Duff and Wilson can no longer raise their voice against the iniquity. But there are missionaries imbued with their spirit ready enough to work for the victims of an unequal social law if the Government will show a disposition to break through the trammels of false neutrality.

Says that enforced widowhood among the Hindus ought to be put down by special legislation.

The authorities concerned should compel owners of factories and theatrical buildings to provide sufficient and capacious doors and stairs to the buildings.

In noticing the recent shocking accident at a wool-cleaning factory near Pánjrápol in Bombay in which twenty-three lives were lost, the Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 3rd February states that the narrowness of the stair-case and the smallness of doors in the building had much to do with the serious nature of the accident. There are many factories in Bombay in which large numbers of workmen are employed, and yet the means of ingress and egress are as defective as those in the Pánjrápol wool factory, in which the above-mentioned accident occurred. The authorities concerned would therefore do well to inspect all these buildings and to insist upon the necessary alterations being made in them. Theatrical buildings also require due attention from the authorities in connection with the means of ingress and exit provided in them. [The Jáme Jamshed (89) of the 3rd February expresses similar sentiments.]

Objects to the policy of making the local fund revenues pay for the construction of a pier at Miré at Ratnágiri.

A correspondent of the Bakul (15) of the 28th January says that on the occasion of the recent visit of His Excellency the Governor to Ratnágiri the municipality of that place represented the necessity for the construction at the expense of Government of a pier at the port of Miré, and that it has subsequently been decided that the work should be executed, the expenditure being borne by the general and local fund revenues in the proportion of two-thirds and one-third. This diversion of the local fund revenues to objects which can have no legitimate claim on them and to the prejudice of those that have a right to be satisfied is as impolitic as it is unjust. Such a state of things is made possible by the present constitution of local fund committees, the members of which are hardly able to hold their own against the president, who therefore carries the day in all matters. Properly speaking works like the one under advertence should be constructed either by Government or merchants or municipalities, who should in return enjoy the revenues accruing therefrom. In the present case the obligation falls most naturally on the municipality, as the work will indirectly contribute to augment its income by affording a stimulus to trade. The history of local fund works in the Ratnágiri District is not at all encouraging. Since the time of Mr. Boswell there have been no useful works worth the name. It is not clear why these revenues should be made to pay for the establishment of telegraphic communications, the construction of works like the A'mbághát and the maintenance of a leper hospital. It might be argued by some people that the construction of the pier at Miré would be attended with benefits to the agricultural population, who pay the local fund cess, by facilitating the transportation to other parts of the district of the agricultural produce. But this is hardly possible, as there has yet never been a day when the yield of crops in the district has been sufficiently plentiful to admit of its being exported to other districts.

Does not approve of the abolition of telegraphs at Ratnágiri and the substitution of telephones in their stead.

A correspondent of the Jagan Mitrá (29) of the 29th January expresses his disapproval of the displacement of telegraphic communications by telephones in Ratnágiri. It is said that telephones will be worked only from 12 to 4 P. M., that foreign messages will not be admitted, and that press messages will not be transmitted at the lower rates which obtain in the case of telegraphic communications. If such are the difficulties attendant on the establishment of telephones, their utility is very doubtful. Moreover the working of telephones is not as safe as that of telegraphs. A change in the weather serves to spoil the apparatus, and it is not likely that the postal service will be able to manage the business with safety without the assistance of the servants of the Telegraph Department. Privacy of messages will also not be secured under the new arrangement. If the authorities have been led to adopt this new plan from considerations of expenditure, the Telegraph Department fairly promises to be a success financially in a short time, and the employment of lower paid servants will also lead to a reduction in the cost of the department.

Complains of the bad state of roads and absence of bridges in the Dhárwár District.

The Chandrodayá (111) of the 27th January complains of the serious inconvenience and hardship caused to the people by the roads in the district of Dhárwár being generally out of repair and by the absence of bridges in certain places. The writer cites as instances the road which goes by the name of "Kallisolina Hádiyu" and the stream called "Hattikare Vana Halla." The muddy state of the road leading to the stream referred to renders it necessary for the passengers to pass through adjoining fields, the owners of which levy a tax of one pice per head and one anna for each cart that passes. If the people are thus obliged to pay for their own convenience, where is the good of their contributing to the local fund revenues? It is a great injustice that one class should be made to pay and the income derived should be spent for the comforts of a different class. It is to be hoped therefore that the authorities will see that the roads are properly put in repair and that bridges are constructed wherever necessary.

Makes suggestions for an increase in the subordinate establishment of the Postal Department in Bombay.

The Din Bandhu (4) of the 28th January, while expressing its regret that the subordinates in the Postal Department are not treated with the same consideration regarding leave and pension allowances as those in other departments, requests the attention of the Presidency Post Master to the increase that has taken place in the work of the department in the city of Bombay and the consequent hard labour that is exacted from peons and other subordinate servants. The number of the branch post offices requires to the supplemented by four additional offices and the number of the subordinate servants requires to be doubled. It is apparent that the work of the department has increased tenfold. Such an addition to the staff will not be much felt by the department inasmuch as its income is gradually increasing. On account of the insufficiency of the present staff the work is not properly got through, as will be apparent from the fact that in spite of six deliveries during the course of a day letters are sometimes not delivered till the next day after their arrival.

A complaint regarding newspaper postage.

The Deshi Mitrá (82) of the 1st February says that the present postal arrangements for the transmission of newspapers under three tolás in weight is not very satisfactory. The postage having to be paid for every three months in advance, the proprietors of newspapers are put to much inconvenience, as there can be no certainty of an increase or decrease in the number of subscribers within that period, and the exact amount to be paid cannot therefore be determined beforehand. The postal authorities should therefore either issue one pice stamps or receive payment every week.

Complains of the inconvenient location of the post office at Málvan.

The Panchánan (42) of the 14th January complains of the inconvenience caused to the inhabitants of the town of Málvan by the location of the post office in a distant corner to the west of the town, and requests the authorities concerned to remove it to a central position near the bazár.

Complains of the want of a ward for infectious diseases in the Sassoon Hospital at Poona.

With reference to the prevalence of small-pox, measles and fever of a bad type at Poona, a correspondent of the Indian Spectator (1) of the 28th January says :—The Sassoon Hospital is a large handsome building, and is an ornament to the station ; but it is painful to have to state that its doors are closed against persons attacked by infectious diseases owing to there being no detached ward for the reception of this class of patients. Everyone has, therefore, to be treated in his own house. This is not a creditable state of things. An hospital without an infectious ward is incomplete and only half fulfils the purposes of such an institution. There is ample room in the hospital enclosure for such a building, and if Government cannot find the money, surely a few of the rich inhabitants can combine and subscribe sufficient funds for the purpose. It is quite as urgently required as a cantonment market, on which it is proposed to expend over a lákh of rupees.

Complains of the hardship suffered by the inhabitants of Bávla on the occasion of the visit of two Europeans to that village for pig hunting.

A correspondent of the Hitechhu (68) of Ahmedabad of the 1st February writing from Bávla says that Lieutenant Holland of the artillery stationed at Ahmedabad and one Mr. Richison came to Bávla on the 21st January for pig hunting. They asked the village headman to arrange for their passage through fields, and informed him that they were prepared to pay suitable compensation for the damage done. The village headman arranged accordingly. They took about a hundred men with them and began hunting after pigs, thus putting the people to a considerable loss. Jesangbhái Trikamdás, the Patel of the village, sent a registered notice by post on the very next day to these European gentlemen, asking them to inspect his fields in person and to give the necessary compensation for the damage done. On the receipt of this notice the two gentlemen became very angry and tore to pieces the notice as well as the postal receipt for the same, though the postman remonstrated against their doing so. The local post master took down the evidence of the postman and wrote a letter to the Superintendent of Post Offices, Ahmedabad Division. These European gentlemen sent for Jesangbhái, and threatened him with severe consequences for having served a notice on them. This occurrence was witnessed by about twenty persons. It is strange that such men should visit villages for hunting and behave in the way they have done. They have not yet paid the damages to the cultivators as promised by them. The hundred followers have been paid the small sum of Rs. 15 for their three days' work. The Collector and the Bombay Government should make inquiries in the matter and should make arrangements for the prevention of such occurrences in future. Nothing is known as to what the Postal Superintendent has done in this affair.

Disapproves of an order said to have been issued by the head of the Salt Department that no person below the height of 5 feet and 5 inches shall be employed in the department.

The Gujaráti (85) of the 28th January observes that the Deccan Herald states that the Commissioner of the Salt Department has promulgated an order that no person below the height of 5 feet and 5 inches shall be employed in the department, but this military rule ought not to have been applied to a civil department.

Forest Laws.

Dwells on the prejudicial effects of forest laws on the cultivation of the soil.

The Suryodayá (58) of the 29th January dwells at considerable length on the evils resulting from the restrictions placed on the use of forest produce under the provisions of the Indian Forest Act. It is admitted on all hands that the British rule has brought in its train security of life and property, and it is a matter of general satisfaction that the present times are, unlike the past, not characterised by frequent bloody wars, rebellions and murderous assaults. But there is one defect in the present administration which mars all the good resulting from it, and it is no other than the decided tendency of the rulers to keep a distinction between themselves and their subjects. All their legislative and executive acts unmistakeably betray this tendency. The subject of the depression observable in the agricultural classes has been of late engrossing the attention of Government, and to remedy the evil they have already tried, though unsuccessfully, measures like the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act and are still initiating reforms like the establishment of agricultural banks. Both these measures are calculated to prejudicially affect the interests of the sáwkár and not of Government, and therefore they cannot be said to reflect much credit on the latter. Effective remedies like a reduction in assessment, liberal grants of takávi advances, and remissions of revenue in times of necessity are altogether neglected, and the desired object is therefore not attained. The condition of the peasantry in the Konkan is most lamentable. Their soil is of an inferior quality, and the cultivators, being generally half-starved, have not the physical strength necessary for the adequate preparation of the soil for cultivation. The restrictions imposed by the forest laws have served to aggravate the evil by depriving the people of the materials for ráb. These are the elements which go to bring about an insufficient produce from the soil. The Suryodayá is informed that Government have of late devoted their attention to the question of the necessity of ráb for the proper fertilization of the soil, and the results of the experiments directed to be made point in unequivocal terms to the existence of the necessity. Being debarred from the use of materials for ráb, the ryot cultivates his land without first burning it, and finds that the yield of the crop is thoroughly inadequate to enable him to satisfy the Government demand and to provide himself with the means of livelihood during the year. The dues of Government are exacted with rigour, and recourse is had even to an attachment of the cooking utensils of the peasant for the purpose. But no consideration is paid to the question whether the ryot's inability to meet the Government demand proceeds from impecuniosity or contumacy. A sifting enquiry into the question will not fail to elicit the fact that it is the former and not the latter. The problem for solution then is, what has brought about this poverty? There are many causes that have contributed towards this evil, and principal among them are (1) the heavy assessment on the soil and (2) the absence of materials for its preparation. The plots of land that were intended by the survey authorities to satisfy the requirements of people in the matter of ráb are perfectly useless inasmuch as they are wholly barren and rocky. The same may be predicated of the grounds meant for the pasturage of cattle. It is said that a Superintendent of Revenue Survey has given it as his opinion that an acre of cultivable land requires three acres of grass-growing soil, but Government do not seem to have paid any attention to it. It is thus evident that with a desire to add to their revenues Government have subjected the people to incalculable hardships in the matter of their rights to forest produce, and it behoves the liberal administration of Lord Ripon to lay the agriculturists under lifelong obligations by removing all restrictions on forests in so far as they interfere with the cultivation of the soil.

Complains of the hardship caused by the policy of Government regarding forests.

The Shiváji (55) of the 26th January complains of the hardship caused to cartmen bringing cart-loads of fuel into the city of Poona by being required to produce permits authorizing them to fell the trees in their soil. The cartmen are generally ignorant of the oppressive restrictions placed by Government on the use of trees, &c., and suffer considerably by being made the victims of the unscrupulous conduct of Government officers. The restrictions therefore should be removed and the poorer classes allowed the liberty of cutting trees as hitherto. The Government policy of forest conservancy also causes vexation to the ryots in another way. In times of famine many cultivators abandoned their holdings out of sheer necessity and emigrated to other parts of the country. These people have now returned to their native villages, but Government decline to restore their holdings to them on the plea that they forfeited them by their failure to pay the Government dues during famine years. These lands are utilized by Government for forest purposes, and having been described in the registers prepared by lower officers as "waste," the higher authorities are not able to know the real state of affairs. This policy has deprived many people of their means of livelihood, and has reduced them to a state of starvation. In conclusion, the writer exhorts all public associations to take up the subject and to represent it to Government in a proper light. [The Panchánan (42) of the 28th January refers to a circular issued in the Ratnágiri District restricting the removal of forest produce, and complains of the inconvenience caused thereby.]

Complains of the oppressive working of the Forest Act.

The Native Opinion (9) of the 28th January in a communicated article gives the particulars of the proceedings of a meeting held at Roha in the Kolába Collectorate for the purpose of making a demonstration against the oppressive working of the Forest Act, and explains the difficulties entailed thereby on the cultivators in their agricultural operations.

Legislation.

Makes remarks on certain legislative measures of the Bombay Legislative Council.

The Jáme Jamshed (89) of the 29th January observes that at the next sitting of the local Legislative Council the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft is to move that when a member of the Council is unacquainted with English he shall have a translation into his vernacular prepared by the Oriental Translator of the report made by a select committee on a legislative bill. This motion would seem to be very inappropriate. The Council requires for its members educated and experienced persons, while the proposed motion would set a premium on the appointment of uneducated members not acquainted with English. The number of non-official members is already so very small that the official members by their majority carry out any legislative measures they choose. The appointment of a person unacquainted with English would therefore do no good whatever, and the nomination of non-officials would be more farcical than it has been hitherto. The other motion which the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft proposes to make, namely, that translations into vernaculars of legislative bills and reports of select committees should be prepared in good time and extensively circulated for the information of the public, is really good, but is not likely to prove beneficial under the present system of managing business, according to which official members determine to enact a law before it is criticized by the public and irrespective of all opposition. The better course would be to alter the constitution of the Council so as to make the number of non-official members exceed that of the officials by one. Several non-officials have acquitted themselves so creditably in the discussions in the Councils that Government ought to have no objection to adopt the proposal. The people ought to pray Sir James Fergusson to make this concession, and if they do not succeed in that quarter they should appeal to the Viceroy, who with his exceptionally liberal policy is sure to entertain it favourably. [The Rást Goftár (98) of the 28th January makes similar remarks regarding the first motion.]

Makes remarks on certain legislative measures of the Bombay Legislative Council.

The same of the 2nd February observes with reference to Mr. Ravenscroft's motion that amended rules should be made for giving greater publicity than hitherto to measures under the consideration of the Legislature and for affording the public every opportunity of considering them carefully and expressing an opinion upon them before they are passed into law, that the suggestion is very good, but the translations of legislative bills are generally made in harsh, inappropriate and dry language, and consequently few persons read them through; they ought to be clothed in plain and attractive language, and their objects and reasons ought to be given in a few plain words so as to be easily comprehensible. Sir James regretted that it was very difficult to secure due publicity to legislative measures among the people; but if the translations were made in fluent words and were distributed with newspapers and posted in conspicuous localities in different towns they would be extensively known. It is also to be hoped that sufficient time will be allowed to the public to consider the bills and to express their opinions thereon. It is gratifying that the Provincial Roads Bill has been passed into law. It was surprising that the Honourable Ráo Sáheb Mandlik considered the measure unnecessary; it looks awkward that the inhabitants of towns or cities should use roads constructed from funds contributed by villagers without paying anything towards their maintenance.

Local Self-government.

A suggestion regarding the extension of the scheme of local self-government to the Bombay Municipality.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 28th January, referring to the discussion in the Bombay Municipal Corporation regarding the extension of local self-government in the city, observes:—The present opportunity is favourable to expound the views prevalent in intelligent circles of the Native community on this subject. This question of extension must be broadly divided into two parts, (1) constitution of the local corporation, and (2) powers of the same. These divisions are comprehensive and embrace numerous minor details. We only take up the first part and subdivide it into two, (a) extension of franchise and (b) the number and distribution of seats. We take the latter first. The question may be asked whether the future corporation shall consist of 64 members, or more or less. We are of opinion that the number needs judicious increase to correspond with the population of the city. In suggesting 75 to be the number, we hope we may not be considered either extravagant or radical. Out of these 75 members let the rate-payers elect 45 representatives, the bench of Justices of the Peace may be empowered to nominate 25, and the Government 5. The cardinal point urged in Lord Ripon's May resolution and so often reiterated is the gradual withdrawal of all officials from local bodies for self-government. The smaller the official element in the local corporation, the better for its efficiency, for it is now acknowledged that the city is well advanced in the art of self-government. We have here an intelligent public managing its own affairs, who aided by the voice of the press, both English and vernacular, will always be able to check any irregularities or vagaries which the new corporation may indulge in. Another reason is that the conferring of substantial powers on local bodies will in a given number of years inspire the people in general with more public spirit and self-reliance. If public spirit is to receive a fresh stimulus and self-reliance a larger scope, it is manifest that there should be as little dependence on official assistance as possible. The third reason is the mischief we have often marked arising from the existence of the official element. The misappropriation of the sum of Rs. 15,000 towards the expenses of the Contagious Diseases Act and the enormous outlay on the new "scientific" drainage scheme are entirely owing to the preponderance of the official element in our past corporations. If the public spirit of our citizens is to have full and free play and their self-reliance scope for natural development, then there can be no two opinions as to the desirability of curtailing as far as practicable the number of Government servants in the corporation. It is said that sometimes the composition of the corporation may be such that some eminent Native or European gentleman may be left out in the cold. In such a case Government would soon repair the omission. The plea is tenable to a certain degree, but instances of such omission will be rare, and it is for this very object that we propose that Government should have the right to nominate five persons. But even here the danger is that Government may fail to do its duty. It may run counter to popular opinion and refuse to nominate persons who may have been accidentally left out by rate-payers and the Justices. We hope we have therefore given sufficient reasons for limiting the number of persons who should be appointed by Government in the new corporation to be called into existence under Lord Ripon's scheme.

The Samsher Báhádur (99) of the 26th January says that if there be any truth in the statement that the Bombay Local Self-government Bill has been forwarded to the Government of India for being at once passed into law, the step is inconsistent with the desire expressed by the Viceroy in the matter of securing due publicity in legislation. It is necessary that public opinion should be elicited on this important measure, and even if the bill be passed in June or July it would not much matter. But it is necessary that the public should be allowed time to have its say regarding the new constitution to be conferred on this Presidency.

Says that the Local Self-government Bill should not be hastily passed into law.

The Arunodayá (13) of the 28th January, while referring to the provisions of the Bengal Local Self-government Bills, expresses its disapproval of the provision which enacts that the local committee will execute all public works under the superintendence of the Executive Engineer as is done by contractors under the present system. This assimilation of the position of the committees to that of contractors is calculated to frustrate the object of the new scheme, inasmuch as men having a fitness for the work will not volunteer to serve on them. The Arunodayá takes this opportunity of expressing its regret that the Bombay bills should yet be nowhere, and surmises that their provisions have not yet met with the approval of the Supreme Government.

Makes remarks on the Bengal Local Self-government Bills.

The Dhárwár Vritt (21) of the 25th January is informed that Government have recently negatived a proposal that the division of a municipality into wards should be based on considerations of castes and races, and that they have also suggested the advisability of having at least two voters for a population of hundred souls. Calculating the number of voters at 3 per cent. of the population Dhárwár should have 800 voters, while it appears that at present there have been only 485 persons declared eligible to vote. It is therefore just that the president of the municipality should recast the results already arrived at and devise means for increasing the number of voters as directed in para. 15 of the September resolution of the Bombay Government. In the same manner the number of voters at Hubli, which is at present calculated at 350 while the population of the town is nearly the same as that of Dhárwár, should be increased. It is said that Hubli has been divided into 8 wards, but it is not a very satisfactory arrangement. The number of wards should be equal to the number of members to be elected by the voters. The Vritt invites the attention of the authorities to the above suggestions, and requests that every attempt be made to have the lists of voters published by the middle of the current month to allow of the business of the election of members being managed satisfactorily.

Makes certain suggestions regarding the number of voters in the towns of Dhárwár and Hubli.

Education.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 29th January reviews the report of the Department of Public Instruction for the year 1881-82, and remarks in limine that the report is defective in an important respect as it does not deal with the defects in the system of education and their remedies, and that the information therein contained is not wholly reliable as it only embodies the views of European Government officers assisted by their Native subordinates, whose views are generally moulded by those of their superiors. It is very satisfactory that the number of schools in the Presidency has increased, but it will take years for the number to reach the proportions necessary for the whole population. There are many villages without schools notwithstanding their considerable contributions to the local fund revenue, and this state of things is unintelligible. If the number of boys that can attend schools in such villages is small, there is no reason why that number should be debarred from the benefit of education when they contribute in a considerable measure towards its expenses. It is also not very clear why Government officers should have the discretion of allowing a school to a particular village though it be at its own cost. Complaints have been numerous regarding the undue severity observed in giving grants-in-aid to private institutions, and it is proper that this policy should be reconsidered. Such institutions deserve encouragement, as they are the earnest of the future independence of the people in regard to educational matters, and this forms an important factor of the material prosperity of the country. It is said that the examination of candidates for Matriculation at different stations is attended with a difference in the tests adopted at different places, and that this leads to a falling off in the number of successful candidates. The high fees charged in the colleges have practically shut the doors of higher education against the poorer classes, who are therefore obliged to seek for employment as their means of livelihood. This circumstance serves to retard the progress of liberal education in the country, which is in no way a desirable result. As Government have declared it their object to diffuse higher education, it is not just that students should be diverted from their laudable object of availing themselves of college education by prohibitive fees, and Government should consider the advisability of reducing the present rates and also of admitting free students on a larger scale. The pecuniary loss to Government from such a measure would be a hundred times compensated by the edification of the masses. Night schools appear to be progressing satisfactorily, but it deserves consideration whether their advantages should not be extended to villages. The amount spent during the year under review for the encouragement of vernacular literature is smaller than in the previous year, but it is not known whether this was on account of fewer works having been submitted for Government patronage or that many were undeserving of it. Mr. Maráthe's translations of Science Primers are in many places unintelligible, and it is very strange that neither the translator nor his patrons should have seen this. The school-books for girls are the same as those for boys, and it is a matter of regret that no attempt is made or encouraged to edit a set of school-books for girls embodying the topics that are most familiar to them. It is to be hoped that the above suggestions will receive the earnest consideration of Government and the educational authorities.

Comments on the report of the Department of Public Instruction for 1881-82.

Comments in connection with Mr. West's paper on education.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 28th January, in writing on that portion of Mr. West's paper on education which deals with high and secondary education, subscribes to every word of Mr. West when he urges that a radical change is needed in the system of high education as at present obtaining in colleges, which is nothing but superficial. But there is even greater necessity for a complete reform in the system of secondary instruction than in that of high education. When all the defects and deficiencies which Mr. West has so trenchantly analysed are considered, there is no other conclusion than the one he has drawn, viz., the need for a thorough revision and reconstruction of the system now in vogue. The energies of school-masters are at present wholly centred in the passing of boys at the entrance examination. They are not to blame for this, for the Matriculation has for years past been made the passport for admission to Arts colleges as well as to Government service. Properly speaking, secondary instruction should have three objects in view, (1) the preparation of boys for the University and the professions to be reached only through the University, (2) a course of technical instruction, such as is given in the Poona College of Science, and (3) instruction in ordinary business. So long, however, as the present system is pursued, there is little chance that any attention will be paid by school-masters to the first two objects. But it is to be hoped that the Education Commission will consider the points elicited by Mr. West. As to the entrance examination, it is urged that even now it is far from satisfactory in its results. Four reasons are assigned, which, based as they are on Mr. West's practical experience as Vice-Chancellor, will be readily accepted as sound. It is evident that a thorough reform in the method of secondary instruction is both necessary and expedient. Mr. West here agrees with Mr. Oxenham that there should be a bifurcation. Public schools should be so constituted as to render them capable of imparting technical education without interfering in the course of preparation for the Matriculation Examination. Both these views ought to be maintained in the system of instruction imparted in Government schools; and unless this is done, we are far from seeing an improved tone of the University.

We shall have then a smaller number of passed boys in the Arts colleges, but of greater intelligence,—boys who will be able to follow their teachers and also make good use of their heads. We may have at the same time a goodly number who will be induced to pursue their special bent and adopt either banking, mercantile or other industrial line as may suit their taste. From this bifurcation in our secondary system of instruction and from a class being opened to afford practical training to those who take to teaching, much good may be expected. Add a Central Board of Education, with certain powers as to regulation of studies, inspection, allocation of funds, and we may see as good a system of secondary education in the country as is rendered necessary by the growing requirements of the people at large.

Prays for the establishment of an engineering and a medical school at Surat.

The Surat Akhbár (70) of the 29th January says that though Surat is not inferior to Poona or Ahmedabad in any respect, it has neither an Arts nor an Engineering college, nor a Medical school as possessed by these cities. The writer prays Government to open an engineering school similar to that at Hyderabad and a medical school similar to that at Poona and Ahmedabad, by increasing the grant to the Kharshedji Fardunji Párekh School at Surat. The object of the founder of the Párekh school is not fulfilled by the present arrangements. Government ought therefore to confer this boon on Surat and raise it from its fallen condition.

Says that the present standard of English in the Matriculation Examination is not too low to be suitable for college instruction.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 28th January says:—In his Convocation speech, Sir James Fergusson directed the attention of the University to two important points in which the condition of the University might be looked upon as unsatisfactory, viz., firstly, the low total percentage results of the Matriculation, and secondly, those of the Previous Examination. There is no good reason at present for complaint against the Matriculation Examination on the ground that the standard of English is too low to be suitable for college instruction. This complaint arises from the Principals of Arts colleges only, and in this respect their own system of instruction is at fault and not the ignorance of students joining the colleges. The Matriculation Examination is wholly conducted in English, the examiners in English are all Europeans, and most of them professors of Arts colleges. In the English paper a large number of marks is allotted to English composition, besides an oral exmination in English is provided. Under these circumstances the European examiners have every opportunity of testing the candidates' knowledge of English, both orally and in writing. Besides, the same European examiners examine the candidates in history and geography, and they must naturally give their attention to the correctness of the language in which the historical portion of the paper is answered. It may be thought that as passing the Matriculation serves not only as a qualification for admission into a college but also for admission into Government service, the examiners are not strict enough in passing the candidates in English. Such motives can hardly find their way into the minds of the examiners. The Matriculation is essentially a University examination, and its standard must not be, and is not, lowered for any collateral purpose. The standard of English for public service is not in any way fixed, and if passing the Matriculation is made a necessary qualification, that standard must be the same as that required by the University. Candidates that pass the Matriculation join not only Arts colleges but also the Medical and the Science colleges and the Government Law School. In all these institutions instruction is imparted wholly through the medium of English, and there are subjects to understand which a good knowledge of English is necessary. But the principals or professors in these latter institutions have not raised any complaint about the incapacity of the candidates. These institutions, in which English is never taught as a subject, pass however a very creditable number of students in their University examinations, which are all conducted in English. If there was then any truth in the complaints of the Principals of the Elphinstone and the Deccan Colleges regarding insufficient knowledge of English of the candidates who join these institutions, the first institution that could be expected to complain of and show bad results would be the Government Law School in the Jurisprudence Examination.

Disapproves of the Convocation speech of Sir James Fergusson.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 28th January says :—Sir James Fergusson's Convocation address was disappointing. Not that we cared for any very eloquent or elaborate discourse from the Chancellor. Nature has not meant him either for a philosopher or for a public speaker. But His Excellency is an experienced and well-meaning politician and could have made up in matter what was wanting in manner. Perhaps the best remark that he made was in connection with the results of the entrance examination. He appeared to have carefully conned the statistics of this examination for the past three years, and we think very few would differ from the conclusions he formulated. Private teachers who send almost one-third of the aggregate number of candidates for Matriculation must profit by these observations. We must differ from the Gujaráti dailies, which opine that the failure of a large number of boys is to be attributed to the cramming system necessitated by the Matriculation standard. No University with a sense of its responsibility to maintain a fair standard of scholarship can lower the programme of studies required for the entrance examination. Euclid and general knowledge papers may be modified. But there is little room for further lowering the standard. It would be wrong indeed if the University were to be content with a bare pass result alike detrimental to her dignity and character and prejudicial to the cause of high education. There is cause neither for rejoicing nor regret in the point touched by His Excellency regarding the percentage of graduates in Government service. We regret Sir James marred his speech, commonplace as it was, by the remarks made at its conclusion. We have observed that of late His Excellency either seems to think too much of himself or that he allows himself to become the spokesman of irresponsible wire-pullers who hold peculiar views on certain questions. First, there was that ill-fated second paragraph in the September resolution on local self-government. Again, the other day he uttered something at Dr. Blanc's lecture which he had much better have left unsaid. And now within a week, we regret we have again to take exception to his uncalled for observations on religious neutrality. It was unfortunate for the head of the Government to speak in one breath of religious neutrality and in the same breath to inculcate dogmatic views with a vigour worthy of a better cause. The controversy in point has been knocked on the head by the unanimous testimony of the most authoritative witnesses examined by the Educational Commission in all parts of the country. To override this overwhelming and conclusive evidence and give vent to personal views or views inspired by interested parties is not consistent with the dignity of the Chancellor. His Excellency is entitled to hold his own opinion on the subject; but he lacked the judgment and accuracy necessary for a statement of this character, and the Convocation was the last place for such a statement. The charge of irreligiousness is not borne out by actual facts. It has had existence only in the imagination of the missionaries. Since he has attacked the professorial staff in this manner he ought now to be prepared to stand the recoil of his own arguments. For the sake of that "religious neutrality" it was advisable that, as a Governor, he should have refrained from imputing motives to a class of officers who have done more than Revenue Collectors, Judges and other members of the administration to inspire Natives with higher ideas of life and citizenship, and whose pride is to inculcate in them a spirit of toleration and free inquiry. All honour to our enducationists! India has suffered enough from narrow dogma, and it is the aim of high education to fairly oppose dogma, so that the Native population may hold loftier views of government which aims at the greatest good of the greatest number. [The Native Opinion (9) of the 28th and the Indu Prakásh (8) of the 29th January in its English columns express similar sentiments.]

Approves of the remarks regarding religious teaching made by His Excellency the Governor at the last Convocation.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 29th January (Maráthi portion) is much gratified at the allusion made by His Excellency the Governor to the subject of religious teaching in Government colleges during his speech at the last University Convocation. The fact that His Excellency has evinced such an amount of interest in the subject guarantees the inference that he has had reliable information regarding the irreligious propensities of the educated classes of the present day. The general behaviour of the learned youths justifies the supposition that the majority of them have imbibed atheistic ideas and that those ideas are gradually gaining firm ground, and the question for consideration is whether these ideas can be traced to the instruction imparted by the college professors or to some other causes. The Indu is of opinion that the responsibility of the initiation and development of such ideas cannot be laid solely at the doors of the teachers. The Christian missionaries were the first to shake the religious faith of the Hindus, and the principle that with the progress of higher education scepticism steps in appears to have played not an unimportant part in bringing about the present state of things. The professors, however, cannot be allowed to go scot-free. Many of them, while teaching their classes, are often seen to deride religious dogmas, such as the existence of another world and the effects of good and bad deeds, and thus to infuse into their pupils a disbelief regarding them, though they may not make a direct attack on the truth or falsity of any particular religion or propound purely atheistic doctrines. University men can bear ample testimony to the above, and men who have spent a good many years of their lives in the Indian Universities and who can therefore speak with authority on the subject assert with much force that if the professors at colleges were really religious men, at least a moiety of the present educated classes would have been more religious and more prone to recognize the binding force of morality than they at present are. His Excellency remarked that Government would be bound to interfere in all cases in which dogmatic religious principles were imported into professorial teaching, and that under the auspices of the British Government instruction that was " opposed to those supernatural beliefs which actuated all religious organizations and which give to morality the support of the reliance on a higher power and the encouragement of immortal hopes " would not be tolerated. These remarks are very gratifying if there be any truth in them. History shows that under the present regime there do not exist the same safeguards that existed during the administration of the East India Company against the immoral conduct of Government servants; nay, the restrictions are disappearing day by day, and there is no knowing to what extremity matters will tend. It is the general rule that the lower classes follow the example set them by their superiors, and the English are the models of the present day. The natives of India have adopted many of the English social manners and customs, and there is nothing strange in their imitating their teachers in scoffing at and deriding religious and theistic dogmas and in advocating scepticism. If India in her present backward state of civilization has imbibed a tincture of atheism, it is very difficult to conceive the effect that a civilization of the French and American type will produce on her religious faith. There are reasons to believe that even in advanced countries like England, France and America great caution is exercised in securing religious men for the work of training the youth, and it is all the more necessary that similar precautions should be observed in this country. The evils of atheism can be very well gathered from the example of France, and it is now assumed on all hands that the existence of a religion is a sine quâ non of a good government. If so, it is imperatively necessary that some means should be devised for preventing the propagation of scepticism, and they are no other than the appointment as professors of men who can imbue the minds of their pupils with religious ideas and who can inculcate the necessity of following one's own professions. [The Dnyánodayá (6) of the 1st February also approves of His Excellency's remarks and takes the public press to task for its adverse criticism. The Yajdán Parast (110) of the 28th January advocates the establishment of a middle class examination as advocated by Professor Oxenham, and expresses its approval of His Excellency's remarks regarding the observance of religious neutrality in the instruction imparted in colleges. The Gujaráti (85) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Makes remarks on the Chancellor's address at the late Convocation of the Bombay University.

With reference to Sir James Fergusson's address at the late Convocation of the Bombay University, the Lok Mitrá (69) of the 28th January observes that the speech was not a successful effort. He might have very well enlightened the public on the question of education generally as now imparted in State schools and colleges. The occasion was a most appropriate one. Be the cause what it may, we can only express our regret at the omission. His Excellency expatiated on the unsatisfactory character of the results of the entrance examination. That a great number of candidates who present themselves for the examination are raw and barely qualified to pass has been a standing complaint of the University authorities. Mr. West in his able paper on education has very pointedly brought this matter to the notice of Dr. Hunter and his colleagues. That as many as 548 of the candidates that presented themselves at the last entrance examination held certificates of private tuition is by itself a cause for congratulation, as it is an indication of the great desire for education prevailing among the masses. But at the same time His Excellency was quite right in remarking that it were better that private energy of this sort should direct its attention in future to a more solid grounding of the candidates, especially in English, with the view to passing a larger number creditably. It is to be earnestly hoped that private tutors will take to heart the very valuable advice offered by the Chancellor. The next point urged by His Excellency was the fact that about 42 per cent. of passed graduates have been employed in Government service. But Sir James Fergusson has arrived at this percentage on the basis of statistics for the last 12 years. It must be remembered that the first graduates passed so far back as 1862. For purposes of accurate analysis and guidance it is necessary to have the percentage of graduates from the year above stated. The time has come when educated Natives should be largely admitted into the State service. They ought to be given a greater share in the administration. Every year you import, as Mr. Dádábhái Nawroji justly observes in his note on education, raw English youths, brothers, cousins, nephews and other relatives of various degrees, in order that they may be provided with good fat berths, while the children of the soil—the very children whom the State has liberally educated—are left out in the cold. And then the cry is raised that educated Natives are as yet incapable of filling high administrative offices! Whilst our Universities are annually sending out their hundreds of graduates, the State is doing very little for them. It is urged that they should follow other walks of life. In England, in fact in Europe, there are the army, the navy and the church. Thousands join one or other of these services. Educated Natives of India have no such openings. It may be urged that there are the professions of law and medicine, but both these professions are now overstocked. The large numbers who have already taken to them are sufficiently indicative of the fact that educated Natives are actually working in that direction. But after all there yet remain a large number who find no vocation at all. Private enterprise has not yet developed to any appreciable degree so as to bring into requisition a great number of educated Natives. And so long as the poverty of India continues, and so long as there is no accumulation of capital, you cannot expect that development of private enterprise which the Government of Lord Ripon is doing so much to encourage.

Makes remarks upon the Chancellor's address at the last Convocation of the Bombay University.

Alluding to the same subject the Bombay Chronicle (66) of the 28th January supports the proposal made by Professor Oxenham for the establishment of a middle class examination as the surest means of doing away with the extensive failures that present themselves year after year at the Matriculation Examination. Adverting to the Chancellor's remarks on the secular character of State education, the Chronicle expresses sentiments similar to those of the Indian Spectator (quoted above). His Excellency made a reference to the possibility of important recommendations being made by Dr. Hunter's Commission with regard to the University course. But as stated by His Excellency, the consideration of the University teachings is expressly excluded from the scope of enquiry and the subject of report of the Commission. Moreover it has been often proved that high education upon the present system is very popular, and any arbitrary change in the manner or substance would prove exceedingly distasteful to the public, unless the proposals for the same be first submitted to the crucial test of public opinion, and the sanction of the University authorities be obtained for their adoption. The faint alarm sounded by His Excellency has already made a stir amongst the educated classes of the Natives, who are afraid lest some sort of surprise of a disagreeable character may be in store for them, the only justification for which may be nothing better than the information given to the Commission regarding the University course by some witnesses when making statements on points collateral to those forming the strict subject of its enquiry. But they have confidence in the Viceroy's liberal policy, and expect that nothing of the kind will occur. His Excellency's impressive appeal to the wealthy and generous-hearted Natives to make pecuniary grants for the encouragement of physical and experimental sciences ought to be liberally responded to.

Agrees with His Excellency the Governor that the unsatisfactory nature of the Matriculation and the Faculty of Arts Examinations is owing to imperfect teaching and indiscriminate selection.

Alluding to the remarks of His Excellency the Governor during his speech at the last University Convocation regarding the unsatisfactory nature of the result of the Matriculation Examination, the Kesari (32) of the 30th January observes that the examination of the present day is not only not stiff but is easier than those of former years, and that the standard of other examinations in the Faculty of Arts has also deteriorated of late. The large number of failures in all these examinations can be traced to one and the same cause, viz, that the teachers in high schools and the professors in colleges do not faithfully discharge their duties and do not exercise much discrimination in the selection of candidates for presentation.

Municipalities.

Says that the members of the Bombay Town Council should receive no remuneration for their services.

With reference to the suggestion that Town Councillors should no longer be paid, the Indian Spectator (1) of the 28th January says:—Payment was no doubt necessary in the beginning, but it is no longer expedient. It is quite true that if a work is to be well done it must be well paid for. But it is equally true in the management of public affairs that that work is best done which is done without wages. If the worthy Town Councillors are willing to be considered so many municipal servants of the lower grade, they are welcome. But a paltry sum of a hundred and fifty rupees a month to gentlemen in easy circumstances simply detracts from their public worth. Altogether the non-official members at least may like the suggestion and the officials may follow. If this arrangement could be brought about, the result would be a saving of nearly fifteen hundred rupees a month to the municipality though a trifling loss to individual councillors. The money saved could be applied to some useful or charitable work. There is the proposed leper hospital, for one. The spirit of the local self-government scheme is to evoke voluntary action in the management of civic affairs, and this arrangement would be a happy beginning in that direction.

A small-pox hospital for Bombay.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 28th January says:—It is well known that the Bombay Government deducts Rs. 15,000 for working the Contagious Diseases Act from its annual contribution towards the police expenditure incurred by the municipality. Now though Dr. Sydney Smith, the Port Health Officer, has often applied for a boat, a steam launch and some money to prevent vessels entering the harbour, especially pilgrim ships, from disembarking passengers suffering from infectious diseases, and though Dr. Weir, the Health Officer, has supported the application, the Local Government has studiously refused the request. Which danger is greater, small-pox or the contagious disease? In the one case Government pleads an absolute necessity for the health of the city to deduct a large sum. And yet for the purpose of preventing wholesale infection by small-pox it refuses to spend a single rupee! Cannot the Bombay Municipal Corporation, in its turn, divert some monies it may have annually to pay to Government to the keep of a small-pox hospital in the city? It can safely employ the tactics Government have employed in the matter of the loathsome Contagious Diseases Act.

Criticizes the reply of Government to the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha on the Poona market question.

The Dnyán Prakásh (7) of the 29th January animadverts on the conduct of Government in having sanctioned the project for the construction of a central market at Poona against the representations of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha. The decision of Government in this case betrays a thorough lack of judgment. If the Government considered the question at issue so very easy of solution, as is evident from their reply, it is not very clear why they should have taken such a long time in coming to a decision. It is very disgraceful that the Government should not have been able to see at the outset whether the prayer of the Sárvajanik Sabha was or was not consistent with the view expressed by themselves and the Government of India in the matter of local self-government, and that they should have required the assistance of the Collector and the Commissioner to tell them this. Looking, however, to the reasons adduced by the Bombay Government in declining to interfere with the action of the Poona Municipality, a little consideration shows that they are absurd and childish. It is true that the Local and Supreme Governments have expressed their opinions in favour of conferring extensive powers on municipal bodies, but the cardinal point for consideration is whether it is the present or the future committees that are to have the extended powers of self-government. A careful perusal of the resolutions of the Local and Supreme Governments shows that they contain no allusion to the bestowal of additional powers on the committees at present in power, and that they apply solely to the future municipalities. If it is sufficient for the purposes of local self-government to confer enhanced powers on the existing bodies, what is the object of the movement at present apparent in various places for the formation of new committees composed of members elected by the people? The present committees are made up of members appointed by Government, who are generally under the influence of officials, and the investment of such members with extensive powers will, instead of contributing to the happiness of the people, serve to involve them in miseries. Even supposing, however, for the sake of argument that the principles of local self-government are applicable to the committees at present in power, it does not appear to be the intention of the Supreme Government to debar the Local Government from correcting the errors of a municipal committee. On the contrary, the Government of India have repeatedly affirmed the power of the Local Government to interfere in the affairs of local committees whenever they are convinced of their impropriety. It is clear from the reply of Government to the memorial of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha that the former hold that it is not the intention of the Supreme Government to allow any interference with the working of the local committees; but this view is incorrect. The chief point which Government should have considered in the present case was whether the principle embodied in paragraph 26 of their September resolution had an application to local fund committees only or to municipal committees also, and if so, whether the conduct of the Poona committee was in consonance therewith. These points should have engaged the attention of the Bombay Government in dealing with the question at issue, but it was unfortunately not the case. The drift of their reply unmistakeably indicates that the principle above referred to does apply to municipalities, and that the Bombay Government are not unwilling to admit that though the action of the Poona committee was in contravention of the principle, it was to be supported as it had the previous indirect approval of Government, and as they could find no other means to satisfy the aims of justice they resorted to the shift of using the plea they have used for declining to interfere. Had it been otherwise there was no necessity for taking umbrage at this shift. [The Mahrátta (2) of the 28th, the Kesari (32) of the 30th, and the Dnyán Chakshu (25) of the 31st January express similar sentiments.]

Does not approve of the action of some of the Municipalities in undertaking additional responsibilities.

The same of the 1st February states that the action of the Bombay Government in the matter of the Poona market has served to induce other municipal committees to add to their already existing burdens. The Sátára Municipality has increased the house-tax with the view of increasing its revenues, and the municipalities at Wái, Rahimatpur, Tásgaon and others have followed suit. This sudden change of policy is also observable in the Talegaon, Junnar and other municipalities in the district of Poona. The committee at the last-named place has sanctioned the raising of a loan of Rs. 33,000 for the construction of a reservoir. The question therefore naturally arises, what must be the cause of this simultaneous activity in the several municipalities? The Bombay Government have said in paragraph 55 of their September resolution that "the simultaneous introduction of the scheme of local self-government and of additional taxes to provide larger funds for the operations of the representative committees is not likely to render the new system highly popular," and this sudden activity lends, in the opinion of some people, the colour of truth to the suspicion that it is intended to make the new scheme highly unpopular by increasing the burden of taxation on the people. The Prakásh is willing to discard the supposition that the activity is intentional, but it cannot help asserting that the conduct of the municipalities will not fail to produce the effect above referred to. The fundamental cause of this policy, however, seems to be this. The Bombay Government have in paragraph 55 of their resolution above referred to expressed a misgiving regarding the willingness of the coming municipalities to impose new taxes. This expression of the view of Government has led some members of the present municipal committees to assume airs and to assert that if they omitted to make the best of their time by initiating works of public utility their projects would ever remain unexecuted by their successors, who according to the opinion of the present members would not be men endowed with eminent parts and public spirit like themselves. This view, it is hardly necessary to say, is ridiculously narrow, and though it has been encouraged by the Local Government, it is not countenanced by the Government of India, who are evidently of opinion that the retiring municipalities should not undertake any additional responsibilities on the eve of their tenure of office.

Municipal grievances of the people of Parel.

The Jáme Jamshed (89) of the 29th January complains that the Jijibhá Dádábhái lane at Parel is very dirty, and, to make matters worse, night-soil baskets are exposed in this lane to dry. The road from the Parel Station of the B. B. & C. I. Railway as far as Murárji Gokuldás Mill is scarcely watered, and the road leading from the same station to the town of Parel is badly lighted. There are only three gas lights on this road, on which very often, particularly during the rains, serpents and other venomous insects are to be met with. Water collects on the roads in the monsoon. The attention of the corporation is requested to the above grievances.

Does not approve of the enhancement of import duties in the town of Sholápur.

The Kalpataru (30) of the 28th January says that the enhancement of import duties by the municipality of the town of Sholápur has served to create dissatisfaction among the trading classes. The enhancement has made the market very dull and has thus inflicted a heavy pecuniary loss on merchants. The municipality declines, and with somejustice, to revise their orders until it is proved to its satisfaction that there has actually been a falling off in the import trade. But as the trading community have not the wisdom to convince the committee with their arguments, the latter would do well to give a patient ear to their representations and to scrutinize them. The committee has raised the import duties with the object of making up for the loss entailed on its revenues by the operation of the rules regarding the refund of export duties in certain cases; but the restrictions imposed on the export trade are so stringent that it is hardly possible that the actual loss will be equal to a fourth of the estimated amount. Under these circumstances it is not right to increase the burden of import duties to make up such a paltry amount.

A complaint against the Ahmedabad Municipality.

The Hitechhu (68) of the 1st February complains of the arbitrary conduct of some of the officers of the local municipality. As the municipal commissioners have not the courage to oppose their president, it is no wonder that he acts arbitrarily. Three shops of a Nágar merchant are situated at the mouth of the Champol road, and the level of the road leading to them was raised so very high that the doors of the shops were rendered very nearly useless. Not satisfied with this, about four men were sent to fix boards across the doors. These boards were again removed in the night. It is disgraceful that municipal officers should behave in this way. Much pressure was exercised to compel the vegetable sellers to engage stalls in the new market constructed by the municipality, and it is said that some were even threatened with criminal prosecutions. It is not surprising that ignorant persons should be afraid of such threats. Government should find out the person who had the audacity to fix boards across the doors of the shops on the Champol road, and to make an example of him by punishing him.

Native States.

The Samsher Báhádur (99) of the 26th January, in referring to the published official account of the tour of His Excellency Sir James Fergusson to some of the Native States of the Bombay Presidency, observes that it is simply exaggerated. It is to be regretted that even official reports should not be free from undue colouring. The tour of His Excellency to Káthiáwár, Cutch, Idar and the Marátha States has not resulted in any appreciable good. On the contrary it has involved these States in debt. No noteworthy deed of public utility has been done except the opening of some water-works in the Marátha States and the opening of the Bhávnagar-Gondal Railway. The same was the case with Cutch. Such tours do no good either to the public or the States concerned. Native Princes are delighted at the praises lavished on them by His Excellency the Governor in his speeches, and for this gratification only they spend thousands of rupees.

Disapproves of the way in which gubernatorial tours to Native States are at present undertaken.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 3rd February, writing from Jeypur under date the 22nd ultimo, states that in the town of Bisáu the rebels have become more powerful than before. The State authorities cannot put them down, and the people are much harassed. Last week the rebels compelled the shop-keepers to close their shops and suspend all business, and it is said that they severely beat a person. The people, being much annoyed by frequent occurrences of a similar kind, have begun to emigrate to the neighbouring villages. The British Government ought to relieve the unfortunate people from the grasp of the rebels, for the Jeypur State is not likely to do so. The same writer, while writing on the 29th ultimo, observes that the rebels have not allowed shops to be opened for the last six days, and all business has been closed, and they give various threats to the people. The officers of the Kacheri of the Jeypur State at the town of Jujnu attempted to induce Jodi Thákráni and other rebels to permit the opening of shops, but Jodi Thákráni would not consent unless all old servants of the State were sent out of the town and new servants were employed by her in their places.

Prays the British Government to relieve the people of Bisáu in the Jeypur State from the oppression of the rebels who have taken possession of the town.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 29th January says:—It is said that His Highness is about to visit Calcutta to meet the Viceroy. At that meeting everything with regard to the more important details of the administration at Baroda is likely to be settled. Lord Ripon's good sense and the Gáekwád's education are a sufficient guarantee that what will be settled there will be satisfactory. But as things stand at present, there is hardly any ground for the allegation that His Highness goes wrong. He has begun very well indeed, and some of his acts are highly creditable. The scheme which he has now taken in hand for the education of the Sardárs ought to be a satisfactory reply to the allegation. His Highness has already established a class for the purpose, and, not contented with this, he exerts his personal influence over the Sardárs and induces them by advice and entreaties to send their sons to that class. His subjects on the other hand are not neglected. During his recent tour he made himself accessible to all classes and allowed them every opportunity to state to him their grievances and wants. It is also reported that His Highness means to give his subjects the benefit of the local self-government scheme of Lord Ripon. These are all good signs, and it is evident that His Highness is bent upon doing everything to make his administration a source of prosperity and contentment. The projects he has in hand are doubtless ambitious, and in carrying them out His Highness will certainly require the co-operation of an able and experienced Diwán. But as yet nothing has happened to justify the complaint that he means to rely upon his own will and set aside the advice of his more experienced advisers.

Makes remarks on the administration of Baroda by the young Mahárája.

The Shiváji (55) of the 26th January says:—If there be any truth in the report published by the Bombay Gazette that the Gáekwád of Baroda intends to confer extensive powers on his subjects in conformity with the Viceregal scheme of local self-government, His Highness has indeed set a very noble example to his brother princes.

Approves of the contemplated introduction of the local self-government scheme into Baroda territory.

Though it is very doubtful whether the people in the Baroda territory are competent to wield the powers thus conferred upon them, still having regard to the circumstance that the authorities giving the powers and those seeing that they are properly exercised are identical, the contemplated plan would not seem to meet with much obstruction. If the elder prince of Indore follows the example of the Gáekwád, there is reason to think that the oppression said to exist in the Holkar's territory will disappear.

Suggests certain reforms in the administration of the Native States of Káthiáwár.

The Vartmán Sár (107) of the 30th January, in a communicated article headed "Cries for Justice from Káthiáwár, No. III.," says that justice is not properly administered in that province and that the rich succeed in carrying their point. The Political Agent and his Assistant do not care to enquire into the grievances of the people and to protect their rights when they go on tour in the districts, but they form their impressions from outward pomp. The rules framed by Colonel Walker in 1807-8 are disregarded by them, for there is nobody to call them to account. The people of Káthiáwár are now quite tired of this state of things. The girássiás and the bháyáts subject to Native States appear to be greatly disaffected. The wrongs suffered by them at the hands of Native Princes, the Political Agency and the Rájasthánik Court have of late greatly multiplied and surpass those suffered by the people of Káthiáwár. With a view to relieve the people from their present hardships the local Political Department ought to be abolished, the people should be made amenable to British law, and the High Court should be granted jurisdiction over them. The contradictory rules framed by the Political Department ought to be done away with and the right of appeal from the decision of Native States should be recognized. It is also necessary that the people should be allowed to complain directly to British officers against the misdeeds of Native Princes and their favourite kárbháris. The writer prays the Bombay Government and Lord Ripon to redress the grievances of the people of Káthiáwár and thereby earn the blessings of lákhs of poor and distressed inhabitants.

Questions the authority of Colonel Barton to intercept a letter addressed to the Rána of Porbandar.

The Samsher Báhádur (99) of the 26th January is not prepared to accept the various statements made regarding the alleged transfer of Colonel Barton from Káthiáwár to Aden. But the statement that Colonel Barton intercepted a registered letter addressed to the Rána of Porbandar by his agent gives rise to the question whether a Political Agent is empowered to intercept letters! The Political Agent can do so in times of trouble, but what authority has he to intercept letters in times of peace, and especially those addressed to an independent prince?

Complains of the oppression exercised by the Police Superintendent of Gondal and Shirastedár Báwa Miya.

The Hitechhu (68) of Ahmedabad of the 1st February gives the text of two petitions addressed to Major Nutt by Vachhráj Velji, inhabitant of Gondal, and by Dáhya Andarji, inhabitant of Dhoráji, complaining of the oppression exercised on them by Miya Ismáel, the Police Superintendent of Gondal, and Shirastedár Báwa Miya, and remarks that the accounts of the oppression exercised by the Mahomedan officials of Gondal are very horrible. It is very painful that Major Nutt and Colonel Barton do not pay attention to these matters. Why does not the Bombay Government ask for an explanation from these two officers? The people of Káthiáwár were glad at the rumoured transfer of Colonel Barton to Aden, but unfortunately the report does not appear to be correct. Government should enquire into the allegations made in the petitions referred to.

States the cause of the outlawry at present existing in Junágad.

The Samsher Báhádur (99) of the 26th January learns from a reliable source that the oppression of thieves and highwaymen has of late much increased in Junágad and that travellers have to suffer a great deal in consequence. About a thousand men of the Wágher class have collected in Gir and intend to do mischief. The people of Verával, Junágad and other places have taken fright. The people suppose that the elevation of Báhádurkhánji to the throne is the cause of these troubles. They complain of the injustice done in the matter of the supersession of the prince of Rádhanpur, who is said to be the rightful heir to the throne. The people of Junágad will manifest their feelings on this subject in a short time. Government ought to attend to this. It is not just to deprive the rightful heir of his rights. Government is still competent to do justice in the matter.

Berár Affairs.

Suggests the appointment of a commission to enquire into the causes of the prevalence of a severe type of small-pox.

The Pramod Sindhu (47) of the 29th January refers to the generally high rate of mortality in the town of Amráoti during the last two months, and enquires whether it is owing to some special causes or to the unsatisfactory nature of the statistics furnished by the department for the registration of births and deaths. The Sindhu also alludes to the prevalence of small-pox in the town, and suggests that the municipality will do well to appoint a commission consisting of Dr. Hume, the Civil Surgeon, and Mr. Khot, the manager of the newly started private dispensary, to enquire into the causes of the disease, to ascertain the number of persons that were attacked and the proportion thereof that suffered in spite of previous vaccination, and to suggest remedies for the alleviation of the effects of the epidemic. The report of this committee will point out the direction in which the municipality should work.

Complains of the neglect of the municipalities in Berár to frame bye-laws.

A correspondent of the Varhád Samáchár (60) of the 29th January complains that the municipalities in Berár have, notwithstanding the orders of the Resident based on the provisions contained in Section 14 of the Municipal Act, hitherto neglected to frame bye-laws and have been carrying on their business according to the rules that were circulated with the Act. The injustice of this procedure of the municipalities was recently brought to light in a case tried by a magistrate at Akola, and it is to be hoped that steps will soon be taken to remedy it.

RAOJI B. PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
10th February 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Abstract budget and the revised estimates of the Bombay Presidency: Comments on the — 5
Accidents: Suggestions for the improvement of the means of egress from factories and theatres to prevent — 9
Bávla: Hardships suffered by the people of — on the occasion of the visit of two Europeans to that village for pig hunting 11
Bombay land revenue system: A refutation of the statements made by Mr. Lee-Warner in his note on the — 5
Burma: Complications in — 3
Civil Service of India: Approval of the action taken by the Indian Association in the matter of representing the inconveniences of the present system of competitive examination for the — 4
Dhárwár District: A complaint regarding the bad state of roads and absence of bridges in the — 10
Indian affairs: Comments on the speech of Mr. Cross regarding — ... 3
Legislative Councils of India: Suggestions regarding the reconstitution of —
The Arunodayá 6
The Jáme Jamshed 7
The Shiváji 7
License Tax: Disapproval of the rumoured increase in the burden of the —. 8
Mhowra Bill Commission: Replies to some of the questions issued by the —. 8
Do. do. A suggestion for the appointment of a fresh commission 8
Newspaper postage: A complaint regarding — 10
Pier at Miré near Ratnágiri: An objection to the policy of making the local fund revenues pay for the construction of the — 9
Postal arrangements: Suggestions for an increase in the subordinate establishment of the Postal Department of the city of Bombay ... 10
Post office at Málvan: Location of the — 11
Reforms in administration: Disapproval of the tone of the Conservative papers denouncing the — introduced by Lord Ripon 7
Russia in Central Asia: Advance of — 3
Salt: Disapproval of an order said to have been issued to the effect that no persons below the height of 5 feet and 5 inches should be employed in the — Department 11
Sassoon Hospital at Poona: Want of a ward for patients affected with infectious diseases in the — 11
Telephones: Disapproval of the abolition of telegraphs and the substitution of — in Ratnágiri 10
Viceregal Legislative Council: Approval of the policy adopted by the Government of India in asking the public of Bengal to elect a member of the — 7
Widowhood among the Hindus: Necessity of special legislation for the suppression of enforced — 8

PART II.—Forest Laws—

Forest Act: A complaint regarding the oppressive working of the — ... 13
Forest laws: Prejudicial effects of — on the cultivation of the soil ... 12
Forests: Hardships caused by the policy of Government regarding — ... 12

PART III.—Legislation—

Bombay Legislative Council: Comments on certain legislative measures of the — 13

PART IV.—Local Self-government—

Local Self-government Bill: Disapproval of haste in the passing of the Bombay — 15
Do. do. Remarks on the Bengal — 15
Local self-government scheme: Extension to the Bombay Municipality of the — 14
Do. do. Suggestions regarding the number of voters in the towns of Dhárwár and Hubli 15

Page.

PART V.—Education—

Bombay University: Comments on Sir James Fergusson's speech at the recent Convocation of the—
The Bombay Chronicle 20
The Indian Spectator 18
The Indu Prakásh 18
The Kesari 21
The Lok Mitrá 19
The Mahrátta 17
Engineering and Medical School: Establishment at Surat of an— ... 17
Paper on education: Comments on Mr. West's— 16
Report of the Director of Public Instruction, Bombay: Comments on the— 15

PART VI.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad Municipality: A complaint against the— 23
Bombay Town Council: A suggestion for the non-payment of remuneration to the members of the— 21
Municipal responsibilities: Disapproval of increased — undertaken by some committees on the eve of retirement 22
Poona market: Criticism on the reply of Government to the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha on the question of the construction of the— ... 21
Parel: Grievances of the residents of— 23
Sholápur: Disapproval of the enhancement of import duties in— ... 23
Small-pox hospital for Bombay: A suggestion for a— 21

PART VII.—Native States—

Baroda: Introduction of the scheme of local self-government into— territory 24
Do. Remarks on the administration of— 24
Bisau, Jeypur: A prayer to the British Government to relieve the people of — from the oppression of rebels 24
Gondal: Oppression practised by the Police Superintendent and the Shirastedár at— 25
Junágad: Cause of the outlawry existing in— 25
Káthiáwár: Reforms in the administration of the Native States of— ... 25
Porbandar: A question regarding the authority of Colonel Barton to intercept a letter addressed to the Rána of— 25
Tours to Native States: Disapproval of the present manner of— ... 24

PART VIII.—Berár Affairs—

Municipalities in Berár: Neglect of the — to frame bye-laws ... 26
Small-pox at Amráoti: Appointment of a commission to enquire into the cause of the prevalence of— 26

RECEIVED
7 MAR 27
VIA BRINDISI

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERAR
For the Week ending 10th February 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
*3	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Do.	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
4	The Dín Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	925
5	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
6	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
7	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
8	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
9	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
10	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do.	600
11	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do.	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*12	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly	100
13	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
14	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
15	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
16	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
17	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do.	275
*18	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
19	„ Daivadnyă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
20	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Do.	Do.	500
21	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly	425
22	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
23	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
24	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
25	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
26	„ Hitechhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
27	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
28	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
29	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
30	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*31	„ Karnátak Mitră[4]	Belgaum	Do.	200
32	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	3,500
33	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
34	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
35	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
36	„ Mahárashtră Hitechhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
37	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
38	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
39	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
40	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly	700
41	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
42	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
43	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
44	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	250
45	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily	350
*46	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
47	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*48	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
49	„ Saddharm Díp	Alíbág	Do.	600
50	„ Satyă Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly	243
51	„ Satyă Sadan	Alíbág	Weekly	400
52	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
53	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly	275
*54	„ Sharabh	Alíbág	Weekly	200
55	„ Shiváji[3]	Poona	Do.	200
56	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
57	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
58	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

[1] Maráthi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles.
[4] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
59	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly	600
60	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly	250
61	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
62	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
63	„ Vicháráhil	Málvan	Do.	300
*64	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
65	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*66	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
67	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do.	400
68	„ Hitechhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
69	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	725
70	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
71	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
72	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
73	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
74	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
75	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
76	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
77	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	950
78	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
79	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
80	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
81	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
82	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do.	900
83	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Monthly	400
84	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
85	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*86	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
87	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*88	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
89	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
90	„ Kaira Vartmán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*91	„ Kaisar-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
92	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
93	„ Nágar Udayá	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
94	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
95	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
96	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
97	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
98	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
99	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
100	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	400
*101	„ Sauráshtrá Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
102	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*103	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
104	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
105	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár	Umreth	Fortnightly	62
*106	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
107	„ Vartmán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
108	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
109	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	300
110	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
111	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*112	„ Karnátak Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
	URDU.
*113	The Armagán	Bombay	Bi-weekly	200
114	„ Khayir Kháhe Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly	300
115	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
116	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases, an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out; and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well-known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Says that high judicial posts should be more largely filled by Natives than has been the case hitherto.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 4th February, in a communicated article headed "The Judicial Bench in the Bombay Presidency," says:—Although Sir James Fergusson referred to the elevated tone of morality pervading Native society, especially among Subordinate Judges and pleaders, and thought it unhappily necessary for him as Chancellor of the Bombay University to lecture professors of colleges for what seemed to him a dereliction of duty, His Excellency carefully omitted in his speech to refer either to the prospects of the graduates of the University or to any scheme intended for their material welfare, or more particularly to the now all-absorbing topic of local self-government. The silence was very unfortunate, for although it may be quite in accord with the feelings of the official class, it was not in keeping with the times. To show how much more remains to be done by Government for the pecuniary well-being of Native graduates and Native society generally we give their actual position on the Judicial Bench. Here the writer gives statistics showing the staff and pay of Judicial Officers in the Bombay Presidency, and proceeds:—If the officers of the province of Sind be included, it would appear that while about 38 European and Eurasian Judges cost Rs. 73,783 per month, i.e. 66·02 per cent. or Rs. 1,942 per head, 116 Native Judges cost Rs. 37,975 per month, i.e. 33·89 per cent. or Rs. 327 per head. Of the 116 Natives about 25 only are graduates of the University, and nearly 41 are invested with the power of Small Causes Court Judges for the trial of suits cognizable up to Rs. 50. About 20 graduates have been practising in the High Court or possess the High Court sanads at least. This is not quite as it should be. Without prejudicing the vested interests of the Civil Service, we must frankly state that as the difficulties regarding climate, language, feelings and social laws are insuperable to foreign judges, the services of the sons of the soil, educated sufficiently to be able to decide cases with impartiality and justice, should be freely utilized. It is not a question so much of race as of sound policy, and no Government anxious for its stability can overlook with safety the essential fact that no one likes to see his own property enjoyed by others in such a manner as to leave him but a small crust. In the present case a foreign judge draws almost six times more pay than his Native compeer for doing the same work. If discontent is not to be encouraged and the voice of the subject classes is to be properly heard, the interests of all would be best served by a more just apportionment of the posts in the gift of Government. Justice is daily growing more and more costly, and changes in laws more or less seriously affecting the economic condition of the people are due to the presence of the foreign judges and legislators. To remedy these and other evils and to be more in popular accord, Government would do well to take steps to modify the law which reserves such places to Civil Servants and to provide for the more extended use of Native talent. They can resolve not to indent for Civil Servants from England and can fill up vacancies as they occur by posting Natives of rank and ability on lower salaries, the object being both to secure economy and to extend the scope of the usefulness of the natives of India. It may be urged by some that the British have not come to India for mere airing; they must have a predominant share and voice as regards its income and administration. Need we reply that the cupidity of the ruling classes has been satisfied during the whole of the last century in multifarious ways, and that by surrendering a little to satisfy the ambition of the rapidly rising race of educated Natives the hold of the British will not suffer at all? Need we say that the gross revenue of British India rose from £10,425,000 in 1800-1 to £36,190,000 in 1859-60 and to £69,667,615 in 1879-80 or nearly seven times over, or that the national debt has increased from £15,612,000 in 1800-1 to £98,026,000 in 1859-60 and to £271,303,994 in 1879-80, i.e. nearly 18 times over? Is not the amount hitherto drained away sufficient? The establishment and other charges have been for years abnormally high, and the national patience should not be tried too much nor too long. This is being realized by all far-seing people here and in England, even by the autocratic Sir Richard Temple, now that he is out of office and his chances of being practically useful to the country which fed him so long are lessened. He now concedes that the claims of Natives are fair, but thinks that they should be allowed bit by bit to encourage hopefulness, which is the motive power of humanity.

Recommends the appointment of Civilians as Political Officers at Native Courts.

The Gujaráti (85) of the 4th February, in alluding to the discussion about the appropriateness of appointing Military Officers in political employment, observes that by change of circumstances they have become unfit to be entrusted with the supervision of Native States. Though Native Princes are ever ready to show deference to their Political Officers, yet military men act harshly towards them and give cause for discontent and dissatisfaction. The military Political Officer is very wilful and fond of flattery. He has proved a failure, and an experiment ought to be made of appointing Civilians to appointments in the Political Department.

Expense incurred by municipal bodies and private individuals on the occasion of the Governor's visit.

The A'ryávart (14) of 3rd February complains of the expense to which municipalities and private individuals are put when the Governor visits different places in the mofussil. The condition of the people is very bad, and it is made much worse by these gubernatorial tours. The Government is most unsparing in employing means for recovering its revenue and is very niggardly in granting remissions. This being the case, it is very astonishing that the same Government can allow municipal bodies to spend large sums of money on useless shows and entertainments on the coming of the Governor. Is loyalty to the paramount power measured by the amount of money which is squandered on preparations made in honour of the Governor's visit? The A'ryávart is surprised that Lord Ripon has not yet thought fit to put a stop to this kind of needless expenditure. It is to be hoped that His Excellency will now without delay direct his attention to the above subject.

Some remarks in connection with the Bombay Legislative Council.

In a paragraph headed "Public Opinion and Legislation," the Indu Prakásh (8) of the 5th February says:—Let us all congratulate the Government of Bombay on the happy change which has taken place in its Councils. Time was when the Legislative Council of Government consisted partly of intelligent and partly of ignorant non-officials. The intelligent portion used to take part in the debates, but they got snubbing for all that and were taught to imitate the blissful silence of their ignorant colleagues, who sat wondering what the farce meant. Sir Richard Temple is long since gone, and with him departed this tom-foolery of legislation. Sir James has not tried to imitate his predecessor except perhaps on one occasion, when he was gently angry at Sir Jamsetji for flying from the official standard in the matter of the A'bkári Bill. That was an error of judgment and His Excellency is not likely to repeat it. The proceedings of the last meeting of the Legislative Council open a new chapter in its history. It appears the official Councillors have begun to look into newspaper criticisms with care. This is as it should be.

Approves of the creation of a bench of Magistrates at Pandharpur for the trial of criminal cases.

The Arunodayá (13) of the 4th February approves of the creation of a bench of honorary Magistrates for the trial of criminal cases in the town of Pandharpur, and observes that it is unaccountable that this power with which the Legislature has armed Government should be so sparingly exercised. This is the first instance since the passing of Act X. of 1872 in which private individuals have been invested with magisterial powers. The British mode of administering justice is utterly unsuited to this country. It has been the means of deteriorating the condition of the population and of causing enmities between the different sections of the Indian community. The appellate courts cause unnecessary expense, and besides they are not wanted. It would be well if tribunals empowered to hear civil and criminal cases in the first instance were to decide them finally. The only defect in the constitution of the bench of Magistrates referred to above is that their decisions are not to be treated as final and that they can be reversed on appeal. After dwelling on the inutility and expensiveness of appellate courts in general, the Arunodayá says that in jury trials the opinions of juries are treated as absolutely final, and the same should be done with respect to the decisions of all courts of original jurisdiction. If this suggestion is acted upon the appellate courts might be abolished. Benches of justices should be established in different parts of the country for the trial of civil and criminal cases. It is to be hoped that Government will persevere in the policy which has been inaugurated at Pandharpur.

Points out the desirability of providing capacious means of ingress and egress in manufactories.

In alluding to the recent shocking accident at a wool factory at Pánjrápol, in Bombay, by which 23 human lives were lost, the Bombay Chronicle (66) of the 4th February points out how desirable it is that capacious means of ingress and egress should be provided in buildings in which large gangs of workmen are employed or great crowds congregate for business or pleasure. The attention of the Commissioner of Police and the Municipal Commissioner is requested to the subject, and it is suggested that steps should be taken in this direction at an early date. [The Rást Goftár (98) and the Yajdán Parast (110) of the 4th, and the Broach Samáchár (78) and the Deshi Mitrá (82) of the 8th February express similar sentiments.]

Prays Sir James Fergusson to show mercy to the convicts in the Surat riot cases of 1878.

The Samsher Báhádur (99) of the 2nd February, in referring to the liberation of the Wáhábi convicts and to the remission of a part of the sentence on Vrijeshji Maháráj, says that the mercy shown by Government in these cases is worthy of praise. The case of several unfortunate persons transported to the Andaman Islands for participation in the Surat riots of 1878 is not less deserving of mercy. Many innocent persons have suffered in these riots along with the guilty. The heavy punishment awarded to the accused was not reduced by the Government of the day. From the facts and evidence adduced in these cases, the people were of opinion that many if not all the accused had fallen victims to the oppression of the police. In the words of the Bombay Gazette, there was a reign of terror in Surat at that time. Dispensers of justice were terror-struck, and it is not surprising that heavy punishment should have been allowed to pass unnoticed at such a juncture. Many of the convicted persons were mere spectators of the scene. What could the poor persons know of law? They were unable to procure the necessary legal assistance owing to want of funds. The persons who administered justice at the time were much prejudiced. The unfortunate prisoners had also to suffer owing to the want of experience in some of the European officers of the manners and customs of the lower classes of Natives. The Samsher therefore recommends Sir James Fergusson to show mercy to the persons concerned in the Surat riots. It is true that the Wáhábis have undergone a long term of imprisonment, but the hardships suffered by the unlucky rioters at the hands of the police and the loss of money and reputation are not less worthy of consideration. A great portion of their term of imprisonment has moreover expired. Sir James Fergusson is a generous man, and if he is properly advised there is no reason to suppose that he will not remit the remaining portion of their sentence. The late Mr. Morárji Gokuldás and other influential gentlemen brought to the notice of Sir Richard Temple the unworthy conduct of the police in these cases and the hardships suffered by several innocent persons. Sir Richard Temple expressed his regret and intended sooner or later to redress the injury done to them. But his Indian career ended somewhat suddenly. If Sir James Fergusson examines the minute which Sir Richard Temple may have written in the Political Department regarding this affair, or if His Excellency takes the opinion of Native gentlemen of position or sends for an opinion of the High Court on the merits of these cases, he will find that the persons convicted in the Surat riots cases are really deserving of mercy.

Says that the District Magistrate of Poona and other local authorities should take measures to prevent indecent plays called chhakdas from being acted in the city of Poona.

The Poona Vaibhav (44) of the 4th February states that obscene performances called chhakdas are acted in the theatres in the city of Poona. In these performances indecent and filthy language calculated to lower the public morals is freely used before large audiences. It is strange that this public nuisance has not attracted the notice of the authorities. No time should be lost in preventing the acting of these kinds of plays. Many families have been ruined by their members having been allured into the society of men who have got up these disgraceful plays. The Vaibhav trusts that the District Magistrate and the Police Superintendent will not fail to take immediate measures to put a stop to the performances called chhakdas.

Is doubtful of the advantages of importing lady doctors from England for imparting instruction in medical science to Native females.

With reference to the importation of lady doctors, the Native Opinion (9) of the 4th February says:—It has been proposed to bring out two lady doctors from England to this country with a view eventually of establishing a school for medical instruction for Indian females. It has been seriously suggested that, situated as we are, medical help in the case of Native ladies is not available to the extent to which it is desirable. The proposal is to raise a fund of some thirty thousand rupees to start the scheme. It may be that medical aid for Native ladies is not available to the extent to which it may be desirable. But the question is, will the importation of two lady doctors remove the whole evil? Native ladies may be given instruction in medical science, but how is the difficulty of imparting instruction to them in a foreign tongue to be got over? We do not think that the proposed plan will achieve success. Cannot the present midwifery class be improved and better arrangements be made for the instruction of those who attend that class? If the Grant College can give us respectable midwives, our present needs will be amply answered. We trust that before it is seriously considered to establish a separate institution for Native ladies, better arrangements for the midwifery class will be made and that the funds contemplated to be raised will be applied towards such improvement.

Importation of lady doctors from England.

The Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 6th February is glad that some rich Native citizens of Bombay have liberally contributed to the fund which is being collected for bringing English medical women to India for treating the diseases of Native females. The Samáchár observes that the promoters of the scheme have made an error in estimating that the cost of the project will amount to only thirty-five thousand rupees, since that sum will be manifestly insufficient in order to make the services of lady doctors of permanent use to the community. An hospital for treating female patients and a college for teaching girls the medical and surgical arts will have to be established, and for each of these projects a lákh of rupees will be required. The Samáchár exhorts the rich citizens of Bombay to subscribe to this charitable work to the utmost of their power, and regrets that none of the European residents has as yet contributed to the fund. [The Kaisar-i-Hind (91) and the Gujaráti (85) of the same date express somewhat similar sentiments.]

Recommends the appeal to raise a subscription for bringing from England medical women for Bombay to the favourable consideration of the public.

The Bombay Chronicle (66) of the 4th February states how numerous the untimely deaths of women continuously suffering from painful diseases are in India from their unwillingness to consult surgeons and physicians, and admits the desirability of obtaining qualified female medical practitioners from England. The Chronicle heartily approves of the appeal made by Messrs. Kittredge and Sorábji Shápurji Bengáli to the people to raise a fund for bringing to Bombay a few lady doctors and for establishing dispensaries, and exhorts the public to subscribe liberally to this charitable and philanthropic work. [The Rást Goftár (98), the Yajdán Parast (110), the Kaisar-i-Hind (91), the Gujarát Mitrá (67), and the Gujaráti (85) of the same date and the Jáme Jamshed (89) of the 9th February express similar sentiments.]

A'bkári.

Some remarks with respect to the questions proposed by the commission appointed to enquire into the extent of illicit distillation of liquor from mhowra flowers.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 5th February in a Maráthi leading article takes exception to many questions proposed by the commission appointed to enquire into the extent of illicit distillation of liquor from mhowra flowers, and observes that if the witnesses who will be summoned to give evidence are not properly chosen the result will not be satisfactory. The selection of witnesses might be made in such a manner that their evidence would go to strengthen the position taken up by the officers of the A'bkári Department. The universal condemnation of the Mhowra Bill is an appropriate answer to the thirty-five questions published by this commission. Instead of going to the trouble of ascertaining public opinion by summoning witnesses and circulating the questions referred to above, it would be well if the strictures passed on the Mhowra Bill before and after its passage through the local Legislative Council were taken as an accurate indication of the feelings of the people generally. The Government should abandon the present mode of enquiry. The British Government should leave the people perfectly free to manage their own affairs, and should interfere as little as possible in their concerns.

Makes remarks in connection with the work of the Mhowra Commission.

In alluding to the two or three sittings of the Mhowra Commission in Thána, the Rást Goftár (98) of the 4th February observes that complaints are made that only a particular class of witnesses is examined and that the examination is conducted in a most hurried manner. Liquor contractors and others who are interested in keeping up the severity of the A'bkári Act and who clamour for the enforcement of the A'bkári laws with the utmost rigour are examined by the commission as witnesses. Of course no objection can be taken to such a proceeding, but as a caution against the enquiry being considered one-sided, it is desirable that witnesses representing the people at large should also be examined. It is also necessary that independent private gentlemen should be appointed to sit on the commission as suggested at the meeting held in Thána to represent the grievances in connection with the Forest and the A'bkári Acts. In the fifth question proposed by the commission witnesses are invited to state the effects which have been produced by the severity of the new A'bkári Act on the supply of agricultural labour and the cultivation of land. It will be found that formerly the wages received by labourers enabled them to obtain sufficient food and pure toddy and liquor, which afforded them relief from the fatigue of their daily labour, and they were thereby able to keep themselves in sound health. Now-a-days the labourers get the same wages but are not able to maintain themselves in as good a condition. They cannot now obtain good toddy cheaply. Formerly the landholders freely gave their labourers toddy drawn from the trees on their own lands, but such is not the case now. As a class, labourers are not now so strong as they used to be. The toddy drink was a kind of tonic which improved their appetite and kept them in good health. It is indispensable to prevent bad effects being produced upon health from working in open air. The new A'bkári Act has in no way contributed to encourage the cultivation of land. The three principal causes which have led to an increase in the cultivation of the soil are the heavy land revenue assessment, the disappearance of several kinds of occupations and trades, and the excessive cheapness of corn. Unless much labour is spent upon land, produce sufficient to pay the land assessment and to maintain the cultivator cannot be raised. In order to meet the State demand, three times as much produce as used to suffice in former times is now required. Formerly the income derived from the tád and date trees was appropriated to the payment of the labourers employed to work in fields on which the trees grew, but that source has now ceased. Most of the agriculturists of the Thána District were able to maintain themselves and to pay the land revenue from the sale of the produce of the land and of the tád and date trees. They used to live on ordinary food up to the month of March, and then they subsisted on wild fruit and toddy. Their condition at present is most pitiable.

Supposed improper conduct of the members of the Mhowra Bill Commission.

The Kaisar-i-Hind (91) of the 4th February says that when it was reported that the people of Thána were about to request Government to appoint independent members on the commission appointed to make enquiries in connection with the mhowra blossoms, the members of that body showed a desire to get through their work hurriedly. They examined last week several liquor contractors, whose evidence went to strengthen their own views. A correspondent reports that the witnesses were examined with closed doors, and were previously tutored. Only two members were present during the examination of the witnesses.

Forest Laws.

Recommends the suspension of the forest rules for some time.

With reference to the prayer made by telegram by a large number of the inhabitants of the Alibág Táluka for the suspension of the operation of certain obnoxious forest regulations against which they have decided to petition Government, the Lok Mitrá (69) of the 4th February observes that it appears that in spite of the discontent caused by bringing into force some of the most formidable powers of the forest legislation in India, implicit obedience is being exacted to the very stringent rules recently made by the authorities which have been unanimously condemned by the press. Though the object of the forest laws is decidedly the eventual benefit of the country, their practical operation in certain directions has been to press upon the poor population with a harshness which could scarcely have been contemplated by the framers of those measures. The whole subject requires careful consideration, and the voice of the monster meeting held the other day to petition for a mitigation of the strictness observed in carrying out the forest laws ought not to be ignored. It would be well therefore if His Excellency were for the present to stay the execution of the recent orders before irreparable hardship and injury are occasioned by their strict enforcement.

A complaint of the agriculturists of the Kolába Collectorate against the oppressive working of the Forest Act.

The Surya Prakásh (71) of the 3rd February, in referring to the telegram sent to the Private Secretary to Sir James Fergusson by the agriculturists of the Kolába Collectorate praying for the suspension of certain obnoxious forest rules, says that it is improper to encumber the cultivators with increased burdens, for the welfare of the country depends upon the contentedness of the tillers of the soil. They are oppressed by the petty officials entrusted with the duty of working the Act. The ryots as a class are not given to scheming, and so long as no great oppression is practised on them they will not complain. If their statements are true, gubernatorial tours are useless. It is necessary that Governors should pay attention to the condition of the ryots. It is to be hoped that Sir James Fergusson will not fail to redress the grievances of these poor people.

Legislation.—Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Remarks on the Bill empowering Native Magistrates to try British criminals.

In noticing the motion made by the Honourable Mr. Ilbert for introducing a bill into the Viceregal Legislative Council for enlarging the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates by giving to some the power to try Europeans charged with criminal offences in the mofussil law courts, the Rást Goftár (98) of the 4th February observes that the proposed amendment in the Criminal Procedure Code is not by itself very important. The passing however of this law will give satisfaction to the Native subjects of Her Majesty by removing the invidious distinction which is at present made between them and Europeans. The proposed step is an important political measure, for which the Natives are deeply grateful to Government. It is gratifying that the change contemplated in Mr. Ilbert's bill has the support of the minor administrations. [The Bombay Samáchár (77) and the Jáme Jamshed (89) of the 5th, the Vartmán Sár (107) of the 6th, the Akhbáre Sodágar (73) of the 7th and the Bombay Punch (76) of the 10th February express similar sentiments.]

Heartily approves of the bill for enlarging the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates.

In alluding to the bill introduced in the Viceregal Legislative Council for enlarging the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates by giving to some of them the power to try Europeans charged with criminal offences in the mofussil courts, the Bombay Chronicle (66) of the 4th February observesthat Mr. Ilbert has strikingly shown the necessity for making the proposed amendment in the Criminal Procedure Code. The bill is an evidence of the genuine character of the understanding given by His Excellency the Viceroy last year that his Government would take an early opportunity to remove, as far as practicable, the anomaly in the penal laws or in the procedure of administering them, of which the Natives always complained bitterly as an unnecessary humiliation and an inconvenience to the interests of the public service. In conclusion, the Chronicle hopes that the bill will receive the support of all just and prudent men.

Disapproves of the objection taken by the London Times to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

With reference to the objection taken by the London Times to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 8th February observes that there is nothing in the bill to justify the fears expressed by the Times. Does the Times think that by empowering Native Magistrates to try European offenders the former might punish the latter with transportation or hanging for slight offences? Is not the Magistrate's authority prescribed, and cannot Government check and punish him when he happens to outstep it? Moreover, the Native Magistrates are not invested with extensive powers and their decisions can be appealed against. If they are not considered competent to try European offenders, how can they be judged fit for the trial of Native culprits? If Europeans have no confidence in the integrity and impartiality of Native Magistrates, how can Natives have confidence in European Magistrates. If the invidious distinction between Europeans and Natives is to be continued, why should the contention of the Natives that European Magistrates should not be allowed to try them not be granted? Native Magistrates in the presidency towns possess jurisdiction over European offenders. If they have at all erred in their decisions, it has been on the side of leniency. [The Jáme Jamshed (89) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Says that the objections raised by the Anglo-Indian press to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill are not sound.

With reference to the opposition raised by a large number of the Anglo-Indian newspapers to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 10th February observes that the bill proposes to empower such Natives as have entered the covenanted civil service, or hold the office of Assistant Commissioners, or are First Class Magistrates in military camps, to try European offenders, and hence the lower class Magistrates will not be clothed with the authority. There are no defects in the rules for the dispensation of justice and there is no chance of injustice being done. There is no probability also of a European who may be found committing an assault on a Native being condemned unheard and punished with unreasonable severity. The Magistrates have no authority to try more serious charges than of simple assault. The Sessions Judges alone can try grave offences, and they are mostly Europeans. There is nothing in the bill to frighten Europeans. It is said that European traders living in the mofussil would find it difficult to keep labourers in their service if the bill be passed into law. What that difficulty would be is not stated, nor does it appear that any real danger is likely to arise. Where labour is engaged for pecuniary remuneration, no difficulty would arise unless the employers wished to treat the labourers as slaves. No sound objection has been advanced against the bill, which it is to be hoped will be soon passed.

Power of appeal against acquittal of accused persons.

The Jáme Jamshed (89) of the 7th February observes that one defect in the Criminal Procedure Code is the provision authorizing Government to appeal to a higher tribunal when it thinks that an offender has been improperly allowed to escape punishment by a Criminal Court. This provision leads to the inference that Government distrusts its own officers. It seems also contrary to the Habeas Corpus Act. When the Criminal Procedure Bill was under discussion in the Supreme Council, several members recommended the removal of this provision from the Code, and the Honourable Mahárája Tagore proposed an amendment to that effect. Lord Ripon then promised to consider the matter and the motion was negatived. Eleven months have passed since then, and yet nothing has been done. A Government official in the mofussil can harass a poor man under this provision. Though the latter might ultimately escape unhurt, he is, considering the costliness of justice dispensed in British Indian Courts, able to get away only at a heavy pecuniary sacrifice, for which he cannot be compensated. It is to be hoped that the Viceroy will take the opportunity of expunging this section of the Criminal Code when it is undergoing revision.

Some remarks on the condition of the agricultural population in the Deccan in connection with Dr. Hunter's statement on the same subject in the Supreme Legislative Council.

In an article headed "Agricultural Problem in the Deccan," the Dnyán Prakásh (7) of the 8th February says:—The Deccan ryot is much indebted to Dr. Hunter for his having dragged the subject from oblivion and forcibly directed the attention of the Government of the Marquis of Ripon to it. It seems that when Dr. Hunter was in Bombay in connection with his duties as President of the Education Commission, he made careful enquiries on the spot into the condition of the Deccan ryot. We fully agree with the learned doctor in everything that he said on the occasion, and we further hope that the Government of the Marquis of Ripon will see its way to adopt his excellent suggestion for the appointment of a commission of enquiry into the condition of the Deccan ryot, namely, how far the indebtedness is due to the land revenue system prevalent in Bombay, and what reforms must be introduced into that system to ameliorate that condition. This eminently practical suggestion has been endorsed by the London Times, and we think the sooner it is acted upon the better it will be for the ryot and Government. The artificial protection now extended to the Deccan ryot by a protective class legislation cannot be continued for ever, and even if it is continued it would not do him much good so long as whatever is saved to him by means of such devices at the expense of his private creditor is virtually carried away by his public creditor. That for the time being and while under the special protection of the Relief Act the Deccan ryot is in a slightly better condition than he was prior to the enactment of the Relief Act goes without saying. The change is natural, because when one of the outlets has been partially blocked up it must produce such a result. A similar result would have followed if the spoliation operation instead of being applied to the private creditor had been applied to the public creditor. The Special Judge under the Relief Act, whose testimony cannot be impeached, has reported that unless the burden of assessment on land is lowered, a mere artificial protection as against his private creditors would avail the ryot nothing in the long run. We think the Deccan ryot sorely needs protection in both directions before he can be rehabilitated in his former prosperous condition. After quoting the opinion of Mr. Maclean, the late editor of the Bombay Gazette, about the advisability of extending to the cultivators the advantages of a permanent settlement, the writer proceeds:—We fully agree with Mr. Maclean in holding that nothing short of a permanent fixity of the Government land revenue demand will improve the condition of the Deccan ryot. The only argument against this permanent fixity in the land revenue demand is that by adopting it the Government will have to surrender all the prospective increase of revenue from that source, while the argument against the existing system of periodical revisions and enhancement is that it discourages capitalists from investing their money in land for the purpose of increasing its productive capacities. As regards the prospective loss of revenue, it will surely be more than compensated by the prosperous condition and contentment of the peasantry, and also by the increasing revenue from some of the other items on the receipt side of the budget statement. The principal aim of a civilized government ought to be to ensure the continuance of prosperity and contentment among the people, while the interests of revenue ought to be subordinate to that aim. The present Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act is not conceived in that spirit at all, because the relief given thereby is not supplemented by a relief in the other direction. The result of such one-sided legislation is that it partakes of the character of a measure of spoliation, pure and simple, of the weaker by the stronger party. On the principle that might is only right, the weaker party has been compelled to go to the wall, though properly speaking the stronger party is more guilty. Government and the sáwkárs are both of them intimately connected with the ryot and have it in their power to make him prosperous. Of these two, however, Government is the stronger party because, while the ryot can defend himself against the sáwkár somehow or other, he is simply powerless as against Government. The ryot and the sáwkár generally adjust their relations among themselves by the mutual give-and-take policy, but the ryot knows no means of protecting himself against the extortionate demands of Government. The anxiety and sincerity of Government to afford substantial relief to the Deccan ryot may be surely questioned if in its turn it is not prepared to loosen its hold and gripe, however partially. There is one significant fact which goes a great way in bearing us out in our foregoing statement. The Purandhar Táluka is one of the thirty-six tálukas comprising the area to which the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act has been applied, and half the táluka has been brought under the revision rates. But the strangest thing is that the very year which saw the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act introduced as a special measure of relief, saw also the revised rates of assessment introduced in half the villages of the Purandhar Táluka!!! This one single fact speaks volumes and affords the best commentary on the solicitude of Government for the good of its ryots! There are many who would do good to others at the expense of third parties.

Local Self-government.

Some remarks in connection with Lord Ripon's policy of local self-government.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 4th February, in an article headed "The London Times on Local Self-government in India," says:—It is a pity that on such a momentous question the Times should have adopted the views of its Indian correspondent and given them insertion in its leading columns, thus declaring to the world that the views held by its correspondent are its own. Could the Times secure no thinker in England that would study and digest the literature on local self-government and express impartial and unprejudiced views on this extremely liberal character of Lord Ripon's administration? The establishment and extension of local self-government in India by granting greater political power to the people of the country tend as a matter of course to minimize the power of the members of the Indian Civil Service of presiding over and interfering with the management of local revenues. It is no wonder, therefore, that this liberal scheme should meet with the strongest opposition from Commissioners, Collectors and Assistant Collectors, who will therefore suffer in influence. Love of power has been the ruling passion of most men at all times, and it is perfectly natural that it should be so. Those who have received an enlightened political education; those who have been taught to think that the great end of human civilization is not to increase the physical and mental wealth of any particular country or countries but to prepare the varied human race to discharge the duties of their social and political government independently; those who hold that the true happiness of any human society depends upon its being able to manage its own affairs; those who think that the world is likely to be a gainer both materially and morally by allowing its multifarious parts to have governments of their own rather than by the predominance of some over others; those lastly who take delight in watching the progress of any backward community towards independence and prosperity;—those alone are justly qualified to pass an opinion upon what Lord Ripon is doing at present for the welfare of the two hundred and fifty millions of human beings committed to his care by Providence. The selfish, the short-sighted, the unenlightened men, of whom for the greater part the Indian Civil Service is composed, are altogether unfit either to find fault with or to predict the fall of the noble scheme which His Lordship is about to introduce in this country. However backward we may be, it will be conceded that at one time our political capacities were so far developed as to enable us to work our political machinery ourselves. Is it then to be supposed that the liberal education which the enlightened rulers of Great Britain have been giving us for more than half a century has made us unfit even to discharge the duties of municipal government by totally extinguishing those higher capacities in us? If this be not so, then it is à priori proved that we cannot but be in a condition to fulfil the requirements of local self-government, provided the officers of Local Governments do not unnecessarily and out of jealousy of power tease and harass us. They are on the contrary bound to cordially help us; and if they do so, as we hope they will no doubt do in their loyalty to the great representative of the Empress-Queen, we think that under the guidance and superintendence of well-meant and kindly-disposed officials this scheme must completely succeed. Here the Mahrátta quotes the remarks of the correspondent of the London Times and proceeds:—The general idea of bestowing upon natives of India as large a measure of autonomy as they are fit to enjoy and of training them by the exercise of power to become worthy of greater confidence is in itself so calculated to fascinate a free people accustomed to refer all its blessings to self-government that it is only common prudence to examine with great care the machinery proposed. The first objection to the success of this scheme which this correspondent takes is the great multiplicity of the races in India, which he thinks are antagonistic to each other and are only kept down and harmoniously ruled by the uniform and centralized system laid by Government. The grant of local self-government will, he thinks, revive their spirit of antagonism and turbulence, and violence among themselves and danger to the British power will follow. We cannot suppose that there exists the sort of political race feeling or political antagonism among the several races of India which this correspondent predicts without proof, and therefore his fears about its revival and its painful consequences appear to us to be groundless. No merely sentimental objections ought to influence practical statesmen in giving trial to a scheme that is calculated to benefit the people. "The other point," says the correspondent, "which must not be lost sight of is that India had a municipal organization of its own generically resembling what we find elsewhere among oriental races, and that the basis and unit of this system was the village not the circle, the group or the district. Among other mistakes of ignorance and inexperience we destroyed the old village system, but it is the only one suited to the genius of the people and must be taken as the starting point of any scheme of local self-government that is to meet the real wants of the country." We are grateful to the correspondent for his sympathetic condolence for the destruction of the old village system, but we humbly remind him that those old days are gone, that times have altogether changed, that India is at present under the rule of foreigners who are far superior to her rude Native rulers in every respect, and that therefore it is difficult or even impossible to rule India with a view to her progressive civilization without inaugurating radical changes in her primitive polity. Judged from this standpoint it will appear to every liberal and unbiased reader that Lord Ripon is not introducing violent reforms. Several other objections are raised by this writer. He says it would not be wise to substitute half-educated spouting demagogue commissioners elected by ignorant masses in the place of the dignified and thoughtful ones at present selected and nominated by Government. What the state of things is at Calcutta we do not know; but when we look at some of the members of the Bombay Legislative Council and most of the commissioners of the Poona Municipality, we are forced to think that a municipal government by Government nominees with a Collector at their head is a huge sham. The rod of power and official threat suppress all opposition and carry everything before them with a high hand. But perhaps the most serious misgivings, says this correspondent, as to the success of the projected measure are excited by the practical admission it contains that its authors themselves distrust it. We confess our inability to answer this stupid reflection on the modesty of Lord Ripon. Suffice it to say that the authors of the measure would not have been compelled to give expression to these misgivings but for the apathy and half-heartedness of most of the unenlightened Government officials from whom they expect the strongest opposition instead of co-operation. But what this correspondent most dislikes is that portion of the scheme which, while taking away from Magistrates and other Government officials all power of interfering with the resolutions of the commissioners, leaves them only the power of supervision. And this arrangement seems to him to be fraught with disastrous consequences, for he concludes:—"By taking our executive officers entirely out of the local administration, and at the same time giving them power to control it, we run a serious risk of provoking collisions between the Imperial and the Local Government, in which the former will either assert its authority at the cost of much bitterness and disaffection or will yield to local clamour at the cost of municipal misgovernment and the growth of Native arrogance." Here is the secret of the feline philosophy! Let wise men take it at its worth.

Criticises the remarks made by the London Times on the scheme of local self-government in India.

In noticing the article in the London Times on local self-government in India, the Lok Mitrá (69) of the 4th February observes:—The writer in the Times says that India is not homogeneous. It is in fact a "congeries of races and creeds, divided by ancient prejudices and animosities." The heterogeneous character of the masses which form the population of India cannot be denied, but in the village communities of time immemorial is to be found the germ of municipal organisation. To say that these are overlooked by the Government of India is to state something that is opposed to fact. In his May resolution as well as in his many public utterances on the subject the Viceroy has insisted over and over again on the necessity of allowing local idiosyncrasies, wherever local self-government is established, a free play. But to conclude from this that the moment local autonomy is allowed fair play a struggle for power will be in operation is simply ridiculous. Here the writer seems to draw on his imagination. It argues want of careful study of the elaborate provisions laid down in the May resolution. Each local Government is allowed the liberty to introduce self-government in rural and urban districts in due proportion to their population, public spirit and enlightenment. And though it is considered expedient, and wisely too, to allow non-officials to act as presidents of local boards and town municipalities and otherwise to eliminate as far as practicable all official element, it is enjoined that such a measure may be taken gradually and as circumstances permit. Again, District Collectors and Magistrates are called to watch the progress of these bodies from without. If there be a struggle for power the Government has the right to interfere. Surely with so many safety-valves, it cannot be said that the Government of India has overlooked the heterogeneous character of the races forming the population of India. Those who hold before the ignorant British public a picture where grave perils are portrayed as sure to arise from the diversity of creeds and their animosities towards each other, are in our opinion guilty of misrepresentation. In fact, in the second paragraph of his article the writer states at great length the salient points of the Central Provinces Local Self-government Bill. He considers the experiment rather a bold one, but is obliged to admit that a check is provided in the section dealing with control. And yet with these facts before him he persists in dogmatically asserting in the concluding paragraph that there is great danger in eliminating the official element from all self-governing bodies to be called into existence under the May resolution. It has not occurred to him how or in what other way the people can be educated in the art of managing their own affairs. He has ignored the important reason put forth in that resolution that it is daily becoming an effort for District Collectors to supervise the overgrown machinery of administration, and that it would be in the interest of the better government of the country to entrust some of the powers which are now in the hands of these officers to the people themselves. And the Viceroy is encouraged so to give powers inasmuch as in the village communities of India there are all the germs of self-government. It has now been universally admitted that the Indians have always successfully managed their internal affairs without external interference. The practice was put a stop to by their present rulers. And Lord Ripon is doing nothing "radical" or "revolutionary" so as to involve the country in many colossal calamities, as is fancied by an organised clique, when he attempts to restore to the people the powers they had continued to exercise from time immemorial despite the change of rulers from century to century. The Times would not brook the idea of "the sudden elimination of the official element from local boards all over the country and the casting of onerous burdens upon shoulders as yet very unfit to bear them." It seems to us very inconsistent to draw this inference after first premising that in the village communities there are all the germs of self-government. When that is the case, where is the harm in allowing them to manage their own affairs without official aid, especially with the checks already devised by the Government of India? The Times is simply arguing in a circle. It should consider well the mass of evidence collected by the various non-official bodies in the different parts of the empire. These would enlighten it more on the value of the boon conferred by Lord Ripon than any quantity of "official" communications by persons who bitterly resent his scheme. It is a pity that the "leading" English paper, instead of actually leading the British public, should be misled by such men. There is not the least danger to be apprehended by the transfer of the powers contemplated to be bestowed on urban and rural bodies for their better internal management. Those who have set up the cry are the enemies of India,—men who like to see her people trodden down,—men who prefer to perpetuate the regime of despotism as now practised by the omnipotent district kings, the Collectors and Magistrates.

Some remarks on municipal reform in Bombay.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 5th February, in an article headed "Municipal Reform," refers to the appointment of a committee to consider and suggest any needful alteration in the municipal constitution, and says:—One of the many subjects which might legitimately engage the attention of the committee is the extension of the elective franchise. At present the right of returning members is bestowed on the rate-payers, the Justices, and the Government. The rate-payers represent the monied and the propertied classes. The Justices are the quintessence of the intelligence and the public spirit of the city, and Government have of course their interests to look after, and cannot be denied the right of being represented on the Corporation. The Justices and Government may well be trusted to return qualified representatives, but as we observed in our last issue the rate-payers are not unfrequently apt to show a lamentable disregard of the fitness of candidates, and allow themselves to be handled like so many puppets by enterprising wire-pullers. We observed that several obscure men were returned with flying colours, while some very worthy names ranked low, others were rejected, and others still avoided the ignominy of failure by not coming forward as candidates at all. Surely this requires a remedy, and we hope one will be applied by those of our rate-payers who are enlightened enough to appreciate the situation. This evil will no doubt be considerably remedied by rate-payers' associations, meetings and discussions, but we think it may also be effectually counteracted by extending the privilege of election to a large growing class of men who do not necessarily answer to the technical appellation of rate-payers or Justices, who are nevertheless otherwise competent to vote, and who may be expected to intelligently use the privilege—we mean the vakils, the doctors, Government and other employés, and graduates generally. The test of being a rate-payer is a special money test. The test of being a Justice is no doubt generally one of intelligence, but is oftentimes uncertain, and is largely regulated by patronage and favour. As it cannot be unhappily predicated of all Justices that they are intelligent and worthy men, so it cannot be predicated of all intelligent and worthy men that they are Justices, nor can it be inferred that no one not a Justice is an intelligent man. It follows therefore that, however well the Justices may represent the intelligence of the city, there is a large class outside them who are nearly as qualified, but who are not members of the order for want of interest. We could name a dozen eminent gentlemen who were not Justices till within the last few years, and even now it will not be difficult to point out several persons who deserve to be enrolled as Justices, but who are left in the cold in consequence of their unobtrusiveness. At all events whatever the special qualifications and privileges of the Justices may be, it cannot be denied that the classes of men we have enumerated above are far better qualified for the privilege of giving a vote than the herds of rate-payers who were to be seen driven up to the polling-stations on Monday, the 22nd ultimo. Under the local self-government scheme, among the classes of people in the mofussil who will be qualified to vote are graduates of any University, Indian or European, all pleaders holding sanads granted by the High Court, all Licentiates of Medicine, Surgery and Civil Engineering, all jurors, assessors and conciliators, all Government pensioners in receipt of a pension of not less than Rs. 20 monthly, all persons in Government service in receipt of a monthly salary not less than Rs. 30, and all persons paying the imperial license tax of Rs. 20 per annum and upwards. In the rules framed for the conduct of elections to be held on the 15th March next, the Poona Municipality has added three other classes to those named by Government: namely, all the Sardárs of the Deccan, all Honorary Magistrates, and all persons holding titles conferred by Government. It will be observed at a glance that many persons in Bombay will answer the descriptions of one or other of the above classes, but who are not qualified voters here. Why should Bombay be behind the mofussil in this respect?

Bombay was thought worthy of the elective franchise long before Government deemed it proper to extend the privilege to mofussil cities. Are the classes of people mentioned above more advanced in the mofussil than they are in Bombay? We should have thought the Bombay people better fitted by their training, opportunities, and associations for this purpose. We trust the claims of these classes for the elective franchise will not long be ignored. In the recent debate in the Corporation on Mr. Gokuldas's motion it was suggested that Fellows of the University should be invested with the privilege of election. We humbly submit that not only the Fellows, but all graduates and the persons of the description given above should be made eligible to vote. We would suggest a wide adaptation of the above scheme, extending to employés in railway and other mercantile offices, and in private establishments under recognized control. The only objection that may be urged against such a far and wide extension of the elective privilege is that the number of eligible voters will be immeasurably multiplied, which in a large city like Bombay may be inconvenient to manage. We do not think that any considerations of number or inconvenience should determine the classes from which qualified voters should be chosen. But if this should be found a strong objection, we may suggest that the number may be restricted by raising the limit of pay or pension, or even the municipal rates, and the inconvenience may be slightly averted by making it eligible for voters to vote in one capacity only. We should not be unwilling to see many of the poor owners of hack-buggies and bullock-carts, keepers of grog-shops and courtezans, shorn of their plumes and relieved from the grasp of the unconscionable canvasser and the whipper. Similarly we are not anxious that every stipendiary of Rs. 30 from Government or otherwise must needs be a voter. All we desire is that the privilege of voting should as far as possible be extended to persons who combine in themselves the qualifications of intelligence and respectability. In connection with this it will have to be considered in which of the present three classes of voters should the new voters be included? Under the present constitution 16 members are nominated by Government, 16 elected by the Justices, and 32 by the rate-payers. The class of voters we are now speaking of can only be included, if at all, in the class of rate-payers. Then it becomes necessary to consider whether, when the number of voters in the class of rate-payers is thus swollen by the accession to it of these new classes of voters, the number of seats for which they will return members should not be proportionately increased. It stands to reason that the voters proposed to be created should have some seats at their disposal, which may be kept separate for them if they form a separate class by themselves, or should be added to the 32 seats of the rate-payers if they are incorporated with that class. Where these seats are to be got from is rather difficult to answer. We say, increase the total number of seats in the Corporation to (say) 75 or 76, or clip the number of the nominees of the Government and Justices. For our own part we think it would be more graceful and convenient to create new places for the new voters than to strip the old ones of their privileges to enrich the new. Moreover we do not think it likely that Government will consent to lessen the number of its representatives, and it would not be advisable or profitable to cut off any part of the privileges of the Justices. We think therefore that at least 12 new seats should be created for the class we have been speaking of. Another point that may be considered is the number of votes each voter should possess. In a memorial submitted by the Bombay Trades Association to Goverrment in 1878 it was suggested that each rate-payer should have as many votes as the number of seats in the ward in which he votes. The Times of India in its leader of 22nd ultimo advocated the same reform. We think the suggestion is worthy of the consideration of the committee. As the Times pointed out, there is a chance of miscarriage of the purpose of election by the present arrangement whereby voters give one vote each. The voter has no opportunity of expressing his opinion as to the qualifications of any other of the candidates than the one he votes for, and it is not unlikely to happen that all the votes may be showered upon one or two candidates only, leaving the remaining seats unprovided for. Such a contingency would be prevented if each voter has as many votes as the number of seats in the ward. Further the voter will have greater latitude for choice and discretion. He may fulfil his promise to those who have sought for his vote and also do his duty to himself and to the citizens by choosing some qualified representatives.

Education.

Remarks on the annual report of the Director of Public Instruction.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 4th February, in noticing the Report of the Director of Public Instruction for 1881-82, says :—The peculiar feature of the reports of the present Director is that they do not contain any useful remarks on the progress of education, or inferences drawn from the facts and figures relating to the several kinds of schools, or suggestions as to how improvements may be further made or existing defects removed. We highly appreciate the utility of the tables and appendices, and thank the Director for making them so full of solid information. But Mr. Chatfield's reports begin from the very first page with long tables and contain very few remarks of his own on the results submitted to him by the subordinate officers. If Mr. Chatfield were to glance at the prefatory pages of Administration Reports of the Presidency, or turn the leaves of the earlier reports of his Department, he would easily be able to make improvements in his future reports. If it be his wish that his reports should be for the use, not only of the several officers of his Department but also for the use of the general reader, we think he will not grudge to act upon this suggestion. We are also sadly disappointed in not finding in the new report any remarks from the pen of Mr. Chatfield upon the general question of education, as the subject was before a special body appointed by the Government of India. We expected that he would have written a long minute reviewing the progress of the Department, but more especially he could notice critically the various remarks made by the several witnesses called to give evidence before the Educational Commission. It was said that Mr. Chatfield was to be called to give evidence before the Commission at Calcutta after all the witnesses had been heard, so that he might be better enabled to defend his Department against attacks. But nothing of the kind has been done. We hope the next report will contain the Director's remarks on this most important subject, for he should not miss an opportunity of defending his Department against absurd and baseless accusations.

Makes remarks on the address of the Chancellor at the last Convocation of the Bombay University.

The Lok Mitrá (69) of the 4th February approves of the suggestion made by the Chancellor in his address at the last Convocation of the Bombay University that annual conferences should be held with the sister Universities of Calcutta and Madras, and observes that if His Excellency's suggestion is acted upon it will not fail to lead to many practical results and to the adoption in this University of much that is useful and worth imitating in the other Universities of India. The only difficulty is how to bring about the harmony and friendly co-operation of the head masters of the numerous flourishing schools. The mutual jealousy and ill-will that not unfrequently characterise the acts of the private high school head masters and proprietors is a serious hindrance to the accomplishment of an object otherwise very feasible and calculated to prove beneficial to the cause of general education. Another very important topic with which the Chancellor closed his speech was His Excellency's remark about the so-called anti-religious tendency of the present course of collegiate instruction. His Excellency said that he deprecated the existence of such tendency quite as much as he did the introduction of anything like a systematic course of religious instruction, which would be a violation of the principle of religious neutrality so long acted upon and so well recognised as to be almost a tradition of the educational annals. It is to be regretted that His Excellency should have lent himself to the unreasoned and unreasoning cry that is now set up by a handful of interested Christian missionaries, to whom nothing is so distasteful as free discussion in religious matters. The Mitrá wonders if His Excellency has read the thoughtful letter of the learned Principal of the Elphinstone College in which he indignantly repudiates the insinuation now and again disingenuously thrown out by a lot of fanatical clergymen that the instruction, as at present imparted in the Government colleges, is anti-religious and demoralizing. The tendency of the youths is neither more nor less anti-religious than it is in similar cases all over England and Europe. It is idle to expect that the college students familiar with the works of David Hume and John Stuart Mill should preserve intact their belief in antiquated or exploded systems of religion, which experience has taught are singularly unable to keep pace with the advance of modern science and to satisfy the cravings of a cultured and educated mind. It would indeed do little credit to the intelligence of educated Native youths to remain unaffected by new systems of thought, which have revolutionized the whole tone of modern ideas. After the assurance given by Principal Wordsworth and the eloquent manner in which he vindicated collegiate instruction from the unworthy aspersion cast upon it, this bug-bear of anti-religious tendency should have ceased to exist. It is a pity that the Chancellor should have marred the effect of his address by needlessly touching on this point.

Railways.

Inconveniences suffered by third class passengers on the G. I. P. Railway.

The Lok Mitrá (69) of the 4th February says that complaints are frequently heard that the G. I. P. Railway authorities are singularly unmindful of the comfort and convenience of their third class passengers. An instance of this kind has just happened. The G. I. P. Railway authorities have introduced a new kind of third class carriages which show a supreme disregard for the convenience of passengers. They are said to be protected with strong iron bars in front, and altogether present an appearance of a prison house rather than of anything designed for the conveyance of human beings. We are not surprised that a protest is about to be entered by third class passengers against the introduction of this new kind of carriages. While on this subject we may observe that the G. I. P. Company is extremely unpopular with the Native community, and the instances that not unfrequently come to light of third class passengers being huddled together are perfectly scandalous. In this respect the B. B. and C. I. Railway Company compares most favourably, and the courtesy and good sense which characterize its entire management present an advantageous contrast to the supercilious arrogance of half-educated Eurasian lads, who constitute the majority of the G. I. P. employés, and whose conceited manners have earned for them the contempt of all sensible men. It is a matter for regret that Government do not see their way to interfere and bring about a better state of things. Government are unable directly to do anything; but they can well bring some sort of pressure to bear on the G. I. P. Railway officials, and thus induce them to adopt measures better calculated to conduce to the comfort and convenience of the poorer classes of the people who daily travel by that line.

Gives an instance of an endeavour on the part of an employé of the Rajputána Railway to outrage the modesty of a female passenger.

The Hitechhu (68) of Ahmedabad of the 8th February gives an instance of an endeavour on the part of an employé of the Rajputána Railway to outrage the modesty of a female passenger. Several Shráwaks, male and female, came from Indore on a pilgrimage to Pálitána. As an old man of a party of five persons became indisposed on the road, the idea of proceeding to Pálitána was given up. The old man, his wife and his daughter-in-law wanted to return to their home. They got tickets for travelling from Ahmedabad to Pálanpur by the 8 P.M. train on the 1st instant. The old man was seated in a different class from that occupied by the two females. At one of the intermediate stations the wife of the old man remonstrated with a railway servant, who wanted to have more passengers seated in one compartment which was already occupied by seven women, one girl and three suckling babes. She had a packet of some ornaments and money, on which she sat with a view to prevent theft. The railway employé wanted it to be placed beneath the seat. The old woman was seized by the hand, taken out of the carriage, and the train proceeded on its way. She had to pass the cold night in an open place. The old man and his daughter-in-law got down at the next station, passed the night there, and intended to travel to Pálanpur by the 12 o'clock train in company with the woman who was left behind. But at this station the old man was prevailed upon by one of the railway employés to return to the station where his wife was left, leaving his young daughter-in-law alone. The obstacle in his way being removed, he persuaded the daughter-in-law to go and stay in the station master's house, which he said was occupied by the station master's family. He took her to the house, where neither the station master nor his family were present. He closed the door, upon which she raised a cry. Being afraid of disgrace he bolted away from the house, and she came out weeping. When the old man returned with his wife, she proceeded along her journey in their company. The parties did not lodge a complaint with a view to avoid ignominy. The station master is more to blame in this matter, for it is his duty to attend to the convenience of female passengers. It is shameful that instead of doing so, an endeavour should have been made to outrage the modesty of a female passenger. It is to be hoped that such an occurrence will not happen again.

Municipalities.

Does not approve of the proposal for increasing the salary of Sir Frank Souter.

The Native Opinion (9) of the 4th February in a Maráthi article says that in proposing an increase to the salary of the Police Commissioner of Bombay, Mr. Dosábhái Frámji alluded to the excellent arrangements made during the stay of the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh in Bombay, but he omitted to notice how the police failed to keep order when disturbances broke out between the Pársis and Mahomedans. Mr. Dosábhái also added that under the police administration of Sir Frank Souter crime in the city of Bombay has decreased notwithstanding an increase in the population. This result is creditable to Sir Frank Souter, but the whole merit of it is not due to him. The Magistrates engaged in trying criminal cases have by their mode of administering justice been equally instrumental in bringing about a diminution of crime. Again it does not seem right to give to Sir Frank Souter alone the credit of the efficiency of the police generally. His subordinate officers and even policemen are entitled to claim some share of it. This being so, there is no reason why Sir Frank Souter should be singled out for the special favour of the Municipal Corporation. It must be noted also that the police of Bombay is entirely under the control of Government, and hence the duty of rewarding police officers should be relegated to its discretion. It is to be regretted that the arguments of Mr. Nawroji Fardunji were disregarded. The members of the Municipal Corporation have not shown independence on this occasion.

Remarks in connection with Dr. Blanc's observations regarding the disposal of the dead bodies of pauper Hindus.

With reference to the grants for burning the dead bodies of pauper Hindus in Bombay and for carrying medical assistance to the very homes of the poor, the Native Opinion (9) of the 4th February says:—Dr. Blanc proposed to dispose of the Hindu dead by throwing them into the sea and thus saving the municipality the sum granted. We are struck with the boldness of the scheme and the easy-going manner in which it was disclosed. But Dr. Blanc, though himself a Christian, probably forgot at the time that the Hindus, like himself, have a religion, and would prefer, like himself, to have all the benefits of the religion conferred upon them even after death. The way in which such schemes are proposed shows the amount of regard some of our Anglo-Indian friends have for everything that is Native. We are sorry that the doctor should have shown such bad taste even after considerable knowledge and experience of Hindu manners and customs. With regard to the assertion that Natives do not like to avail themselves of European medical aid even when it is brought to their very doors, we may not say much at present, as the experiment is about to be tried. We may however observe that if a portion of the Native population object to European medicines, it is not so much on the score of these medicines being European as on the score of the manner in which treatment is accorded.

Asks the municipality of Bombay to keep clean certain quarters of the city chiefly inhabited by poor people, in order to check the small-pox epidemic.

In noticing an increase in the death-rate from small-pox in Bombay, the Yajdán Parast (110) of the 4th February observes that this epidemic is extensively raging in Umarkhádi, Kámátipura, Dhobitaláv, Mándvi, Chakla, Dungri, Fanasvádi, Bhuleshvar, Kumbhárváda, Khárátaláv, Khetvádi and other quarters of the city chiefly inhabited by the poorer classes of the people. Sufficient attention is not paid to the cleanliness of these localities. Unless these quarters are kept very clean, the epidemic is not likely to disappear. It is desirable that a small-pox hospital should be opened at once and other strong measures should be taken to check the disease. The Municipal Corporation is particular in keeping clean the quarters of the city inhabited by rich classes, but it should not neglect to pay attention to the cleanliness of those places of which the residents are chiefly poor.

Gives advice to the rate-payers of Poona at the ensuing municipal election.

With reference to the forthcoming municipal election in Poona, the Dnyán Prakásh (7) of the 5th February says:—The electors should be very careful how they promise their votes. They should hold their judgment in suspense until they know the names of all the rival candidates for their respective wards, and then make their choice. In this respect the lessons which the experience of Bombay teaches us ought to be a sufficient guide. At the late municipal general election last month in Bombay, men like Mr. Javerilál Umiáshankar Yájnik and Mr. Káshináth Trimbak Telang were left out in the cold, simply because the voters had promised their votes indiscreetly and in ignorance of the fact that other more eligible persons were also candidates in the field. Let Poona voters act more discreetly. Again though a knowledge of the English language has not been formally declared to be a sine quâ non for a candidate for a municipal commissionership, it is essentially necessary in practice that as far as possible none but those who have a fair knowledge of that language should be elected. If all the members of the local municipality were fairly conversant with the English language, the business of the corporation would no doubt be facilitated and much useful time saved. There is at any rate no difficulty in Poona in finding out really competent gentlemen of whatever creed or nationality who have a very fair and respectable knowledge of the English language. Even among the Maráthás and the Mahomedans a sufficient number of people knowing the English language can be easily found. We believe we are quite justified in suggesting for the careful consideration of the electoral constituencies that as a general rule they should elect none but those who have a fair and respectable knowledge of the English language, provided they are in all other respects qualified to be representative members in the municipal corporation.

Native States.

Prays for a strict inquiry into the slaughter of a large number of the Maiyas by the Junágad police.

With reference to the rising of the Maiya agriculturists of the Junágad State, the Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 7th February gives the following particulars:—On the 27th January the Junágad police laid seige to the hill on which the Maiyas were encamped, and sent a message to the beseiged in the name of the Nawáb that they should go to the Junágad officials to talk over the payment of a tax which they had refused to pay. But the Maiyas refused to leave their position unless they were assured that the tax was abolished. Next day the Superintendent of the Police sent a message to the Maiyas to surrender at once, and on their refusal to do so, he on his own responsibility ordered his men to attack them. There were seven hundred policemen, while the Maiyas were only two hundred and fifty. Each man of the former was armed, while scarcely half of the latter had any weapons. The Maiyas did not long hold their ground before the overwhelming numbers of policemen and their firing, and soon after the attack was commenced they broke up and ran in several directions. The police pursued them and killed more than sixty and wounded nine in this pursuit. A few men of the police have been slightly wounded, and this shows that the police in their fierce anger butchered the Maiyas. No British officer was present at the attack. It is to be hoped that strict enquiries will be made into the shocking tragedy and due notice will be taken of the conduct of the Junágad officers. [The Jáme Jamshed (89) and the Akhbáre Sodágar (73) of the same date, the Káside Mumbai (92) of the 9th and the Bombay Punch (76) of the 10th February also notice the sad tragedy, and pray Government to appoint a commission composed of Europeans and Natives to make a searching enquiry into the matter.]

Slaughter of Maiyas by the Junágad police.

With reference to the shocking Junágad tragedy in which about seventy-five Maiyas were killed and twenty-five wounded by the police of that State, the Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 8th February observes that two accounts of the sad story have been received, but both of them show that the police had no cause whatever for making a murderous attack upon the misguided Maiyas. One account gives some reasons which led the police to make the attack, but they were not sufficient to justify the onslaught. The other account, if true, represents the act of the police as a murder of the unfortunate Maiyas. Both versions however agree in stating that the Maiyas were encamped on a hill near Mánekwáda, and that the police ordered them to surrender but they did not do so; while one says that the Maiyas plundered the travellers in the neighbourhood of their encampment and flogged several of them. No satisfactory evidence is forthcoming to prove the last assertion; but supposing that they were guilty of the crime, the police were still not justified in making a wholesale slaughter. The police had besieged them, and when the terms for surrender were offered the State supplied them with food and Kusumba (an opium drink), and this fact shows that the Maiyas had ceased to plunder and flog travellers; and if this was so, what necessity was there to slaughter them? But it is also stated that when the offer for surrender was made, the Maiyas fired upon the police and wounded four policemen. Supposing that the Maiyas did so, the police were well aware that they had only a few matchlocks, and if the police had kept themselves out of the range of the Maiyas' fire-arms no mischief would have been done and they should have been starved into submission. The police appear therefore to have been very rash in slaughtering the Mayias, and ought to prove a justification in order to escape the censure which otherwise attaches to their conduct.

The going of the Maiyas of Junágad into outlawry and the massacre of some of them.

A correspondent of the Gujaráti (85) of the 4th February states that 500 Maiya subjects of the Junágad State went into outlawry and encamped on a hill of the Girnár Mountains. The Junágad officials went to pacify and bring them back. While they were conversing with each other, a proposal was made for bringing Kusumba or an infusion of opium. After the infusion was drunk and the Maiyas were intoxicated, the Junágad police surrounded them, and a mêlée arose in which about thirty Maiyas were killed and fifty more wounded. Twenty men of the Junágad police have also been wounded. Three hundred Maiyas have escaped and have determined to revenge the massacre.

Condemns the administration of Colonel Barton, Political Agent, Káthiáwár.

The Hitechhu (68) of Ahmedabad of the 8th Feburary, in an article headed "The result of Colonel Barton's anarchical administration," refers to the massacre of the Maiyas in Junágad, and says that the Bombay Government has telegraphed to Colonel Barton to give over charge of his office at once. The mismanagement in Káthiáwár during Colonel Barton's time has extended to all quarters. As he out of his own whim caused the supersession of the rightful heir to the throne of Junagád and installed Báhádurkhán on the throne instead, so he without any authority interfered in the nomination of the Kárbhári to the Rána of Porbandar and injured the feelings of the Rána. On the other hand, as he pays no attention to the unbounded oppression exercised by the Joint-Administrator on the people of Gondal, the latter loudly complain of local Musalmán officials. He wanted to examine the cash of the Morvi Darbár when the Thákor wished to go on a tour to England. Though affairs in Navánagar have been managed in an oppressive and disorderly way, he has not paid any attention whatever to them. The Junágad tragedy is the result of the inattention of Government to the outcry raised against the mismanagement of affairs by Political Agents until such time as disturbances take place.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
17*th February* 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Accidents: Desirability of providing capacious means of egress in manufactories to prevent — 5
Bench of Honorary Magistrates: Approval of the creation of a — at Pandharpur for the trial of criminal cases 4
Bombay Legislative Council: Remarks in connection with the — ... 4
Indecent plays: A request to the District Magistrate of Poona and other local authorities to prevent the performance of — called chhakdas in the city 5
Judicial appointments: A prayer for the free employment of Natives in high — 3
Lady doctors for Bombay: A doubt regarding the advantages of importing — for imparting instruction in medical science to Native females 6
Do. do. A suggestion for making the importation of — of permanent use 6
Do. do. Subscription for the importation of — ... 6
Political Officers: A recommendation for the appointment of Civilians as — at the courts of Native States 4
Surat riot cases: A prayer to Sir James Fergusson to show mercy to the convicts in the — 5
Tours: Expense incurred by municipal bodies and private individuals on the occasion of gubernatorial — 4

Part II.—A'bkári—

Mhowra Bill Commission: Remarks in connection with the work of the— 7
Do. do. Remarks with respect to the questions proposed by the — 6
Do. do. Supposed improper conduct of the members of the — 7

Part III.—Forest Laws—

Forest rules: A recommendation for the temporary suspension of — as prayed for by the inhabitants of the Kolába Collectorate:—
The Lok Mitrá... 8
The Surya Prakásh 8

Part IV.—Legislation—

Criminal Procedure Code: A prayer for the repeal of the section in the — granting Government the power of appeal against acquittal of accused persons 9
Deccan ryots and the land revenue assessment 10
Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill: Approval of the —
The Bombay Chronicle ... 8
The Rást Goftár 8
Do. do. do. Disapproval of the objections raised by the Anglo-Indian press to the — 9
Do. do. do. Do. by the Times to the — ... 9

Part V.—Local Self-government—

Local self-government scheme: Comments on the observations made by the Times on the —
The Lok Mitrá 13
The Mahrátta 11
Do. do. Extension to the Bombay Municipality of the — 14

Part VI.—Education—

Bombay University: Comments on Sir James Fergusson's speech at the recent Convocation of the — 16
Report of the Director of Public Instruction, Bombay: Remarks on the —. 16

Page.

PART VII.—Railways—

G. I. P. Railway: Inconveniences suffered by third class passengers on the — 17
Rajputána Railway: An instance of an endeavour on the part of an employé of the — to outrage the modesty of a female passenger ... 17

PART VIII.—Municipalities—

Disposal of dead bodies: Remarks on Dr. Blanc's observations regarding the — of pauper Hindus 18
Increase of salary: Disapproval of the proposal for an — of Sir Frank Souter 18
Municipal elections: Advice to the rate-payers of Poona regarding the forthcoming — 19
Small-pox in Bombay: A suggestion for the prevention of the spread of — 18

PART IX.—Native States—

Administration of Colonel Barton: A condemnation of the — as Political Agent, Káthiáwár 20
Junágad: Slaughter of the Maiyás: A prayer for a strict enquiry into the— 19
Do. do. do. Conduct of the Junágad police in the matter of the — 20
Do. do. do. Disapproval of the conduct of the Junágad police regarding the — 20

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

RECEIVED
13 MAR 83
VIA BRINDISI

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 17th February 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly ...	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do. ...	475
*3	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Do.	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
4	The Dín Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	925
5	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do. ...	1,000
6	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do. ...	409
7	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
8	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,038
9	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do. ...	575
10	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do. ...	600
11	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do. ...	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*12	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly.	100
13	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly ...	555
14	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do. ...	100
15	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	450
16	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do. ...	260
17	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do. ...	275
*18	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do. ...	200
19	„ Daivadnyă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
20	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
21	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	425
22	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do. ...	140
23	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do. ...	116
24	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do. ...	100
25	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do. ...	285
26	„ Hitechhu	Kaládgi	Do. ...	85
27	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly. .	400
28	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
29	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	145
30	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do. ...	130
*31	„ Karnátak Mitră[4]	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
32	„ Kesari	Poona	Do. ...	3,500
33	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do. ...	125
34	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	300
35	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly ...	220
36	„ Mahárashtră Hitechhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,000
37	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do. ...	250
38	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do. ...	150
39	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do. ...	100
40	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly ...	700
41	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
42	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do. ...	800
43	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do. ...	103
44	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do. ...	250
45	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily ...	350
*46	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly ...	200
47	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti).	Do. ...	200
*48	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly ...	200
49	„ Saddharm Díp	Alíbág	Do. ...	600
50	„ Satyă Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	243
51	„ Satyă Sadan	Alíbág	Weekly ...	400
52	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	140
53	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly...	275
*54	„ Sharabh	Alíbág	Weekly ...	200
55	„ Shiváji[3]	Poona	Do. ...	200
56	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do. ...	90
57	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do. ...	150
58	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do. ...	240

[1] Maráthi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles.
[4] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
59	The Swadesh Mitră	Bombay	Tri-weekly	600
60	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly	250
61	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
62	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
63	„ Vichárahil	Málvan	Do.	300
*64	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
65	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*66	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
67	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
68	„ Hitechhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
69	„ Lok Mitră	Bombay	Do.	725
70	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
71	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
72	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
73	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
74	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
75	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
76	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
77	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	950
78	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
79	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
80	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
81	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
82	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	900
83	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Monthly	400
84	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
85	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*86	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
87	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*88	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
89	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
90	„ Kaira Vartmán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*91	„ Kaisar-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
92	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
93	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
94	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
95	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
96	„ Nyáyă Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
97	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
98	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
99	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
100	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*101	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
102	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*103	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
104	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
105	„ Tatwă Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár	Umreth	Fortnightly	62
*106	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
107	„ Vartmán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
108	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
109	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
110	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
111	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*112	„ Karnátak Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
	URDU.
*113	The Armagán	Bombay	Bi-weekly	200
114	„ Khayir Kháhe Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly	300
115	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
116	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases, an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out; and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well-known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Recommends that the limit of age for the Covenanted Civil Service Examination be raised to 22.

In alluding to the discussion about the physical and mental capacity of the Covenanted Civil Servants who have entered the service by competition, the Lok Mitrá (69) of the 11th February says:—We know of some caprices of our Civilians which cannot be accounted for by any other theory than that of insanity. But as in an oriental country kings are proverbially considered mad, there is perhaps hardly room for surprise in the general madness of the ruling class. But speaking seriously, we think that there is à priori no great improbability in the conclusion that the present standard of examination, coupled with the reduction of the maximum age of the competitors, must tell severely upon the mental frame as well as the bodily constitution of the candidate aspiring to the position of a ruler in India. At the age prescribed the examination must be a terrible strain even upon the robust Anglo-Saxon; but to the native of India, who has to leave his country to compete in a foreign land and in a foreign language with intelligent lads, it is no wonder if the effort entails a complete break-down. We earnestly invite the attention of the just English nation to this unequal conflict, where against all rules of fair play it is the weaker that is so terribly handicapped. Let the maximum age be raised to 22, and then we shall cease to hear of any such mental and physical falling off as has been lately commented upon.

Is sorry that no mention of India was made in the Queen's speech at the recent opening of Parliament.

In noticing the speech from the throne at the opening of Parliament on the 15th instant, the Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 17th February observes that hitherto poor India was always mentioned in the Queen's speech, but on the present occasion no mention of her was made. The highly beneficent policy of Lord Ripon with respect to local self-government and other important matters is extremely popular with the people of India, and Her Imperial Majesty might have mentioned that fact with great pleasure; but it seems that since the narrow-minded portion of the British public disapproves of the concessions, and in order not to give them cause to pour out their vituperations, Mr. Gladstone thought it discreet to omit all mention of India from the speech. The people of India are sorry for this omission of their country's name in the Queen's speech. [The Jáme Jamshed (89) of the same date expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Recommends the suggestions made by Dr. Fayrer for the destruction of venomous snakes to the favourable consideration of Government.

With reference to the destruction of life by venomous snakes, the Lok Mitrá (69) of the 11th February says:—It is calculated that no less than 20,000 human beings in India annually fall victims to the attacks of poisonous snakes alone. This is an awful destruction of life, and shows the presence of a more subtle and terrible foe than sporadic outbreaks of plague. The returns, therefore, of the mortality from this source must always prove of momentous interest. Dr. Fayrer is deservedly a high authority on all subjects connected with the nature, cure and prevention of the frightful mischief occasioned by poisonous snakes in India; and though he congratulates in his paper in Nature the Government of India on the appreciable reduction in the loss of life occasioned by the terrible agency, yet he thinks there is still scope for a more perfect and systematic organisation to cope with the evil. The task is certainly worthy of that great Government in India which has recognised the supreme importance of the preservation of its subjects above all other considerations. Indeed from no other government except the British could be expected the watchful care it has already evinced in this matter. In spite, however, of the admirable efforts hitherto made to struggle against the deadly foe, the very magnitude of the task has made such efforts of comparatively little avail. Dr. Fayrer's suggestion for making the nature of the venomous snakes of India more generally known is certainly very commendable, as he thinks that it is by offering greater inducements for the destruction of the really deadly type of snakes that the mischief can at all be met adequately. With a plain description and a faithful representation of each species in colours, says Dr. Fayrer, every district, medical or police officer would be able at once to distinguish the venomous from the innocent snakes, and thus knowledge enough at least for all practical purposes might be imparted to intelligent Native subordinates to enable them to recognise the poisonous snakes. Thus not only would numerous fatal accidents be prevented, but efforts would be concentrated towards the extermination of the really dangerous class of snakes. These efforts too ought to be made on a large scale. The mere raising of the rewards, though in itself a good inducement, will not serve the purpose. It is the employment of a more extensive and more systematically organised agency that is required. Dr. Fayrer recommends the organisation of what we may call snake-destroying gangs, with a department whose duty it should be to direct such efforts and make them conduce to the best results. There are classes of people in India who are admirably suited for the systematic hunting and extirpation of poisonous reptiles, and a very moderate inducement would make these people available as professional snake-destroyers, whose means of livelihood would depend entirely on the success of their destructive mission. It is gratifying to see that the Government is disposed to be most liberal in this respect. It has already created greater facilities for the claiming of rewards, and the whole subject of the mortality from snake-bite is under its consideration.

Rigorous enforcement of the forest laws in the Thána Collectorate and complaints regarding them.

The Suryodayá (58) of the 12th February states that on the representation of a monster meeting held in December last in Thána, Mr. Mulock, the Collector, admitted to a certain extent the oppressive nature of the forest laws and gave permission to the agriculturists to cut leaves and grass from the jungle for burning the ground in order to make it fit for raising crops. But this permission has, it is said, been withdrawn. Whether this mandate has gone forth from Government or from the district authorities is not known, but this much is certain that it is practising gross deception on the people to take away from them a privilege which has been recently granted, and thus bring them into trouble. The present is the season for preparing the land for raising crops, and at such a juncture it is extremely hard on cultivators to take away from them the right of cutting trees and grass in the jungle. Not only has no heed been paid to the representations made to the Viceroy on this subject, but the forest laws are now actually enforced with still greater rigour than they used to be a few months ago. From the notices issued by the Mahálkari of Petha Khálápur to village pátils and talátis, it appears that ryots are prohibited from cutting seventeen kinds of trees growing in the forests. Most of these trees furnish the rubbish required for burning the ground, and hence the prohibition in question will deal a death-blow to the prospects of the agriculturists. The Suryodayá hopes that the grievances of the agricultural population will be redressed without delay.

Prays Government to lessen the rigidity of the A'bkári Act.

The Surat Akhbár (70) of the 12th February says that although liquor was drunk in larger quantity by the labouring classes before the passing of the present A'bkári Act than now, yet Government derived less revenue than at present from this source. The abuse of liquor, however, was the same as it is at the present day. It cannot be believed that crimes have decreased owing to the dearness of liquor. Moderate taxation on any article of consumption is good, but excessive taxation, on the contrary, increases crime, dishonesty and disaffection. The President of the United States recently ordered a reduction in the duties levied on liquor. This is a foresight on the part of the American Republic for the preservation of peace in the country. The major portion of those who use liquor are ryots. They spend three-fourths of their income on liquor and toddy. Looking to the nature of their work it cannot be said that they do not stand in need of these drinks. The safety of Government consists in carefully watching the interests of the ryots, who are a good source of revenue. By the operation of the A'bkári Act half of the income of the agriculturists is swallowed up by other persons than Government. The people justly or unjustly complain of Government having gradually taken in its own hands several trades. Opium, salt, post, railway, banking, ábkári and other occupations have gone into the hands of Government, and a large number of the people have thereby lost their means of earning their livelihood. It is a great calamity to be obliged to forsake one's own country and profession. Government ought to look with parental care on its subjects and should look after their material welfare. It is therefore necessary that Government should take measures to reduce the ábkári duties and prevent pillage. These measures will silence the murmurs of the dumb millions, improve their position, and increase their prosperity.

Disapproves of the continuance of the punishment of flogging.

The Samsher Báhádur (99) of the 9th February, in referring to the recent notification regarding flogging, says that it sees no benefit in the continuation of this sort of punishment. It is not becoming a civilized government to punish a man like a beast. The chastisement should be befitting humanity. Salt water is sprinkled on the part which is flogged with a view to prevent suppuration. This causes intense pain and the parts take many weeks to heal. It would be better, therefore, to substitute for it such an improved sort of punishment as would not be unbecoming to a civilized government.

Suggests the appointment of a bench of Honorary Magistrates in the city of Poona for the disposal of easy criminal work.

The Dnyán Prakásh (7) of the 15th February notices with satisfaction the appointment of a bench of three Magistrates at Pandharpur for the disposal of cases involving offences against municipal laws, and observes that it would have been better if these gentlemen had been entrusted with power to try simple criminal cases. It is however not known whether the gentlemen selected for this work are officials or private individuals. If they are all officials the arrangement will not be productive of much good, but if the men selected for this honour are private individuals, then too much praise cannot be accorded to Mr. Waddington for making a departure from the usual official routine. The Dnyán Prakásh suggests that if the Honorary Magistrates in the city of Poona were to be formed into a single bench or court, and if it were entrusted with the power of disposing of definite criminal work, Government would be able to dispense with the services of at least one stipendiary Magistrate in Poona. In England respectable land-owners are appointed Honorary Magistrates, and they discharge their duties with great benefit to the country. There is no reason why the same practice should not be followed out here. The Dnyán Prakásh trusts that the District Magistrate of Poona will carry out the above suggestion.

Says that certain villages near Vágra are threatened by the Bhils.

A correspondent of the Gujaráti (85) of the 11th February states that the villages of Mosam, Pokhájan, Kashvan and others, situated about five miles to the west of the town of Vágra, are threatened by an inroad of the Bhils, whose principal object is of course plunder. The people do not consider themselves safe and are burying underground their valuable property. The cultivators are cutting and taking home unripe corn and other produce.

Remarks on the conduct of the Bombay Government in the case of the Mahárájof the Vaishnavas.

The Poona Vaibhav (44) of the 11th February says that the manner in which the case of the Mahárájof the Vaishnava community was disposed of shows the inconsiderateness and the indiscretion of the Bombay authorities. The culprit was not an ordinary individual. He was the respected head of a large religious community. The British authorities had no jurisdiction over him, and it would not have reflected discredit on them if he had not been sent to prison. The Bombay Government incurred needless odium by their proceedings in this case. They enhanced the sentence passed upon him without giving sufficient consideration to the subject, and when the Supreme Government rebuked them for their doing so they admitted their error and reduced the punishment. The Bombay Government justified their treatment of the Mahárájon the ground that the rich and the poor were all equal in the eyes of the law and deserved equal punishment for their misconduct. If this reasoning be correct, why should Europeans be hemmed in by peculiar privileges? Why should they not be made amenable to the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates?

The Yajdán Parast (110) of the 11th February recounts the long and valuable services rendered by Mr. Dosábhái Frámji, and regrets that Government have not appointed him to act as Collector of Bombay during the absence of Mr. Jacomb on leave. Mr. Dosábhái has given satisfaction to Government and the public, not only in the appointments which he has hitherto held, but even as Acting Collector of Bombay. His work was everywhere unexceptionable. His appointment to that post would have been in unison with the recent policy of Government regarding the advancement of intelligent Natives to high posts.

Regrets the non-appointment of Mr. Dosábhái Frámji as Acting Collector of Bombay.

A correspondent of the Poona Vaibhav (44) of the 11th February, writing from Anjarla in the Ratnágiri Collectorate, says that the man who has obtained the contract for plying the ferry-boat causes unnecessary annoyance and inconvenience to passengers. There is only one ferry-boat for conveying passengers from one side of the creek to the other, when the contractor is bound by the terms of his contract to keep two. When the ferry-boat is on one side passengers on the other side are kept waiting for several hours before they are conveyed to their destination. If a passenger tries to wade through the water when ebb has set in and the water is low, the contractor prevents him from doing so and forcibly recovers the usual charge from him. It is to be hoped that the local Mámlatdár will redress the grievances of inoffensive passengers.

Inconvenience to passengers at the creek at Anjarla in the Ratnágiri District.

The Satyá Shodhak (52) of 11th February in its local news states that it is given out that a certain sáheb is fond of roaming about at night in the town of Ratnágiri and of annoying women by entering houses and gazing at them. About three days ago this young gentleman was caught in his nightly peregrinations and a scuffle ensued, in which he was roughly handled. It is said that this occurrence was reported to the police, but nothing is known of the result. This man holds a subordinate post in the Customs Department.

Reprehensible conduct of a certain young European official in the Customs Department at Ratnágiri.

With reference to the importation of lady doctors from England, the Subodh Patrika (10) of the 11th February remarks that the scheme will not be successful. There is not a large number of Native women sufficiently conversant with the English language to be able to profit by the instruction of English lady doctors. The funds collected by Messrs. Kittredge and Sorábji Shápurji Bengáli can be more usefully employed in another way. It would be well if an experienced Native doctor were appointed to impart instruction in the vernaculars in medical science to a class of Native women at the Grant Medical College. Women trained in this way will be infinitely more useful to their country-women in treating female disorders than English lady doctors just imported from England and utterly ignorant of the vernacular languages and the manners and customs of Native households.

Does not approve of the importation of lady doctors from England for imparting instruction in medical science to Native women.

The Gujarát Mitrá (67) of the 11th February states that the travellers' bungalow at Bhagwádándi, together with its furniture, is advertized to be sold by public auction. It is said that this building was erected by public subscription, and therefore by selling it the object with which it was built would be defeated. Besides travellers would lose the great convenience which they now enjoy. Government is requested to enquire into the matter and not to sell the building. [The Vartmán Sár (107) of the 13th February prays Government not to sell this travellers' bungalow, but to levy a small fee from those who make use of it with a view to meet the expenses of repairs.]

Disapproves of the intended sale by public auction of the travellers' bungalow at Bhagwádándi.

The Lok Mitrá (69) of the 11th February observes that the catastrophe at the Pánjrápol lane the other day has attracted serious attention to the want of any protection for the large number of poor people employed in the wool-cleaning trade in Bombay. That nearly five hundred people—all women and children—should be crowded in a place with only one means of exit by a narrow staircase with a door hardly four feet wide, is surely a scandal, and it is still more scandalous that no one should be bound to remedy such a state of things. The Factory Act, it seems, does not apply to an establishment of the kind to which such prominent attention has been attracted by the disaster, as though the premises were used for adapting for transport an article largely exported, and more than one hundred persons were employed therein, yet neither steam, nor water, nor other mechanical power was used in aid of the process. The municipality too, it appears, failed in getting these establishments under its control; and in fact no person is considered directly responsible for the good order and management of these factories. It must be somebody's business in this large city to look after the lives and safety of its residents; and cannot the police look after these dens, where human beings are liable to be suffocated to death at any moment, and can nothing be done to prevent any one wilfully or negligently jeopardising the lives of those least able to take care of themselves?

Recommends the police of Bombay to see that the wool-cleaning factories are suitable for the due safety of the workpeople employed in them.

Increase of thefts in Umreth.

The Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár (105) of February says that thieves fearlessly go about their work at night in the streets of Umreth. The people are much terrified at this state of affairs. A thief was recently caught in the very act of breaking into a house in the Tántaria Street, but he managed to escape and has not yet been arrested. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the local police will adopt measures to put down this kind of offences.

Singing of indecent songs at Surat.

The Nyáyá Prakásh (96) of the 12th February says that as this is the wedding season amongst the various castes of the Hindus, Hindu women sing obscene songs in public places at Surat. This practice is calculated to lower public morals. The Superintendent of Police ought to take measures to put a stop to this nuisance.

Deep sorrow felt for the untimely death of Sir Salar Jung.

All the newspapers of this week record with great sorrow the death of Sir Salar Jung. The deceased nobleman is highly praised for his great administrative abilities and his valuable services to the Nizám's Government. His usefulness to the paramount power in the critical times of the Indian mutiny is briefly recounted with pride. His death is unanimously considered as a national loss.

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Approves of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Indu Prakásh (8) of the 12th February says:—The people of India cannot too often congratulate themselves on their having as their Viceroy a man far above the ordinary run of Anglo-Indian statesmen. A fresh instance of His Lordship's generosity and large-mindedness is the proposed abolition of the trial of European British subjects by European British Magistrates and Judges only. It is somewhat strange that the new Code of Criminal Procedure, before it was hardly a month old, should have required tinkering, but it all the more strongly shows how hastily the Code was carried through the Legislative Council to enable the late legal member to see the measure passed into law before he retired. The distinction in jurisdiction now proposed to be obliterated is a remnant of times when Natives were not advanced enough to be trusted with large executive and judicial powers. At a time when the English power was not firmly established, when education had made no progress, when the recollections of past greatness were fresh in the minds of our people, it was natural that it should be thought necessary to maintain the British prestige by reserving special privileges for the men of the ruling race. But now that British prestige is fully vindicated, the old ignorance and prejudices have been swept away, Natives are found qualified to fill important offices of trust and emolument, and are admitted to be enlightened and loyal, the same precautions and safeguards with regard to the liberties of European subjects are not necessary. It is unquestionably an anomaly that a Native should be considered fit to be a Civil Servant, and yet not worthy to be entrusted with all the powers which his European brothers in office wield. The anomaly is more flagrant when a Native officer, who could use the coveted powers of trying a European British subject in a Presidency town, is disabled from using them when promoted to even a higher appointment in the mofussil. Such a distinction is a confession of weakness and exhibits a want of confidence in the integrity of Native officers. Such a want of confidence would justify our rulers in denying to us all privileges, but once our right and capacity for those privileges is admitted, it seems hardly consistent to deny in the same breath their use by us. Notwithstanding the assurances and promises of the Proclamation of 1858, the recognition of our right to fill offices, the duties of which we may be qualified by our education, ability and integrity duly to discharge, has been very slow and tardy. No wonder then that this inequality of races before the law has long been unredressed. No wonder also that in the general correction of errors and the remodelling of the Indian Empire by our noble Viceroy, this grievance should come in for its share of redress. It is not surprising that Anglo-Indian journals like the Englishman, the Pioneer and the Times of India should resent this attempt at encroachment upon what are probably regarded as vested rights of European British subjects, and should raise a howl of complaint and indignation. The Englishman and the Pioneer have uniformly been the strong supporters of the Anglo-Indian interest, and their advocacy can well be understood as what they owe to their constituents. Meanwhile it is a relief to find Anglo-Indian journals like the Statesman and the Bombay Gazette willing to admit the justness of the measure. It is also a great relief to find that there is a consensus of opinion in favour of the bill amongst all the Local Governments, and that the best European opinion also approves of the amendment. With respect to Native public opinion, we venture to hope there will be no discordant voice. The only objections suggested by the opponents of the measure are that it is not necessary, in so far as the present law has not worked unsatisfactorily and unjustly, and that in certain remote parts European planters are required to be protected from their Native neighbours, or rather supported in their iron grasp on the coolies. The first objection is like begging the whole question. The obnoxious distinction ignores the claims of the Native society, creates inequality between the different subjects of Her Majesty, and causes much vexation and discontent. The second objection cannot also hold water. These powers are not to be scattered broadcast on every Native Magistrate, but are to be limited to Magistrates of the first class of a specified description. Magistrates of the first class can always be expected to be officers of great experience and ability, who may be trusted not to abuse their powers. Further we are inclined to believe that before a Native Magistrate there is a greater chance of perversion of justice in favour of a European than otherwise. The inevitable awe a European inspires in the Native mind, a mistaken sense of pleasing European superiors, and a general regard for the truthfulness of Europeans, will, we apprehend, in many cases influence the minds of Native Magistrates rather in favour of Europeans than against them. The true objection is a sentimental one—a disdain on the part of the ruling race to be judged by one of the subject race. It is this antagonism between races which statesmen like Lord Ripon are striving to stamp out. The policy of Lord Ripon and his associates will, we trust, be not affected by this interested cackle. It is a noble policy seeking security and stability of Government more in the willing obedience and confidence of the people than enforced submission. It seems to be conceived in the true spirit of the noble words of the Queen's Proclamation of 1858. With truth and justice on their side and the well meaning discerning Anglo-Indian public and the whole Native public to back them, the Government of India can well afford to ignore the unmeaning chatter of some Anglo-Indian newspapers or the interested calumnies of political opponents in England. Meanwhile it is all the more necessary for our people to contradict these calumnies and signify by every means in our power our appreciation of His Excellency's services and our solicitude to avail ourselves of them as long as possible.

Remarks in connection with the amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code, removing the disabilities of Native Magistrates.

With reference to the proposed amendment in the Criminal Procedure Code removing the disabilities of Native Magistrates to try European criminals, the Subodh Patrika (10) of the 11th February says:—The London Times, representing the interest of the rampant Anglo-Saxon in the East, has sounded the trumpet of alarm without apparently hearing what the Government of India have to say in support of the proposed change, and why the subordinate Governments have given their opinion in favour of it. It predicts a check to the flow of English capital towards India which has just begun, and advises Europeans to take their departure homewards. The local Times of India affects to follow suit. We do not see any reason for this strange panic. Native Magistrates in the Presidency towns are allowed to try Europeans. Why should not they then be allowed to do so in the mofussil? In the case of Mr. Gupta this anomaly was very plainly seen. While a Magistrate in Calcutta he could and did try European criminals, but as soon as he was transferred to the mofussil he lost that power. We are told that in Presidency towns the Magistrates are held in check by public opinion; but it is forgotten that even in the mofussil a European neither would nor could be dealt with unjustly without the Native trying Magistrate coming to grief. Indeed there is every chance of the European criminal being treated more favourably by a Native than by a European Magistrate in any town, and no conviction need be expected except what can be sustained under the most rigorous tests, for every such conviction is sure to be put to such tests by the accused or his friends at each step legally and even extra judiciously, and woe to the Native Magistrate against whose judgment the slightest objection can be raised. This is borne out by what has actually occurred in Bombay, where Native Magistrates are allowed to try European criminals. Then again the local Governments have unanimously supported the proposals. We do not know why their opinions are not published, as their publication would remove one ground of complaint. But, says the Times, why alter the present system? Anomalous it is, but the English Government in India itself is an anomaly, and therefore no anomalies as such should be removed. What more logical then than that all laws should be abolished or at least every member of the ruling race should be placed above the law? The local Governments must have their reasons of course, but we are surprised that people should seriously argue that the Magistrate who is held to be competent for the weak Native will be found to go wrong when trying the powerful European. As said above the advantages are just the other way, and it is more than a mere anomaly—it is a hindrance to justice—that the ordinary police and the magistracy should not touch the case of the European accused, but should treat them as sacred and send their cases for disposal at a distance and thus seriously interfere with the means of arriving at a true conclusion, and that too at needless cost to the State. Some opposition it is natural to expect; but we hope the more sober portion of the Anglo-Indian publicists will not be carried away by a one-sided feeling and the usual cant.

Approves of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 11th February says:—The bill slightly extending the jurisdiction of the Native Magistrate has hitherto been in an awkward position, and Mr. Ilbert would have been false to his reputation had he allowed the anomaly to exist after it had been brought to his notice. The proposed amendment is in perfect keeping with the character of the present administration, and we hail it with gratitude as another proof of Lord Ripon's sincerity of purpose. The constitution of the Zilla Courts cannot be called complete unless the Native Magistrate exercises complete jurisdiction over criminals of all classes. As our Gujaráti contemporaries say, the exemption of European prisoners from the jurisdiction of Zilla Courts argues want of confidence in Native Magistrates. Such an imputation is unjust, considered from any point of view; and as a matter of fact, it has put the Native minister of law in a most unenviable position. Mr. Gupta has done a service to Government by bringing this flagrant irregularity to its attention.

Approves of the passing of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

With reference to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Poona Vaibhav (44) of the 11th February observes that instances have frequently occurred where Europeans found guilty of killing Natives have escaped with only a nominal punishment because the trying Judge happened to be of the same race with the accused. Hitherto the feeling of immunity from conviction engendered by the fact that the presiding Judge would take a lenient view of the guilt of the accused parties on account of race partiality have emboldened Europeans to commit all kinds of atrocious crimes against Natives. In order to prevent the perpetration of injustice it is proposed to invest Native Magistrates with power to try European criminals. By passing the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, Lord Ripon will entitle himself to the gratitude of the natives of India. The English newspapers are creating an immense uproar because Lord Ripon is bent upon doing justice. They assert that if the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill is passed into law, the non-official Europeans who have made this country their home will have to abandon it. This argument is simply laughable; because under the British Government it is boasted that all are alike before the law, and the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill only aims at putting all subjects of Her Majesty on a footing of equality. The clamour of the English newspapers is evidently intended to preserve for Europeans immunity from punishment when charged with committing heinous crimes against Natives. If Native Magistrates are competent to try their own countrymen, there is no reason why they should be considered unfit to try Europeans. Will it be contended that this distinction is to be preserved because Europeans have come as it were from heaven and Natives from the opposite quarter? If the contention of English newspapers that non-official Europeans will have to abandon this country if Native Magistrates are invested with jurisdiction over them be well founded, then it would be well to enact a law for transporting the Native population to other countries and leave this country to be colonised by Europeans.

Remarks on the opposition raised by some Europeans to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

After pronouncing a severe condemnation of the Assam Emigration Act and denouncing its working as most unsatisfactory, the Lok Mitrá (69) of the 11th February observes that if there were a Native Magistrate with jurisdiction to try European offenders against law in such districts as Assam, much of the existing anomaly and evil would disappear. But it is the interest of the European planter to perpetuate it as it favours his interests. Hence the cry against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill. But it is a most hollow one. The Native Magistrate will be in a better position to deal the strictest justice between subject and subject than the European. It is argued that he would be led away by race feelings. The Native Magistrate, whether in the Presidency towns or in the remote interior where the light of public criticism seldom penetrates, has always one fear before him. He knows well how a European, be he the most respectable man or the veriest loafer, is apt to raise a cry the moment he fancies he is ill-used or ill-judged in his Court. The European who considers himself aggrieved by the alleged partiality of the sentence that a Native Magistrate might have inflicted on him puts up his friends to make an agitation on his behalf. The anti-Native organs are inspired to take up the cause. A one-sided picture is given. Facts are misrepresented, and thus agitation is set howling so as to make it reverberate throughout the country. These are patent facts, and those who have paid careful attention to these matters in the past will not have the courage to deny the views expressed here. The Native Magistrate then has this fear of agitation before him, whether he performs his duty impartially or otherwise. If at all, this very fear is more likely to lead him to act leniently towards a European culprit, which he would under no circumstances do in the case of Natives. The Native Magistrate is most cautious not to excite race animosities by unfair or partial decisions. In fact, no European Magistrate ever cares to show the slightest leniency towards a Native, and even in Presidency towns cases have often been decided which have scandalised the country. An unequal measure of justice is dealt out for the same crime to a Native and a European. Not to go too far, only last year the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay sentenced one Mr. Brownlow for having beaten a Native with a stick on the head till blood issued from it. The poor injured man did not recover from his illness, which in its initiatory stage threatened to be fatal, for about three months. When he recovered the case was proceeded with. And what was the result? In spite of the admittedly grievous injury done, Mr. Brownlow was let off with a fine, when in all conscience, and on the weight of the evidence, he ought to have been sentenced to six months' imprisonment! But the anomaly does not rest here. About the same time a Calcutta Magistrate, Mr. Marsden, it is believed, sentenced a Native horsekeeper who raised his hand against his master under extreme provocation to six months' imprisonment. The master received hardly any injury. Now look at the contrast. A European who caused grievous injury to a Native, which well nigh threatened to be fatal, is sentenced only to a fine; while a Native who caused hardly any injury to a European under extreme provocation is sentenced to six months' imprisonment! Are the provisions of the Indian Criminal Procedure Code different in Bombay and Calcutta, or is it that there is one law for the Native and another for the European? What has the Times of India to urge in support of these scandalous vagaries of European Magistrates, when it glibly talks of vagaries of Presidential Native Magistrates? The two examples of the vagaries of European Magistrates have been quoted here because they excited considerable attention at the time and offered themes for vituperative comments in the press. In the matter of Mr. Brownlow the Bombay Government had to call the Magistrate's decision into question. In fact, in a Government resolution published on the subject a strong hint was expressed at such miscarriage of justice. That the London Times should have again been misled into inditing a stupid article is not a matter of surprise. Only last week we had to point out the unreliable character of its article on local self-government. The Thunderer may thunder as much as he likes. He may launch his bolts of aimless criticism. They fall harmlessly here. Nobody is injured by them. They may create a whiz and stir for a few days, but nothing beyond. And those of our contemporaries who, following the Printing-House-square Jove, launch their tiny thunderbolts, only make themselves ridiculous by their antics. The statement as to the probability of European capitalists withdrawing their capital from the remote districts and retiring with their baggage home, in the case of Mr. Ilbert's amendments being passed, is too childish for any serious journalist to put forth. It only raises a smile of pity, if nothing worse. But it remains to be seen whether this prophecy turns out to be true when the Government of India has succeeded in passing the amendments which are perfectly called for in the present state of growing Native opinion in India. It is to be earnestly hoped that it will not be cowed down by the inchoate cry of a few interested persons. The opposition to the amendments is frivolous, and no government that is intent upon removing grave judicial anomalies in a country like this should fail to do what is right and honourable. Let the opposition organs crow as much as they like. These amendments are a fresh instance of the great solicitude of Lord Ripon and his colleagues to deal justice to all classes of Her Majesty's Indian subjects, without distinction of colour or creed, according to the letter and spirit of solemn imperial proclamations. [The Samsher Báhádur (99) of the 9th, the Suryá Prakásh (71) of the 10th, the Bombay Chronicle (66), the Rást Goftár (98), the Kaisar-i-Hind (91), the Gujarát Mitrá (67) and the Gujaráti (85) of the 11th, the Nyáyá Prakásh (110) of the 12th, the Vartmán Sár (107) of the 13th and the Deshi Mitrá (82) of the 15th February express somewhat similar sentiments.]

Approves of the new rules of procedure passed by the Bombay Legislative Council.

With reference to the new rules of procedure passed by the local Legislative Council, the Lok Mitrá (69) of the 11th February observes that the publication of proposed legislative measures in the Government Gazette has hitherto been a mere matter of form. The general public scarcely ever care to keep themselves informed of what appears in that voluminous production. And for the large public which is not blessed with a knowledge of English, the proceedings might as well be published in Chinese as in the vernaculars, which in the rendering of the official translator become almost unintelligible to common apprehension. It is now decided to distribute copies of bills and the statements of objects and reasons to the press, and an interval of time will be allowed for the communication and collection of opinions on proposed measures. This will be a distinct gain not only to the public but to the propounders of the measures themselves, and for the rest the press can be trusted to represent fairly and adequately the sentiments of the non-official community, and is in nine instances out of ten likely to be right, as recently happened in the case of the Mhowra Bill. As publicity will be given to bills not only while they are in different stages of progress through the Council, but also in some cases before leave has been obtained to introduce them, ample time will be given for discussion if the Government will faithfully carry out the rule with due regard to the importance of the measures. There is almost a touch of satire in one of the rules, which seems to recognize the claim of honourable members who are ignorant of the English language to sit in solemn conclave and to give their pre-arranged votes quite unconscious of the debates; for one of the rules naively provides that the Oriental Translator shall be bound to furnish any explanations with regard to reports of committees required by any member of Council not acquainted with the English language.

Education.

Approves of the intention of Government to enact a law authorizing Indian Universities to confer honorary degrees on distinguished persons.

The Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 12th February heartily approves of the desire shown by the Supreme Government to enact a law authorizing Indian Universities to confer honorary degrees on distinguished persons. After alluding to the Act passed in 1875 authorizing the Calcutta University to bestow such titles on persons of distinction, the Samáchár observes that similar authority ought to be conferred on other Indian Universities, as this would be beneficial to those institutions as well as the public. It is highly conducive to the public welfare that a University should connect its name with those of distinguished individuals who for some reason or other did not earn an University degree by passing the necessary examination but who nevertheless deserve it by their great abilities, high rank or important services in the cause of progress and enlightenment.

Advocates the introduction of the Bible in Indian public schools.

With reference to the question why the Bible should be read in the public schools, the Dnyánodayá (6) of the 15th February says:—Were the matter carefully investigated, it would be found that one of the greatest causes of friction between the rulers and the ruled is the ignorance of the religion of the rulers on the part of the people. The rebellion of 1857 would have had but little power had the people but known that it was directly contrary to the religion of the English people to force a religion on another race. It was this ignorance that was worked upon and which fed the flames of war. Had the Bible been known, the rebellion could hardly have occurred. Even now only a very few people know what Christianity is, the mass having the most absurd beliefs, and such as can be worked upon by any scheming man. The people are suspicious of every act of Government which has any relation to religion, and can be easily excited to frenzy. Did the people know what Christianity was, there would be far less friction and far more kindly feeling between the rulers and the ruled. The Government commits a serious blunder in keeping the people in ignorance of the religion which is at the base of its motives, and the people in loving such ignorance do a great injury to themselves. But turning again to the student, the history of Europe must be incomprehensible to anyone who knows not the Bible. England knows its power in her own case. Why should that knowledge be withheld from India? National progress is the question of the day. To learn from history is the great study for the present. Why should England allow India to misunderstand history by carefully keeping the Bible out of her schools? The result must be false notions of causes and effects, which is a most dangerous road for a nation to travel. The knowledge of the Bible would be a compass to India, starting on an unknown sea, but the Christian Government cares not to put the compass in her hand. The Bible unread in the public schools means a hindrance to scholarship, a danger to the morality of a nation. It means continued suspicion in reference to every Government act relating to religion. It prevents an understanding of the English character and hence it engenders unfriendly feeling. The Bible unread causes history to be misunderstood and India to be launched on an unknown sea without a guide. It is time for Government to change its timid attitude, to ignore with a firm hand those prejudices which are suicidal to India, and to place the Bible in the schools as a text-book for knowledge and for guidance. It is time indeed for India herself to demand from the Government that the Bible be read in her schools, and that she be not deprived of the same source that has made England great.

Native States.

Suggestions for the improvement of the present condition of Native States.

The Native Opinion (9) of the 11th February, in an article headed "Disturbances in Junágad and our Political Agencies," alludes to the Junágad tragedy and remarks:—It is to be regretted that the Local Government in a moment of thoughtlessness should have considered it fit to benefit Junágad State coffers at the expense of hereditary rights. The disturbed state of affairs in one of the principal States of Káthiáwár leaves upon the mind the sad impression that even after years of British contact and British supervision Native States should not have improved to any appreciable extent. We do not say this because Junágad has not shown any signs of progress; but what we have said may with a great deal of truth be said of all Native States with a few exceptions only. If the States have not improved as they ought, the blame may primarily rest with the Chiefs themselves; but the representatives of the paramount power attached to their Darbárs cannot be relieved from all responsibility in regard to the backward state of these principalities. The Political Agents are invested with the power of advising and, whenever necessary, of impressing upon Chiefs what their real duties are and how they are bound to fulfil them. Our Political Officers generally do no justice to this duty of theirs. Some are often negligent enough to allow their charges to go wayward; others constrain them to an extent that often culminates either in the quasi-annexation of the State by the British Government or in the deposition of the prince. The idea of becoming a king-maker generally has great attractions for a Political Agent, and the personal consciousness that as the representative of the British Government his representations to his superiors with regard to the principality he is attached to will be received as gospel do not forsake him. A Political Agent passes always for a very shrewd man, and well he might, seeing that the calculations of the Political Agents generally prove pretty accurate under the circumstances. Exceptions apart, the Foreign Office invariably says ditto to the recommendations of the Political Agents, and even when its convictions lie the opposite way, that office, to keep up its supposed national prestige, often persuades itself to say the same. It thus happens that the complaints of the Native Prince or Chief, however true and worthy of consideration, often remain unheard, and the prince has to submit to many an indignity at the hands of the Political Officer at his court, who is naturally enraged when his acts are called in question and redress is sought against him. Political considerations apart, educationally the Chiefs and their subjects are comparatively far behind the present generation, and as a consequence they are not in a position to duly apprehend or appreciate the requisites of a good systematic government. What they cannot apprehend or appreciate has to be brought to their convictions by exhortation or advice as may seem convenient, and whenever and wherever such gentle means are applied, the results are satisfactory and beneficial both to the Chief, his subjects, and the paramount power. But it is very rarely that such gentle means are applied, and the result of force on the part of Political Officers is never as happy as could be desired. We are not very hopeful of the kind of education our Princes and Chiefs receive at the several Rájkumár Colleges. Their education is of a peculiarly superficial character, and the evil influences which they allow to operate upon themselves as soon as they leave their alma mater make them gradually forget what they may have picked up at it. It is to avoid all these sad results, proceeding as they do both from the irresponsible action of the Political Agents and their incapacity to grapple with State questions, that some means are required to be devised. A provision for a more solid education than one of the kind that is now given is necessary, so that like other educated people their minds may be filled with noble ideas and high sentiments of their duties and responsibilities to their fellowmen. Whenever a prince is placed on the throne he should be assisted by a council, which should not be forced upon him in contravention of his treaty rights, but which he should be persuaded to appoint himself. With solid education, an effective training in the art of civil government, and the assistance of a State council, many a Native State may become a model of good government. We may cite the instance of the Mahárája of Travancore. The kind of education and training he has received is a guarantee that his subjects will enjoy peace and prosperity under him. If an attempt in the direction hinted above be seriously made, we have no doubt it will do some good to Native States, but if they are allowed to go on in the manner they do at present, we have no hope of seeing a better state of things.

Remarks in connection with certain recent occurrences in Káthiáwár.

In an article headed "Káthiáwár Scandals," the Indu Prakásh (8) of the 12th February says:—The first event was the rude treatment of a prince by Colonel Barton for not attending on the score of illness a darbár presided over by the latter gentleman in the absence of His Excellency the Governor. Then came the somewhat protracted quarrel between Colonel Barton and the Chief of a petty State in Káthiáwár as to the selection of a diwán by the latter. Here too the more powerful party proved the more successful. Colonel Barton played his game as ingeniously as he could, and some of his acts, which found vent in the press, had to be sharply criticised by Government, but beyond that nothing happened. Everything was hushed up. The comments of the press, however, have remained unchallenged and uncontradicted. No sooner had the unpleasantness of this case been allowed to be forgotten than there came up other persons and events on the scene. It was given out that Junágad was not on good terms with Mángrol—that in fact the former State was bent upon exercising its more powerful influence for the purpose of putting the latter down. The Darbáris of the State, intent on this enterprise, were to be seen driving most majestically some months back about the streets of Bombay. What became of the game the gods know. Probably the game has not been played out. Mángrol is easy to swallow, but not in the way Junágad wishes to do the swallowing. We then heard of the strange way in which justice was being administered in Káthiáwár. A gentleman who served as a public prosecutor was dismissed because he had not prevented a judge from discharging certain accused who were clearly proved to be guiltless. The gods, however, have repaired the wrong here. Then followed reports of maladministration at Gondal; and those reports have been thrown into the background by the cold-blooded massacre at Junágad of 85 persons. This brings the political history of Káthiáwár to a climax, and if Government is wise it will turn the opportunity to some useful purpose by holding a strict and impartial enquiry into the morale of the Káthiáwár administration. What are we to say of this deplorable tragedy at Junágad? Is the court of that State so far demoralized as to steep its hands in cold blood for securing a paltry amount of Rs. 1,000 a year? For, it is said, that is the amount of yearly assessment levied from the Maiyas. Even the official version of the case is sufficiently damaging to the Junágad State. A class of people called the Maiyas have from a long period owned certain estates on condition of rendering military service to the State. The Junágad State in a sudden fit of rashness attempted to dispense with the military services and to levy a tax in lieu thereof. The Maiyas resisted, and very properly too. A reference to the decisions of the highest Indian tribunal of justice, we mean the Privy Council, would show that when lands are given to a man in consideration of certain services to be rendered by him to the grantor, the grantor cannot resume them at his pleasure by declining to accept those services. Whether the services are required or not, whether the necessity for them has ceased or not, the grantee is entitled to hold the lands as long as he is willing to render the services. These decisions of the Privy Council have been followed by the courts in India—notably by the High Court of Bombay. And they are founded on an equitable principle. Now the contract under which the Maiyas entered into their girássi rights did not contemplate the payment of any rental. It contemplated nothing but military service on the part of the grantees. The service may have become unnecessary; but the Maiyas are not responsible for it. They are willing to render the services, and as long as they are so willing, there is no principle of justice by which they can be evicted or made to pay assessment. All this, however, is ignored. The Junágad Darbár tramples under its foot ancient and vested rights, and all for Rs. 1,000 a year! The Political Agent sides with it. The Bombay Government follows suit, and the Secretary of State puts his seal on this confiscation policy. Nobody cares for the Maiyas, for they are the weaker party with neither money nor influence to protect them against Junágad. The Junágad Darbár, led by the nose by its Náib Diwán, one Mr. Bápálál, a gentleman who, we are informed, is both uneducated and inconsiderate, is strengthened in its attempt at spoliation. Driven to desperation the Maiyas seek refuge on a neighbouring hill, and while there, the Junágad sibandi is let loose upon them and 85 men, women and children are slaughtered without any scruple! And what is all this done for? To secure to the State an annual assessment of Rs. 1,000! Can anybody avoid crying "shame" as a comment on this mad policy? The most serious allegation is that the Maiyas were fired upon and killed while they were asking for quarter with grass and shoes in their mouths as symbols of submission. This statement is made by the Bombay Gazette. If the fact be true, the question naturally arises, what could have emboldened the Junágad Darbár to steep its hands in such a bloody deed? It is alleged that the Maiyas took the aggressive and courted the attack. But it is improbable, if not incredible, that these men should have fired when they were negociated with. The sibandi would not have attacked if there had been no orders to attack. Those orders may not have been distinctly given, but it is enough to damage the reputation of the Junágad Darbár if even an indirect hint to attack was given. The matter is very serious and ought to be duly enquired into. There is reason to suppose that the Junágad Darbár has gone into this reckless deed under the belief that it can get the Political Agent to side, as usual, with it and hush up the matter. But that should not debar Government from ordering a very careful enquiry into the conduct of the Darbár. The public ought to know something of the men who are the guiding stars of the prince. Who is his Kárbhári? Who are his advisers? A good deal will very likely turn upon these questions. It is becoming a bye-word in Káthiáwár that as long as a State manages to do the bidding of the Political Agent, it can do anything with impunity. And the events in Káthiáwár which we have mentioned above lend colour to the belief. Káthiáwár needs a revolution; and we hope the Junágad massacre will make Government wiser. Anything can be borne but this insane trifling with the sacredness of human life. We beg of Government to appoint a commission, composed of a Judge of the High Court, a European official of high standing chosen from the Executive, and a competent non-official Native having nothing to do with Káthiáwár, to investigate the matter. At present the official explanation is not satisfactory except that it is sufficiently condemnatory of the conduct of the Junágad Darbár.

Says that the Native States in Káthiáwár are mismanaged.

The Gujaráti (85) of the 11th February observes that mismanagement prevails in Navánagar, Junágad, Gondal, Pálitána, Dhrángadra, Porbandar and other Native States of Káthiáwár, and yet the reports made by the Political Agent praise their administration. It is no wonder that it should be so, since the Political Officers and their subordinates are sumptuously treated by the Chiefs when the former are moving on their circuits. From this cause maladministration seems to have prevailed in Junágad, which has led to the massacre of the Maiyas. It is, however, to be hoped that the Honourable Mr. Peile, who has great experience of the province, will not fail to have a searching enquiry made into the sad affair.

Describes the Junágad massacre.

With reference to the Junágad massacre, a correspondent of the Indu Prakásh (8) of the 12th February writes:—On the principle that dead men tell no tales, the wounded were brutally slain when they were quite unable to offer any resistance. This I have learnt through a soldier of Junágad, though the fellow has given me to understand that he would retract his confession if any inconvenient use were attempted to be made of it. The Maiyas had no arms and were butchered in almost cold blood. This is a fact, however it may be now distorted. It was given out that Saleh Bhayi had come to the "Gir" for "vasti" with the Maiyas. The poor but brave people prepared to see him and to pay their respects to him, and, when some way down their camp, were set upon and murdered. Scenes of devotion and valour were not wanting; but the actors were the wretched Maiyas. One of their mukhis or chief men, the Maiya of Tarsingda, a boy of 12 years of age, the sole representative of his house, was accompanied to the "Gir" by his sister, an elderly dame. The poor woman, they say, begged hard that her infant brother might be spared, and when she found that her appeals were unheeded by the savage soldiery, she took the boy in her lap and bending over him covered his body with her own. She did not however succeed in saving the life of the poor boy. Poor woman, history will not take notice of thy valour and devotion! The poor must suffer in private and must be also content to do good in private. The number of the killed is very much understated. It is popularly believed that about two hundred have lost their lives. A great many have also perished in jumping down rocks and precipices for their lives. Though it is difficult for private people to form an exact idea of the actual loss of life that has resulted from the infatuated action of Junágad, yet it will be comparatively easy for the Government to know the exact loss. The Maiyas are a very small tribe and are only found in Sorat and Rájkot. In the Sorat Pránt they are found in the Majma Pargana, on the co-shared district of Mángrol and Junágad, in Jethpore and Manawadar. The whole tribe does not exceed two thousand souls. Their loss, therefore, can easily be made out.

An account of the massacre of the Maiyas in Junágad.

In giving an account of the dissatisfaction and departure to the Kanda Hill of the Maiyas of Junágad, a correspondent of the Gujaráti (85) of the 11th February observes that while they were encamped at this place for nearly one month not a single man was robbed in the neighbourhood, though the surrounding country was afraid of them. On the 26th January the Junágad levies sent a message to the Maiyas to surrender, and the latter, seeing that the British authorities, of whom they are sore afraid, sided with the State, gave up opposition. Hereupon the Junágad party became elated. While the Maiyas were quite off their guard the levies marched upon them, and a Maiya has furnished the following account of what occurred. Being frightened, the Maiyas were ready to surrender, when the náik (commander) of the Junágad police ordered them to lay down their arms and submit. This they did and thereupon the police fired upon them. Several were killed while they were sitting. The women commenced running away, and they and the children were fired upon. Among the women hit was one of Amra's daughters, and on her brother coming to her assistance six sepoys cut him down; after this Amra's other son was fired upon, and then Amra himself was killed. The Maiyas then opposed the police, but could do little without weapons. When the Maiyas saw that they were opposed by three times their own number, they began to run down the hill, but the police pursued and overtook them and mercilessly killed 80 individuals, wounded 45, and captured 60, among which last are two women. The Gujaráti remarks that it is usual with the Junágad authorities to kill and not to capture the outlaws, because when they are killed their girás reverts to the State.

Makes remarks on the cruelty practised by the Junágad police on the corpses of the Maiyas.

In alluding to the cruel conduct of the Junágad police in cutting the heads off the corpses of the Maiyas for the purpose of taking them to Junágad, the Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 14th February observes that this cruelty proves that the conduct of the police was extremely barbarous, and leads to the inference that they did not show the least mercy to the Maiyas while firing upon them. Whether the police did as is alleged and whether the Junágad authorities took any precautions against their rash action in the attack upon the Maiyas ought to be ascertained. If the police are proved guilty, they should be disbanded and an orderly and well behaved force employed in their place. The other States of Káthiáwár should be warned against such cruel conduct.

Complains of the oppression exercised by the Junágad State on its outlaws.

The Hitechhu (68) of Ahmedabad of the 15th February, in referring to the Junágad tragedy, observes that oppression in Junágad now knows no bounds. The Junágad State appears to be always willing to kill its outlaws. It has very seldom apprehended the outlaws and tried them. It has a special reason for slaughtering them, for if their rights were established when they are on trial it would have to make some concession, otherwise the oppression exercised on them would come to light. It is to be regretted that the Káthiáwár Agency should try to show the error of the Maiyas by publishing reports that tend to hide the oppression exercised by the Junágad police in slaughtering about a hundred persons, who were mostly innocent. The lot of the unfortunate Maiyas is pitiful. The Viceroy made enquiries into and expressed sorrow for those who died by an accident at a wool-cleaning factory in Bombay, and it is therefore wonderful that so little concern is shown for the death of these four or five score men. The present Nawáb, Báhádur Khánji, is a young man given to pleasure. He knows nothing of the ways of government. The Nágar and Musalmán officials manage affairs in their own interests. The present state of things will not come to an end save by the mercy of God. [The Samsher Báhádur (99) of the 9th February says that it is necessary that Native States should be required to procure the sanction of the paramount power before undertaking such hazardous steps, so that no innocent persons may suffer from the mismanagement prevailing in them.]

Recommends a searching enquiry to be made into the massacre of the Maiyas in the Junágad State.

With reference to the massacre of seventy-one Maiyas in the Gir mountains by the Junágad police, the Rást Goftár (98) of the 11th February observes that it is complained that the Maiyas were not killed in fair fight, but were butchered mercilessly by the Arab police, and the large number of the slain supports this complaint. Even the political authorities are unable to contradict this supposition. Among the killed there were some innocent women and children, and this fact proves the heartless character of the butchery. It is also said that the Maiyas were overtaken and killed in their flight and their corpses were ruthlessly mutilated. Government have ordered Major Watson to proceed to Junágad to enquire into this sad affair, but they should see that it is not leniently passed over as the political authorities are said to be well disposed towards the Junágad Darbár. The Náib Diwán of the State, through whose hasty conduct the sad occurrence is believed to have happened, was formerly the favourite Shirastedár of Major Watson, but it is to be hoped that the latter officer will make an impartial enquiry into the matter. [The Yajdán Parast (110) of the same date makes similar remarks. The Bombay Punch (76) of the 17th February condemns the conduct of the police.]

Makes remarks in connection with the massacre of the Maiyas in the Junágad State.

The Bombay Samáchár (77) of the 13th February notices the account received from the political authorities of Káthiáwár of the slaughter of the Maiyas in the Junágad State, and observes that no sufficient excuse can as yet be found for the merciless conduct of the police, who ought to have tried to reduce the refractory Maiyas to submission by starving them. [The Jáme Jamshed (89) of the 14th February makes similar observations and recommends an enquiry into the sad affair by a commission composed of British officers and some able officials of the Junágad State. The Jáme at the same time suggests that the State should be asked not only to dismiss from its military service Patháns, Balochis, Arabs and other mercenaries, but to send them out of the country if they fail to live peaceably. The Suryá Prakásh (71) of the 10th and the Yajdán Parast (110), the Bombay Chronicle (66) and the Gujaráti (85) of the 11th idem express somewhat similar opinions.]

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
24th February 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári Act: A prayer for lessening the rigidity of the 4
Anjarla creek, Ratnágiri: Inconvenience to passengers at the ... 6
Appointments: A regret for the non-appointment of Mr. Dosábhái Frámji to the Acting Collectorship of Bombay 6
Bench of Honorary Magistrates: A suggestion for the creation of a — at Poona for the disposal of easy criminal work 5
Bhil inroads: Apprehension of—on certain villages near Vágra ... 5
Civil Service of India: A recommendation for raising the limit of age to 22 years in the examination for the 3
Flogging: Disapproval of the continuance of the punishment of ... 5
Forest laws: Rigorous enforcement of the—in the Thána Collectorate ... 4
Indecent songs: A complaint about the singing of—at Surat... ... 7
Lady doctors for Bombay: Disapproval of the importation of—for imparting instruction in medical science to Native females 6
Public servants: Reprehensible practice of a young European official in the Customs Department at Ratnágiri 6
Queen's speech: A regret at the omission of the mention of India in the... 3
Sir Sálar Jung: Expression of deep sorrow for the untimely death of ... 7
Thefts in Umreth: A complaint regarding an increase of 7
Travellers' Bungalow at Bhagwádándi: Disapproval of the contemplated sale by auction of the 6
Vaishnava Maháráj case: Remarks on the conduct of the Bombay Government regarding the 5
Venomous snakes: Approval of Dr. Fayrer's suggestions for the destruction of 3
Wool-cleaning factories at Bombay: A recommendation to the local police regarding the 6

PART II.—Legislation—

Bombay Legislative Council: Approval of the new rules of procedure passed by the 11
Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill: Approval of the:—
The Indian Spectator ... 9
The Indu Prakásh 7
The Poona Vaibhav... ... 9
The Subodh Patrika... ... 8
Do. do. Remarks on the opposition raised by some Europeans to the 10

PART III.—Education—

Bible in Indian public schools: Advocacy of the introduction of the ... 12
Honorary degrees: Approval of the contemplated enactment of a law authorizing Indian Universities to grant 12

PART IV.—Native States—

Junágad: Oppression exercised by the State of—on its outlaws ... 16
Do. Remarks on the cruelty practised by the police of—on the corpses of the Maiyás... 16
Do. Slaughter of the Maiyás: An account of the:—
The Gujaráti 16
The Indu Prakásh 15
Do. do. A prayer for a searching enquiry into the... 17
Do. do. Remarks in connection with the ... 17
Káthiáwár: Maladministration of the Native States of 15
Do. Remarks in connection with certain recent occurrences in ... 14
Native States: Suggestions for the improvement of the present condition of 13

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

RECEIVED
27 MAR 83
VIA ENDICOTT

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 24th February 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly ...	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do. ...	475
*3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	200
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Dín Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	925
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do. ...	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do. ...	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do. ...	575
11	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do. ...	600
12	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do. ...	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly.	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly ...	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do. ...	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do. ...	260
18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do. ...	275
*19	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do. ...	200
20	„ Daivadnyă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
21	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
22	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	425
23	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do. ...	140
24	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do. ...	116
25	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do. ...	100
26	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do. ...	285
27	„ Hitechhu	Kaládgi	Do. ...	85
28	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly. .	400
29	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
30	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	145
31	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do. ...	130
*32	„ Karnátak Mitră[4]	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
33	„ Kesari	Poona	Do. ...	3,500
34	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do. ...	125
35	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	300
36	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly ...	220
37	„ Mahárashtră Hitechhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,000
38	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do. ...	250
*39	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly ...	200
40	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	150
41	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do. ...	100
42	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly ...	700
43	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
44	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do. ...	800
45	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do. ...	103
46	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do. ...	250
47	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily ...	350
*48	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly ...	200
49	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti).	Do. ...	200
*50	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly ...	200
51	„ Saddharm Díp	Alíbág	Do. ...	600
52	„ Satyă Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	243
53	„ Satyă Sadan	Alíbág	Weekly ...	400
54	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	140
55	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly...	275
*56	„ Sharabh	Alíbág	Weekly ...	200
57	„ Shiváji[3]	Poona	Do. ...	200
58	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do. ...	90
*59	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do. ...	200
60	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do. ...	150
61	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do. ...	240

[1] Maráthi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles.
[4] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
62	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
63	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly ...	250
64	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do. ...	175
65	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do. ..	200
66	„ Vichárshíl	Málvan	Do. ...	300
*67	„ Vinod	Poona	Do. ...	200
68	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly ...	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*69	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly ...	200
70	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do. ...	400
71	„ Hitechhu	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	349
72	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	725
73	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do. ...	600
74	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do. ...	137
	GUJARA'TI.
75	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly ...	25
76	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily ...	750
77	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly ...	304
78	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do. ...	500
79	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly ...	500
80	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily ...	950
81	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly ...	700
82	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do. ...	60
83	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	600
84	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly ...	525
85	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do. ...	1,000
*86	„ Dnyán Prasárak	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	200
87	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do. ...	400
88	„ Fursad	Do.	Do. ...	100
89	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly ...	400
*90	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly ...	200
91	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do. ...	659
*92	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	200
93	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily ...	525
94	„ Kaira Vartmán	Kaira	Weekly ...	115
*95	„ Kaisar-i-Hind	Bombay	Do. ...	200
96	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ..	700
*97	„ Kusum Guchhá	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	200
98	„ Nágar Udayá	Do.	Do. ...	300
99	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly ...	381
100	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly ...	200
101	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly ...	225
102	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do. ...	1,814
103	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do. ...	200
104	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	400
105	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	200
*106	„ Sauráshtrá Darpan	Junágad	Monthly ...	533
107	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do. ...	200
*108	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do. ...	408
109	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do. ...	62
110	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár	Umreth	Fortnightly ..	200
*111	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
112	„ Vartmán Sár	Surat	Weekly ...	738
113	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly ...	200
114	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	300
115	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly ...	500
	KA'NARESE.
116	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	150
*117	„ Karnátak Vritt	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
	URDU.
*118	The Altáf	Bombay	Weekly ...	200
*119	„ Armagán	Do.	Bi-weekly ...	200
120	„ Khayir Kháhe Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly .	300
121	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly ...	160
*122	„ Muzhire Shawkatul Islám	Do.	Do. ...	200
	PERSIAN.
123	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly ...	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases, an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out; and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well-known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Approves of the movement for the extension of Lord Ripon's tenure of office.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 18th February, in alluding to the public meeting held at the Frámji Cowasji Institute in Bombay for the purpose of adopting a memorial to the Queen for the extension of Lord Ripon's tenure of office, remarks that Lord Lytton's administration of India was a complete failure. After eulogizing Lord Ripon for the reforms initiated by him, the Spectator observes:—The feeling is universal in India that Lord Ripon should remain long enough to mature his plans and to place his beneficent policy beyond the possibility of retrogression. It makes one tremble to think what may happen if Lord Ripon leaves India to-morrow. We have cordially supported this movement on principle. The removal of a popular official from his district is often resented by the people. How often do we hear of the people's discontent at the transfer of men like Messrs. Birdwood and Wedderburn, Bosanquet and Coghlan? The standing argument is that useful reform is interrupted by such changes. How much more is it necessary then that when a Governor or Governor General, whose absence or substitution by another affords reasonable ground for anxiety, is likely to leave we should at the earliest opportunity appeal to Her Majesty to avert such danger? Here the well-being of a nation is at stake. Lord Ripon cannot be replaced by another statesman of his high character and abilities. In the usual course he may be succeeded by a Conservative who may undo much that he has done. The best intentioned successor, even if he be of his own party, cannot carry out his policy with the intelligent solicitude which Lord Ripon alone can feel. To talk of the movement being too early is preposterous. It is rather late than early. The Native papers have been advocating this step for a long time past. The people of India keenly appreciate the liberal policy of the present administration. We are convinced that the prayer is perfectly legitimate, and being offered to a sovereign whose first thought is the happiness of her subjects, we are equally well convinced that it will be answered. It is quite another question if Lord Ripon would care to remain in India. We have already had indications of Lord Ripon's desire not to leave this country too soon. Such kindness will never be lost upon a proverbially grateful people. We wish god-speed to the memorials of the East India and other associations. [The Káside Mumbai (96) of the 21st and the Bombay Punch (79) of the 24th February approve of the memorial to the Queen for the extension of Lord Ripon's tenure of office, and advise the people to adopt similar memorials from all parts of the country.]

The poverty of India.

The Káside Mumbai (96) of the 23rd February says that for a long time past a cry about the poverty of India has been raised from all parts of the country. If Government does not promptly attend to it, there will be an awful famine in India. In former times money was not drained off to foreign countries and Native industries flourished. But what can be the condition of India when krors of rupees are annually carried off to Europe? There are now four ways left to a Native to earn his livelihood. He may obtain his living by agricultural pursuits, or by commerce, or by working as an ordinary labourer, or by beggary. Agriculture is not advantageous at the present time. There are very few cultivators who are in a prosperous condition. They are hopelessly involved in debt and carry on agricultural operations through sheer necessity. Commerce is not as profitable as before. It is difficult to find honest servants. They anxiously watch for an opportunity to defraud their masters. This result is attributable to poverty. High offices are engrossed by Europeans. Native artizans find it hard to maintain themselves. The condition of the educated classes is deplorable. Graduates find employment with difficulty. Legal practitioners are not better off. Beggars hardly receive enough for their maintenance though they go about begging night and day. These being the facts, it is extremely difficult for one to maintain himself. Moreover there is no unanimity among the people of India. They have not sufficient confidence in one another. They are backward in the mechanical arts. Europeans carry on most of the work and earn splendid incomes, while very few Natives obtain enough to supply their most ordinary wants.

Suggestions for the prevention of the spread of the vice of drinking.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 18th February, in an article headed "The Liquor Intemperance and Remedies to remove it," gives figures showing the amount of the excise revenue derived in Great Britain and Ireland and the consumption of liquor per head, and observes:—Liquor drinking is one of the vices which require to be rooted out from India by the joint efforts of Government and the people. The climate and economic circumstances of the West and the East are quite dissimilar. If recourse to intoxicating drugs be a necessity in the West, it is not so in the East. The relaxing effect of the hot climate and the availability in plenty and at cheap rates of wheat, rice and other necessary articles of food in India render the use of the drug a ruinous luxury. The agricultural character of the country, the comparative poverty of its people, the predominance of the purifying influence of religion and the presence of social and physical penalties incidental to drinking, combined with the climatic influence, for a long time kept the people of India almost free from this vice. But contact with the people of the West and facilities of communication with Europe have greatly neutralized these influences and developed drinking habits. The poor and illiterate were the first to take to this vice, but gradually the rich and educated have been ensnared. The annually increasing consumption of these intoxicating and demoralizing drugs, as represented by the increase in the number of liquor shops and the importation of liquor and spirits, indicates a spread of the vice which is certainly alarming. The apparent policy of Government is to restrict the vice by imposing prohibitive duties, monopolizing as far as possible the manufacture of the drug and regulating its sale. But the spread of the vice over an annually increasing area is not consistent with this policy. If the object is to repress the evil, means should be devised to check the imports, to lessen year by year the quantity manufactured, to reduce the number of shops and the quantity consumed by customers, to impose high duties and thus to localize the vice. In no case, whether the people like it or not, should a shop be allowed to be established. The object of Government is only to increase its revenue. The department which is carrying out the policy and the law embodying it is always thanked for increase of revenue and blamed for its decrease, and consequently the tendency of the officers is to increase it anyhow. Three krors of rupees are annually spent by the Hindu, Mahomedan and Pársi population of India on drink. Compared with the expenditure on this account in the countries of the West this sum is doubtless very insignificant. But Western necessities in this respect have no force in India. The Government of India is desirous that the duty on home-made and foreign imported spirits should as far as possible be assimilated. The result is that greater facilities are afforded to foreign than to local manufactures to compete in the Indian market, and that the comparatively innocent Indian drugs are kept out. We would propose a remedy for the consideration of Government and the people along with the local self-government scheme. We would suggest that the management as well as the revenue and expenditure on account of liquors should be handed over to the urban and rural boards. We would enforce the principle that no money should be made out of the immoral and vicious habits of the people. We would prohibit the importation and sale of liquors by means of very heavy duties, and enjoin reduction in the number of shops and prevention of their extension as one of the first duties of Government and the boards. We would attach greater punishments to offences relating to drinking, we would devise some social degradation to habitual drunkards, and we would advocate the establishment of temperance and other societies with the view of curing the vicious habits of the people. We would not depend merely upon the education of the people, but would try to avail ourselves of the experience of other countries. Both Government and the people are equally interested in the reform. The credit of the British Government is at stake. And the people when reminded of their ancestry ought to feel ashamed of the present state, and should co-operate with Government in the completion of the improvement.

The Lok Mitrá (72) of the 18th February observes that the Queen's speech on the recent opening of Parliament will hardly be considered satisfactory so far as India is concerned. This country has been altogether ignored in Her Majesty's gracious message to her faithful Lords and Commons. For some years past Indian questions have formed the subject of debates in Parliament, and India used to occupy a prominent place in the Queen's speech. This year, however, the case is different. Not that there was any lack of materials to which reference might have been made. Lord Ripon's comprehensive and important policy for the extension of the principles of self-government in India might appropriately have found a place in Her Majesty's speech, and nothing would have tended so much to strengthen the hands of the Viceroy as an approval of the policy. It might, however, have been the wish of Her Majesty's advisers to avoid any controversy on this vexed question, which seems to have created quite an unworthy uproar in certain quarters in which Lord Ripon's excellent scheme has been looked upon almost as the beginning of the end of British rule in India. The Times itself has been led into an attitude which was not to be expected from the intelligence and soberness which govern its counsels. But the Ministry has evidently thought it prudent not to commit itself to any particular line of action till the reception which Lord Ripon's measures have met with in England is more pronounced. Under any circumstances India has just cause for complaint for this want of sympathy into which the Ministry have been betrayed by the exigencies of party politics. [The Rást Goftár (103) and the Yajdán Parast (115) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Regrets the absence of all mention of India in the speech from the Throne at the recent opening of Parliament.

The Bakul (16) of the 18th February in its local news states that in the town of Rámgad in the Málvan Táluka of the Ratnágiri Collectorate fever is raging fearfully. There is not a house in that locality the inmates of which have escaped the ravages of fever. The decimation of the population by this scourge has been so great that cultivation is at a stand still for want of labourers. The inhabitants are not furnished with medicines to cope against the attack of fever. The Bakul has frequently adverted to this subject in its columns, but it is to be regretted that the authorities have not yet taken measures to arrest the ravages of fever. The existing inhabitants of Rámgad are thinking of migrating to other places owing to their inability to devise means to arrest the progress of fever. It is to be hoped that Government will come to their help without delay.

Requests Government to take measures to prevent the spread of fever in Rámgad.

A correspondent of the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 19th February, writing from Thána, states:—This little town has of late been infested with burglars and thieves and no one's property is considered safe. On the 14th ultimo at 8 A.M. a theft of 500 rupees worth of ornaments belonging to the clerk of the court residing close to the Police Chief Constable's house was committed. The thief bolted away with the stolen property. The Chief Constable was informed of it half an hour after the occurrence of the theft, but as in other cases he failed in his attempt. Latterly a pán supári shop belonging to a Khoja situated on the public road was broken into about midnight and articles worth about Rs. 10 were made away with. This case was as usual reported to the police, but they failed to obtain a clue to the thief, who like his fellow-brothers in past instances bade defiance to the local police. The average success of the police in their attempts at tracing the thieves and burglars is 5 per cent., and that too in unimportant instances. The robberies which preceded were of greater importance involving losses varying from Rs. 100 to 4,000, but no trace of the robbers has been discovered. Such is the case not only in Thána, but at Kurla, a place in the Thána District, a robbery of ornaments worth Rs. 500 was said to have been committed last month and the thieves have absconded with the stolen property. No clue has yet been obtained in this instance also. It is to be regretted that the local papers, which are the proper channel to bring the public grievances to the ears of the local officers and Government, are not disposed to take any notice of the minor thefts, the number of which exceeds that of the graver offences. Such a defective supervision by the police here demands the immediate attention of the higher authorities. The only course open to check the operations of the thieves is to overhaul the present police establishment and put efficient and vigilant men in place of the costly but inexpert ones now serving.

Complains of increase of thefts at Thána and the inability of the police to apprehend the thieves.

Replies to some of the questions asked by the Mhowra Commission.

In reply to the 17th question put by the Mhowra Commission to the witnesses examined by it, the Rást Goftár (103) of the 18th February observes:—It is true that liquor can be more easily prepared by stealth from mhowra flowers than from toddy, inasmuch as the juice has to be extracted from toddy trees openly. But it ought not to be forgotten that in order to make the mhowra flowers ready for distillation, they have to be soaked in water for four or five days, and while putrification is going on they emit a strong odour, which is smelt at a long distance from the place where they may be kept. The process of distillation, as well as the refuse which has to be thrown away after the process is completed, give out a strong odour, which is also felt at some distance. Thus it is very difficult to extract liquor from mhowra flowers surreptitiously. If notwithstanding this difficulty surreptitious distillation is carried on to any considerable extent, the crime must be attributed to the severity of the new ábkári law. Poor people cannot now-a-days get cheap and pure toddy or liquor. The stuffs now sold are adulterated and their price is abnormally high, which the common people cannot afford to pay, and they therefore run the risk of clandestine distillation. No surreptitious distillation was made under the old ábkári law, and hence this practice must be the result of the new ábkári arrangements. In reply to question 18, it may be observed that there was no excuse for distilling liquor clandestinely while the old law was in force, for toddy and the liquor prepared were then to be freely had, and there were several licensed sellers of mhowra liquor who sold it cheap and pure. Though there was then no preventive department to check the smuggling of liquor, yet the licensed sellers of liquor kept a strict watch. There is no reason to believe that the licensed sellers joined the smugglers in their crime as is supposed by the Commission. Surreptitious distillation is not now going on to the large extent represented by the liquor contractors. The Commission wishes to ascertain the extent to which smuggling is carried on, but Government alone can give a satisfactory reply. However, it may be stated that very poor people who cannot afford to buy dear liquor and cannot get even toddy are obliged to resort to unlawful distillation at times in order to supply their own wants, and hence the crime of illicit distillation is not perpetrated to earn any profit by the sale of the contraband article. Several respectable men have stated that the liquor contractors have sometimes accused the poor people falsely in order to revenge their petty quarrels. Very little liquor is consumed in the hot season; a good deal is used in the cold weather and a great deal in the rains, when the agricultural operations are briskly carried on.

Disapproves of the project of popularizing the National Anthem in India.

The Lok Mitrá (72) of the 18th February observes that some good-natured people in England having taken it into their head to popularize, as it is said, the National Anthem in India, their cue has been taken up here by a small knot of men who seem never to be happy unless they have some project in hand. In England where philanthropic men abound with all sorts of projects in their heads, one might easily understand the enthusiastic impulsiveness which has got on foot the singularly ridiculous movement to A'ryanise the homely Anglo-Saxon National Anthem. But when the movement has actually travelled to this Presidency, the height of absurdity has been reached. The gentlemen who assembled at Byrámji Hall to initiate this project of national importance did not seem to have any clear notions themselves of what they were about; but the upshot of the whole affair seemed to be that the Dhobis and Kunbis of India were to be familiarised with a sort of second-hand loyalty, distilled for them by a few loyal subjects from the strains of "God save the Queen" to some Hindustáni or poly-glot "Rániki Jay." To assume that the English National Anthem can by this sort of hot-house rearing be developed into a source of loyal devotion is ridiculous in the extreme. The feelings inspired by the National Anthem among Englishmen are a spontaneous growth depending on the character and sentiments of Englishmen, developed during a long course of years; and though the Indian nation is in no way behind the English in its devoted loyalty towards Her Majesty, it is a feeling which has been brought about by the sense of her goodness and the blessings which they enjoy under her, rather than from any forced sentiment associated with the repetition of a familiar air, which, far from being a watch-word of loyalty, was actually played, it is said, by the rebel soldiers marching against the English during the Mutiny. The programme of the National Anthem Committee is one of those ebullitions of demonstrativeness which will die a natural death. [The Gujaráti (89) and the Bombay Chronicle (69) of the same date express similar sentiments. The Yajdán Parast (115) of the same date censures the leaders of society joining this project, disregarding more important matters closely connected with the welfare of the Natives.]

Alleged high-handed proceedings of Mr. White, the Collector of Surat.

A correspondent of the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 19th February, in an article headed "The Surat Municipality," describes a scene that occurred recently at a meeting of that municipality, and complains of the high-handed proceedings of Mr. White, the Collector of Surat. The scene occurred in the course of a debate on the subject of the contract with the Electric Light Company. Mr. White is alleged to have entered into this contract without previously consulting the general body of municipal commissioners. In the course of the discussion Mr. White said to Kálábhái and Dáyábhái: "You are not in order. This is not the first time that you Mr. Kálábhái and you Mr. Dáyábhái have come in my way, and I shall write to Government that neither of you may be elected."

Criticisms on the farewell address of Dr. Murray Mitchell delivered to the people of Bombay.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 19th February, in criticising Dr. Murray Mitchell's farewell address to the people of Bombay delivered at the Frámji Cowasji Institute on Wednesday last, says:—Dr. Mitchell has lived amongst us for over forty years, having first come to India in 1838. He travelled frequently through many parts of this vast country and mixed with people of all classes freely. Nay, having had a better acquaintance with some of the leading vernacular dialects than most Europeans have, he has had frequent opportunities of knowing the people more intimately than others have been able to do. Wherever he has been he has succeeded in drawing around him large audiences by means of his clear and impressive delivery. He has not studied the vernaculars only colloquially, but he has mastered even the poetical literature of some of them, as his paper read before the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society on Tuesday last has shown. Yet notwithstanding all these advantages the Reverend gentleman had nothing to say about the people beyond the old and hackneyed topics of the depredations of the plundering horsemen of Mahárashtra, of the diabolical practices of sati and infanticide, Thuggee and hook-swinging, and of their suppression by the British Government. He made some remarks on other equally worn out topics, on the backwardness of female education among the Hindus, their caste distinctions, their conservatism as regards manners and customs, and their superstition and prejudices. He also made passing allusions to the transfer of the Government of India from the Company to the Crown, spoke somewhat hesitatingly of the self-government scheme of Lord Ripon, and concluded in a prophetic strain by predicting the ultimate triumph of Christianity in this country. He indeed spoke of the Bráhma Samáj and its offshoot the Prárthana Samáj here, but he treated their views as visionary and unpractical. Of the great changes, both intellectual and moral, that have been gradually wrought by the introduction of Western civilization and its contact with Eastern modes of thought and feeling he had little or nothing to say. Nor did the Reverend. gentleman say anything about the rapid development of vernacular languages and literatures, the activity of the Vernacular Press, the growing feeling of national unity, the gradual elevation of the national character and the formation of an intelligent public opinion, the increasing sense of responsibility shown by public men in all departments of life, and the lively interest that is everywhere evinced by enlightened Natives in all public matters, and last, though not least, the growing spirit of toleration which is shown by all Indian communities alike towards the professors of foreign creeds, especially Christians. These are in reality the most permanent and at the same time the most cheering effects of the contact of a liberal and progressive nation with a comparatively stationary society, and the opinion of Dr. Mitchell on these matters would have been far more interesting than his remarks on the abolition of evils which have been denounced time out of number and which are but faintly remembered now. But even on these trite subjects his remarks were extremely superficial. Moreover he gave the whole credit of removing these evils to Government and Christian missionaries, forgetting the warm support which enlightened Natives in all parts of the country gave to the officers of Government in these matters. Rája Rámmohan Roy especially had no small share in the abolition of sati and Dr. Bháu Dáji in bringing to light the practice of infanticide. But this was not all. In a professedly parting address, which should have been characterized by a kindly sympathy with all classes of the audience, he thought fit to indulge in invidious comparisons between the different communities that form the Indian nation, and prominently dwelt on the unparalled plundering propensities of the Maráthás, forgetful of the ravages and depradations committed for centuries by the northern pirates and the Teutonic hordes in the peaceful provinces of the Roman Empire. He further touched on some controversial matters, which ought to have been especially avoided in a farewell discourse. He called the fears generally entertained respecting the prospects of high education in India as foolish, which was a rather strong expression considering the fears were shared by many leading Native gentlemen and not a few Europeans not blinded by prejudice in favour of missionary education. Nor were the remarks of the Reverend gentleman on the relative merits and prospects of Bráhmoism and Christianity quite in keeping with the requirements of good taste. If Keshab Chander Sen's idea of harmonizing the different creeds in India by teaching them to appreciate the essential principles of religion which are common to all is a dream in the eyes of Dr. Mitchell, his own assertion of the triumph of dogmatic Christianity in India would appear a presumption with a still slenderer basis.

Says that patriotic Natives should make an effort to get rid of the evil custom of selling girls in marriage for a pecuniary consideration.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 19th February in a Maráthi article praises the English people for the sacrifices which they have made in abolishing slavery within the British dominions, and observes that it is a common boast of Englishmen that when a slave sets his foot on British soil he becomes at once free. Although the above statement must be admitted to be true, yet it is extraordinary that slavery in a modified form should be allowed to exist in India, and that its existence should not have attracted notice. The manner in which girls are bought and sold in marriages is not far removed from the form of slavery. The harm which is done by the trade which is carried on in girls cannot be easily estimated. Innumerable instances of the sale of girls in marriages can be found. Such events do not usually happen in large towns, but in villages their occurrence is extremely common. Persons deeply sunk in poverty and having grown up daughters to dispose of are always ready to sell them to the highest bidder. Cases have frequently happened in which girls of the age of ten and twelve years have been sold in marriage to men of sixty for a large pecuniary consideration. By sacrificing girls in this way fearful evils result. They are deprived of their liberty at an early age, they frequently become widows while in the prime of life, and all the evil consequences which flow from enforced widowhood follow as a matter of course. In conclusion, the Indu Prakásh advises all patriotic Natives to do their utmost to eradicate the evil custom of selling girls in marriage.

Disposal of a certain case, in which a Native was killed by a European at Telicheri.

In alluding to the decision given by Mr. Austin, the Magistrate, that the two Europeans, Messrs. Fletcher and Thompson, from one of whose shots a Hindu lad was killed at Telicheri on the 11th instant ought not to be prosecuted, as the death occurred simply through an accident, the Akhbári Sodágar (76) of the 22nd February observes that the above decision was passed on the statements made by the European gentlemen before the police. But had a Native sportsman killed a European child, a searching trial would have been held and he would have been punished for gross negligence. The frequent occurrence of deaths of Natives at the hands of Europeans and the disregard shown in such cases have led the Europeans to consider the life of a Native of less importance than that of a beast.

Is afraid that due punishment will not be inflicted on the European soldier who killed a Native at Sátára.

The Gujaráti (89) of the 18th February says that recently a European soldier shot a Native at Sátára. If the case goes before a European Magistrate the soldier will probably either escape punishment or will get a trifling sentence, since the life of a Native is not considered of more importance than that of a dog or a cat. [The Deshi Mitrá (85) of the 22nd February, in referring to the murder, sarcastically observes that as it was not the fault of the European but that of his gun in having gone off without his permission, he should be acquitted. As the gun has committed the mistake, it might be hanged if it is thought proper to do so.]

Recommends certain measures for the detection of bad characters in the police of Bombay.

The Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 21st February expresses gratitude to Sir Frank Souter for dismissing from the service the European inspector and the Native policeman who were convicted of bringing a false charge against a Pársi liquor-seller, and observes that this case, following as it does the case of false accusation of gambling brought by another European inspector and some Native policemen against certain respectable Pársi gentlemen, raises the presumption that several similar false charges have been made by policemen, but unfortunately their falsehood has not been proved. In the liquor case mentioned above the discovery of the truth was caused by the gross negligence of the accusers; and had ordinary care been taken by them, the innocent liquor-seller would have been convicted. The Police Commissioner ought therefore to keep a strict supervision over the men employed under him. He should set his trustworthy detectives to watch their conduct, obtain information from private individuals, and go about the town incognito in order to gain personal experience and to instil a wholesome fear in his subordinates.

Remarks in connection with the orders issued by Sir Lepel Griffin regarding the Salvationists at Indore.

In a paragraph headed "The Salvationists at Indore," the Native Opinion (10) of the 18th February gives the orders issued by Sir Lepel Griffin, and says:—The orders are worthy of a political officer issuing his fiat in all the glory of an omnipotent autocrat. The great complaint against the rulers of Native States is that they are opposed to the introduction of the reign of law into their States and will not submit to the slightest constitutional distribution of authority. But is the conduct of our political officers such as to inspire any respect for law and offer a model of constitutional government to the benighted Native rulers? Sir Lepel's utterance is, however, valuable as affording a clue to the attitude which the official hierarchy in India have assumed towards the Salvationists, who are their co-religionists, seeking a propagation of their religion. The Agent for Central India evidently disdains simulation which made some of our preservers of the peace here conceal their hatred towards the Salvationists for having brought Christianity into contempt under the garb of extreme tenderness towards the feeling of Indian subjects being outraged by their religion being held up to ridicule. Sir Lepel bluntly puts his opposition on the ground of the conduct of the Salvationists amounting to a degrading burlesque of the religion of the ruling power.

Recommends that compensation should be paid to Mr. Rahimbhái Khánbhái for his improper prosecution.

In alluding to the acquittal of Mr. Rahimbhái Khánbhái, the Commissariat contractor, who was charged at the last criminal sessions of the Bombay High Court with having used a forged document, the Yajdán Parast (115) of the 18th February observes that the accused was prosecuted at the instance of Government, and therefore deserves some recompense for the annoyance and inconvenience caused to him by the false accusation. The police ought to exert themselves to detect the person or persons who committed the fraud in order to ruin the innocent accused.

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 18th February observes :—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill contains very radical changes. By long and uninterrupted enjoyment the European British subjects have come to look upon the exemption enjoyed by them from the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates as their birth-right, and it is no wonder that they should oppose it most strongly. That the effectual and impartial administration of justice requires the removal of both the qualifications retained in the present bill that the Magistrate must be a Justice of the Peace and a Magistrate of the first class, no truth-loving and candid man can deny. The first qualification that the Magistrate must be a Justice of the Peace ought at least to be removed. We fail to see the cogency of the reasons brought forward for keeping these qualifications on the statute book. No one can deny that the occasions which call forth the exercise of the jurisdiction in question are exceptionally rare. Is it a fair reason that simply because such cases are rare Native Magistrates generally should have no power to try such cases? We are unable to see any reasonable connection between the two. Are there not other exceptionally rare cases over which a Native Magistrate exercises jurisdiction? If then the Native Magistrate is held competent to try and sometimes to try finally such cases, why not allow him to try cases in which the offender is a European British subject? Does it make any difference in the offence simply because it is committed by a white man? If the object of the bill is to abolish at once and completely every judicial disqualification which is based merely on race distinctions, is the object gained by refusing such powers to Native Magistrates generally? The other reason which is put forward for retaining the qualifications is that such cases are exceptionally troublesome and difficult. Granting that the cases are really so, where is the necessity that the Magistrate should be a Justice of the Peace. Is not the very fact of his holding first class powers a sufficient guarantee for the effectual and impartial administration of justice? Again why should First Class Magistrates alone be thought fit to exercise the jurisdiction? The exercise of the powers must be made to depend upon personal fitness and not on race or service distinctions. By thus confining the jurisdiction Government to a certain extent will hinder the administration of justice. If Government is not willing to grant power for trying the offences generally, it should at least grant the powers of committal to all Magistrates. The question is of comparatively little importance on this side of India, but it is not so in the other Presidencies. In Madras and elsewhere there are European settlements, and the limited exercise of the jurisdiction is greatly calculated to clog the progress of preliminary enquiries. Local investigation is of much importance in criminal cases, and unless such investigation is speedy and prompt it is of little use. In our opinion the bill is a compromise. On the one hand it tries to soothe the Native public by extending a little the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates over European British subjects, while on the other it is careful not to offend the small but powerful section of Europeans. That the bill fails to satisfy the legitimate demands of the Native public no one can ever doubt, and the anomaly which has been a source of standing complaint to the Natives of India has not been altogether removed. The Natives of India shall have to fight again and very hard for the removal of this anomalous state of circumstances, and we are sure that our public men will not stop here and accept the bill as a final settlement of this vexed question. There is a general consensus of official opinion in favour of the change. But the non-official opinion is strongly opposed to it. It is certainly not strange that the official opinion is in favour of the change. Government officials see the real difficulty and are anxious to have it remedied. Can anything be more silly or ridiculous than the remark of the London Times that the result of the change will be to drive English capital and English planters out of the mofussil? That the removal of an admitted anomaly should lead to such a crisis is simply absurd. To think so is an insult to the good sense and patriotism of the persons who are at the head of our Government. Are they not equally anxious with the Times to protect the rights of a class to which they themselves belong? It is said that the bill is likely to cause injustice to Europeans in the mofussil. The law has made ample provisions against the miscarriage of justice, and to argue that such a bill will cause injustice indicates want of knowledge on the part of those who make the assertion. The other argument is that it is a personal law and like all other personal laws enforced in India it should be protected scrupulously. To speak of a personal law in criminal cases is simply absurd. For an effectual and impartial administration of justice all men, whatever race they may belong to, must be made amenable to the same laws.

Is not satisfied with the contemplated change in the Criminal Procedure Code for the removal of certain disabilities attaching to Native Magistrates.

Is not satisfied with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 18th February, in writing on the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, says:—We had hopes that Chapter VII. of the old Criminal Procedure Code would be done away with; but to the standing disgrace of the professed character for impartiality of legislation the same provisions have been re-enacted in Chapter XXXIII. of the new Code of Criminal Procedure. It seems, however, that the eyes of the Indian Legislature have been partially opened and that they now see the inconvenience of such provisions. We say inconvenience, for they do not yet see the injustice and race partiality that underlie these provisions. We do not want half measures. Mr. Ilbert distinctly says that the special provisions of Act No. X. of 1872 were the result of a compromise and that the law is to be finally settled. But the way in which he wishes to amend the Act would also seem to be a compromise. These special provisions should be entirely done away with. We confess our utter inability to find out the reasons which have led to this invidious distinction. We do not think that want of competent knowledge of English was one of the reasons, for even Europeans, when they are not Magistrates of the first class and Justices of the Peace, are not competent to try them. Want of experience in judicial matters on the part of the junior members of the Covenanted Civil Service is not the reason of this special procedure. For if junior Civilians are not considered fit to exercise criminal jurisdiction over men of their own race, how can they be entrusted with the power of trying men who are avowedly strangers, of whose customs, habits and modes of life they are totally ignorant, and with whose vernacular they possess imperfect acquaintance? Then either this was not the reason or Government utterly disregarded the Natives and did not at all care how justice is administered in their case. Now if it be pretended that Natives, though possessed of competent knowledge of English and great experience in judicial natters, and though otherwise competent to try them, might not administer justice impartially in the case of European British subjects, we say, and with pride too, that Native Judges have as a rule given no ground for any such misgiving. Granting for argument's sake that Natives may be partial, are not English Judges open to the same charge? Natives have not been invested with jurisdiction over European British subjects, and any forecast as to how they would use the power could not but be mere surmise. What was it then that induced the Legislature to enact these special provisions? Might it not be said that the Legislature in so doing encouraged a race distinction and further discovered a want of confidence in the competency of the Civilian Magistrates? This is the more apparent as the Judges and Magistrates who have in fact jurisdiction over European British subjects cannot award the same amount of punishment to European British subjects as they can to Natives only. We trust Government will take this opportunity to bring about the total abolition of this special procedure and this invidious distinction. All men are equal in the eye of the law. All Judges and Magistrates should have equal jurisdiction over European British subjects as well as Natives and to the same extent. If Englishmen value their liberty, we also value our liberty. If Englishmen fear that Native Judges will not impartially administer justice to European British subjects, we also fear that they will not do so in our case. What has become of the solemn pledge given by the Queen to the Natives of this country that justice will be impartially administered to them? We had already thought that this anomaly in the judicial system of India would certainly attract the attention of the present Government. But we are sorry to see that the measure of the remedy that is about to be applied falls short of what it ought really to be. Under the circumstances under which both England and India are advancing in civilization, we think it will be impossible to stop at the point indicated by Mr. Ilbert. There must, now or at some date not far distant, take place a thorough reform in this particular, and we think Government cannot well stop until they have put the two races on a footing of perfect equality in this as well as in other respects.

Approves of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 18th February says:—It is instructive to see that while the Anglo-Indian papers generally have raised a sentimental cry against the proposed amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Native papers have discussed the subject in a thoroughly practical manner. There is common sense and logic on one side and mere feeling on the other. The time has gone by when race distinction can prove an effectual barrier to the recognition of individual worth. Indeed, the amendment now proposed by Mr. Ilbert might have been enacted ten years ago, when the then Viceroy, Sir George Campbell, Sir Richard Temple, the Commander-in-Chief and Sir Barrow Ellis, were in favour of it. But a packed majority, the advocates of race distinction, carried the day. The same tactics are tried again, but this time they will not succeed. If the Native Magistrate is competent to judge one criminal, he is equally competent to judge another. There may be degrees of crime; but there should be no such thing as caste distinction among criminals. If the European culprit refuses to be tried by the Native Magistrate, the Bráhman or Khshatriya may claim to be tried by a Magistrate of his own caste. Nay, the twice-born Bráhman may refuse to be tried by the European whom he looks down upon as a mlenchh! English law is not meant to truckle to this stupid vanity. The European has to fear nothing from the Native Magistrate. If the latter deals harshly with the European, there is power enough in the hands of Government to visit him with displeasure. But why argue with those who have no arguments to advance? The unholy sentiment which finds expression in phrases like 'pride of birth' and 'magnificent superiority of race' is not worthy even of a passing thought.

Approves of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

With reference to Mr. Ilbert's bill to extend the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates of a certain rank over Europeans, the Dnyánodayá (7) of the 22nd February says:—It seems to us just, and now that it has been proposed we hope it may be enacted. Nevertheless we think that it is not opportune, for it will stir up bad race feeling at a time when it should be minimized. However such things are not altogether in the hands of Government. Mr. Gupta sent his application and Government had to give an answer, and the answer seems to us right. No other answer could have been given.

Remarks on the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Shiváji (57) of the 16th February, in commenting upon the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, says that many instances have occurred where European culprits have escaped scot-free through the partiality of European Judges. The present bill has been framed with a view to put European and Native Magistrates on a footing of equality. It might be urged that if Native Magistrates and Judges are invested with power to try European criminals, there is considerable chance of the latter suffering injustice. But this argument is really of not much value. The highest posts in India are held by Europeans, and it is therefore very unlikely that any Native Judge would dare to treat a European criminal unjustly. There is more likelihood of Native Judges dealing leniently with European culprits than Judges of their own nationality. For this reason it is undesirable to keep a distinction between Native and European Magistrates. When a European is found doing injury to Natives, he should be tried by a jury composed of Natives with the help of a Magistrate, and the decision of this body should be final. If this plan is followed, then only is there chance of perfect justice being done to Europeans. The Shiváji trusts that Government will carefully consider this suggestion.

A defence of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Rást Goftár (103) of the 18th February observes that those European British subjects in India who oppose the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill do not claim the right of exemption from trial by a Native Magistrate on any reasonable and justifiable grounds, but simply on the ground of a difference in the colour of skin. It is the boast of British rule in India that it has conceded to the Natives the same liberty and rights as are enjoyed by Englishmen, and both are equal in the eye of the law. The opponents of the bill disavow this constitutional excellence of the British law by claiming the exemption on a lame excuse. They do not say that the Native Magistrates are dishonest and partial or otherwise incompetent to discharge their duties. It is strange that objection should be taken to the jurisdiction being conferred on Natives highly educated in England, who are loyal, honest and experienced, and who enjoy the confidence of Government. How can it be allowed under the just British rule that there should be one law for Europeans and another for Natives? If the European British subjects residing in the mofussil have a right to be exempted from the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates of the mofussil, why should the Europeans at the Presidency towns be tried by Native Magistrates? And why should the Native Judges of the High Court be allowed jurisdiction over Europeans? If these things are to be done away with, why should not Europeans be exempted from the control of the laws of the country? This sort of reasoning leads in the end to absurdities. [The Samsher Báhádur (104) of the 16th, the Yajdán Parast (115) and the Gujaráti (89) of the 18th, the Ahmedabad Samáchár (75) of the 21st, the Hitechhu (71) of Ahmedabad of the 22nd, the Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 23rd and the Bombay Punch (79) of the 24th February express somewhat similar sentiments.]

Supports the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Bombay Chronicle (69) of the 18th February observes that the discussion on the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill continues to wax warm. Without much reason but with a great deal of self-assertion Europeans go on declaiming against the bill, while Natives with all the force of argument and just reasoning support the measure. The opponents of the bill have as a last resort fallen upon the plea of Sir James Stephen, the so-called propriety of personal laws. Without holding this plea as tenable or valid, it may be stated that the bill is itself of the nature of a personal law for the convenience of Europeans. The measure does not seek to subject Europeans to the ordinary jurisdiction of all Native Magistrates in the manner that all Natives are subject to it. It only makes provision for bringing Europeans under the jurisdiction of some of the Native Magistrates, who are in every way fit and qualified and specially empowered and appointed for the work. The bill therefore curtails the privilege of Europeans living under personal laws to only a slight degree. All laws must be modified in accordance with the progress of time and change of circumstances. The so-called personal laws in favour of the Hindus, Mahomedans and other oriental people have been changed and now Europeans ought to submit to a like operation. [The Kaisar-i-Hind (95) of the same date and the Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 19th February express similar sentiments.]

Is glad that the official opinion on the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill is in favour of the proposals of Government.

The Bombay Chronicle (69) of the 18th February is glad that the consensus of the views of the leading administrators and officers consulted by the Governor General in Council in regard to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill preponderates in favour of the proposals of the Government. Sir James Fergusson and Mr. Grant Duff, Sir Frederick Roberts, Sir Charles Aitchison, Sir Alfred Lyall, the Commissioners of British Burmah and the Central Provinces, the Resident at Hyderabad and several others like them are in favour of the bill. Sir Frederick says in his usual candid, common-sense, practical way that it is hard to see how in equity any difference can be made in the position and power of British and Native Covenanted Civilians. The Governor of Madras describes the actual state of things and advises how to act under the circumstances, and his advice ought to be followed. He says that the question having been raised, there is some fear that bad blood may be the result of attempting to settle it, but it is not safe to stop now. The Native Covenanted Civilian must be treated in every respect as on an equality with his European colleague. [The Rást Goftár (103) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Education.

Approves of the Bill for empowering the Bombay University to confer honorary degrees.

The Lok Mitra (72) of the 18th February says that a measure has been proposed for granting to the University of Bombay the power of conferring honorary degrees. The University of Calcutta already possesses that power, and there is no reason why the sister Universities should not be invested with a similar privilege. The Bombay University is a deservedly popular institution, and degrees are highly prized, as it has maintained a high standard of qualification. The proposed boon will add considerable attractions to a learned career, and will be sincerely welcomed. There are men in Bombay whose eminent services to the cause of learning ought to be appropriately rewarded by high honorary degrees. The Bill introduced into the Supreme Legislative Council to empower the University to confer honorary degrees deserves therefore to be hailed with satisfaction.

Remarks upon the working of the Sir Jamsetji Jijibhái School of Industry and Arts.

In alluding to the recent annual public exhibition of the Sir Jamsetji Jijibhái School of Industry and Arts, the Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 23rd February observes that considering the length of time the institution has been in existence the specimens of the work of the students exhibited on the occasion were not so striking as might have been expected. It is however gratifying that about three successful students have every year left the institution in order to set up in some profession or other. Recently there has been a change of teachers, and it is to be hoped that better results will be secured hereafter. Mr. Griffiths gives the merit of introducing the art of pottery to Mr. Terry, but this has been done at several annual exhibitions before this. It is however surprising that not a single student has set himself up independently after obtaining proficiency in this art. It is said that the students are not employed on any other branch of this art than that of drawing figures on the pots; they are not taught to make different kinds of articles and to put glaze on them. If this report be true, the authorities concerned ought to remove the shortcoming. With reference to the absence of the masterpieces of art for the instruction of the students pointed out by Mr. Griffiths, the Samáchár hopes that His Excellency the Governor will make due provision for them.

Municipalities.

Disapproves of the demand made in the memorial from the Bombay Branch of the East India Association that Government should cease nominating even a small fraction of the members of the municipality of the city of Bombay.

In noticing the memorial of the Bombay Branch of the East India Association to the Local Government proposing certain amendments in the Municipal Acts for the city of Bombay, the Bombay Chronicle (69) of the 18th February observes that the demand made in the memorial that the Government should cease nominating even a small fraction of the members of the Municipal Corporation is based neither on good taste, nor sound sense, nor the requirements of the city, nor the circumstances of the local population. Government are large rate-payers and the representatives of important imperial and general interests of the whole country in this city, and ought therefore to have a voice in its municipal management. The demand is evidently based on an entire misconception of the views of the Government of Lord Ripon. Self-government does not certainly abolish local Governments.

Native States.

Some remarks in connection with mal-administration in the Gondal State.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 19th February, in an article headed "The Gondal Administration," says:—The Government of Bombay are having a very busy and at the same time anxious time of it. All the Native States in Káthiáwár may not be as bad as some of them at any rate are represented to be, and there may be exaggerations in the accounts of oppression that it has been usual of late to hear. But the deplorable state of things in Cambay and the cruel massacre in Junágad point to a lesson the other way, and every account of mal-administration which may now come before public notice ought to be enquired into, lest misrule allowed to go scot-free may ripen into mischiefs of a more serious kind. It ought to be more a source of satisfaction than of disappointment that people in Káthiáwár are learning to speak out. Public opinion is gradually being formed, and it would be highly injudicious were the Government of Bombay to turn a deaf ear to the complaints made to them against any officials in Káthiáwár. The policy of letting things alone till an evil assumes a very serious aspect has in more than one case proved mischievous. The Deccan ryots attracted the attention of Government only when they became desperate and began to cut the throat of the Márwári. We hope Government will not allow things to take the same course in Káthiáwár. Not that everyone having a grievance, however petty, ought to be heard and the official or officials complained against put upon trial on the bare statements of the party complaining, but where a class of persons come out and allege specific acts of tyranny and corruption against certain officers, Government should not shirk a searching enquiry. And that is just the nature of the complaint which certain persons have been making against certain servants of the Gondal State. It is undeniable that these persons have taken upon themselves the responsibility of proving certain charges against the said servants. But the Political Officers representing the British Government in Gondal have made such a mess of the matter, that these complainants have rightly or wrongly come to be looked upon as public martyrs. They seek redress at the hands of the Bombay Secretariat and quote chapter and verse to substantiate their allegation that some persons have been maltreated in Gondal without being heard or regularly tried for doing acts distasteful to the local officers. Thus the case is made to appear very serious. The documents they have put in evidence seem to lead to that conclusion, and the persistency with which the complaints are repeated is a striking proof that a careful enquiry is needed. At any rate the officials complained against and the parties complaining ought to be brought face to face and be given an opportunity of proving which side of the story is true. At present we have only one side of the story, and according to it a certain person by name Dámodar Manji applied to Colonel Barton that "an enquiry might be held into certain charges" which the petitioner preferred against certain officials of the Gondal State. He was referred to the Joint Administrators, to whom a petition was thereupon presented "giving the details of the charges made by him against the said officials and of the evidence, oral and documentary, by which the said charges could be proved." The Joint Administrators referred the petitioner to the Court of the Magistrate having jurisdiction. A complaint was filed before the Magistrate, but the Joint Administrators the next day intimated to the petitioner that before sanctioning the prosecution of the officials they (the Joint Administrators) must be satisfied that the petitioner was a man of good character, that he acted bonâ fide, and so on. Some of the conditions imposed upon him were not agreed to by the petitioner, but the Joint Administrators adhered to them. We may state here that so far the Joint Administrators were within their rights. They were right in demanding proofs from the petitioner that he was a man of substance and good character, not a mere hireling of some one set up to malign, if not ruin, the officials concerned. Government would be difficult if the persons governing were at the mercy of every man. But what follows does not favour the attitude of the Joint Administrators. When they adhered to their conditions the petitioner applied again to Colonel Barton, who referred him once more to the Joint Administrators. That was done and then a hearing was granted. The petitioner with his counsel attended the hearing, but after a partial enquiry he was informed that he had failed to make out a primâ facie case. The petitioner had given a list of the witnesses he wished to be examined, but none of them he urges were examined. The petitioner brought this to the notice of the Political Agent, but he refused to interfere. And the matter now comes before the Government of Bombay. The petition first submitted to that Government is dated 28rd November last, and contains the facts of which we have given a summary here. The second petition is dated 11th ultimo, and presses the prayer of the last on the notice of the Government on the ground that the Gondal officials have brought into difficulty some of those who were prepared to substantiate the allegations of the petitioner. A list of the names of these persons is given. In fact the petitioner urges his case in all its details, and it is difficult to say that he has been fairly dealt with by the Joint Administrators. When they proceeded to a hearing of the case they ought to have made the hearing complete, examined the witnesses, and brought matters to some definite end. That course ought to have been adopted in fairness not only to the parties complaining but to the parties complained against. And if they had taken care to do that and then expressed their opinion in favour of the aspersed officials, there would have remained no room for cavil. But the adoption of the opposite course has not only left matters where they were before the enquiry, but has afforded a fresh ground of complaint to the parties considering themselves aggrieved. The aspersed officials themselves have been probably prejudiced by the procedure of the Joint Administrators. People not unreasonably suspect that the Joint Administrators have abstained from a full enquiry because they thought that to go further was not safe. The suspicion may be baseless. But nevertheless the course adopted by the Administrators is calculated to give rise to it. We should think that these suspicions ought to be proved groundless, and the only way to do it is to hear what both the parties have to say. The Government of Bombay need hardly be told that a summary rejection of the petitions placed before them would be unfair to the petitioners and the officials petitioned against.

Some instances of mismanagement and oppression in the Gondal State.

The Gujaráti (89) of the 18th February gives instances of the mismanagement and oppression of the Gondal administration:—(1) Kanbi Lakhmidás Premji of Márad was forced by Miya Ismáel to prefer a false charge against a certain official of the State. When Lakhmidás complained to Colonel Barton that he was subjected to ill-treatment in order to compel him to make the accusation, the Colonel called upon Major Nutt for explanation. Báwa Miya represented to the latter officer that the complaint about the ill-treatment was not made by Lakhmidás Lakhmidás however hopes that the Political Agent will enquire into the matter. (2) Báwa Miya compelled Dáhaya Purshottam of Dhoráji to sell his house for a trifling sum in order to make certain conveniences to Miya A'damji. (3) Báwa Miya has unjustly reduced the rank of Karsanji Vachhráj, the Vahivátdár of Upleta, and compelled his son to resign the post he held. (4) Jagjivan Makan and Shiráj Jivráj, the Muktiárs, have been without due cause prohibited from practising in the courts of the Gondal State, and have not been informed of the reasons for which they have received this punishment. (5) Ravji Jhaverchand was sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment, but was not given a copy of the proceedings of the trial for which he applied. (6) A misunderstanding arose between Jetha Kachra, the manager of the largest shareholder of the village of Ganod, and Shirastedár Báwa Miya, and consequently Major Nutt has without good reason ordered that Jetha should not be allowed to transact business in any courts of the State; the unfortunate manager is not allowed a copy of the proceedings held in his case. Major Nutt does not work independently. He is led by Báwa Miya.

Criticises the letter from the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Governor relating to the Maiya affair in Junágad.

The Gujaráti (89) of the 18th February observes that the letter from Mr. Hart, the Private Secretary to the Governor, which has been published in both the local English dailies, gives the Maiya affair an appearance different from the truth, probably for the reason that the letter is based upon the report received from the Political Agent of Káthiáwár. Mr. Hart appears to say that the steps taken by the Junágad State in this matter are not in the main mistaken, but who will believe this? Perhaps it is an old custom of the State to cut and carry off the heads of the outlaws killed in order to show them to the Nawáb, but is it right to do this now-a-days? Certainly not. It appears that all reports are based upon the information furnished by the Political Agent, and are therefore made in defence of the State. Mr. Hart says in the letter that there are Makránis in the Junágad levies, but there are none. A wrong version is given to the paragraph about Junágad which appeared in the Gujaráti of the 21st January. The correspondent who wrote the paragraph meant to say that a panic had occurred in Verával and the surrounding villages on account of the Maiyás having gone into outlawry, as is usual in such cases; but Mr. Hart has written in such a manner as to lead to the inference that the outlaws committed plunder. A correspondent signing himself "A Gujaráti" has however contradicted the latter statement in the Bombay Gazette of Wednesday last. The Maiyás were encamped on the Kanda hill for a month and four days, but they did not injure a single person, nor did they threaten anybody; and it was not proper to accuse them of committing plunder. Their object was simply to obtain redress of their grievances, and no evidence is forthcoming to show that they intended to commit pillage. Legally however the Maiyás were wrong and had taken a wrong course, but they did not commit a wrong act—an offence. Under these circumstances what defence can Junágad make of their massacre?

Gives some facts regarding the massacre of the Maiyás of the Junágad State.

A correspondent of the Gujaráti (89) of the 18th February states that the widows of the Maiyás who were massacred by the Junágad levies repaired in a body to Colonel Watson's camp and there publicly stated that while the Maiyás were talking with the Chárán about surrendering, the levies came up the hill and fired upon them. The Maiyás thereupon warned the police to desist from firing as they were talking about making peace, but nobody listened to what they said. If the deceased had not been deprived of their rights they would not have become outlaws. They never intended to injure nor did they injure anybody. The writer then states that the Junágad police mainly consists of Arabs and Mahomedans, who believe in the fanatic Allah, and they took revenge on the Hindus in the Kanada hill massacre only as the fanatic Mahomed had done before. They spat on the corpses of the massacred Maiyás and mutilated them. A Maiya says that they murdered Maiyas Wálo, Mitho and Chhoto, who were wounded, by order of a Jamádár. They cut off the heads of fifteen leaders of the Maiyás and took those heads away in a cart. Altogether they took away three cartfuls of the dissevered heads of the Miyás, and the sepoys kicked them. During the incumbency of Mr. Sálehindi many girásias have been killed. The English papers have reported that 71 Maiyás were killed, but the actual number of the missing is 81.

Disapproves of the conduct of the Junágad State in the matter of the slaughter of the Maiyás.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 18th February says:—Last week's accounts from Junágad do very little to exonerate the sibandi soldiers. The Maiyás may have been at fault, though more harmless people are not to be found in Káthiáwár in ordinary relations. The Maiyás, Mayanás and other clans have gone into voluntary exile owing to differences with their Chiefs. And though it is a point of honour with them to give as much trouble to the States as they can, they never raise their hands against the weak and the inoffensive. In this particular instance it is obvious that the Junágad Darbár has behaved far worse than the poor Maiyás would have ever acted towards it under similar circumstances. What the authorities have to decide is whether the sibandi of the State did not shoot the Maiyás down as sheep, and whether they did not treat the dead bodies in a revolting manner afterwards. It is no excuse to say that this fearful tragedy was enacted, because it is a custom of the country to do so. There was a time when people used to say that one had to dig only to the depth of a foot in certain parts of Káthiáwár to find recently buried victims of intrigue. But it does not follow, therefore, that obnoxious people should be thus disposed of in the present times.

Says that the enquiry into the case of the unfortunate Maiyás should be conducted by a commission composed of a European and a Native Judicial Officer selected from British territory and not by the Political Agent.

With reference to the slaughter of the Maiyás, the Subodh Patrika (11) of the 18th February says:—The news is horrid enough, and it is to be hoped that the perpetrators of this cold-blooded deed will be brought to prompt and adequate justice. What, however, is it that has rendered such an occurrence possible in these times of peace and under the very shadow of the British Government, the guardian of the Roman peace in India? Strange though it may seem to assert it, we do believe it is the demoralising influence of the policy of that Government in two important respects on the Native States that must ultimately account for the tragedy, and the terrible catastrophe will not have occurred in vain if it should be the means of drawing the attention of Government and the public to the root of the evil. The first of the two respects referred to is the all-pervading spirit of its fiscal policy. In every direction means is sought to replenish the treasury and to increase the levy of taxation on the people. Native States adopt these methods and begin to survey and assess lands, resume ináms, and levy taxes not thought of before in imitation of the paramount power. The second respect is centralized authority and government on paper through the exclusive official hierarchy. It is an inevitable result of this system that the local official is virtually the absolute arbiter of facts. A whole village may feel or be conscious of the occurrence of an evil or a grievance, but if the local official denies its existence there is an end of the matter. Thus results the omnipotence of that dignitary from which the people have to bear so much and against which there is at present no counterpoise, and it is because Lord Ripon's policy of local self-government is calculated to raise up such a counterpoise that we value it so much more than we should otherwise do. Under the genuine Native Government a ruler may deal despotically with individual men or particular places, but no unpopular measure could effectually be forced on every man and into every corner—the local influences would be too strong to permit of it. Under the European system all this is changed, and the Resident or the Political Agent or Superintendent becomes like our local official the arbiter of ultimate facts and therefore of the fates of men and States. The lesson is not lost on the shrewd men of the Native States. The absolute authority of this official can be easily seen in the case mentioned above from the facts (1) that the amount of the disputed cess expected to be levied was only Rs. 1,000 a year throughout the whole State of Junágad; (2) the cases of the Maiyás of Junágad never went to the Secretary of State, only that of the Jaitpur Maiyás did, but it was different and should not have been, as it was, applied to the Maiyás of Junágad; (3) when pressed hard the Junágad Maiyás offered to give up a portion of their lands in payment of the unjust cess, but their offer was declined; (4) the Government refused to give them a copy of the Secretary of State's decision which they sought to apply to their case!!! Indeed the absoluteness of this official's power is so palpable that a young Native Chief in the south, who has not yet attained to power but who has been mixing with the higher officials, is reported to have remarked that if the sáheb were kept satisfied one might commit even murder with impunity in a Native State. This report even if not well founded is sufficient to show the nature of the situation we have here tried to indicate. Thus the presence of a local counterpoise to official influence is no less wanted in Native than in British territory. We are glad to know that enlightened Mahárája Sayájiráo Gáikwád of Baroda, who represents the second paramount power in Gujarát and Káthiáwár, has resolved to introduce local self-government in his State, and we hope his example will prove contagious. Such an effort will find less obstacle in Native than in British territory, where the ancient village system has been nearly rooted out and decentralization has to be newly created. Reverting to the case of the unfortunate Maiyás, we think the enquiry into it ought to be made by a commission composed of European and Native Judicial Officers from British territory and not by the Political Agent of Káthiáwár or any of his subordinates for many evident reasons.

Some remarks in connection with the massacre of Maiyás by the soldiers of the Junágad Darbár.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 19th February says:—What are we to say of the official conscience which looks so placidly upon the doings of the Junágad Darbár? The heads of the massacred were cut from the trunks for the delectation of the Chief, and were brought in carts to the city instead of being allowed to be buried, and this heartless scene is justified on the gound that it is customary in Junágad to carry the heads of the slain for identification. Well, that is a very easy way of explaining away acts which are evidently barbarous. The same process of reasoning might lead the senseless members of the Junágad Darbár to argue that the Maiyás were slain according to a well-known custom prevalent from old times in the State. Such heartless scenes are intolerable, and it is a pity that Sir James Fergusson is easily satisfied with the lame excuses of its conduct given by the Junágad Darbár. Not only does His Excellency seem to be satisfied, but the excuses are immediately communicated to the public through the papers as if the public conscience is equally plastic. The British Government ought not for one moment to compromise itself by allowing the Junágad Darbár to justify heartlessness of such atrocious character in the name of ancient customs. The Darbár is very particular in respecting the custom as to the severing of the heads of the slain from the trunks, but not so when the rights of a class of persons respected for a long period and ripened into customary and vested rights are intended to be trampled under foot. What are we to say of a Darbár which scrupulously adheres to degrading customs and sets aside those that both God and man ought to respect? The Junágad Darbár ought to be ashamed of talking so glibly of customs when it has proved false to one of them. Unfortunately the Government of Bombay has an interest in holding that the Darbár is right. The Government assisted the confiscation policy of the Darbár by deciding against the Maiyás. It is this perhaps which has withheld the Government from visiting the Darbár with a sense of its displeasure. But the public voice slumbers not, vox populi est vox dei.

Remarks on the massacre of the Maiyás at Junágad.

The Samsher Báhádur (104) of the 16th February observes that Sálehindi has shown his power by the massacre of 70 Maiyás. The Junágad police exercised great oppression in butchering the innocent Maiyás. Is there nobody to call the State authorities to account? The Political Agent does not mind it, and his Assistant, Major Scott, makes exaggerated reports. Why does not the Bombay Government move in the matter? When the Nawáb of Junágad greatly oppressed the Maiyás, burdened them with unbearable taxes, and took every means to torment them, respectable Maiya girásiás collected in a body in the village of Medarda. The Political Agent himself acknowledges that they were neither plunderers nor highwaymen. But the endeavour made by the Junágad State to misrepresent matters and give the gathering the shape of mutiny or riot is unjustifiable. It is the policy of the Junágad State to oppress the people and to ruin those who stand up for their rights. The nemesis of the sins of the State officials is sure to overtake them. The Junágad police has earned ignominy by butchering the Maiyás. The people believe that the Political Agent has made a one-sided report to the Bombay Government by relying on the statements of the State officials. The Maiyás have not succeeded in their object as they were uncivilized and unable to meet the intrigues of the scheming officials of the Junágad State. The Bombay Government has been misled by the splendour of the Junágad State, but will not the Government of Lord Ripon do anything in the matter? The Hitechhu (71) of Ahmedabad of the 22nd February condemns the conduct of the Junágad police in cutting off and carrying the heads of several dead bodies of the Maiyás as trophies to Junágad. It says that other subjects of Káthiáwár do not think that the officials of the Junágad State will be duly punished, for they have a close connection with the Political Agency. Still it remains to be seen what the Bombay Government does in connection with this terrible event. Lord Ripon should have the most searching enquiries made into the conduct of those who have thus mercilessly oppressed the destitute Maiyás and slain them. It is necessary in the public interests that if the Junágad State be really found blameable it should undoubtedly be punished.

Says that the Political Agent is justified in inspecting the Morvi State treasury before sanctioning fresh expenditure for the Thákor's tour to England.

The Samsher Báhádur (104) of the 16th February says that the Political Agent is justified in inspecting the treasury of the Morvi Darbár when the Thákor is preparing to go on a tour to England. Young and inexperienced Rájás undertake works which exhaust their treasury and afterwards become involved in debt. The Thákor of Wadhwán has exhausted his treasury in his fancy for building large palaces. Foundations have been filled up but the palaces have remained unfinished. He is thinking of procuring money for the prosecution of the work. The paramount power is justified in examining the treasury of the Thákor of Morvi when he is contemplating a costly tour. The treasury contained nearly eighteen lákhs of rupees when the Morvi State was made over by the British authorities to the present Thákor. It is proper therefore that the Political Agent should know what amount has been spent out of that sum before sanctioning fresh expenditure. It cannot be understood what benefits would accrue to the people of Morvi by this tour. Would it not be better to utilize the money for the welfare of the State than spend it in this way?

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
3rd March 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Bombay police: Suggestions for the detection of bad characters in the ... 9
False charge: A recommendation for granting compensation to Mr. Rahimbhái Khánbhái for his prosecution on a 9
Farewell address to the people of Bombay: Criticisms on the — by Dr. Murray Mitchell 7
Fever: A request to Government to take measures for the prevention of the spread of—in Rámgad in the Málvan Táluka of the Ratnágiri Collectorate 5
Mhowra Bill Commission: An answer to some of the questions issued by the 6
Murder of Natives by Europeans: Apprehensions regarding the non-infliction of due punishment on the European soldier who killed a Native at Sátára 9
Do. do. Comments on the disposal of a certain case of murder of a Hindu lad by a European at Telicheri ... 8
National Anthem: Disapproval of the project of popularizing the—in India. 6
Poverty of India: A complaint regarding the 3
Public servants: Alleged high-handed proceedings of Mr. White, the Collector of Surat 7
Queen's speech: A regret at the omission of the mention of India in the . 5
Sale of girls in marriage: An exhortation to patriotic Natives of India to get rid of the evil custom of the... 8
Salvation Army: Remarks on the orders issued in Indore by Sir Lepel Griffin regarding the 9
Term of office: Approval of the extension of the—to Lord Ripon ... 3
Thefts at Thána: Increase of — and the inability of the police to apprehend the thieves 5
Vice of drinking: Suggestions for the prevention of the spread of the ... 4

PART II.—Legislation—

Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill: Approval of the :—
The Dnyánodayá 12
The Indian Spectator ... 12
Do. do. Defence of the 12
Do. do. Dissatisfaction with the :—
The Mahrátta 10
The Native Opinion ... 11
Do. do. Joy at the consensus of official opinion being in favour of the ... 13
Do. do. Remarks on the 12
Do. do. Supports the 13

PART III.—Education—

Honorary degrees: Approval of the Bill for empowering the Bombay University to confer 14
Sir Jamsetji Jijibhái School of Art: Remarks on the working of the ... 14

PART IV.—Municipalities—

Bombay Municipality: Disapproval of the demand made by the Bombay Branch of the East India Association that Government should cease nominating even a small fraction of the members of the ... 14

PART V.—Native States—

Gondal: Remarks in connection with mal-administration in the — State ... 14
Do. Some instances of mismanagement and oppression in the — State 16
Junágad: Slaughter of the Maiyás: Criticism of the letter from the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Governor of Bombay relating to the 16

		Page.
Junágad: Slaughter of the Maiyás:	Disapproval of the conduct of the Junágad State in the matter of the	17
Do. do.	Remarks on the :—
	The Indu Prakásh ...	18
	The Samsher Báhádur ...	19
Do. do.	Some facts regarding the ...	17
Do. do.	The enquiry into the — should be conducted by a commission composed of European and Native Judicial Officers selected from British territory and not by the Political Agent	17
Morvi: A justification of the conduct of the Political Agent in inspecting the — State treasury before sanctioning fresh expenditure for the Thákor's tour to England		19

RECEIVED
27 MAR 83
INDIA OFFICE
LIBRARY

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

NATIVE PAPERS

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 3rd March 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly ...	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do. ...	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Dín Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	925
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do. ...	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do. ...	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do. ...	575
11	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do. ...	600
12	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do. ...	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly.	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly ...	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do. ...	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do. ...	260
18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do. ...	275
*19	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do. ...	200
20	„ Daivadnyă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
21	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
22	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	425
23	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do. ...	140
24	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do. ...	116
25	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do. ...	100
26	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do. ...	285
27	„ Hitechhu	Kaládgi	Do. ...	85
28	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly..	400
29	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
30	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	145
31	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do. ...	130
*32	„ Karnátak Mitră[4]	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
33	„ Kesari	Poona	Do. ...	3,500
34	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do. ...	125
35	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	300
36	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly ...	220
37	„ Mahárashtră Hitechhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,000
38	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do. ...	250
39	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly ...	100
40	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	150
41	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do. ...	100
42	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly ...	700
43	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
44	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do. ...	800
45	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do. ...	103
46	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do. ...	250
47	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily ...	350
*48	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly ...	200
49	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti).	Do. ...	200
*50	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly ...	200
51	„ Saddharm Díp	Alíbág	Do. ...	600
52	„ Satyă Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	243
53	„ Satyă Sadan	Alíbág	Weekly ...	400
54	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	140
55	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly...	275
*56	„ Sharabh	Alíbág	Weekly ...	200
57	„ Shiváji[3]	Poona	Do. ...	200
58	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do. ...	90
*59	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do. ...	200
60	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do. ...	150
61	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do. ...	240

[1] Maráthi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles.
[4] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
62	The Svadesh Mitră	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
63	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly ...	250
64	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do. ...	175
65	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do. ...	200
66	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do. ...	300
*67	„ Vinod	Poona	Do. ...	200
68	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly ...	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*69	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly ...	200
70	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do. ...	400
71	„ Hitechhu	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	349
72	„ Lok Mitră	Bombay	Do. ...	725
73	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do. ...	600
74	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do. ...	137
	GUJARA'TI.
75	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly ...	25
76	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily ...	750
77	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly ...	304
78	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do. ...	500
79	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly ...	500
80	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily ...	950
81	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly ...	700
82	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do. ...	60
83	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	600
84	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly ...	525
85	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do. ...	1,000
*86	„ Dnyán Prasárak	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	200
87	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do. ...	400
88	„ Fursad	Do.	Do. ...	100
89	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly ...	400
*90	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly ...	200
91	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do. ...	659
*92	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	200
93	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily ...	525
94	„ Kaira Vartmán	Kaira	Weekly ...	115
*95	„ Kaisar-i-Hind	Bombay	Do. ...	200
96	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	700
97	„ Kusum Guchhă	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	350
98	„ Nágar Udayă	Do.	Do. ...	300
99	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly ...	200
100	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly ...	381
101	„ Nyáyă Prakásh	Surat	Weekly ...	200
102	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do. ...	225
103	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do. ...	1,814
104	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	200
105	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do. ...	400
*106	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly ...	200
107	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do. ...	533
*108	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do. ...	200
109	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do. ...	408
110	„ Tatwă Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár	Umreth	Fortnightly..	62
*111	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
112	„ Vartmán Sár	Surat	Weekly ...	200
113	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly ...	738
114	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do. ...	300
115	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly ...	500
	KA'NARESE.
116	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	150
*117	„ Karnátak Vritt	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
	URDU.
*118	The Altáf	Bombay	Weekly ...	200
*119	„ Armagán	Do.	Bi-weekly ...	200
120	„ Khayir Kháhe Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly .	300
121	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly ...	160
*122	„ Muzhire Shawkatul Islám	Do.	Do. ...	200
	PERSIAN.
123	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly ...	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases, an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out; and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well-known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Loyalty of the Natives to the British Government.

The Saddharm Dip (51) for the month of A'shwin (October-November 1882) but received on the 5th February last, in an article headed "The Loyalty and Strength of the People of India," observes that the English and the natives of India are united for ever, and therefore it is desirable that they should behave towards each other with good will and cordiality. It will not do for the English in India to treat Natives arbitrarily. The English rule would become bearable if Englishmen were to act towards Natives with kindness and consideration. The Prince of Wales and his brother were received with ovation by the masses in India. The loyalty of the Indian population generally towards the British nation is undoubted. When the Governors of provinces move on tour, they are feted and feasted everywhere, and the people show joy on their coming. The multiplication of ill-considered laws has however done much to estrange the people from the British Government. The high-handed conduct also of English officials has helped to intensify this feeling of estrangement. The manner in which Natives are killed by Europeans when out hunting is one of the principal causes which has created dissatisfaction in the Native mind with respect to British rule. But notwithstanding the disadvantages under which the Natives are labouring, they have done nothing disloyal. Some ill wishers of Natives might point to the mutiny as a stain on their loyalty, but it must be remembered that that catastrophe was brought about by the petted English officials. If the population of India had really not been loyal to the British Crown, the English would not have come successful out of the mutiny. The English people have come into the possession of India by the providence of God and not by their own inherent strength or by their superiority over Natives in the arts of war and peace. They conquered India because the Native Princes were fighting among themselves. The conquest was achieved with the help of Native levies, who are even now necessary for guarding the empire. Native sepoys have always been loyal and will always be so to those whose salt they eat. If the Russians or the Germans were to invade India to-morrow, the masses will range themselves on the side of the British Government against the invaders. On such an occasion they will not remember the oppressive nature of the forest laws, the inconveniences suffered by the high price of salt, or the excessive burden of taxation. The loyalty of the natives of India to the British power is not a mere phantom but a reality. The English people might think that they have conquered the Natives by the might of their arms and have kept them under subjection by their superior policy. This, however, is a mistake. The English are a mere handful in the midst of the vast populations of India, and the latter could crush them instantly. The English people should not think that their tenure in India depends on their own strength and valour. They are here because the natives of India are loyal.

Gives reasons for the prayer for the extension of Lord Ripon's term of office.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 25th February explains the motives that prompted it to throw out as a feeler the hint about holding public meetings for adopting memorials to the Queen for the extension of Lord Ripon's term of office, and observes:—We had a twofold object in view. We wished the people of India to make an effort to show that as the subjects of a constitution-loving nation we must have a voice allowed us in the appointment of one whose personal qualities, principles and sincerity of purpose had greatly to do with the well-being of two hundred and fifty millions of men. Our first argument in favour of the proposal is the necessity of the public assertion of our right to have some voice, direct or indirect, in the government of our country. Our argument has for its basis the deep love we bear towards England's interests in India, and it is that love that prompted us to make the suggestion about the memorial. It is a well-known fact in Indian history that Parliamentary committees have sat every twenty years to enquire into the administration of this country. The last of such committees sat in 1853. When twenty years had passed away we asked for such an enquiry. Though our oft-repeated and urgent demands did not succeed, they have been successful so far in obtaining an Indian commission, if we may so call it, composed of Major Baring, Dr. Hunter, Mr. Ilbert and the other members of the Government of India, with Lord Ripon as President. The commission is now sitting and making a searching enquiry which, we fear, will not be complete within the time allowed for the purpose. We therefore urge that lest the commission should hurry on its work and leave it half done, it is necessary that full time should be allowed to the members so as to enable them to draw up a complete report. That Lord Ripon is doing the work of enquiry cannot be doubted even for a moment, because we know that he has done nothing beyond directing the attention of the several Governments to what the Government of India had already laid down, but which for one reason or another remained unexecuted. In urging upon the Home Government the necessity of extending the period of Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty we zealously watch the interests of England, for whose benefit it is necessary that the enquiry should be exhaustive and continuous, which it will not be if Lord Ripon goes away on the expiry of his term of office. The third ground is that the continuation of Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty is necessary, not so much in the interests of India as in those of England. The retention of a Viceroy like Lord Ripon at the present crisis is almost a sine quâ non, and we learn from some of the English papers that it is not in India only but even in England that the necessity is seen. His retention is a sine quâ non, because he combines within himself such qualities as place him beyond the reach of party prejudices. Neither the Conservatives, nor the Liberals, nor the Radicals can find anything in Lord Ripon to condemn or to disapprove, and the recent telegrams received in India perfectly bear us out in this. The Secretary of State for India in the House of Lords and the Under Secretary in the Commons have most emphatically declared that Lord Ripon is not going an inch out of the lines prescribed to him, and that the Home Government have the fullest confidence in anything he does. Thus he has not only won the hearts of the people of India, but has held English statesmen spell-bound. The gloomy future which had begun to cast its shades towards the close of Lord Lytton's administration has been and can only be avoided by making England fulfil certain promises which yet remain unheeded. Englishmen must set themselves to learn more about India ; they must act in a spirit of absolute honesty towards the Indian finances, and they must deal with Indian questions sent home for their decision, not in the interests of powerful classes or political parties in England, but in the sole interest of the Indian people. All this is what Lord Ripon is attempting to do, and hence it is that we should ask for an extension of his period of office. The people of India can of themselves do much for the amelioration of their condition, but England can do more, and Lord Ripon much more.

Heartily approves of the memorial praying for the renewal of Lord Ripon's tenure of office.

The Bombay Chronicle (69) of the 25th February expresses unqualified approval of the memorial which is being got up by the people of Bombay for the renewal of Lord Ripon's tenure of office as Governor General of India. The memorial, observes the Chronicle, is the genuine expression of the sincere and anxious desire of the people that the Viceroy should rule over them for five years more after the expiration of his present term of office in order to enable him to carry out in their entirety the various administrative improvements he has introduced. Since two and a half years of the existing term are yet to run, the opportuneness of the memorial might be questioned; but there can be no doubt about the appropriateness of the prayer itself. [The Gujaráti (89) and the Yajdán Parast (115) of the same date express similar sentiments. The Rást Goftár (103) of the same date also expresses similar sentiments, but questions the opportuneness of the memorial. It is not known, observes the Goftár, whether His Lordship is willing to stay in India after the expiry of the term of his office. Two and a half years of this term are yet to run, and though it cannot be even imagined that His Lordship might change his present beneficial policy, yet circumstances might happen that would impair his great popularity. Supposing a deficit occurs in the next budget and His Lordship is compelled to revive the income tax to cover the gap, it is questionable whether his popularity would remain unimpaired. If the present Liberal Ministry goes out of office and is succeeded by a Conservative administration, it is doubtful whether Lord Ripon would care to stay in India for another five years. Again, there is no guarantee that England would remember the memorial two and a half years hence when the time for action comes. Moreover the memorial is addressed to Her Majesty, with whom the appointment to the Viceroyalty does not rest. The Suryá Prakásh (74) of the 24th and the Gujarát Mitrá (70) of the 25th February approve of the memorial.]

Approves of the memorial praying for the extension of the term of Lord Ripon's office as Viceroy of India.

The Lok Mitrá (72) of the 25th February says:—To judge by the speeches and the unanimity and eclat with which the several resolutions were passed, the public meeting assembled at the Frámji Cowasji Institute to adopt a memorial to Her Majesty the Queen praying for an extension of the term of office of Lord Ripon must be considered highly successful. The speeches were of exceptional ability, and the whole proceedings gave sign of an influential movement, which, whatever its result, will surely remain a high testimony to the popularity and esteem which Lord Ripon has won. The earnestness of the utterances at the meeting indicated pretty plainly that the Viceroy has touched a chord in the hearts of the Native population of India, which has sent a thrill of gratitude from one end of the country to the other. Never was hero-worship more genuine or sincere, or more honourable to the worshipper and the worshipped, than that which Ripon Sáheb has evoked by his promises and performances as the Friend of the Indian people. It would surely be one of the most gracious concessions to the feelings and wishes of the people of India were Her Majesty to extend the term of office of India's greatest Viceroy for a time sufficient to perfect the beneficent policy of Lord Ripon, and were that statesman himself to sacrifice the immense advantages and conveniences of an English home for the good of a vast population, which sees in his longer continuance in office the prospects of a bright future. [The Ahmedabad Samáchár (75) of the 28th February advises the people of India to adopt memorials for the extension of Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty from all parts of the country.]

Approves of the nomination of the Hyderabad Regency.

The Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 27th February discusses the merits of the Hyderabad Regency and expresses its full approval of the arrangements. Under the circumstances in which the State was placed by the untimely death of Sir Sálar Jung, the appointment of the members of the Regency for the conduct of State affairs is the most discreet and the best. It is to be hoped that everything will go on smoothly under the Regency. [The Jáme Jamshed (93) and the Akhbáre Sodágar (76) of the 27th, and the Káside Mumbai (96) of the 28th February and the Bombay Punch (79) of the 3rd March express similar sentiments.]

Expresses gratitude for the resolution of the Government of India to employ graduates of the Indian Civil Engineering Colleges in the Public Works Department.

The Gujarát Mitrá (70) of the 25th February expresses deep gratitude for the recent resolution of the Government of India with respect to the employment of the graduates of the Indian Civil Engineering Colleges in the Public Works Department. The resolution is in unison with the policy of the Viceroy in other matters. The natives of India are extremely fortunate in possessing such a ruler as Lord Ripon.

Says that fees paid to Government officials for serving on the Town Council of the Bombay Municipal Corporation should be credited to Government.

The Kaisar-i-Hind (95) of the 25th February approves of the decision of the Government of Bengal that the fees received by a Government official for serving on the Town Council of the Calcutta Municipal Corporation should be credited to Government, and suggests that the same rule should be enforced by the Government of Bombay in regard to the Bombay Town Council.

Heartily approves of the speech delivered by Sir James Fergusson in the darbár held by him at Kolhápur.

The Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 3rd March heartily approves of the visit paid by Sir James Fergusson to the Southern Marátha Country. The Samáchár is highly pleased with the speech delivered by His Excellency in the darbár held at Kolhápur on the 26th ultimo. Sir James gave on that occasion valuable advice to the assembled Sardárs and other people in regard to the breeding of horses and cattle, on sanitary improvements in towns and villages, on male and female education, and on the desirability of making provision for industrial education. If His Excellency acts in accordance with the sentiments expressed by him on the above occasion, he will secure the gratitude of the people over whom he rules.

Replies to some of the questions set by the Mhowra Commission.

In reply to question No. 22 of the queries set by the Mhowra Commission, the Rást Goftár (103) of the 25th February states that until recently cases of intoxication were extremely rare, but since the enforcement of the A'bkári Act the people have contracted the bad habit of drinking to excess. Formerly small doses were taken regularly; but now-a-days owing to the heavy duty on liquor and the wiles of the liquor contractors, the price of liquor has gone up very high. Under these circumstances poor persons cannot afford to purchase their daily allowance regularly. They save a few pice from their daily expenditure for three or four days and then spend their savings in hard drinking to the great injury to their health. In reply to the 23rd question, the Rást Goftár observes that the severity of the Act has taught the poor people the crime of smuggling mhowra blossoms for the purpose of manufacturing liquor from them. Reply to question 24: Ordinary utensils are made up into a still for distilling liquor. Reply to question 27: Mhowra flowers are used for manufacturing liquor from them and for feeding cattle. Poor people sell the flowers and maintain themselves from the proceeds of the sale. These flowers are also used medically. Young mhowra fruit is used as human food; oil is extracted from mhowra seeds and is used for culinary purposes as well as for burning lights. The produce of mhowra trees is differently used in the Thána District. The poor eat the flowers and the fruit and burn the oil. In times of scarcity the mhowra flowers are their only food. Fresh flowers are eaten raw, and a syrup is made of them and is used in lieu of sugar. Dried flowers are boiled and eaten, or are made into cakes either by themselves or after mixing them with a little flour of some kind of grain. The cattle are also fed upon the flowers. They get fat thereby. The owners of mhowra trees and the poor people get the flowers for the simple trouble of collecting them; their bazár price is one and a half times that of nágli and double that of rice.

Disapproves of the creation of the office of an Inspector of Registration for the Kánarese districts.

The Dhárwár Vritt (22) of the 22nd February alludes to the creation of an Inspectorship of Registration for the Kánarese districts, and observes that the expense about to be incurred in sanctioning this office is undesirable and unjustifiable. There are in the Kánarese Collectorates only 33 registration offices, the records of which are annually examined by Collectors and their Assistants with the assistance of specially skilled clerks, and therefore no necessity exists for sanctioning an Inspectorship of Registration. Some years ago the Inspectorships of Registration were abolished in order to keep the expenditure of the Registration Department within its income. Since then no inconvenience has been felt and hence it is unaccountable that an Inspectorship of Registration should be created afresh. The condition of the Registration Department is rapidly deteriorating. The clerks who have actually to do the work of registration are extremely ill paid. Several years ago they were given liberal salaries, but now their incomes have been cut down so low that they are hardly able to maintain themselves respectably. The responsibilities of Sub-Registrars have increased, but their pay has been reduced. Efforts should in the first place be made to increase the emoluments of this class of servants.

Advocates the establishment of an agricultural bank in the Kaira District.

The Kaira Vartmán (94) of the 28th February requests Government to open an agricultural bank in the Kaira District. The chief causes of the present bad state of agriculture are the ignorance of the ryots, their indebtedness and the innumerable caste feasts which they are forced to give. The cultivation of the soil will not improve so long as the condition of the agriculturists remains wretched. It is necessary that measures should be taken to prevent their being involved in debt and their indulging in caste feasts. The ryots should be given a good education.

The Jagadádarsh (29) of the 20th February complains that since Mr. Elphinston became Collector of Ahmednagar he has been importing men from the Kolába District to fill vacancies in the Ahmednagar Collectorate. Only a few days ago the Collector's chitnis went on leave. His place was given to the deputy chitnis and a man from Kolába was brought to fill the latter appointment. Half a dozen places have been bestowed upon men from Kolába in this way. It is true that Mr. Elphinston is acting legally within his powers, but it is astonishing that he should find no one competent to do the work of the deputy chitnis in Ahmednagar. It is absurd to think that competent and qualified clerks can be found only in the Kolába District. Mr. Elphinston's predecessors never felt any difficulty in filling up vacancies from among the subordinate clerks or kárkuns in the Ahmednagar District. How would Mr. Elphinston like to be superseded for a Commissionership by a Collector junior to him? Officials lose heart in their work if their claims for promotion are disregarded. Even posts of trifling value have been bestowed on men from the Kolába District. In conclusion the Jagadádarsh suggests to Government that instead of putting Mr. Elphinston to the trouble of importing clerks from the Kolába District into Ahmednagar, he should himself be transferred to the former Collectorate, where he will have full scope for promoting the well-being of his own favourite people.

Filling up of appointments of clerks and kárkuns in the Ahmednagar District by men from the Kolába District.

A correspondent of the Bakul (16) of the 25th February, writing from Guhágar in the Ratnágiri District, states that in the villages of Sákhari Agar, Welneshwar, Hedwi Narwan, the jackals have become so bold as to attack human beings. About thirty persons have been bitten by these horrid animals. A boy of the village of Sákhari Agar was attacked by one of these creatures and he died from the effects of the wounds inflicted. A woman of the Kharwi caste residing in Welneshwar was injured in a similar manner, and she too died from the effects of the bite. In the village of Hedwi a man was attacked by a jackal. The correspondent hopes that Government will send armed policemen to destroy these animals without delay. If the villagers had been permitted to keep guns, their condition would not have been so helpless. The correspondent trusts that Government will allow half a dozen guns to be retained in each village. The rule that the person who obtains the license for keeping arms should only be allowed to use them ought to be abolished. It is to be hoped that a doctor will be sent to the villages named above to attend on the wounded people.

Attacks of jackals on human beings in certain villages of the petty division of Guhágar.

A correspondent of the Arunodayá (14) of the 25th February, writing from Goregaon in the Thána District, says that since the commencement of the present year great delay has occurred in the delivery of the post. Persons engaged in commerce have to suffer losses if the letters of their correspondents are not delivered to them with promptitude and punctuality. Perhaps the transfer of most of the postal work to the táluka post masters and the reduction of all sub-post masters to the level of village post masters are to a certain extent answerable for this state of things. The correspondent hopes that the authorities concerned will take measures to expedite the delivery of the post in Goregaon.

A postal complaint.

In a paragraph headed "Anglo-Indian Journalism," the Native Opinion (10) of the 25th February says:—It seems that Anglo-Indian journalists are free to say what they like, heedless of truth or otherwise. They can be inconsistent and may make wide generalizations and statements. In England too party-journals indulge in acts unworthy of the leaders of opinion. But there the evil is partly checked by public opinion and partly rendered harmless by papers of the opposite party being powerful enough to make themselves heard. Here the case is different. As a general rule Anglo-Indians either side with the Anglo-Indian papers or look mildly upon their faults. And as to Native public opinion it is too much below an Anglo-Indian's notice, and the Native papers are too feeble to speak out effectually. We have lately had two curious instances of the evils we have been speaking about. The local Times, commenting upon the proposal of the new amendment in the Criminal Procedure Code for the first two days argued, and argued very fairly in favour of it. We think no better defence of the amendment can be found than that contained in its leaders of those days. But the third day its readers were surprised to find that it had changed its mind suddenly without any reason. And ever since it has kept to its later mood. Now what can this be but inconsistency? The Times probably thought in the harmony of universal opinion in favour of the amendment it had better strike, for discord's sake if for nothing else, a jarring note. Now we cannot call this a freak, for acting against one's own convictions without any reason is an evidence of want of principle. Would not the Times itself have in a mood of merriment, in which it not seldom indulges, held up to ridicule such a freak if it had found it in any of the Native papers or any other paper opposed to it? No language would then have been too strong? So also the Englishman, in its remarks upon the above-mentioned amendment, indulged in a few incorrect statements. It gave out that the wise Sir Ashley Eden was opposed to the measure, whereas from the memorandum sent up to the Government of India with Mr. Gupta's note it is clear that he was decidedly in favour of it. Perhaps the Englishman hazarded the statement from a belief that the memorandum would probably not be published. Another similar statement is that in 1872 a pledge had been given to European subjects in India that the law as it was then amended and as it now exists would not be changed, whereas a reference to the speeches of those members of the Vice-regal Council of that year who were against putting Native Covenanted Civilians on a footing of equality with their British brethren at once transfers this statement to the region of fable. We wonder what the Englishman would have done if he had caught anyone else tripping in that way. The Statesman has very ably exposed these errors.

Points out eccentricities of Anglo-Indian journalism.

Does not approve of the movement for bringing out lady doctors from England.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 25th February says:—Looking at the question of the importation of lady doctors for India from a theoretical point of view we are inclined to think there is a want of them in this country. The natural delicacy of feeling of our women forces them to suffer pain rather than allow themselves to be examined by a male doctor. But looking at the question from a practical point of view European lady doctors will be certainly useless. Their ignorance of the vernaculars will be the first stumbling-block in their way. Moreover European ladies will not venture out here for a paltry remuneration. If one or two lady doctors are brought out to India, the money will simply be wasted. What can one or two lady doctors do for the whole Native community? They cannot treat all female cases, for the labour of treating even one hundred cases will be great, and the remuneration will be comparatively poor. The Native community, taken as a whole, is not pecuniarily in a position to pay them handsomely. As to their teaching Native ladies the profession, their energies will also fail. Moreover a separate establishment will entail more cost. So then this is after all a very costly sport to be indulged in only by rich persons, of whom the people of this country have not many to boast. We therefore advise the originators of the movement to lay the whole scheme before the Native community of this Presidency and discuss the measure fully before the money collected is irrevocably disposed of. Cannot they see a way to utilizing the resources which the Grant Medical College of Bombay affords? There is already a class for teaching midwifery to Native ladies. The funds that have been collected might be applied so as to enlarge the scope of this class in order that medicine generally might be taught to Native ladies. Some portion of the money might be used in such a way as to secure the attendance at the College of a better class of women than that hitherto receiving the benefit of these lectures. In this manner much good might be done.

Disapproves of the importation of lady doctors from England.

With reference to the importation of lady doctors from England, the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 26th February observes that they will not be of much use here. English lady doctors belonging to the Zenana Mission and other missionary societies have not done any perceptible good in Native society. Native ladies have no appreciation of European medicines. From want of education also they are unable to enter freely into social intercourse with foreign ladies. These two causes will prevent them from availing themselves of the advantages of the assistance of English lady doctors. Instead of importing lady doctors from England it would be better to form a class of Native women at the Grant Medical College and impart instruction to them in medical science. Women trained in this way will be infinitely more serviceable than lady doctors just imported from England. They will not find any difficulty in making way in Native society.

Recommends the training of Native ladies as medical practitioners.

The Lok Mitrá (72) of the 25th February observes that it is gratifying to find that the sum required by the promoters of the scheme for introducing lady doctors in India has been so speedily subscribed. The citizens of Bombay have always shown a laudable promptitude to assist all good works by their purse and exertions when the wants of the country are properly put forth before them. In this case there can be no greater proof of the popularity of the movement than the respectable sum which has been subscribed, apparently without the slightest difficulty. It is evident therefore that with a little more exertion the fund subscribed may be easily made a nucleus round which a more extensive and permanent project may be formed. Why should not Bombay itself undertake the training of female medical practitioners? The midwifery class in the local Medical College is a most useful institution, and has already done great good, and an extension of the liberality of the rich people of Bombay will enable the same College to still more enlarge its scope of usefulness by undertaking the preparation of Native ladies for higher medical qualifications. A wish has already been expressed in several quarters that the promoters of the scheme—the success of which is now well nigh assured—might usefully extend their programme, and there is no reason why equal success should not crown their efforts in this new direction. It is evident, however, that the work is one of much more difficulty owing to the present condition of Native women. But with a little time and care the difficulty can be surmounted, and now that the one experiment is going to be tried it might be as well also to give a trial to the other.

Disapproves of the project of getting the National Anthem translated into the vernacular languages of India.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 25th February, in referring to the project of translating the National Anthem into the vernacular languages of India, observes:—We do not see how the translation of the National Anthem can strengthen our feelings of loyalty and affection towards the sovereign. Is the mere singing of such hymns to denote that the people are loyal? Why then not make fifty such hymns and get them sung in every street and alley, and then the result will be overpowering. We think that the people are sufficiently loyal, but if they really are not, the fault is not theirs, nor is the singing of the Anthem the way to make them so. Give them substantial rights and they will be loyal. We have no objection to the translation of the Anthem; but people ought not to make such a fuss over it. If persons want to empty their overflowing treasury-boxes by spending money on these ideal projects, let them do it quietly. So long as the advantages are questionable, it seems hardly proper to make such a noise about them.

The coming Budget.

Remarks in connection with the coming Budget.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 25th February says:—That the coming Budget for 1883-84 will be disappointing has been anticipated by those who have carefully watched the progress of important items of revenue during the official year which is now about to expire. But, as usual, it has been reserved for the Times to let out ominous hints as to the deficit that may be expected in the next Budget. To a certain extent it is politic to get the leading journal a few weeks beforehand to make the unpleasant announcement. The Indian people are thus prepared for ill news, which may not after all turn out so bad. Both opium and salt will, it is said, fall short of the estimates. There is no improbability in such a statement. That the opium revenue receipts will show a serious decline has been anticipated for some months past. Even the temporary rise in exports that was expected by a reduction in duty of Rs. 50 per chest has scarcely been realized, while the reserve in Patna chests is already too low. The falling off may be attributed partly to the heavy failures of opium dealers at Indore some months ago. It is a pity that Major Baring, in deference to the clamour that was raised at the time of his first financial statement, when he estimated opium at the average figure of 6½ millions sterling, was constrained most reluctantly to increase the estimate last year by a million. Perhaps the reduction in the salt duties and the abolition of the import duties on all articles save spirits and arms and ammunition may have also tempted him to swell his estimates, leaving it to the chapter of accidents to allow them to be fairly realized. But even this deficit in the opium revenue might have been partially made up had there been no repeal of the import duty on the finer class of grey goods. We have all along maintained that that was the weakest part of Major Baring's Budget of 1882-83. Beyond these there was the reduction in the salt duty. It was assumed that the consumption of the article would be stimulated. In spite of the result that the consumption has not been so great as was expected, we are of opinion that the duty should be further reduced. If consumption is to be further stimulated, then the most statesmanlike course would be to further reduce the duty. In the long run it would be by far the wisest course to adopt. But perhaps the exigencies of finance may not admit of such a course as either expedient or beneficial. It would be however premature to forecast the financial statement with regard to this item of reduction. But it is to be sincerely hoped that his calculations for the ways and means of the next financial year may not be upset by the eccentricities of the Indian climate. He will have to guard well against the expenses incidental to a probable or possible famine. No doubt the annual provision made to meet famine expenses in the future, and the obligations imposed on provincial Governments in the matter to a certain extent by the policy of decentralization, may prove ample without necessitating fresh taxation or borrowing in the midst of the year. But it is better to provide against the worst that may happen. It might be fairly asked how the Finance Minister would meet the deficit likely to be caused in the Imperial Exchequer in the event of a severe famine. Is the character of the several important items of the Indian revenue such as to hold out bright hopes of making it up? Or is it not now fairly admitted that it is such as to cause anxiety to the most sanguine financiers? The income tax cannot be raised a few pence higher in a bad year, as in England. There is no such source of revenue to fall back upon here. Whenever it has been sought to impose even a mild income tax, it has met with such strong popular opposition, in a great measure unreasonable, that the Government of the day has hesitated to levy it. Leaving income tax alone, there is no elastic revenue in reserve here to fall back upon, unless it be salt. We question whether in case of an emergency it would be wise to increase the tax on the most important necessary of life, especially in a country like India. It would be most unwise to retrace now the steps taken last year in connection with salt. How then is the Finance Minister to fill up the gap in the Indian Exchequer? If a fresh loan is to be raised, it is to be hoped that it will be raised in Europe. In the long run it will be to the advantage of India to launch it there. Meanwhile may we again ask whether the Government of India will not take heart of grace and improve the incidence of the present iniquitous license tax if it is to be at all retained? Are the official, professional and other salaried classes throughout the Empire still to be exempted? Major Baring will have another half a million in the treasury if he honestly tries to remove the anomaly of the license tax as at present levied. Again, it will be unrighteous for Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues to burden India with a pie of the cost beyond the ordinary pay of the Indian troops engaged in the Egyptian Expedition. In the present state of the finances the saving would be a great relief. But after all where will India stand? At the best there will be a fresh debt incurred. Is it politic to go on increasing our indebtedness every second or third year? Cannot India be relieved of some of her sore burdens? Cannot the Home charges be brought down to a fair limit? Is it too much on the part of England which drains the life-blood of India in the shape of an annual withdrawal from the country of thirty millions sterling to generously give back (say) ten millions sterling? Let India be asked in future to bear only five millions sterling of the Home charges and let England contribute the rest. In such an arrangement lies the future salvation of India. Above all, extensive Native agency must be employed in the administration of the country. The nemesis of circumstances, however slow, will surely overtake the Government of India and compel it to govern India in the interests of the Indians. It is the extravagant foreign agency that is at the root of the evils and uncertainties of Indian finance. [The Mahrátta (2) of the same date, in writing on the forthcoming Budget and the apprehended deficit in the finances, remarks that the imposition of a new tax to meet the deficit would be extremely inadvisable, for the people of India are already overtaxed. To increase the existing burden of taxation even by a single pie would be to take their life-blood. To incur additional debt and to undertake the responsibility of a perpetual interest is a very bad way of meeting a present difficulty with an endless trouble in future. The best way would be to effect reductions in the Military and Public Works Departments of India without lessening their efficiency. This can be done by reducing the number of the highly-paid superior officers.]

Remarks upon the forthcoming Budget.

In alluding to the threatened deficit in the finances, the Lok Mitrá (72) of the 25th February says that it is to be earnestly hoped that the deficit will not be a very heavy one involving the necessity of additional taxation or fresh borrowing. This game of alternate taxing and borrowing has been played too long, and it is a question whether some other and more statesmanlike remedy could not be devised to cover deficits whenever they occur. Nay, it may be asked whether, bearing in mind the uncertainty of Indian finance, aggravated as it is every three or four years by famine expenses, revenue and expenditure cannot be adjusted on some rational basis whereby stability and permanence may be secured. Is it entirely hopeless to curtail expenditure? The opium and salt duties together are absorbed by the military charges. Now the revenue from the former is being daily threatened. There are both internal and external elements that go to disturb it. The duties are leviable on the quantity of Malwa and Patna opium. The latter is artificially stimulated. The reserve number of chests is regulated according to the exigencies of the Exchequer. Now it is always dangerous to raise the wind by means of artificial State support. The aim of the Government ought to be to let receipts from important items of revenue come in freely. The very fact of regulating the cultivation of poppy in Behar in proportion to the reserve at Patna and in due subordination to the exigencies of finance has about it advantages as well as disadvantages. But State monopoly, however advantageous, is in the long run destructive of the vitality of revenue. This is the internal element that is at the root of the precariousness of the opium revenue. The cultivation of poppy in Indore and other Native States is left out of consideration. The external elements that daily threaten to decrease the exports of opium are twofold. The first of them is the larger exports of opium from Persia and Eastern Africa. The latest accounts published by Her Majesty's Consul at Hongkong show that the foreign opium is making head in China, and that the area of cultivation in China is annually extending. Malwa opium is consumed only by the wealthier classes because it is dear. Despite the fact of any arrangement which Sir Thomas Wade may be ultimately able to come to with the Celestial Government, there is every probability of extension, year after year, of poppy cultivation in China. Hence there is no saying how far the Indian trade may be thereby injured in another decade. In view of such a contingency, it would be a most sagacious course to estimate the future revenue at a safe figure. Any Finance Minister who is tempted in his financial statement to value it for a given year at higher than five to six millions would commit a serious blunder. Opium estimates of the future ought to be very cautious. The practical financier must take the bull by the horns. He must endeavour to realize the position of the opium revenue as it now stands. The day has not yet come when the Indian Government will be perforce constrained to make up the huge deficit that is likely to arise from the falling off of the opium revenue to the tune of three or four millions sterling. But it would be wise if in view of such a dire contingency it seriously thought of grappling with the difficulty. And we believe the only sound method of solving it is by curtailing expenditure in all departments of the State. The land revenue system of the country is itself on trial. Agrarian difficulties that have cropped up here and there for some years past have hardly been removed. The present Government of India is quite alive to the gravity of the situation. It is sincerely anxious to deal with it in a statesmanlike manner. Hence if at an early day there is to be a thorough revision of the land revenue assessments, it may be taken for granted that it will in no way tend to improve the land revenue. The other large item which requires consideration is salt. But even here the most sanguine will not have the hardihood to assert that any further increase may be expected in the income realized from the salt duty. The poorer classes of people even now cannot buy salt enough for their daily food, while it is well known that the country is impoverished by the death of thousands of head of cattle. Salt is as much a necessity of life with domestic animals as with men. In the increase of live stock partially lies the prosperity of the indigent ryot, and therefore of the country generally. Viewed from this aspect it will be seen how great is the necessity for a further reduction of the salt duty. It was thought that last year's reduction would have told favourably on consumption. But this anticipation has not been realized. The duty is not yet so sufficiently light as to stimulate consumption. Thus there cannot be much of elasticity in the three most important items of State revenue. Under the circumstances the necessity of curtailing expenditure is glaringly manifest. But unfortunately there is a feeling of aversion to meet the problem. The great officials shirk the task of taking a bold step. But as long as hesitation and fear to grapple with the problem remain, so long will Indian finances be subject from time to time to rude shocks and unpleasant deficits, leading the country into a deeper and deeper mire of indebtedness. A time may come when Indian credit may get exhausted. But apart from that fact it is scarcely statesmanlike to conduct the administration of the country in this hand-to-mouth fashion. A new and bold departure in Indian finance must be taken, and that too soon. Without a saving of five to seven millions sterling, there is no hope of any improvement in the Indian finances. There should be a vigorous agitation for the mitigation of India's present burdens. The obligations, as they are called, of fifteen millions sterling can well be brought down to ten. Unless the Government seriously sets itself about the task of applying heroic remedies to the vessel of Indian finance it will toss to and fro, surrounded by successive waves of increasing indebtedness, till one day she founders engulfing a whole nation in poverty and ruin. Are the rulers alive to this danger? At the best the Finance Ministers occupy themselves with temporary relief. But a permanent relief is needed. [The Surya Prakásh (74) of the 24th February regrets the non-abolition of the license tax, and disapproves of the imposition of a new tax, because the people of India are unable to bear any increase of taxation.]

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Is against the passing of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Káside Mumbai (96) of the 2nd March, in referring to the public meeting held at the Calcutta Town Hall to protest against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, observes that opinions vary whether Natives are really liars or cheats. It is however very doubtful whether Natives can properly dispense justice to Europeans. When Hindu Subordinate Judges frequently fail in administering justice to Mahomedans, they can never be fit to protect the civilized and honoured Europeans and their families. The Kásid will not be sorry if the Bill is given up.

Says that the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill should not be withdrawn.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 25th February observes:—True to its traditions, the Bengal Chamber of Commerce has raised a cry against Mr. Ilbert's amendment regarding the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates. The English first settled in Bengal. It was in that province that the Nabobs of Lord Macaulay amassed fabulous wealth, set up in grand style at Home, grew fat and died. It was there that by force and fraud portions of the Indian territory were conquered. And ever since the consolidation of the Empire, race feeling has been most active there. The old sores have never been allowed to heal. The old spirit of mercantile buccaneering is still dominant there. The indigo planters of Bengal have by their wealth and influence kept the coolies in a state of thraldom. The traditional policy of treating Natives as so many slaves is still most rampant in the eastern capital. All legislative reforms for the amelioration of the condition of coolies and the introduction of free labour have met there from time to time with fierce opposition. It is not surprising therefore to see the Bengal traders setting up this insensate cry against Mr. Ilbert's Bill. Those who, like Sir James Stephen and others, talk of the superiority of the conquerors and their right to enjoy certain higher privileges ought however to read and reflect upon that statesmanlike minute of Macaulay made under almost similar circumstances fifty years ago. That eloquent document will put to shame the agitators who are for perpetuating an anomaly in the administration of justice in a country where, if any one thing is more valued than another for the sake of its rulers, it is the equality of the law. A more eloquent defence of justice and a severer condemnation of interlopers could not have been made by that true friend of India and one of England's most patriotic sons than that contained in his minute on the amendment to the Charter of 1813. Well may Mr. Ilbert echo Macaulay's noble utterances in support of his present amendment. Let the Government of India always cherish these sentiments instinct with genuine British statesmanship. We call upon Lord Ripon and his colleagues to persevere in their righteous policy, regardless of opposition from a handful of men who do not like the reform because it takes away from them the power of inflicting injury without fear of consequences. It must be remembered that this opposition is not from the European community, but from a very small section of it, and that with the most selfish of motives. The highest officials in India have approved the proposed change, and they have given reasons for the approval. The Secretary of State has given it a formal sanction. The cry now raised is that European society in India is averse to the change. We are confident that if the leading members of the European community are consulted on the subject, the majority of them will side with Government. All opposition is confined within the narrowest limits. The planters of Bengal and their friends,—a class who have defied British justice so long,—are not likely to welcome Mr. Ilbert's amendment. And it is from this privileged class that one or two English papers are not ashamed of asking the Government to obtain willing assent! This is what even Lord Ripon, the most popular Viceroy, cannot do. Is the Bill therefore to be abandoned? If Lord Ripon proposes to govern India in the interest of a few hundred planters and shopkeepers, and if he thinks it advisable to accept that ultra-patriotic theory of the Englishman's pride of birth and his magnificent sense of superiority, he had better give up the Bill. But if he means to govern the country in the interest of its people, and if he values law and justice more than skin distinction, he cannot do better than remove the anomaly which has so long disgraced the British Indian statute-book, and against which every true Englishman has raised his voice more indignantly than the most indignant Native patriot. The existence of anomalies in other branches of administration is no argument for the perpetuation of a wicked and debasing anomaly in the branch charged with the judicial administration of 25 millions of Her Majesty's subjects. Let the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce kick up the fiercest opposition. But that should not be construed into an opposition from the whole European community. On the other hand the majority of Europeans, the highest officials and the best citizens, are in favour of the proposed alteration. The entire Native community hails the change with gratitude. Our Native friends must lose no time in demonstrating their gratitude and strengthening the hands of Government.

Observes that the outcry raised by the Europeans of Bengal against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill is unreasonable and uncalled for.

After alluding to the opinions of high officials consulted by the Government of India on the subject of the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates, the Lok Mitrá (72) of the 25th February observes that the most formidable argument that the opponents of the measure have yet thought of is that a Native Magistrate, however enlightened and well educated, is apt to be led away by race feeling, and that in the case of a white man before him the chances are that justice would miscarry. The Native might fairly retort by saying that in the administration of justice the European Magistrate is equally likely to be influenced by race feeling as is alleged against his own countrymen. Nay, he will be prepared to prove his assertion by a number of instances that have actually occurred. Will those who are opposed to the proposed alteration in the Criminal Procedure Code adduce facts for the purposes of arriving at a fair conclusion—how far a Native Magistrate is led away by race feeling when a European delinquent is before him, and vice versâ? It is feared that if the files of Magistrates for the last fifteen years be ransacked, the European Magistrate will be found the defaulter more frequently than the Native in this respect. But this is not all. It has been said in one of the recent issues of the Lok Mitrâ that there is a certain class of Anglo-Indians, both officials and non-officials, who are more or less imbued with the idea that Englishmen in India are heaven-born, and that because the British rule India they must have special privileges, forgetting all the while that their gracious sovereign has publicly declared on great political occasions by means of solemn proclamations that her subjects, whether black or white, are to enjoy equal privileges, that they are equal in the eyes of the law, and that no distinction of race or creed is to be observed. Apart from the intolerance of opinion and illiberality of mind disclosed in the views of Sir James Stephen, not to say anything of their utterly unstatesmanlike character, there is one fallacy involved in the argument that must needs be pointed out. The analogy urged by Sir James is questionable. Because there is a Hindu law and there is a Mahomedan law, it is urged, why should there not be an English law for Englishmen? The speaker forgot the fact that goes to vitiate the very foundation of this sort of reasoning. The Hindu law has existed for centuries. When the Mahomedans became rulers of India they found that the law had been in practice for ages. Intolerant and bigoted as they were, they discovered with the instinct of the true statesman that for the peace and contentment of the population of so vast a country it was prudent that their social relations should undergo no violent disturbance. In the recognition of the important fact lay the seed of tolerably peaceful government. When the British conquered India and began to organize the empire, the very first fact recognized by them was the maintenance more or less of the social and religious institutions of the country. The people were to be governed in consonance with their feelings. And the wise administrators of the day solemnly promised that the social usages which had regulated the conduct in life of their ancestors should undergo no alteration. This recognition was the foundation of orderly government. But as time wore on and the people got accustomed to British rule, and as social usages led to legal disputes, it was found necessary to legalise such usages. Now had the rulers from their very establishment in the country adopted another rule of government nobody would have blamed them. They might have from the beginning proclaimed that they would reserve one code of laws for Englishmen and another for Natives, and nobody would have objected. The people would have then passively submitted to such a mode of government. Whether it would have long continued in practice it is not necessary here to discuss. The Government adopted a different policy—a policy truly statesmanlike and fully in harmony with the genius of British civilization. Englishmen were made subject, alike with Natives, to the laws of the realm. They were not allowed any great extra privileges as belonging to the ruling race. Nay, in more than one proclamation the Government has defined its duties towards its subjects. And if in the true spirit of such proclamations it now repairs what has long been considered an anomaly, why should there be such a hue and cry? The result of having extra privileges has been very well seen in the case of the foreign administration of Egypt during the last few years. And yet there is a class of Englishmen who are not tired of dinning in our ears that as they belong to the ruling race they must be dealt with differently from the children of the soil. The fact is, the official classes and others who agree with them fancy, as Colonel Osborn pertinently remarks, that they divine with unerring sagacity exactly what is best for the imbeciles (as all Natives are alleged by the heaven-born bureaucrats), and in the execution of their plans exhibit the same consummate sagacity as in their original conception. The miraculous, expelled from every other part of the habitable globe, has securely established itself in India and is daily performing prodigies in the interests of the British rule. Those who are infatuated enough to take credit for performing prodigies of administrative work are the very persons who attribute lack of mental capacity and race feeling to Natives. And so in the interests of justice and humanity they are shut out from all control in the regulation of their own destinies. It is this class of persons who have now caught the ears of the British public and are trying might and main to prevent Government from allowing Natives the control in the regulation of their own destinies. But the cry is hollow. Sir J. Stephen's views on the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates are well known. Those who are opposed to Mr. Ilbert's amendment have brought forward the same arguments with such wearisome iteration that it is fair to pit against such the views expressed by Macaulay in his memorable minute fifty years ago on the passing of the amendment of the Charter of 1813 regarding Sadar Courts. At the time there was an opposition similar to the one now raised by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. It is to be regretted that the same arguments and tactics should be repeated especially when India has made immense progress during the half century that has elapsed since the indictment of Macaulay's minute. The present opposition by the Bengal Chamber is quite unworthy of a body representing British merchants. Further it is forgotten that even when Mr. Ilbert's amendment is passed, there will be enough safeguards for the protection of the privileges of the British subject here. He has the right of appeal in all cases from the decision of the Magistrate. He can be tried by a mixed jury of British and Americans. Thirdly, the privileges under the Habeas Corpus Act are for him fully maintained. What more can he want? Besides the oppositionists forget that Natives do not consider that Mr. Ilbert has done enough to remove the anomaly. They think that if the anomaly is at all to be fairly removed all Deputy Magistrates of the first class should have the same jurisdiction. So that after all the cry raised is simply irrational and uncalled for. It is to be hoped that Lord Ripon and his colleagues will not be slow to take the present agitation for what it may be worth. As the cry of the seditious character generally of the vernacular press proved false, so this new cry set up by a certain class of Anglo-Indians, officials and non-officials, will also prove false. Time alone is wanted to prove its falsity.

Some remarks on the opposition of Europeans against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In a paragraph headed "The Jurisdiction Bill," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 26th February says:—The opposition is growing stronger and affords by no means a singular example of the length to which minds professing to be educated are likely to go under the influence of silly prejudices. A public meeting of the local Europeans was held at Madras, a meeting of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce was held at Calcutta, and the European community of Bombay are invited to join this movement against authority. Some one has even asked the volunteers of Calcutta to resign as a sign of protest against the principle of the Bill. We need not care to inquire whether this is setting a good example of loyalty. But for the present it is enough to suggest that Government will not lose much by such exhibitions of short-sighted folly. A contemporary argues that the European has as much right to be exempted from trial by a Native as a Native lady of rank has a right to be exempted from appearance in Courts of Justice. But the writer forgets that the two cases are not similar. No educated Native lady would claim exemption from appearance in Courts of Justice, and the privilege is accorded to Native ladies of rank because the Natives as a class have not yet risen to that level whence they can see that such exemptions are foolish. The exemption is meant for an illiterate class. Do the Europeans envy that appellation? We should think not. Where the prejudices of a particular community are to be consulted, the first question is—is the community so uneducated that it can never be made to see that its prejudices are foolish? A Vaishnava Mahárája was two years ago convicted of an offence and put in jail. His followers claimed certain rights on his behalf, but they were not granted. And what was said at the time of these followers? They were laughed at as a class of misguided and senseless men. We do not see any distinction between their conduct and the conduct of those who wish to oppose the Jurisdiction Bill.

Says that there is no cause whatever for the outcry raised by the Europeans of Bengal against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 2nd March regrets that the public meeting of Europeans held at Calcutta on the 28th February to protest against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill should have considered themselves truthful and of angelic disposition and denounced the natives of India as untruthful, accustomed to uttering false evidence and given to bringing false accusations. The London Times stated the other day that the very climate of India induces falsehood in human beings; and if this be so, that climate must have produced its bad effect on Europeans also, and must have brought them to the same state as the Natives are alleged to be in. The outcry raised against the Bill is based upon the alleged untruthfulness and falsity of the Native character, but discreet persons properly understand the flimsiness of the excuse and give no weight whatever to the complaint made by the Europeans of Bengal. The Secretary and the Under Secretary of State as well as other high officials are in favour of the Bill, and this fact ought to induce the Natives not to mind the abuse showered upon them by the opposers of the Bill in Bengal. Properly speaking, Mr. Ilbert's Bill does not contemplate making important changes in the existing state of things so as to give the Europeans genuine cause of complaint. There is no chance whatever of the rights and privileges enjoyed by Europeans on account of favourable laws concerning them being infringed or curtailed. As pointed out by the Amrit Bazar Patrika, Magistrates and Session Judges have power to inflict upon European culprits less punishment than they can inflict upon Natives for the same offence, and Europeans enjoy more liberty in the matter of appeals against the decisions of criminal courts than Natives do in the same respects. The Native District Magistrate will have to act according to the laws, which are very favourable to Europeans, and which are not affected in the least by the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill. Thus Europeans have really no ground whatsoever for the great outcry raised by them. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (76) of the 3rd March expresses similar sentiments.]

Censures the Europeans of Bengal for opposing the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In alluding to the opposition raised by the Europeans of Bengal to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Bombay Chronicle (69) of the 25th February observes that the outcry raised against the measure is most unreasonable. The opposers ignore reason and political expediency, which ought to guide the conduct of Government, and desire that the State should respect their dictation based as it is on pride of race and selfish sentiments. While regretting this circumstance the natives of India trust that Government will prove equal to the occasion and act as becomes its dignity and duty. [The Deshi Mitrá (85) of the 1st March, in referring to the threatened resignation of the volunteers, sarcastically observes that they should resign and thus compel the Viceroy to give up the Bill.]

Criticisms on the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 26th February, in an article headed "The Jurisdiction Bill," among other things says:—Mr. Gupta in his note has made a rather unwarrantable distinction between members of the competition Civil Service as distinguished from those of the Native Civil Service by nomination, and in consequence of this difference Mr. Gupta limits his demand in favour of those Native Civil Servants only who hold the office of a District Magistrate or a Sessions Judge. As a consequence of this limited demand of Mr. Gupta the prevailing official opinion has declared itself in favour of the claims of the members of the competitive Civil Service only, and in the majority of cases only in respect of the offices of District Magistrates and Sessions Judges. But we apprehend there is no sufficient reason to make any distinctions of that sort. We have all along opposed the principle of the nomination system, but since it has found favour with Government and Government declared that the rights and privileges of this latter class of Civil Servants will be precisely the same as those of the Covenanted Civil Service, and since the choice of Government is, at least in theory, to fall on those only who are qualified by their education and social status to fill the high offices of the service, we believe it will not be just or proper to deny to the members of the nomination Civil Service those coveted privileges which are proposed to be extended to those of the competitive service. If the men are not fit to exercise those powers they had better not be appointed to the offices. Let only such men and no others as are so fit be appointed, and once appointed let them not look small in the eyes of the people in comparison with their European colleagues. The true principle seems to be that laid down by Sir Charles Aitchison that personal fitness and not race or service distinctions ought to govern the granting of these powers. In removing one anomaly and one set of invidious distinctions letnot a second anomaly or another set of distinctions be created. The privilege of trying European British subjects should be extended to all Native Magistrates of a specified class coming from whatever service. The limitation as to District Magistrates and Sessions Judges also seems to be needless. The classes of Magistrates proposed in the Amendment Bill may well be trusted to exercise the powers judiciously. Another way of securing the desired end and at the same time guarding against abuse is to make the exercise of jurisdiction over European British subjects one of the additional powers mentioned in Schedule IV. of Act X. of 1882 with which a Magistrate of the first class or a Sub-divisional Magistrate may be invested by the Local Government. In that case only such Magistrates of whatever race as are deemed by the Local Government competent to exercise the power will be invested with it; and it will always be in the power of the Local Government to prevent any abuse by cancelling the power. The conferring of the power on certain individuals will be felt as a favour or partiality when the power is made attainable by all on certain conditions of personal fitness. The real objection is one of sentiment. But we trust in these days of enlightenment mere sentimental objections will not be allowed to outweigh the considerations of moral right and justice. The maudlin fears about race friction and exasperation are, we think, unfounded. It is the expression of such fears by high officers and the countenance of respectable journals to such opinions which may, we apprehend, give rise to such sentiments in the lower orders of Britons, but once Government declare their wishes and lay down the law we do not think there will be any opposition from, or any fealing of exasperation in, the non-official European classes. In fact the submission of the European public to the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates in the Presidency towns is hardly due to any mental process such as is attributed to them by the apologists of the exclusive jurisdiction. The public, whether European or Native, are perforce obliged to submit to the jurisdiction of the Magistrates because Government have invested the Magistrates with jurisdiction over the public. Similarly in the mofussil the public will submit to the law laid down by Government. For some time, while the recollection of this controversy is fresh in the minds of the European public, some of the lower orders of Britons may feel it undignified to have to be tried by a Native Magistrate; but that indignity they can well avoid by committing no offence within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. As for the higher orders, the enlightened mercantile classes for instance, they will be supremely indifferent as to who tries their criminals so long as they get a fair trial, and their enlightenment will guard them against the fear of an unfair trial at the hands of a Native Magistrate. They will, we trust, follow the advice of the Bombay Gazette and regard the matter philosophically.

Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill and remarks in connection therewith.

The Shiváji (57) of the 23rd February, in an article headed "Dark Magistrates and White Culprits," observes that many of the highest officials in India are evidently in favour of investing Native Magistrates of a certain class with the power of trying European criminals. The objections which have been raised against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill are neither sound nor cogent. The fear that Europeans will be unjustly convicted if Native Magistrates are invested with power to try them is most absurd. They are more likely to be treated leniently than otherwise. By passing the present Bill an invidious distinction which is the cause of much dissatisfaction among Natives will be done away with, and all Magistrates and Judges will be put on a footing of perfect equality. It is most absurd that a Judge who is empowered to pass a sentence of two years on a Native should be debarred from inflicting a punishment of not more than three months on a European. The moment a Civilian becomes an Assistant Sessions Judge he is considered qualified to try any Native, but he is not deemed fit to sit in judgment on a European until he has served an appreticeship in his office for three years.

Again a Sessions Judge has the power to sentence a Native to death, but he has no authority to inflict a punishment of more than one year on a European criminal. And in both these cases the trying Judges must be themselves of pure European descent. The peculiar privileges which the Europeans enjoy are inconsistent with the maxim that all persons are equal before the law. The assertion that the Magistrates and Judges who are deemed competent to try Natives are not competent to try Europeans would seem to indicate that Europeans possess an amount of cunning which can only be detected by experienced Judges. This argument is however of not much value because most of the European culprits who have been tried in the High Courts have been acquitted. If European Magistrates and Judges are unfit to be entrusted with power to try their own countrymen, they are much more unfit to judge Natives. A European Civilian Magistrate should be first trained to try cases in which European culprits are involved, and after serving an apprenticeship in this manner he should then be invested with power over Natives. In the trial of Europeans the Judge or Magistrate should have the assistance of a Native jury, whose opinion should be considered final and binding. This is the only proper way of doing justice to Europeans. The continuation of the special privileges which European culprits enjoy will increase the dissatisfaction which prevails among Natives. The existence of such a state of things is damaging to the British Government. [The Arunodayă (14) of the 25th February in writing upon the same subject expresses similar sentiments.]

Points out the injustice of the claim preferred by English men that they should not be tried by Native Judges.

The Rást Goftár (103) of the 25th February observes that the Europeans who object to being tried by Native Judges assert that it is their birth-right that they should be tried by their own countrymen, and that this privilege is conferred on them by the British laws. They also speak of enjoying this right not only in their own country but also in foreign lands, but it ought to be remembered that they dare not claim this privilege in any other foreign country except India. The impropriety of their demand is best laid bare by the questions,—if the Europeans should be tried by Europeans only, why should not Natives be tried by Natives alone? If Europeans ought not to be tried by Native Judges, then why should Natives be tried by European Judges? Are Englishmen alone British subjects and are no Natives also the subjects of the British Crown? Are the British laws applicable to Englishmen alone and not to Natives? The question of jurisdiction is raised on no other ground than that Englishmen are fair skinned and Natives dark skinned. The ability of Natives to dispense justice is not questioned, while they are credited with disability simply because they are Natives. If this position is allowed, how can Englishmen be permitted to try Natives simply because they are Englishmen? If Englishmen are to have the privilege of being tried by their countrymen alone, there is no reason why the same concession should be refused to Natives. And if Natives get the privilege, the number of European Judges will have to be reduced and that of Native Judges will have to be increased. But the Englishmen desire to enjoy a right which they would not grant to Natives. The British law however has no authority to make such limited concession. Englishmen should either be prepared to give Natives the right which they claim, or should remain contented with the rights enjoyed by the latter. Englishmen are not superior to Natives because the former are fairer than the latter. The injustice of the demand made by Europeans will be seen by them when Natives prefer a similar claim. [The Kaisar-i-Hind (75), the Gujaráti (89) and the Gujarát Mitră (70) of the same date, the Nyáyă Prakásh (101) of the 26th and the Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 27th February and the Hitechhu (71) of Ahmedabad of the 1st March express somewhat similar sentiments.]

Condemns the opposition raised by the London Times to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill as uncalled for.

The Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 1st March notices the telegram received by the London Times from its Calcutta correspondent about the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill and the sentiments expressed on it by the Times. The Samáchár condemns the telegram as not only uncalled for but ridiculous, and denies the wholesale charge of untruthfulness brought against Native witnesses by the correspondent. It is also considerably surprised to see that the leading journal of England should have adopted the views of its correspondent without due consideration. [The Dátardun (84) of the same date expresses sentiments somewhat similar to the above.]

Advises the political associations to hold public meetings in every city and town in order to give support to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In alluding to the opposition raised by Europeans in different parts of India to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Rást Goftár (103) of the 25th February expresses its gratitude at the support given to the measure by most of the high officials. The opposers have raised a loud outcry, and are resolved to carry their grievance to Parliament if necessary. They are holding large meetings in different parts of the country in order to produce some effect on the minds of the authorities. Under these circumstances the political associations should hold meetings of Natives in every city and town in order to give support to the proceedings of the Viceroy, who has so praiseworthily tried to remove from the statute-book the invidious distinction made between the fair and the dark skins. [The Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 26th, the Vartmán Sár (113) of the 27th February, and the Jáme Jamshed (93) of the 3rd March express similar sentiments.]

Railways.

A complaint regarding the arbitrary conduct of the station master at Limbdi.

The Samsher Báhádur (104) of the 23rd February complains of the arbitrary conduct of the station master at Limbdi. When a certain person applied to the station master for a platform pass, he replied that he had none and that he would issue none. The applicant represented that several persons were on the platform without any pass, and that he would suffer if a pass were not issued to him on payment of the necessary charges. The station master refused to issue a pass even then, and told him to take a ticket for the next station on payment of three annas. More than one complaint has reached the Samsher regarding this station master. It cannot be understood why he should not freely issue platform passes. A respectable person had sent a petition for a platform pass to the superior officer of this station master through the station master himself, but that petition was not noticed.

Native States.

Slaughter of the Maiyás by the Junágad officials and remarks in connection therewith.

With reference to the Junágad massacre, a correspondent of the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 26th February writes thus:—Although I am near Junágad I cannot vouchsafe for the truthfulness of the reports which I receive daily about the Maiya tragedy. Lately I had been to Junágad, where I have heard most horrible reports about the cruelty of the Junágad police towards the Maiyás. It is said and generally believed that the number of the Maiyás slain is much more than that given out in the newspapers, that is to say, most of the people were slain who had taken refuge in the Kanada hill, and only a few of them escaped the general massacre. The number of the Maiyás slain is very strongly believed to be between 150 and 175. There is some truth in this rumour; at least the number of the slain given out by Junágad is utterly wrong. If a new census of the surviving Maiyás were taken and compared with the last census of them, the truth of the above fact will be quite clear. People say that the poor fellows had no weapons with them, neither had they any intention of fighting with Junágad. When the Junágad police numbering about 800 strong suddenly and without giving previous notice of their intention climbed up the hill by three different ways, they found that the Maiyás had no weapons, and they took this opportunity of slaying all of them by swords without having regard for sex or age. The Maiyás entreated the police jamádár not to slay them but to take them prisoners, but this had no effect on the mind of the young jamádár, who was bent upon achieving renown by showing great valour in slaying such a large number of people. The other rumour is that the matchlocks and swords, which it is said by Junágad belonged to the Maiyás and were taken when the fight was over, did not in reality belong to the Maiyás, but that they were brought from Junágad itself and were falsely given out as belonging to the Maiyás. How far this is true cannot be said, but I am quite sure that the truth will never come out under the present circumstances, because the foreigners and the ruling people have no idea of Native intrigues, and they have no opportunity, for which however they don't care, of mingling with the Native community and knowing the facts.

Makes some remarks in connection with the slaughter of the Maiyás in the Junágad State.

A correspondent of the Gujaráti (89) of the 25th February states that in the State of Junágad many outlaws have been killed since the year 1862, and mentions their names, observing at the same time that in none of these cases was any enquiry made. The people of Káthiáwár believe that a strict enquiry will not be made into the recent slaughter of the Maiyás. The Political Agent has pitched his camp at Bilkha, and all information about his proceedings is promptly communicated to the Junágad authorities. He is supplied with every necessary article, and this hospitality is likely to mislead him into treating the doings of the Junágad officials leniently, and the State will, it is believed, escape the censure it deserves. Eighty-one Maiyás are said to have been killed, but nearly one hundred and seventy-five are believed to be missing. More corpses are gradually discovered. The Agent being favourable to the State it was no wonder that the Secretary of State for India decided without hearing the Maiyás that the State ought to levy the Sántivero tax. In the case of the Maiyás of Mithápor in the Jetpur State an ex parte decision was passed on 14th December 1876, and Junágad believes that this decision supports its claim, but no attention has been paid to the fact that the Chokichakri tax was abolished in 1808. Formerly the Maiyás went into outlawry for the same reason and asked redress from the Political Agent, who however referred them to the Junágad authorities. But it need not be said what justice would be obtained by the Maiyás from them. The claim of the Maiyás is just, and Junágad has no right to impose a tax on them as they have been exempted from all taxes though false reasons are advanced for their reimposition. If the political authorities had given Junágad permission to apprehend the Maiya outlaws by every means, an enquiry ought to be made about that step, since it was wrong to give such permission. A private subscription has been raised at Rájkot for representing the grievances of the Maiyás, and two barristers and a vakil have been retained.

Comments in connection with the massacre of the Maiyás at Junágad.

The Samsher Báhádur (104) of the 23rd February says that Government ought to keep an eye on the conduct of Báhádurkhánji, the new Nawáb of Junágad, as he has begun to behave in the bad way he used to behave before coming to the throne. As long as Diwán Salehindi and Vazir Bávdin are in office, the people of Junágad will not be happy. These Mahomedan officers are ignorant of the ways of government. The State harasses the girásiás, and either massacres them as outlaws or keeps them incarcerated in prison for life and deprives them of their girás. It is wrong for Government to allow Native States to oppress their subjects in this way. Sálehindi and Bávdin contrived to deprive the Maiyás of their girás and gave their opposition the shape of rebellion, misused their own authority, and mercilessly killed 75 Maiyás. If Government does not appoint an independent commission to investigate the matter and punish the Nawáb and the authorities of Junágad, there will be no wonder if a similar oppression is exercised on their people by other Native States. As the advisers of Báhádurkhán have procured for him the throne though he had no right to it, he enjoys himself, while others really rule and plunder the State. The Samsher has heard on good authority that more than 75 Maiyás have been killed, but the dead bodies have been surreptitiously disposed of by the Junágad State. The wife of Amra and other Maiyás have complained to the Political Agent, but justice cannot be expected save through the kindness of the Supreme Government. When the Viceroy made inquiries by telegram regarding the accident in a wool-cleaning factory at Bombay by which 23 lives were lost, why does he not inquire after this painful event? [The Ahmedabad

Samáchar (75) of the 28th February remarks that it is said that the heads of the massacred Maiyás were cut off from the trunks by the Junágad police and were carried in a cart to Junágad. The relatives of the Maiyás who were killed followed the cart containing the heads, which were subjected to great insult by the police. The police were as glad as if they had achieved a great triumph and were to be rewarded for it. The scene seemed like that of the fanatic Mussalmáns taking revenge on the Hindus. It is said that Sálehindi and Bávdinbhái had made arrangements for rewarding the police, but on the interference of the Diwán the idea was given up. A searching enquiry ought to be made into the matter and the parties concerned should be duly punished.]

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
10*th March* 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Agricultural bank: A prayer for the establishment of an — in the Kaira District 6
Anglo-Indian journalism: Eccentricities of 7
Appointments: Filling up of — of clerks and kárkuns in the Ahmednagar District by men from the Kolába District 7
Attacks of jackals: A complaint regarding the — on human beings in certain villages of the petty division of Guhágar in the Ratnágiri District... 7
Bombay Town Council: Fees paid to Government officials serving on the — should be credited to Government 5
Hyderabad Regency: Approval of the nomination of the 5
Inspector of Registration: Disapproval of the creation of the office of an — for the Kánarese Districts... 6
Lady doctors for Bombay: Disapproval of the importation of:—
The Indu Prakásh 7
The Mahrátta 8
Do. do. A recommendation for the training of Native ladies as medical practitioners 9
Mhowra Bill Commission: Replies to some of the questions issued by the 6
National Anthem: Disapproval of the project of getting the — translated into the vernaculars of India 9
Native loyalty: Loyalty of the natives of India to the British Government... 3
Post: Delay in the delivery of the — at Goregaon in the Thána District. 7
Public utterances: Hearty approval of the speech delivered by Sir James Fergusson at Kolhápur 5
Public Works Department: Gratitude for the resolution of the Government of India for the employment of graduates of the Indian Civil Engineering Colleges in the 5
Term of office: Approval of the extension of the — to Lord Ripon:—
The Bombay Chronicle 4
The Lok Mitrá 5
Do. Reasons for the prayer for the extension of the — to Lord Ripon 3

PART II.—The coming Budget—

Budget: Remarks in connection with the coming:—
The Indian Spectator 9
The Lok Mitrá 11

PART III.—Legislation—

Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill: A censure on the Europeans of Bengal for their opposition to the... 16
Do. do. A condemnation of the opposition raised by the London Times to the 18
Do. do. An advice to the different political associations to hold public meetings in every city and town to give support to the... 19
Do. do. A wish for the non-withdrawal of the 12
Do. do. Criticisms on the 16
Do. do. Disapproval of the passing of the... 12
Do. do. Injustice of the claim preferred by Europeans that they should not be tried by Native Magistrates... 18

		Page.
PART III.—Legislation (continued)—
Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill: Remarks in connection with the ...		17
Do.	do. Remarks on the opposition of Europeans to the	15
Do.	do. The non-existence of any cause whatever for the outcry raised by the Europeans of Bengal against the	16
Do.	do. Unreasonableness of the outcry raised by the Europeans of Bengal against the	13
PART IV.—Railways—
Bhávnagar-Gondal Railway: A complaint regarding the arbitrary conduct of the station master at Limbdi		19
PART V.—Native States—
Junágad: Slaughter of the Maiyás: Remarks in connection with the:—
The Gujarâti		20
The Indu Prakásh		19
The Samsher Bahádur		21

RECEIVED
2 APR 83
VIA BRINDISI

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 10th March 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Dín Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	925
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do.	600
12	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do.	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
20	„ Daivadnyă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
21	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Do.	Do.	500
22	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly	425
23	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
24	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
25	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
26	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
27	„ Hitechhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
28	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
29	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
30	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
31	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*32	„ Karnátak Mitră[4]	Belgaum	Do.	200
33	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	3,500
34	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
35	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
36	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
37	„ Mahárashtră Hitechhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
38	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
39	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
40	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
41	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
42	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly	700
43	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
44	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
45	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
46	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	250
47	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily	350
*48	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
49	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*50	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
51	„ Saddharm Díp	Alíbág	Do.	600
52	„ Satyă Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly	243
53	„ Satyă Sadan	Alíbág	Weekly	400
54	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
55	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly	275
*56	„ Sharabh	Alíbág	Weekly	200
57	„ Shiváji[3]	Poona	Do.	200
58	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*59	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
60	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
61	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

[1] Maráthi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles.
[4] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
62	The Swadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
63	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly ...	250
64	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do. ...	175
65	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do. ...	200
66	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do. ...	300
*67	„ Vinod	Poona	Do. ...	200
68	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly ...	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*69	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly ...	200
70	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do. ...	400
71	„ Hitechhu	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	349
72	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	725
73	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do. ...	600
74	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do. ...	137
	GUJARA'TI.
75	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly ...	25
76	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily ...	750
77	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly ...	304
78	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do. ...	500
79	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly ...	500
80	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily ...	950
81	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly ...	700
82	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do. ...	60
83	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	600
84	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly ...	525
85	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do. ...	1,000
*86	„ Dnyán Prasárak	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	200
87	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do. ...	400
88	„ Fursad	Do.	Do. ...	100
89	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly ...	400
*90	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly ...	200
91	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do. ...	659
*92	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	200
93	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily ...	525
94	„ Kaira Vartmán	Kaira	Weekly ...	115
*95	„ Kaisar-i-Hind	Bombay	Do. ...	200
96	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	700
97	„ Kusum Guchhá	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	350
98	„ Nágar Udayá	Do.	Do. ...	300
99	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly ...	200
100	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly ...	381
101	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly ...	200
102	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do. ...	225
103	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do. ...	1,814
104	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	200
105	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	400
*106	„ Sauráshtrá Darpan	Junágad	Monthly ...	200
107	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do. ...	533
*108	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do. ...	200
109	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do. ...	408
110	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár	Umreth	Fortnightly..	62
*111	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
112	„ Vartmán Sár	Surat	Weekly ...	200
113	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly ...	738
114	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	300
115	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly ...	500
	KA'NARESE.
116	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	150
*117	„ Karnátak Vritt	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
	URDU.
*118	The Altáf	Bombay	Weekly ...	200
*119	„ Armagán	Do.	Do. ...	200
*120	„ Dabdabe Islám[5]	Do.	Do. ...	200
121	„ Khayir Kháhe Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly .	300
122	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly ...	160
*123	„ Muzhire Shawkatul Islám	Do.	Do. ...	200
	PERSIAN.
124	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly ...	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

[5] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases, an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out; and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well-known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Probable abolition of the opium revenue and remarks in connection therewith.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 4th March, in a paragraph headed "Probable Abolition of the Opium Revenue," says:—It is stated, on what authority we do not know, that definite arrangements have been made to let go the above source of revenue, and that the Supreme Government is prepared to make good the loss. If the statement be true, the Indian tax-payer must make up his mind loyally to meet some new scheme of additional taxation. But we cannot say that Major Baring is unaware that taxation in this country has reached its utmost limit, and that it is incapable of any further extension. About seven krors are annually raised from this source, and even the extension of the license tax to the professional classes or the imposition of an income tax cannot fill up the gap made by such abolition. If the Government thinks that its financial position is now strong, questions such as the permanent settlement of land revenue, the abolition of the license tax, and other questions which still hang fire, claim prior attention. Charity must begin at home, and Government cannot afford to be generous at the expense of its own ill-provided subjects.

A foolish canard about the dissolution of the British Empire.

The Jagan Mitrá (30) of the 5th March publishes in its columns the contents written on a post card received by it on the 26th February last. From the post mark the card appears to have been sent from Sángli and is addressed to one Govind Krishna Gháte at the Jagan Mitrá press in Ratnágiri. The contents of the card are as follows:—"On the 22nd December last the Queen died and the dissolution of her empire has commenced from that date. The Queen was killed by the incantations uttered by the son of Nána Sáheb Peshwa, who headed the rebellion in 1857 and ripped open pregnant English women in Poona. Both Nána Sáheb and his son Pándurang Sáheb are assisted by the Turks, in whose country they are living. Nána Sáheb Peshwa will ultimately triumph." In commenting upon the above, the editor of the Jagan Mitrá says that he does not know any person of the name of Govind Krishna Gháte. He is evidently a mythical person. From the absurd contents of the card, the writer of it must be an old fashioned Bráhman Bhat who has gone quite mad.

Gambling at cards in Sholápur.

A correspondent of the Poona Vaibhav (46) of the 4th March states that the passion for gambling at cards has very much increased of late in Sholápur. Groups of these gamblers carry on their vocation on the public roads, and it is said that they annoy and plunder passers-by. It is also alleged that the police connive at the doings of these people, and even lend them their active support. It is to be hoped that the chief constable of Sholápur will put down gambling.

Disapproves of the printing of forms and other papers required by zilla local fund committees and municipalities at the Government Central Press.

The Hitechhu (71) of Ahmedabad of the 8th March, in an article headed "The advantage to the people of retaining the Collector as President of Local Committees!!" observes that the Bombay Government has several reasons in acting niggardly in the matter of the scheme of local self-government. The chief ground appears to be the removal of any obstacle in the way of Government officials, who have at present the sole management of the local funds and municipal works according to their choice. The forms and other papers required by the zilla local fund committees were until now printed in private presses within the Collectorate. But as the Collectors have been recommended by Government to get them printed at the Government Central Press, they are printed at the latter press. The charges are higher than those that would have to be paid if the work were done in the local presses. When Lord Ripon is devising means for the encouragement of Native industries, the Bombay Government is trying to derive more income from the Central Press and to employ Europeans in it on large salaries. But how can this be possible when the municipal commissioners are elected by the people? Government may do anything it likes for its benefit, but when it tries to deprive others of their rights, then its action becomes objectionable. Though the local funds and the municipal revenues are the people's money, it is wonderful that Government should order the printing of the forms required by these departments at the Central Press. It is still more wonderful that Government officials should carry out the order without consulting the managing committees. The Chairman of the Ahmedabad Municipality has now, as recommended by Government, written to the Central Press to supply him with the necessary forms. The treasury of the local municipality is made up of the people's money, and it must be used for the benefit of the people of Ahmedabad. If the charges are higher in Ahmedabad, the work may well be done by outsiders. No advantage will result to the country as long as the management of local funds and municipalities is not entrusted to the people.

Complains of the injustice of making India pay a portion of the expenses of the Egyptian War.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 4th March says:—We have all opposed the movement of saddling India with any part of the cost of the Egyptian Expedition. The war was admittedly undertaken for Imperial purposes and India is unjustly made to suffer for it. Moreover, the state of the Indian finances has become again very embarrassing, and India at such a moment cannot afford to bear such a heavy drain. By way of lightening the burden, Government will, it is hoped, ask Parliament to contribute half a million sterling to meet the Indian charges. We do not as yet know the grounds on which Government is going to ask for the contribution. But we are sure that the real reasons will never be put forward and that the British Parliament will be asked to vote the money as a matter of pure charity. We see no reason why we should, at least in this instance, be made to depend upon the charity of England. Truly speaking the whole cost ought to be borne by England. But if England is not going to bear it alone, why not make the colonies in the East pay a part of it? England knows full that the representative assemblies of the colonies would scrutinize the demand minutely before voting a farthing towards the expenses. That England fears the scrutiny is evident from its inexplicable silence from the first, though some of its leading politicians have proposed and supported the measure strongly. India has no representative body and can raise no voice against such injustice.

Says that India ought not to bear any cost of the Indian contingent of the Egyptian Expedition.

The Lok Mitrá (72) of the 4th March states that a contribution of half a million sterling is to be made by England towards the cost of the expeditionary force sent out from India to Egypt. The Government, it seems, do not venture to ask for more, though on what principle of justice or equity England can insist upon India bearing any share of the expenses of the Egyptian War it is difficult to say. The theory that the war was the means of averting the danger to the safety of the Canal, which is the highway of commerce between India and Europe, has been already exploded. Not only did the war not avert any such danger, but the Canal was never threatened. Arabi's little war was only a war against European control and interference; and it is a little unfair that India should be made to bear any share of the responsibilities involved in the Joint Control. India is already threatened with a deficit, which is likely to drive the Finance Minister to despair, and it will surely not lighten her troubles by saddling her with at least £640,000 as her contribution to the cost of the war. The Indian Association should protest against this unjust burden, and avert a loss which under her present financial circumstances India can ill afford to bear. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (76) of the 9th and the Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 8th March express somewhat similar sentiments.]

A postal complaint.

The Panchánan (44) of the 4th March says that the post office at Málvan is inconveniently situated. It is at present located at one end of the town. It would be well if it were brought near the bazár or some other place in the middle of the town. If this suggestion cannot be carried out, then another post office should be opened in the midst of Málvan for the convenience of its inhabitants. Since the reduction of the Málvan post office to the grade of a sub-post office, much unnecessary delay occurs in the delivery of letters. This could be avoided by raising its status to that of a head post office.

Russian advance in Central Asia.

The Lok Mitrá (72) of the 4th March observes that it is reassuring to learn from the Pioneer that the attention of England has been attracted towards the advance of Russia in Central Asia and that Englishmen have decided to watch her progress in that direction. There was a time when any serious reference to this danger was sure to be branded with the name of Russophobia; but a very short time has served to bring the question into the range of practical politics, and even the most hopeful of statesmen now approach the subject with at least a sincere desire to discuss it in a serious spirit. It is even a matter for congratulation in one sense that an uneasy feeling pervades the Foreign Office with regard to the object of these evidently well designed manœuvres, as the natural outcome of this feeling has been the mission of Mr. A. C. Stephen, of the British Legation at Teheran in the direction of Khorasan to find out the exact truth about the state of affairs on the Persian frontier. It is now an open secret that every day brings the Russian battalions more and more into the heart of the Turkoman regions and nearer to the borders of Persia; but what remains to be known is probably of vastly greater importance than what has been known. Russia would be false to her traditions and would belie her genius for dissimulation if the true aims of her policy and the real extent of her machinations could be so easily known as to be liable to speedy and timely counteraction. It is a part of her tactics to disparage her own exploits, and to create in her rivals and neighbours that indifferentism which enables her to promote her purpose without molestation or embarrassing scrutiny. But the time has now really arrived when an indifferent attitude is the worst attitude to hold towards the proceedings of the Russian emissaries of the Czar in Central Asia. Merv is now fairly within their grasp, their progress is steady in the direction of the Persian frontier, and they are well on the highway to Herat. It is therefore not a moment too late that Russia's insidious action should be jealously watched, so that without precipitating matters England may be prepared for more active measures than mere watchfulness when the plans of the Russians can no longer be disguised. It is to be hoped that the conflict which has been predicted by many as inevitable is still far distant, but when the emergency arrives, however distant it may now be, nothing will be more useful than the safeguards and experience now provided and obtained. The first and most obvious step towards this preparedness is the acquisition of reliable information as to the plans and movements of the Asiatic army corps of the Czar. In the present state of affairs it is natural that sometimes an unreasonable panic should prevail, and that more often than not the reports that reach this city have to be largely discounted. More authentic intelligence will therefore allay the natural anxiety. Success is therefore to be wished to Mr. Stephen's enterprise.

Heartily thanks Sir James Fergusson for giving assurances in his speech at Kolhápur that the British Government has no intention whatever of annexing that or any other Native State.

The Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 7th March is glad that the Governor recommended in his public utterances in the Southern Marátha Country the establishment of schools for technical education in this Presidency. Industrial education is much needed to encourage indigenous industries, which are in a very backward condition. More gratifying than the above declaration is the assurance given by His Excellency that the British Government has no intention whatever of annexing Kolhápur or any other Native State. This declaration of a fixed policy is sure to allay the fears which the inhabitants of the Deccan once wrongly entertained about the Kolhápur ráj. Sir James Fergusson has acted very wisely in giving the assurance publicly. He deserves hearty thanks for the enunciation of a principle which is to guide the future policy of Government.

Disapproves of the memorial to His Excellency the Governor which is being got up by European polo-players for

The Rást Goftár (103) of the 4th March regrets that the few European polo-players are determined to drive away from the Esplanade the large number of Native cricketers. Nearly 500 school boys play on the small piece of ground which is set apart for them. The polo-players, permission to use the ground on the Esplanade in Bombay which Native cricketers use.

who number about six or seven, want to play on the same ground for two days in the week; but the hoofs of their horses make the ground uneven and unfit for cricketing. Once a week the volunteer parade also is held on the same ground. The cricketers once complained about this to the Governor, who was kind enough to prohibit the polo-players from holding their sport on this ground. The polo-players have now prepared a memorial for submission to His Excellency, praying that they should be permitted to use the ground for their sports. This is being signed, and to show that their prayer has the support of Natives, they have obtained the signatures of Sir Jamsetji Jijibhái, Mr. Nánábhái Berámji Jijibhái, Mr. Hormasji Kharsetji Dady and other leading members of the Native community to the memorial. It is to be regretted that the latter should have joined the Europeans in this movement. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (76) of the 7th and the 9th March and the Jáme Jamshed (93) of the 10th express similar sentiments, but are gratified to learn that the Native gentlemen who signed the memorial of the polo-players have since withdrawn their signatures from it.]

Complains of illegality in a criminal trial held at Rájkot.

The Lok Mitrá (72) of the 4th March says:—It appears that a vakil of Rájkot was placed upon his trial for a criminal offence before a magistrate at the instance of Mr. Candy, who was also an important witness for the prosecution. Mr. Candy's evidence was taken in Thána, but while his testimony was allowed to have full force against the unfortunate prisoner, he was denied even the ordinary right allowed to the worst criminal to cross-examine the witness. Such a state of things in a British court of law seems almost incredible, and we would gladly believe that the report is incorrect. But we are assured that not only was the accused placed at a disadvantage by having the testimony of Mr. Candy used against him, without having had any opportunity of cross-examining him in his behalf, but he lost even the service of his counsel, who threw up his brief in disgust, because the Magistrate perversely allowed Mr. Candy's evidence to have effect, though the learned advocate protested against this oppressive proceeding. If the facts have not been exaggerated, they disclose a scandalous travesty of judicial forms, and it appears to be almost a disgrace to British administration in Káthiáwár that the poor man, thus deprived of the right of cross-examining a material witness and of the services of his advocate, should be now in jail on a sentence which seems to be a mockery of justice. We hope that in the interests of the purity of judicial administration, and respect for the English courts of law in which such vagaries are happily rare, the authorities will take notice of the case, or offer some explanation and lay the true facts of this discreditable episode before the public.

Delay in the publication of the list of voters, &c., by the Viramgám Municipality.

A correspondent of the Hitechhu (71) of Ahmedabad of the 8th March says that though the day for the election of commissioners in connection with the scheme of local self-government is approaching, it is surprising that the Viramgám Municipality has not yet published the names of persons qualified to vote. Government complains that the people do not take interest in local self-government, and yet Government itself is very niggardly in furnishing information. Is this the way to educate and prepare the people for self-government? The people of Viramgám are anxious to know the wards into which the town has been divided, the list of voters and the rules of election. The editor in a note remarks that the people of Viramgám should not be disappointed, for sorrow has spread everywhere owing to the action of officials.

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Remarks in connection with the passing of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

A correspondent of the Mahrátta (2) of the 4th March says:—We extremely regret that Lord Ripon and his Council did not foresee that the non-official Anglo-Indian community would present united opposition to the proposal to invest Native Magistrates and Judges in the mofussil with powers to try European and British-born subjects. The movement set on foot by this community in all parts of India and in England has been so far successful, that the Secretary of State for India had to state that the Bill would not be considered by the Indian Supreme Legislative Council till after November next, although he had sanctioned the introduction of the measure by the Government of India. With this change of front by the authorities in England in deference to the almost unanimous voice of the English press, and with the prospect of the agitation assuming stronger force as time rolls on, the wisdom of allowing the Bill to stand for so long a time may well be doubted. We do not of course see how the change in the law would be prejudicial to the safety of Europeans. A continuity of the possession of unjust position does not certainly convert an injustice into justice. Equality of persons of all creeds and nationalities in the sight of God which every religion including Christianity preaches, is after all no equality in the sight of the present agitators. The admission that there are many anomalies to be removed does in no way lead to the conclusion that no anomaly should be removed, and the bag and baggage policy tauntingly advised by the London Times argues that this argument is weak. But it is not the soundness or unsoundness so much as the inopportuneness of the measure at the present time that we deplore. The local self-government scheme, intended to relieve the hard-worked Indian Christians of a portion of their labours, sufficiently tested the willingness of the official bureaucracy, and the present proposal simply served as a spark to set the Anglo-Indian community on fire. In the interests of the various reforms introduced in the administration of the country during Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty, we would advise the postponement of Mr. Ilbert's Bill to a more opportune time. The co-operation of the official as well as the trading community is as essential to the proper execution of the reforms as the intelligence and enterprise of the Natives themselves. And it would be a grave political blunder if anything tending to foment class or race antagonism be allowed to be done by the Government of Lord Ripon. His Excellency must have found out by this time that his fellow-brethren of the West are not as Catholic in spirit and action as himself. But the natives of India are quite satisfied with his sincerity of purpose, and can afford to wait for more favourable times for the removal of the blot which Eugland's patriotic statesmen do not like to see. There are various other ways in which His Excellency can do a friend's work to India. He can make the Legislative Councils more representative, and can give a larger share to Natives in the executive administration of the country. He can arrest and curtail the increasing taxation of India by reconsidering the Home charges and the high rates of salary paid to the needy and hungry exiles. He can enforce the principle that there ought to be no taxation without representation. If he succeeds in doing all this, he will have done much to attach Natives to British rule, and will have gained for himself immortality here and in the United Kingdom.

Disapproves of the agitation raised by Europeans against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 5th March, in commenting upon the outcry raised by Europeans against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, observes:—The overwhelming consensus of official opinion in favour of the Bill backed as it is by the unequivocal and unmistakeable terms of the distinct pledges given in the Queen's Royal Proclamation of 1858, renders it obligatory on those who maintain the status quo to show cause why it should be maintained. Thus far the opponents of the Bill have not brought forward one single argument in support of their contentions, but have simply indulged in appeals to a base and senseless prejudice, which is always reluctant to surrender any distinction and privilege, simply because it gratifies the vanity. We have carefully read the speeches delivered in the meetings held in Calcutta and Madras. We confess we were simply disgusted by the base charges against Native Magistrates and Natives generally in which some of the speakers indulged. The writer here gives a few specimens of these base charges, and remarks:—Can anything be more senseless and ridiculous? The highest judicial authorities in the country who have a right to speak on the subject admit the high state of efficiency of the administration of justice by Native Magistrates and Judges, but we are now asked to believe that the machinery which is so efficient in one case becomes altogether inefficient when put into requisition in the other case. Are we to be asked to believe that the judicial machinery is not really efficient as it is represented to be, and that justice administered by Native Magistrates is justice in name and theory only? Again if the argument of Mr. Keswick that unless Europeans and Natives mix more freely with each other it is idle to think of investing Native Magistrates with jurisdiction over British-born subjects be once accepted, we fail to see how the inevitable and logical conclusion can be resisted that European Magistrates and Judges also must be declared incompetent to administer justice to Natives, because the former cannot pretend to any knowledge of the innate nature, mode of life, thoughts, feelings and prejudices of the latter. The truth, however, is that the alleged free intercourse between the two classes is not at all necessary; for can it be for a moment pretended that the Native Magistrates in the presidency towns mix more freely with Europeans than their colleagues in the mofussil, or that their mothers, wives, daughters and sisters mix more freely with the European fair sex than those of the mofussil Native Magistrates? Nothing of the kind takes place, and yet no complaint is made about the Native Magistrates in the presidency towns possessing jurisdiction over British-born subjects. The real question at issue is, whether or not Native Magistrates in the mofussil are competent for the performance of the duty expected of them? We should like to ask these agitators if they would consign to the flames the Queen's Proclamation of 1858, which guaranteed an equality of rights and privileges to all classes of Indian subjects. If these gentlemen, who appear to have taken leave of their senses, have any real regard for the Queen, they ought to abstain from these silly demonstrations having for their object the continuance of invidious race distinctions, which are simply incompatible with the pledges contained in the Proclamation of 1858. The European community is simply making a fool of itself by agitating for the continued enjoyment of privileges which are opposed to British instincts. Another feature of this agitation is its intemperate and rabid character. When the natives of India agitate for the redress of a grievance, they are frequently advised by the very men who are leading the present movement to be respectful and temperate in what they say and do. But is the spectacle now presented in any way calculated to impress favourably? Certainly not. In the name of decency and common sense let the leaders of the present so-called "white mutiny" follow their own precepts and set a practical example to us of moderation.

Comments on the attitude of Europeans with respect to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In an article headed "The Jurisdiction Bill," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 5th March says:—The length to which the agitation against the Jurisdiction Bill has been carried by a class of Europeans in Bengal is very much to be regretted. It would be hard to characterize it otherwise than as a ludicrous exhibition of sheer rowdyism, in which both want of self-respect and absence of good breeding figured prominently. The agitators have struck at nothing in their eagerness to oppose the principle of the Bill, and we should not be wrong in saying that short of actual attack on Natives everything has been done to vilify them. The worst passions of the human heart have been called into play by the agitators and hurled down the heads of an unoffending, loyal and meek race, merely because Her Majesty's Government in India has contemplated a change, justified in every part of it by Her Majesty's Proclamation of 1858. Barristers who make money at the expense of Natives, Christian missionaries who profess to preach to Natives the liberal tenets of Christianity, merchants who cannot get on without Natives,—all these have united to abuse a nation, and abuse it in terms that are certainly inflammatory. The Natives were reminded by the speakers that they were barbarous, that they were dishonest and miserable, that there should be one law for them and another for the Europeans because they were born liars. Meetings are held where these statements are made in language, so visibly dangerous in its nature. Newspapers are published where the statements are repeated in language still more dangerous and vilifying. From the noisy character of the agitation one would be led to suppose that the movement has assumed a gigantic shape. But such a supposition can be supported on no other ground than that Englishmen in India have as a class degenerated. Happily the facts are against the supposition. The feeling against the Bill, however venomous, is not general, and we say this expressly. For one thing it is very important to bear in mind that it was towards the beginning of April last that the Viceroy called for the opinions of the Local Governments, of the District Officers and other responsible public servants in the empire. How is it that the indignation of those who now cry down the Bill was not excited then? It was quite well known at the time that the Government of India had called for opinions. Nay even before that, Lord Ripon had at the time the New Criminal Procedure Code passed into law publicly declared his intention to take the question of jurisdiction over European British subjects in hand, to gather the opinions of the important officers in the Empire, and then propose fresh legislation on the subject should the opinions in favour of it preponderate. This pledge was given by the Viceroy to the public through their then representative in the Viceroy's Legislative Council, Mahárája Jotendra Mohan Tagore. This fact was plainly before the European community seven months ago. The Viceroy was allowed to collect opinions, and now that the opinions are found to favour an alteration in the law, a portion of the same community grows noisy and disloyal. Why were they silent these seven months? What does that silence show but that the present opposition is not quite representative in its character and is an artificially got up affair altogether? If the proposed change were really felt by all the Europeans or the majority of them in India to be dangerous, the very suggestion that opinions were going to be invited with a view to the change would have spread terror through that community, and Lord Ripon would have been asked to abstain from the course altogether when he for the first time gave expression to the intentions of his Government. Far from doing that, what did the Europeans in India do? They treated the affair with indifference at first. The majority of the European officials in India who are known to be Conservative wrote in favour of the proposed alteration. These facts, we repeat, are a telling comment on the extent and character of the furious opposition presented to the Bill at this late hour. Whether the Bill passes or not into law ultimately, the action of the infuriated party in Bengal is deeply to be deplored. Till the other day the Native press and educated Natives were taunted as haters of Europeans. The present opposition shows what absurdly low views are entertained by some Europeans about Natives. The man who dared to vilify our mothers, wives and sisters at the meeting in Calcutta ought to be thanked for giving us an idea of the feelings of the men, who gathered to hear him vilifying a race because the race was helpless. We need hardly enquire if a Native demagogue had vilified European mothers, sisters and wives in that gross fashion, he would not have been hanged for uttering language annoying to a community. As the Bombay Gazette says, no respectable European can be proud of the Calcutta meeting. To acknowledge it as a representative meeting would be to cast disrepute on the name of Englishmen. And on the other hand it would be absurd to suppose that the natives of India are cowed down by the conduct of men who have made so ridiculous an exhibition of their passions and their temper. The present agitation is perhaps calculated to inspire feelings of a different character in the minds of the Natives. No one believed that the Europeans were so much afraid of their lives in the mofussil. The Native community is now taught to think that the Europeans about it have lost all courage and are quite terribly afraid of the people of the soil. The Calcutta demagogues are responsible for this. Our course at this moment is clear. We ask our Native contemporaries not to lose their balance, to forget and forgive the rowdies of Calcutta by a careful perusal of the remarkably temperate letter of Professor Wordsworth and the articles in which the Bombay Gazette has denounced the Calcutta agitation. The Native community has been very ably defended by the learned Professor and the Gazette, and none of us could do as well or better to bring the demagogues of Calcutta to their senses. There are already indications that these demagogues are ashamed of what they have said and done. Let us all leave the matter in the hands of those who are responsible for the government of the country. In the meantime we hope the European citizens of Bombay will continue to show the exemplary equanimity which they up to now have displayed towards this question. We are proud of our urbs prima in Indis. Let us, both Europeans and Natives, justify that pride by our conduct at this moment. We do not expect the Bombay Chamber of Commerce to favour the Bill, however much we may wish it. But we certainly expect it to express its opinion in a dispassionate manner without offending race susceptibilities. Those who claim respect ought to deserve it.

Criticises the position of Europeans with reference to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Subodh Patrika (11) of the 4th March says:—The opposition to the amendment of the Criminal Procedure in relation to the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates over European criminals in the mofussil has raised up a perfect storm of feeling in Bengal. A public meeting of Europeans was held at the Calcutta Town Hall, where violent speeches were made denouncing the Natives generally and crying down the judicial administration. It was said that in the mofussil false evidence could be purchased for four annas against anyone, and that no European or his relations would be safe if the law were amended as proposed. If this wild allegation were well founded, it is a wonder that those who now make it should have waited till the present amendment was proposed before they showed they were aware of it, and this is all the more remarkable as we learn that even in the mofussil of Bengal, where all this furore has been raised, many a European accused has waived his 'birth-right,' now made so much of, of being tried by his peers and elected to have his case decided by a Native Magistrate. This would show too that in ordinary and cool moments the men who are now moving heaven and earth to prevent the highest Native Magistrates from being empowered to try Europeans adopt the very course from motives of interest they now denounce because it is proposed by the Government. But the whole movement is so much conceived in mere feeling that even existing facts are forgotten. The fact that in the presidency towns the Native Magistrates have exercised the jurisdiction of which the extension to the mofussil is so much decried is taken no notice of. All is drowned in abuse and uproar, and the result is a revival of race antagonism in Bengal. We are here luckily free from those influences. The Times of India is indeed affecting the Bengal feeling, but the Bombay Gazette is ably upholding the side of reason and sound judgment, and we are glad Professor Wordsworth has in his thoughtful way published in the latter journal a protest against the frenzied movement. Mr. Wordsworth's letter is at once plilosophical and practical. He sees a childishness of political thought in the opposition of the Europeans, which is based on their boasted superiority, and Mr. Wordsworth points out, what is also evident to every thinking Native, that the superiority which requires to be bolstered up by enactments is not real. The opposition has been taken up in England, or rather it may be said that it has been almost dictated from thence, and this makes it clear to us that it is the spirit of political party which has mainly dictated this course. Lord Ripon is a Liberal and his administration has evidently been distasteful to some of his political opponents; but hitherto nothing could be said against it with decency. The amendment of the Criminal Procedure has supplied these politicians an inflammable material in the susceptibility of the non-official European in India. In this view of the matter it becomes the duty of the Natives openly and formally to support the Government measure and to explain its bearing from their own point of view, avoiding at the same time the use of language calculated to give rise to unworthy feelings.

Censures the European community for their antagonistic attitude to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

With reference to Mr. Ilbert's Bill, the Indian Spectator (1) of the 4th March says:—Certain European inhabitants of Bengal and other places seem to know how to get up factious opposition. To our mind there can be no reality in the resistance they have offered to Mr. Ilbert's Bill. But if these men really mean half of what they publicly utter, it becomes evident that their Christianity and civilization are empty words, and that their lives are regulated on the lowest principles of public morality. Here is a measure necessary for the continuity of progress, which they oppose with a fury such as even a nation of barbarians would be ashamed of. The Native Magistrate in presidency towns is allowed jurisdiction over British-born subjects; why should that jurisdiction be withheld from him in the mofussil, now that circumstances call for the reform? Is not the Native as much Her Majesty's subject as the European in India? And why should the latter be allowed a personal privilege in criminal matters?

But it is useless arguing with men blinded by selfishness. As we said last week, planters of Bengal and their dupes have not a single argument against the Bill. The despicable chatter about the Englishman's 'pride of birth' and about the position of the English capitalist becoming insecure and the safety of his wife and daughter endangered, shows that the Anglo-Indian of a certain class is either an arrant coward (that's the only word) or a hypocrite. Native associations must at once show up the hollowness of the opposition. We do not understand the silence of Native public bodies in Bengal. Is there no association to give a counterblast to the Chamber of Commerce's cry? Perhaps the thing is considered beneath contempt.

Condemns the attitude of antagonism of Europeans against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 4th March says:—Telegrams received yesterday show that the lower orders of the European community of Bengal have become altogether demoralised. The agitation is instructive in more ways than one. Let the Government of India take note of the fact that where the self-interest of this superior race is touched in the slightest degree, they will forget all higher duties and will not scruple to rise against their own Government. To those like us who may have cherished too high an idea of Christian charity and British citizenship, the agitation in point will be a very rude awakening. It is a bitter experience, and neither the Native nor the European is likely to gain by it. It is to be sincerely hoped that these misguided people may yet see the error of their way and not descend to the level already reached by Mr. Branson and his brother agitators. The Natives of Bengal have preserved an attitude all through which is highly creditable. We trust this calm will continue. If they hold a meeting, let them proceed in a quiet, constitutional manner, and leave all the abusing to Christian orators. In the midst of the antics of an infuriated rabble it is reassuring to see that the Government of India stands firm as a rock. Lord Ripon has himself braved worse storms, and will doubtless tide over this wretched little trouble.

Some remarks on the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Arunodayá (14) of the 4th March, in commenting upon the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, observes that the opposition of the Europeans in India to this measure is not surprising, but it is extraordinary that the people in England should raise objections against it. Christian principles have not made much progress. The inhabitants of England are not ashamed to act selfishly and compass their own ends by their might. Until recently the Natives believed that Englishmen in England were unselfish and liberal in their ideas towards weaker races, but this belief has proved to be erroneous. The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill has received the assent of some of the highest Indian officials. It is contended that if this Bill is passed into law, the planters and other Europeans who have helped to increase the wealth of India will have to abandon it and thus ultimately India will be the sufferer. But it is a great mistake to suppose that these Europeans have done any good to India. The planters in Bengal have utterly ruined the labouring and agricultural population. By a close examination of the causes which have led to the degradation of the Native labouring classes, it will be found that the exemption of Europeans from the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates has been the principal element which has worked the evil. By making Europeans amenable to the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates, they will act with less violence towards Natives. The threat of the volunteers that they would lay down their arms in a body if the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill were passed is most puerile and absurd. The Government is strong enough to meet all emergencies without the help of volunteers. The mutiny of 1857 was not the work of Natives. It was brought about by the policy of Lord Dalhousie. If the system of Government is adapted to the changing wants of the community, there would be no need for volunteers.

Comments in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Dnyánodayá (7) of the 8th March says:—We must express regret at the excitement which has been felt at the exaggerated language which has been used by many in considering the proposed amendment to the Criminal Procedure Bill. The Bill proposes to give jurisdiction over Europeans to only a very few Native officials, who seem to have and ought to have the same fitness for such authority as the Presidency Magistrates have. Some day such a change must be made, and it seemed to many officials that the day had come. Whereas the opponents of the amendment have spoken as if the new power was to be widely conferred. But on the other hand, as Mr. Ilbert recognized that the cases in which Europeans are to be tried are usually exceptionally difficult, and as all admit that false witnesses are most painfully common here, we can see how some Europeans felt their safety imperilled on their supposition that a European could be taken before large numbers of Native officials in out-of-the-way places. We must also express our surprise and regret that not a few Native papers are charging this ebullition to the Christianity of the Europeans engaged in opposing the amendment. When will men learn that that only is Christianity which is taught in the Bible, and that Christ is not blameable for the weaknesses of his nominal or even of his true followers?

Attacks on Lord Ripon in connection with his conduct with respect to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In a paragraph headed "The London Press on the Jurisdiction Bill," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 5th March says:—Lord Ripon has just now become the victim of the attacks of not only a certain section of the Anglo-Indian press, but also of some London papers. The Times indeed has gone so far as to warn His Excellency that he will have to be recalled if he gets the Jurisdiction Bill passed into law. This seems rather significant. It means that if an Indian Viceroy sets about governing the country on the principles of justice, he should be compelled to resign. But does Lord Ripon care for such threats? If it comes to that, we do not think Lord Ripon will sacrifice his principles to a desire to retain his office at any price. His Lordship has come here to rule as a statesman. He has not come as a place-man, and he would care more for the sympathy of the people governed than of those with whom right means might. We are sorry that the very Viceroy whom the Indian people love, should be denounced by a portion of his own countrymen. The London papers who have aimed their attacks at Lord Ripon on account of the Jurisdiction Bill forget that His Lordship has not acted on his own opinions, but that he is backed by a majority of the responsible officials in the public service.

Says that the agitation raised by the Europeans of Bengal and other parts of India against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill is baseless.

With reference to the agitation in Calcutta and other parts of the country raised by Europeans against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Lok Mitrá (72) of the 4th March observes that it is a strange spectacle, though not unusual, to behold how a handful of men boasting of British civilization, priding on their love of order and freedom and equality before law, forget themselves for a time while led on by a few sturdy spirits who imagine they are playing the patriot when they are simply acting as so many inflated wind-bags. It is indeed a spectacle that should excite the pity of Natives. To see men, otherwise so superior in civilization and enlightenment, giving unbridled sway to sentiment and feeling, and leaving sober reason far behind, is really deplorable. But the common nature of humanity, whether in the Red Indian or the Briton, often asserts itself. It may be truly said then that in the present agitation of Europeans all over the country nothing but a state of temporary insanity has been wrought by the surging passions within. Human passion is indeed a sort of lucifer match. It requires a spark to set it on flame. And when the flame once rages, there is no limit to the havoc it brings on those who prefer for the time to be consumed thereby. The agitators against Mr. Ilbert's amendment are so consuming themselves at the present moment. Their mental condition may be compared to that of Philip the Drunk. When the agitation is allayed, when their spirits are calmed down, and when their sobriety of reason is restored, they will be heartily ashamed of their own doings. They will be amazed to find what noise they have made about a very simple matter. For after all the amendment will be almost practically wholly inoperative. Mr. Ilbert ought to have taken the bull by the horns and swept all the graver anomalies which still disfigure the Criminal Code as regards justice between black and white men. Mr. Ilbert has tried to remove what he has properly characterised as an

"anomaly." Can any of the leading agitators justly deny that the present state of the law is not an anomaly? Will they deny the truth which they are never tired of preaching in their own country that all men are equal before the eye of the law? They talk of justice and in the same breath demand a differential administration of justice. That is the long and short of the matter. And why? Because they belong to a privileged order of men; because they are the ruling race. Now apart from the contention as to the unreasonableness of their demand for the so-called "privileges," one fact deserves to be pointed out. The British are the conquerors of India. Are all the agitators British? It is true that they are European British subjects. But every nationality represented by Europeans, and even Americans and Armenians, presume to consider themselves as the ruling race. Admitting for a moment for argument's sake only that the British by right of conquest are entitled to certain personal privileges, by what right can Frenchmen, Germans, Austrians, Greeks, Italians, Americans and Armenians claim the same privileges? Let the Government of India publish the number of Europeans in the different provinces of India classified under their respective nationalities. They have the materials before them in the census returns of 1881. It will be interesting to know how many are really British. Compared with the total population of 20 krors in British India, the proportion of Europeans is 2·3 per 1,000, or in other words they form ·0023 of the whole population! And it is this insignificant part of the population, which is not even wholly British, that cries out for a deprivation of its so-called "privileges." But let it be also remembered that the amendment will only be operative in Bengal and Bombay. It is only in these two provinces that there are Indians who are Civilians. Again, their number can be counted on the fingers. But the matter does not rest here. It is only when Native Civilians are empowered to act as first class Magistrates or Session Judges that they will come under the operation of Mr. Ilbert's amendment. The baselessness of the present agitation is patent. No doubt it is artificial as all such class organisations in India elsewhere are. Frivolous arguments were raised, in a portion of the British press at home especially, regarding the withdrawal of capital and the old womanish notion of danger to European families residing in the interior of the country. As soon as the agitation subsides, the hollowness of the reasoning will be transparent without any further criticism. Neither is this the place just now to descant on the charge of perjury brought against Natives, as if the English themselves have not been decrying most violently against the crime of perjury in England. It would be well if inspired public organs which reflect the exaggerated opinions of the "interlopers" here refrain from casting stones from their own glasshouses. Anyhow it is most expedient that they should pause and allow the Viceroy to unfold the real reasons of legislation which Mr. Ilbert has wisely initiated. It is to be regretted that Mr. Ilbert should have dealt only with the fringe when he should have boldly attempted to remove the more serious anomalies that still exist, and which are quite out of harmony with the spirit and progress of the age. One word more. Why are the natives of India behind in memorialising Parliament on the same subject? Why should the voice of a dominant minority alone be heard at St. Stephen's? Why not also the voice of the helpless millions? The peace of the country as well as the contentment of the masses require that Parliament should once for all remove disabilities, be they Native or European, and that the natives of India should forthwith bestir themselves at this juncture for so desirable and politic a purpose. This ghost of "personal privileges" must for ever be laid low. And the present is the most opportune hour for it.

Says that Natives are anxiously watching the Criminal Procedure Amendment Bill.

The Bombay Chronicle (69) of the 4th March observes that among other unwarrantable assertions in connection with the Criminal Procedure Amendment Bill, it has been stated that Natives do not care for the proposed changes, but the Bengalis have expressed their views plainly, while the inhabitants on this side have behaved calmly and decorously. Natives are unable to understand the plea of privilege on which Europeans base their strong and vehement opposition. The outcries about dangers to Europeans from Native Magistrates of the highest grade trying European offenders are mere wild assertions, if not gross libels, on all the natives of India, and are felt as such by the people on this side. The Natives are quiet, because they wish the merits of the Bill to be calmly discussed, and are anxiously waiting for an improvement of their social and political status in the matter of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Regrets the agitation got up by Europeans against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Bombay Chronicle (69) of the 4th March regrets that an unnecessary agitation should have been got up against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill by Europeans, and is extremely sorry that they should have expressed with indignation and uttered noisy platitudes irksome to hear. This display of feeling on their part is certainly bad. Several of the journalists and others, both in India and England, in their attempts at making protests and remonstrances against the Bill, indulged in rabid language offensive to the people of this country. They should however wait until the Bill is published and until they know what the Viceroy has to say in favour of the measure. The leading Natives and respectable Native journals will, it is hoped, do all in their power to avoid fanning the flame of race feeling and race partiality in which Europeans are found indulging.

Prays Government to pass the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill without delay.

The Rást Goftár (103) of the 4th March prays His Excellency the Viceroy to pass the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill at once into law without allowing himself to be influenced in the least by the agitation made by Europeans. The Secretary of State for India stated the other day in Parliament that the Bill would not be enacted until November next, and other reports are to the effect that it would not be passed even then. But it would be a mistake to make any delay in enacting the law. The agitation against the Bill is made by a few selfish Europeans, who belong to the lower class of the community, and whose unreasonable utterances ought to carry no weight against the interests of the mass of the population. If delay is made in passing the Bill into law, the outcry against it will increase without doing any corresponding benefit. Natives will get more abuse and annoyance from the exasperated opponents of the measure. The threat of a "white mutiny" is a joke and cannot be believed. It would be gratifying if the Europeans mutinied, for then their stubbornness and disloyalty would be proved and they would get punishment. They alone are now armed, but their rising would oblige Government to disarm them. The great danger from the delay in passing the Bill is that if Europeans continue to abuse Natives, the latter would get exasperated by such denunciation; a race antipathy between the two would arise, which would lead to evil results. Since Government cannot recede from the step they have taken, it would be wise to enact the Bill at once. Should Government, on the other hand, withdraw it, they would admit their defeat, and Europeans would be encouraged to be disloyal to Government and to tyrannise over Natives. The Government would also be lowered in the eyes of the Native public, who would say that Government feared Europeans. Besides disloyalty on the part of Europeans would act as a bad example to Natives. The worst result, however, of the withdrawal of the Bill would be that it would be considered that Europeans were justified in abusing and vilifying Natives, that the latter were really wicked and vicious enemies of the former, and that Government believed these charges and therefore refused to empower Native Magistrates with jurisdiction over Europeans. Thus an undeserved slur would be cast on Natives. [The Jáme Jamshed (93) of the 5th, 6th, 7th and 9th March and the Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 7th idem express somewhat similar sentiments.]

Censures the Englishmen of Bengal for causing an improper agitation against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In alluding to the agitation made by the Europeans of Bengal and other parts of India against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, and to the abuses showered on Natives at the meeting of Europeans recently held in Calcutta, the Rást Goftár (103) of the 4th March observes that the conduct of Europeans is shameful and contemptible. A rebellion of the subject population is understandable; but that Englishmen should act in a disloyal manner against their own Government is simply disgraceful. If Natives had created one hundredth part of the agitation made by Englishmen, the latter would have urged their immediate suppression, and recommended that they should be severely punished. The selfish Europeans ask for rights to put down Natives. They claim privileges which will enable them to escape scot-free with the assistance of their own countrymen from the punishment which they deserve for doing injuries to Natives. This conduct is unjustifiable and throws a slur on the fame of Englishmen for justice and impartiality. The opposition to Government exposes only the selfishness and hard-heartedness of the opponents, and shows that they dissimulate when they speak of giving Natives legal rights and justice. Their sole object is to gain their own ends. They falsely praise Natives for their honesty and loyalty. For no sooner has the benevolent British Government made a slight movement to bestow just rights on Natives, the selfish Englishmen create an agitation as good as a mutiny against the State. [The Suryá Prakásh (74) of the 3rd, the Gujaráti (89), the Yajdán Parast (115), the Kaisar-i-Hind (95) and the Gujarát Mitrá (70) of the 4th, the Akhbáre Sodágar (76) of the 5th, the Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 6th, the Káside Mumbai (96) of the 7th, and the Broach Samáchár (81) of the 8th March express somewhat similar sentiments.]

Is glad that eminent authorities support the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Rást Goftár (103) of the 4th March is extremely glad that eminent authorities have approved of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, and among them are to be found such names as Lord Napier of Merchiston, Lord Napier of Magdala, Sir Richard Temple, Sir George Campbell, Sir Barrow Ellis, Sir Ashley Eden, Sir Alfred Lyall, and Sir Lepel Griffin. The favourable opinions of these and other high authorities are strong enough to crush the disgraceful opposition made to the Bill, and ought to be circulated at the proper time for the information of the public. The Goftár notices the letter written by Professor Wordsworth of the Elphinstone College to the Bombay Gazette in support of the Bill, and feels proud to include his name among the eminent authorities who are favourable to the measure. The letter is a complete refutation of the arguments of the opponents of the Bill, and ought to be circulated among Europeans in India and communicated to Parliament by telegram. [The Gujaráti (89), the Yajdán Parast (115), and the Gujarát Mitrá (70) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

The meeting of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill and remarks thereon.

The Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 8th March regrets that the Bombay Chamber of Commerce should have expressed its opinion against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, and that one or two members should have imitated the conduct of their brethren in Bengal to a slight extent. In order to show that Natives are given to uttering falsehoods and to bring false charges, Mr. Mowat quoted the opinion of an old Judge of the Bombay Presidency, but did not state the name of the Judge. This quotation loses all value when the present Judges of the Bombay High Court with one exception have expressed their full approval of the Bill. Mr. Mowat also observed that when there were special laws for Hindus and Mahomedans there was no reason to repeal a special law concerning Europeans; but he forgot to note that the Hindu and Mahomedan special laws were regarding certain civil rights, that is in the matter of matrimony, divorce and inheritance only, and there were special laws in the same matter for Europeans also. The provision of the law which would be removed by the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill gives a special right to Europeans in the matter of criminal procedure, while for Hindus, Mahomedans, Pársis and Jews there is only one criminal law. Mr. Mowat also remarked that if the Native Magistrates' Bill were passed, a European accused of crime in the mofussil would not be able to get an European counsel to defend him and would have to make his own defence before a Native Magistrate, confronted by Native pleaders, Native prosecutors, and Native witnesses. But it must be remembered that Natives are not inimical to Europeans, and that there is every likelihood of Native Magistrates showing leniency to the accused Europeans brought before them. It has happened on several occasions in the presidency towns and in the mofussil, that poor Natives have brought charges against Europeans before Magistrates and that the latter were able to escape with the help of counsel, which the former were unable to secure for want of means. The other speakers at the meeting deserve thanks for desisting from abusing Natives, but it is to be regretted that they should have recorded their opinion against the Bill. The Chamber did not act properly in not listening to the protest of the three Native members who advised that the association should abstain from giving any opinion on the Bill, as its doing so would be contrary to its constitution and rules. Natives ought now to hold a public meeting to express their opinion in favour of the Bill, but should refrain from making any remarks condemnatory of Europeans. [The Jáme Jamshed (13) of the same date expresses setiments to the same effect.]

Regrets the abuses showered by the Europeans of Bengal on the natives of India while opposing the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Bombay Samáchár (80) of the 5th March severely censures the Europeans of Calcutta for unnecessarily creating an agitation against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, and for showering foul abuse on Natives. This censurable conduct of the Europeans is calculated to widen the gulf which already exists between the two races, and which is sure to produce evil effects in their political relations. It is however gratifying that Natives, though hurt by this treatment, have desisted from returning foul abuse, and are protesting against it in calm and respectful language. It is also still more gratifying that discreet Europeans have not joined their indiscreet brethren of Bengal and are pointing out their mistake.

Education.

Disapproves of the petition presented to the Education Commission recommending the adoption of the Roman alphabet for general use throughout India.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 5th March says:—We understand that a petition was lately presented to the Education Commission recommending the adoption of the Roman alphabet for general use throughout India. The movement is essentially European, as out of the 23 persons who have signed it there are only 2 who are natives of India. The petition is in no sense of a representative character. The petitioners state that the movement is equally symphathized in by Natives and Europeans. But this is not borne out by facts. It is a pity the petitioners have brought the matter before the Commission at a time when their deliberations are at an end, when they had no time for giving publicity to the matter or for inviting and considering the opinions of men in all parts of the country. This is not the first time that the matter has been brought before the public. Native feeling is in the main opposed to the proposal. The advocates of the movement therefore are naturally anxious to secure, if possible, the support of the Education Commission, and with this view the petition has been presented to them. Although the main object of the promoters of the movement is to facilitate the study of the Indian languages by Europeans, still the petitioners have endeavoured to show that the introduction of the Roman alphabet in India and its adoption by the Indian public in general is calculated to greatly help the work of civilization and progress in the country. The petitioners say that Roman alphabet would substitute one for a very large number of characters now prevailing in India. But this can be much better done by introducing the Devanágari, which is the original of almost all the vernacular languages of India with the exception of the Hindustáni. The people know it and can easily accustom themselves to it, whereas the Roman alphabet would in their case mean a change, far above their convenience or understanding. The suggestion that the Roman alphabet is practically and for the purposes of writing and printing a very good one applies equally to the Devanágari. The Roman alphabet is familiar to the Western nations and that makes them adopt it so easily. But such is not the case with India. The argument that the general use of the Roman character in our courts of law and in official correspondence with the natives of India would be the best safeguard we are likely to obtain against forgery and fraud is rather novel. Are fraud and forgery practically prevented in Europe by this means? For the convenience of a comparatively small number of officials the people are to give up so good an alphabet within easy reach and accept letters which are entirely of a foreign character. The change advocated would, if carried out, only serve to throw Indian clerkdom into confusion and bring in unnecessary obstacles to the transaction of official business. The introduction of the Roman alphabet, it is said, would result in the creation of a national literature for the Indian Empire. But how can India have a national literature without having a common language? How would the introduction of one alphabet improve matters? On the contrary, the masses would be far more indifferent to Romanized alphabet of this kind than they are now. Even if Government were to introduce by force the Roman alphabet in official records, the people would never forget their own characters. The prayer of the petitioners seeks to remedy the difficulties of a very small class compared with the bulk of the people. The Education Commission cannot do better than leave the question where it is.

Railways.

Complains of the tyrannical conduct of the station master at Limbdi.

A correspondent of the Samsher Báhádur (104) of the 2nd March says that about eight days ago the brother of Mr. Ratanrám Parote, inhabitant of Broach, went to the Limbdi station two hours before the time of the arrival of the train with a view to proceed to Broach. There was a great crowd of passengers on the station at the time. He asked for a ticket, but the booking clerk put him off two or four times, and before he could purchase the ticket the train arrived. He entreated the booking clerk to issue a ticket, but in vain. On remonstrating, the booking clerk as well as the station master abused him. He was ordered to be arrested and sent to Bhávnagar. But afterwards when the station master saw several officers of Limbdi on the station, he gave way and ordered his release. The Samsher, in commenting on the above, observes that it has received more than one complaint regarding the tyrannical conduct of the station master at Limbdi, which will be duly published. What are the authorities of the Bnávnagar-Gondal Railway doing? It is a matter for regret that the station master should be allowed to misbehave.

Municipalities.

Complains of the conduct of the Collector of Surat in the matter of electric lights.

The Gujarát Mitrá (70) of the 4th March observes that though Surat stands in sad need of a good supply of water for drinking purposes and for extinguishing the often recurring street fires, yet this want has not been supplied, while a few electric lights have been forced upon her. Some of these lights have been put upon a much frequented road, while the lanes and bye-lanes have been allowed to remain in dark to the great inconvenience of the people. There is great danger of street fires from the electric lights, and hence the Government of India has passed some resolutions in connection with the subject. Bombay, Poona and Ahmedabad have not yet thought it right to introduce these lights, and yet the comparatively poor cities of Surat and Broach have been supplied with them simply because the presidents of these municipalities thought that they were wanted. At the last general meeting of the municipal commissioners of Surat the subject of these lights came on for discussion, and then the president insulted vakils Kálábhái and Dáhyábhái, the first of whom returned a sharp reply. The president left the meeting abruptly, leaving the vice-president to supply his place. This is not the only matter in which the president has acted without the consent of the other municipal commissioners. He pulled a portion of the ramparts of the town of his own will, and when they are demolished the city will be in danger of damage from the inundations of the river. The official members spend the municipal funds just as they like, and consequently the corporations are disliked by the people. The above-mentioned instance of the wilful conduct of an official president is by no means singular. The chairman of the managing committee of the Ahmedabad Municipality insulted His Highness the Gáekwád a few months ago, and it was shameful on the part of the Commissioner of the Division and the Bombay Government that neither of them should have called on him for explanation. The Gáekwád is said to have resolved not to visit any portion of this Presidency in his journey to Calcutta and back. After all this, who would say that the municipal and local fund boards should have official presidents or chairmen?

Massacre of the Maiyás by the Junágad police and remarks in connection therewith.

With reference to the Junágad massacre, the Subodh Patrika (11) of the 4th March says :—There is one feature of the massacre of the Maiyás by the Junágad sibandi which we have not alluded to in our notice of the tragedy. It is stated that after the miserable men were killed their heads were cut off and brought in carts to Junágad. This hideous parade of the bloody trophies of the might of the sibandi, it seems, is not denied, but is defended on the ground that it is the custom of the State thus to chop off the heads from the trunks and to carry them to the capital for identification, and this explanation seems evidently accepted by Government. We do not quite understand before whom the bodies of the murdered men were to be identified, and whether there is no judicial authority in the State except at head-quarters; but supposing such was the case, we should like to know whether our Government accept the explanation on the ground asserted, viz. that it is customary in Junágad, and if so, we are tempted to ask how it is that the Government respect this hideous custom on the part of the State officials, while they ruthlessly compel the poor Maiyás to give up their custom of refusing to accept an arbitrary interference with their prescriptive and long cherished and ever enjoyed rights to their freeholds. Was it ever the custom in Junágad to convert service into payment of cesses in the manner forced upon the Maiyás? If not, why should this custom be broken through, while the hideous practice of cutting off the heads from dead bodies and carrying them in carts is scrupulously respected? And this instance recalls to our mind the case of the son of the Rája of Chhota Udepur, who was subjected to such ignominy and vexation and trial because he was suspected to have violently brought about his own wife's death. The judicial enquiry resulted in the acquittal of the young prince, but it was admitted that the alleged violence was used by him only because his wife was suspected of faithlessness, and to a Rajput what custom is stronger than to kill a wife who steals the honour of the family? Yet such hue and cry was raised over the affair and the young prince and his whole family put to so much annoyance and trouble and expense! Contrast this case with that of the innocent Maiyás, thus not only murdered but drawn and quartered by the men of their Chief, and this last proceeding is justified on the score of custom, and the justification is accepted by the very Government which acted as the accuser of the Udepur prince. What is the explanation?

Investigation in connection with the massacre of the Maiyás and remarks thereon.

With reference to the Junágad massacre, the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 5th March says :—A voice reaches us from Junágad. The enquiry ordered by the Government of Bombay into the cruel atrocities perpetrated against the Maiyás has been held, but we are sorry to hear that Major Watson has not made it a public enquiry. It has been altogether a private investigation. Is it true that the bodies of a number of the Maiyás slain have been discovered in wells? May we again implore Government to order a census to be taken in the Maiya villages? We hope this will be done. The Government of Her Majesty exists in India to give redress to the wronged. Let this be justified in the eyes of God and man.

Wishes that the enquiry into the massacre of the Maiyás in Junágad should be entrusted to either Dr. Pollen or Mr. Birdwood.

The Gujaráti (89) of the 4th March observes that the interests of the Maiyás are not represented at the enquiry that is being made by Colonel Watson into the massacre of the Maiyás in Junágad, though Colonel Watson is an impartial judge. The people of Káthiáwár fear that on account of the relation between the Political Agent and the State the result of the enquiry will be favourable to the Janágad authorities; and hence even if the enquiry were quite impartial, the people would not have full confidence in it. It would be better were the enquiry entrusted to either Dr. Pollen or Mr. Birdwood, who are very impartial judges and have no connection whatever with Káthiáwár. [The Káthiáwár correspondent of the Samsher Báhádur (104) of the 2nd March says that a society has been started at Rájkot with the view of seeing that proper justice is meted out to the unfortunate widows of the Maiyás. The society is raising a fund for the purpose. Mr. Sitárám Pandit, Barrister, and Mr. Dallas and another vakil have come forward as advocates. The people cry out that as no justice will be done to the Maiyás by the Political Agent and his Assistant, an official unconnected with Káthiáwár should be sent to hold an enquiry, As the Junágad State is liberal in hospitality, it succeeds in pleasing all officials.]

Gives some information and makes remarks in connection with the massacre of the Maiyás in Junágad.

A correspondent of the Gujaráti (89) of the 4th March states that according to the news received from Sherghad the Maiya women returned to their village somewhat satisfied with the reply they received from the Political Agent. But a Maiya went and told them that as their husbands were killed their girás would be confiscated, and thereupon several women became insane and six of them committed suicide. Two corpses were found in a well, but the others were not discovered. A daughter of Amra has gone quite mad and another woman is struck dumb from grief. Unless a census of the Maiyás is taken once more, the number of the killed will not be satisfactorily ascertained. It is said that six men of the Junágad police who have assumed the responsibility of the massacre have been arrested. They say that they killed the Maiyás at Kanada in self-defence. Their depositions have been, it is said, sent to the Political Agent, and Junágad has offered to try them. But it is feared that if the offer is accepted justice will miscarry, as happened in the case of Pálitána some time ago. The Chief of Pálitána was at enmity with a girásia, and the latter was killed through some trick. The murderer was sentenced by the Judge who tried him to expatiate the crime on the gallows, but the Thákor commuted the sentence to one of imprisonment for life, and afterwards released the prisoner on his (the Thákor's) birthday. The enquiry that is being made by the Political Agent into the massacre of the Maiyás will, it is feared, not be satisfactory.

Considers that the arrangements made for the administration of the Nizám's State are satisfactory.

In a paragraph headed "The Hyderabad Government," the Native Opinion (10) of the 4th March says :—The arrangements made for the conduct of affairs during the minority of His Highness the Nizám may be said to be quite satisfactory. With Mr. Jones at the head of the Residency and the Peshkár Rája Narendra Prasád as the guiding spirit of the new administration, one may afford to forget the great loss caused by the death of a minister like Sir Sálar Jung. Though Laik Ali may be new to the work, his strong and vivid impressions of his father's administrative arrangements must considerably help him during his novitiate. Had Sir Sálar Jung been living, the accession of the young Nizám would have been followed by the restoration of the Assigned Districts to Hyderabad, but his removal may now prove to be a difficulty in the way of such restoration on the ground that the death of the great minister would interfere with the security of life and property of the people of the Berárs if that province is to be restored. But it is in the hands of the present administration to take away this plea from those who have been opposing the retransfer of Berár, by showing that though Sir Sálar Jung is bodily removed from the scene, his surviving lieutenants are not undeserving of the trust and confidence which the paramount power reposed in their now deceased leader. [The Surya Prakásh (74) of the 3rd and the Mahrátta (2), the Lok Mitra (72), the Gujaráti (89), the Yajdan Parast (115), and the Satya Mitra (105) of the 4th March also consider the arrangements satisfactory.]

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
17th March 1883.

INDEX.

		Page.
PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—
Advance of Russia in Central Asia : Remarks in connection with the ...		5
Cricket : Disapproval of the memorial to His Excellency the Governor of Bombay which is being got up by European polo-players for permission to use the ground on the Esplanade which is used by Native players of		5
Dissolution of the British Empire : A foolish canard about the ...		3
Egyptian War : Injustice of making India pay a portion of the expenses of the :—
The Lok Mitrá		4
The Mahrátta		4
Gambling at cards : A complaint regarding the increase of — in Sholápur.		3
Government Central Press : Disapproval of the printing of forms and other papers required by zilla local funds and municipalities at the...		3
Illegality in a criminal trial : A complaint regarding — held at Rájkot ...		6
Local self-government : Delay in the publication of the list of voters, &c., by the Viramgám Municipality...		6
Opium revenue : Probable abolition of the — and remarks in connection therewith		3
Post office at Málvan : Inconvenient situation of the		4
Public utterances : An expression of thanks to Sir James Fergusson for assuring in his speech at Kolhápur that the British Government has no intention whatever of annexing that or any other Native State ...		5
PART II.—Legislation—
Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill : A censure on the European community for their antagonism to the :—
	The Indian Spectator ...	10
	The Rást Goftár	14
Do. do.	A condemnation of the attitude of antagonism of Europeans against the	11
Do. do.	A criticism on the position of Europeans with reference to the ...	10
Do. do.	A prayer to Government to pass the — without delay ...	14
Do. do.	Baselessness of the agitation raised by the Europeans of Bengal and other parts of India against the.	12
Do. do.	Comments on the attitude of Europeans with respect to the ...	8
Do. do.	Disapproval of the agitation raised by Europeans against the :—
	The Bombay Chronicle ...	14
	The Dnyán Prakásh ...	7
Do. do.	Disapproval of the attacks on Lord Ripon in connection with his conduct with respect to the ...	12
Do. do.	Joy at the support given by eminent authorities to the ...	15
Do. do.	Meeting of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce in connection with the	15
Do. do.	Natives are anxiously watching the	13
Do. do.	Regret at the abuses showered by the Europeans of Bengal on the natives of India while opposing the	16
Do. do.	Remarks in connection with the passing of the	6
Do. do.	Some remarks on the :—
	The Arunodayá	11
	The Dnyánodayá	11

Page.

PART III.—Education—

Education Commission: Disapproval of the petition presented to the — recommending the adoption of the Roman alphabet for general use throughout India 16

PART IV.—Railways—

Bhávnagar-Gondal Railway: A complaint regarding the tyrannical conduct of the station master at Limbdi 17

PART V.—Municipalities—

Electric lights: A complaint regarding the conduct of the Collector of Surat in the matter of 17

PART VI.—Native States—

Junágad: Slaughter of the Maiyás: A wish that the enquiry into the — should be entrusted to either Dr. Pollen or Mr. Birdwood ... 18

... Do. Do. Investigation in connection with the — and remarks thereon ... 18

Do. Do. Remarks in connection with the ... 18

Do. Do. Some information regarding the — and remarks in connection therewith 19

Nizám's State: Satisfaction at the arrangements made for the administration of the 19

RECEIVED
10 APR 83
VIA BRINDISI

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

REPORT

ON

NATIVE PAPERS

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 17th March 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Dín Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	925
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do.	600
12	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do.	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
20	„ Daivadnyă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
21	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Do.	Do.	500
22	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly	425
23	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
24	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
25	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
26	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
27	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
28	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
29	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
30	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
31	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*32	„ Karnátak Mitră[4]	Belgaum	Do.	200
33	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	3,500
34	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
35	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
36	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
37	„ Mahárashtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
38	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
39	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
40	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
41	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
42	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly	700
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Do.	Do.	200
44	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
47	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	250
48	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily	350
*49	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
50	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti).	Do.	200
*51	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
52	„ Saddharm Díp	Alíbág	Do.	600
53	„ Satyă Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly	243
54	„ Satyă Sadan	Alíbág	Weekly	400
55	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
56	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly	275
*57	„ Sharabh	Alíbág	Weekly	200
*58	„ Shetakari	Poona	Monthly	400
59	„ Shiváji[3]	Do.	Weekly	200
60	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*61	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
62	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
63	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

[1] Maráthi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles.
[4] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
64	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
65	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly ...	250
66	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do. ...	175
67	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do. ...	200
68	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do. ...	300
*69	„ Vinod	Poona	Do. ...	200
70	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly ...	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*71	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly ...	200
72	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do. ...	400
73	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	349
74	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	725
75	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do. ...	600
76	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do. ...	137
	GUJARA'TI.
77	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly ...	25
78	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily ...	750
79	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly ...	304
80	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do. ...	500
81	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly ...	500
82	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily ...	950
83	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly ...	700
84	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do. ...	60
85	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	600
86	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly ...	525
87	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do. ...	1,000
*88	„ Dnyán Prasárak	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	200
89	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do. ...	400
90	„ Fursad	Do.	Do. ...	100
91	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly ...	400
*92	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly ...	200
93	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do. ...	659
*94	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	200
95	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily ...	525
96	„ Kaira Vartmán	Kaira	Weekly ...	115
*97	„ Kaisar-i-Hind	Bombay	Do. ...	200
98	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ..	700
99	„ Kusum Guchhá	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	350
100	„ Nágar Udayá	Do.	Do. ...	300
101	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly ...	200
102	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly ...	381
103	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly ...	200
104	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do. ...	225
105	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do. ...	1,814
106	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do. ...	200
107	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	400
*108	„ Saurashtrá Darpan	Junágad	Monthly ...	200
109	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do. ...	533
*110	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do. ...	200
111	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do. ...	408
112	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár	Umreth	Fortnightly..	62
*113	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
114	„ Vartmán Sár	Surat	Weekly ...	200
115	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly ...	738
116	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do. ...	300
117	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly ...	500
	KA'NARESE.
118	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	150
*119	„ Karnátak Vritt	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
	URDU.
*120	The Altáf	Bombay	Weekly ...	200
*121	„ Armagán	Do.	Do. ...	200
*122	„ Dabdabe Islám[5]	Do.	Do. ...	200
123	„ Khayir Kháhe Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly .	300
124	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly ...	160
*125	„ Muzhire Shawkatul Islám	Do.	Do. ...	200
	PERSIAN.
126	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly ...	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles. [5] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases, an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out; and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well-known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Remarks in connection with the abolition of the Supreme Government and the introduction of representative Government in India.

In an article headed "Colonel Osborne on Representative Government in India," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 12th March says:—Colonel Osborne proposes representative Government for India. The evils will no doubt be considerably diminished by the introduction of the representative form of government. Colonel Osborne's proposal will, we fear, be regarded as too radical. He proposes to abolish the Supreme Government altogether and divide the country into several independent provinces ruled by a Governor and Council and responsible directly to the Secretary of State for India. However much such a retrenchment may be desirable on the ground of economy, the existence of the Supreme Government is in our opinion necessary to give a consistency and a tone to the administration of the country as a whole. If the country were divided into so many independent principalities, the ideas of nationality and unity which are now growing up in the different parts of the country would receive a check. We would fain spend a few millions upon the maintenance of the Government of India to secure the check and control on local Governments, the uniformity in the domestic and foreign policy, and the schemes of imperial reform which have been secured to the country by the assistance of the Supreme Government and notably under Lord Ripon. Representative Government is no doubt necessary, and we apprehend it is the legitimate consequence of the scheme of local self-government propounded by Lord Ripon. Without risking any radical changes, a form of representative Government may be bestowed upon the country by introducing the representative element in the Provincial and the Supreme Legislative Councils. These Councils may be constituted in the same way as the municipal and local fund committees are proposed to be constituted. We sincerely trust a day will come when under Lord Ripon's auspices the privilege of sending representatives to the Councils of Government will be extended to our people. Already a sort of beginning has been made in that direction by the elevation of the Honourable Kistodas Pal to the Supreme Legislative Council. We trust there will be many more such selections, and gradually a further representative character will be given to the Legislative Councils than at present obtains. For this purpose it is now more than ever necessary to supplicate by one national voice Her Gracious Majesty the Empress to allow the Noble Marquis a further period of usefulness for the sake of her loyal subjects in India.

Praises the British Government for the many political boons conferred upon India by it.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 11th March, in an article headed "Russia as it is at the present day," gives a summary of an article in the February number of the Fortnightly Review, which contains "a cool and dispassionate statement of the present political condition of Russia," and remarks:—We give this summary in order to impress on the minds of our readers and all Natives generally, that however aspiring our political ambition may be, we must always maintain towards our British rulers an attitude of unswerving loyalty and never fail to show our gratitude to the liberal people of England for the great political boons they have conferred upon us. At the same time the reader will be able to judge to what circumstance it is due that a handful of foreigners are able to govern without toil or trouble, without sedition and discontent, 250 millions of human beings of various castes and colours, of different religious persuasions, and speaking diversified tongues. The total absence of hidden conspiracies and secret treasonable plots in this country is to be ascribed to the liberal policy which the enlightened and free people of Britain have established in India. Keeping aside the inherent disadvantages of a foreign rule, we can say we are much better off under the British than the Russians under their own Government.

Says that the inoperativeness of the Land Improvement Act of 1871 and takávi advances is due to the Bombay revenue

The Mahrátta (2) of the 11th March, in an article headed "The Land Improvement Act and Takávi Advances," observes:—During the twelve years that the Land Improvement Act and the rules framed by the Bombay Government on the subject have been in operation, a large survey system and the extreme rigidity of the rules framed under the Act.

number of agricultural improvements, one would expect, might have been effected by landholders in this Presidency with the aid of the advantages offered by Government. But it appears on enquiry that such is not the case. Government have learnt, year after year, from the Collectors that the advances of money made by virtue of the Act are not popular with the agricultural classes; that they are not availed of to any great extent; that the needy ryot prefers to have recourse to the sowkár; and that for all practical purposes the Act with all its beneficent intentions has remained a dead letter. The question therefore naturally arises, what must be the causes which have brought about such a result? We hold the Bombay revenue survey system chiefly responsible for the failure of the Act. Among other benefits which the founders of the system expected to derive from it, they anticipated that the ryots would improve their holdings by expending private capital on them. But as already stated, there is not a single permanent improvement worth the name which can be pointed out as having been made by any landholder in any district of this Presidency subject to the system. To expect a ryot holding land under the Bombay revenue survey system to expend his own money in improving it is very much like asking a man to give away all his worldly effects to a stranger. In corroboration of this, we first of all cite the irrebuttable evidence of facts, and next request the attention of our readers to clauses (b) and (c) of section 107 of the Land Revenue Code, and ask them to consider whether any other consequence could have resulted from those provisions of the law. The ryot has no guarantee that an improvement effected by him from private capital will not be taxed at the end of the period for which the settlement is fixed. The ryot does not know and does not understand the nice distinction which is made in clause (b) between the value of a natural advantage and an improvement consisting in having created the means of utilizing such advantage. He knows that if he sinks a well in his occupancy, the Survey Department is sure to pounce upon it and to enhance the assessment. He therefore takes care not to sink a well, even though there may be natural facilities for so doing. A short time ago a discussion took place regarding the effects of this very clause, and although Government then declared that it will not be applied to wells dug at the expense of the owner or occupier of the soil, they passed the following resolution: "Government are unable to see that any discouragement to improvements made by private capital need be caused by section 107, clause (b). They are competent at any time to declare how they interpret that clause and to notify that it will not be held to apply to any particular class of improvements. They will decide at the request of an applicant for an improvement loan whether the clause applies to his project or not." In the above resolution it is stated that Government are competent at any time to declare how they will interpret that clause. Certainly; but if the interpretation were made known beforehand, it would be very convenient to applicants for loans. Otherwise the applicants must run the risk of going a long way and spending some money only to be told what they might have been told before, that the clause did apply to their project. Another reason of the inoperativeness of the Act is the extreme rigidity of the rules framed under the Act. The local enquiry enjoined by the rules before an application can be granted is extremely formal in character. Rules 10, 26 and 28 and the one regarding the payment of instalments and interest are more or less unnecessary and harassing to the class of people from among whom the intending applicants for advances of money may be expected. Some of the rules regarding advances for the purchase of seed and cattle are extremely illiberal, the rules requiring that an advance for the purchase of seed shall be repaid within one year, that the yearly rate of interest shall not be less than 6¼ per cent., and that when advances are required for the purchase of cattle the Collector may take measures to purchase them and hand them over to the applicant. It is no wonder then that it should be a standing complaint that takávi advances are not freely taken.

Petitions regarding the extension of Lord Ripon's term of office as Governor General and remarks in connection therewith.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 12th March in a Maráthi leader says that none of the predecessors of Lord Ripon can be compared to him in independence of character, magnanimity of spirit and in the loftiness of his aims. The political associations of Bombay, Poona and several other places have petitioned the Queen to extend His Lordship's term of office to 1890. Such a request was never before made on behalf of any previous Governor General. The people have asked for the prolongation of Lord Ripon's tenure of office as Viceroy on account of the excellent principles on which his administration has been conducted for the last three years. The policy of Lord Ripon's Government has not been merely beneficial to any particular portion of the community, but all classes alike have derived benefit from it. For the success of Lord Ripon's excellent scheme of local self-government his presence in this country for the next five years at least is absolutely necessary. Even those Europeans who dislike to give Natives political power are unable to find any fault with the scheme of local self-government as inaugurated by Lord Ripon. Again, while Lord Ripon is willing to give the Native community a political education, he is by no means unmindful of the interests of his own country and of his own people. He is a thoroughly patriotic Englishman. Lord Ripon differs from his predecessors in one important respect. They merely made liberal professions, but Lord Ripon is actually carrying out what he says. In conclusion, the Indu Prakásh earnestly hopes that the prayer of the petitioners will be granted.

Exhorts the Natives to memorialize Her Imperial Majesty the Queen to extend the term of Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty.

The Yajdán Parast (117) of the 11th March observes that it is highly gratifying that the zeal of the people of India to memorialize the Queen to extend the term of Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty for five additional years is increasing. The popular movement in this direction was a few days ago considered inopportune, but now that Europeans have begun to slander His Lordship for wishing to pass the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, and revived the question of race distinction, it has become the duty of every native of India to lend his support to every good act of administrative policy. The Poona Sárvajanik Sabha has done well to convene a public meeting for adopting a memorial to the Queen to allow Lord Ripon to remain five years more in India after the expiry of his present term of office. Lord Dalhousie was permitted to retain the office of Governor General for the period of nine years, though he did not do anything for the welfare of India or of its inhabitants. There ought therefore to be no objection to permit the good Lord Ripon, who has done so much for Natives, to hold his office for another term. There is a great probability that the prayer of Natives in this matter will be granted. They should hold public meetings in every city, town and village to adopt memorials to the Queen. These meetings will show to the Europeans who have created so much unnecessary agitation against the Jurisdiction Bill that Natives are not backward in doing a work of real benefit to the country, and will lend their support to the excellent policy of the Viceroy.

Complains of the prohibition of the importation of salt by sea into Guhágar and the neighbouring villages.

A correspondent of the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 12th March complains that the inhabitants of Guhágar and the neighbouring villages have been great sufferers since Government, some seven years ago, prohibited the importation of salt by sea into these parts. The pecuniary loss suffered by these people on account of the enhanced price of salt which they have to pay for bringing this commodity from a long distance by land may be roughly stated to amount to one thousand rupees per annum. An application was made to the Commissioner of Customs for redressing the above grievance, but it was not successful. The correspondent hopes that Government will interfere and afford the requisite relief.

Complains that there are no vaccinators in Kaládgi.

The Hitechhu (27) of Kaládgi of the 11th March in its local news states that it is surprising that there should be no vaccinators in Kaládgi, although it is the head-quarters of the Collectorate. The inconvenience which the inhabitants have to suffer on account of this want is very great. During the last five months Kaládgi has not been visited by a public vaccinator although vaccinators are enjoined to visit all towns and villages within the area of a táluka once at least during every fortnight. It is to be hoped that the Vaccination Department will take measures to supply the desideratum above pointed out.

Deaths of Natives caused by the shots of European soldiers.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 12th March observes that during the past two years nearly one hundred Natives have been killed by European soldiers, most of whom have escaped the punishment they deserved, but as yet no measures have been adopted to prevent the recurrence of these sad events. The Military Officers deserve some blame in this matter, as they freely allow European soldiers to go on hunting excursions, which lead to the deplorable occurrences. The soldiers roam about in the fields or jungles in search of sport, and if any Natives remonstrate with them to prevent injury to their crops or about the killing of an animal or bird held sacred, the soldiers shoot them. The criminals defend themselves by stating that they killed the Native in self-defence. Their statement is believed by European juries and they are allowed to escape punishment. A correspondent therefore recommends that the law laying down that European criminals should be tried by European juries alone should be amended at once. Though this recommendation is appropriate, yet the present time is quite inopportune. That time is not very distant, and if Lord Ripon continues to be Viceroy for some time longer he is sure to make the necessary amendment in the law. But until the law is amended it would be very proper to strictly prevent European soldiers from going on hunting excursions. Such expeditions have not been beneficial either to the soldiers or to the country. The soldiers have not improved their shooting capabilities by going out for sport, nor has the number of wild animals been lessened. The Jáme then expresses its approval of the suggestion made in some quarters that Indian soldiers should not be allowed to carry ammunition with them except when they are on duty.

Cost of the Indian contingent of the Egyptian Expedition and remarks in connection therewith.

With reference to the Egyptian War expenses, the Native Opinion (10) of the 11th March says:—It is to be regretted that the Liberal Ministry, while it condemned Lord Beaconsfield for sending an expedition out of this country and saddling her revenues with its expenditure, should have followed the same precedent. We shall not undertake to discuss the question of the necessity of the Egyptian Expedition so far as English interests are concerned, but surely the expedition was not intended to profit India either territorially or pecuniarily or by way of strengthening the empire in India. Like the Afghan War the Indian expedition to Egypt was purely in Imperial interests, and therefore the Imperial treasury ought to have borne the whole expenditure on account of the expedition sent out from this country. The Liberal Ministry could not be unaware that Indian finance was in a most unsatisfactory state, that they had crippled it by the abolition of the import duties, and that to put a further strain upon it by adding to its expenditure was disastrous in the extreme. The late Afghan War had at least a specious appearance of being in Indian interests, though really it was in the interests of England; but the Indian expedition to Egypt was shorn of even this specious appearance. The argument that the Canal route to India was in danger has long been exploded, and the Parliamentary papers have proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that Arabi Pasha had taken every precaution that his rebel soldiery should not be in a position to disturb the said route. And yet the self-same specious argument is availed of by the Ministry to charge our revenues with the expenditure. But supposing that the route was really in danger, how is it that we never found other European powers, which have as good commercial and other interests in the East as England has, making any move or stir for their own protection? Surely if the Canal were really in danger, they could not have remained mere spectators of the whole scene. But the Canal was never really in danger and the connection of it with the Egyptian revolt was used as a handle for certain purposes. It is urged by some that as India forms an integral part of the British empire, and that as England has done so much for India, the latter is bound by ties of mutual benefit to take part with her own men and money in England's wars. It is true that India forms an integral portion of the British empire, and it is also true that this country is greatly profited by England's benign rule. But does not India pay a very high price for all the benefit she receives, and are there no other countries or colonies which are equally profited? Supposing that the Canal was really in danger and Indian commercial interests were also in danger, we should like to know how the Ministry never thought that the commercial interests of the other British possessions in the East were not at all in danger. If India is made to pay her quota to the Egyptain War expenditure, why should not the other possessions in the East in justice to India be made to contribute to such expenditure? But that while no other possession in the East seems to be laid under any contribution, India should be made to pay a large sum and under a Ministry which whilst in opposition had strongly protested against a similar course, is a circumstance deeply to be regretted. We are under a deep debt of gratitude to the present Ministry for the benefits we have received from it, but that must not restrain us from raising our voice, feeble though it be, against laying down a principle which in its very inception is wrong and perpetuates it as a precedent for future generations to mulct India for purely English wars, and thus gain a cheap glory at the sacrifice of another. It has now come to this that when India becomes a subject of party warfare and the party in power wishes to continue in power, the only alternative it has recourse to for such retention is to allow Indian interests to go to the wall in preferring its own. Thus for the retention of power, such at least is the popular belief, the cotton import duties were abolished. We are sorry that in a weak moment the present Ministry should have given its sanction to throw on the Indian revenues the expenses of the Egyptian Expedition.

A reply to the 31st question proposed by the Mhowra Commission.

In reply to the 31st question proposed by the Mhowra Commission, the Rást Goftár (105) of the 11th March observes that the severities of the A'bkári Act should be removed and a free use of toddy should be permitted. All duties except the "Budadena" tax originally levied should be abolished. The system of giving contracts for the sale of toddy should be done away with, and owners of trees should be left free to draw and sell the juice. If all restrictions on the use of toddy are removed, poor people will make a free use of it and discontinue to a certain extent the use of spirituous drinks, and the practice of surreptitious distillation will considerably abate. The owners of toddy trees should be permitted to manufacture toddy into liquor, levying a certain fee as was levied formerly on each liquor still. Licenses for the sale of this liquor should be issued. If Government be unwilling to adopt the last suggestion, the excess toddy should be manufactured into liquor at certain stills and the liquor should be made over to licensed vendors. The liquor shops in villages should be given to different persons, and a certain sum should be fixed as the price of each license, which price should be settled on a due consideration of the capability of the village to consume the liquor. More than one license to sell liquor in a town or village should be freely given. If this arrangement be thought undesirable, the right of selling liquor in villages may be sold by public auction to different individuals. No licensed seller of liquor should be permitted to manufacture liquor, which he should buy from the owners of toddy trees. The licensed retail sellers should obtain the mhowra liquor from the place selected by Government. Care should however be taken that the retail sellers are able to obtain the liquor within a convenient distance from their shops. The excessive duty now levied upon mhowra liquor should be reduced to at least one-third its present amount, and no water should be permitted to be mixed with liquor.

Says that all liquor shops of Surat should be closed on particular holidays.

The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 11th March complains that in the last Moharam holidays some liquor shops of Surat were ordered to be closed while others were permitted to be kept open. This sort of partiality ought not to be allowed, and it is to be hoped that all liquor shops will be closed in the coming Shimga holidays. The attention of the Collector and Dárogha is requested to the subject.

Suggests that the certificates given in America about the quality of the kerosine oil imported into Bombay ought not to be accepted.

In noticing the suggestion made by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce that the certificates given in America of the quality of the kerosine oil imported into Bombay should be accepted, the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 17th March observes that it would not be safe to act upon that document and to endanger the safety of human life and property. The oil ought to be carefully examined here, and when it is found that it satisfies the necessary test it ought to be admitted into the town. In the case of the oil which was imported into Calcutta a few months ago it was stated that though it was in a good condition when despatched from America it subsequently became deteriorated on account of the hot climate of India. This fact ought to dissuade the authorities from adopting the suggestion made by the Chamber.

Censures the authorities in Bombay for their attitude towards the Salvationists.

With reference to the conviction of Major Tucker of the Salvation Army, the Dnyánodayá (7) of the 15th March says:—Major Tucker and his associates have done the very same thing through the streets of most of the other great cities of India without creating a disturbance and without hindrance from the police. Why then are they persecuted in Bombay and not elsewhere? The late trial made it perfectly clear that the main reason in the first place was that certain Europeans did not at all like the methods of these Salvationists. But that is no reason for putting a man in jail. A second reason at first was a fear in the minds of the police that the roughest of Bombay Mussalmans might create a disturbance. It was said that calling men sinners, Europeans, Hindus, Mussalmans and all others, would be especially resented by the Mussalmans. Yet they distinctly call themselves sinners and pray for forgiveness, and if they had the desire to attack others who used the word sinners in the singing they certainly were sinners. The police have ascribed a much more depraved condition to the Mussalmans than the Salvationists. Yet they put a man in jail for singing in the street that men are sinners. However it is certain that there are as rough Mussalmans in the large Mahommedan cities of Northern India as in Bombay. They object to the Salvationists' tactics as much as any Bombay Mussalmans. They never mobbed the Salvationists, partly at least because they knew that they would be punished if they did so. Mr. Dosábhái Frámji has just put Major Tucker in jail because the Mussalmans do not like the proselytizing desire of the Salvationists. Nor do they like the very same publicly expressed desire of other missionaries when they preach in the streets. Yet for this reason missionaries are not put into jail. It therefore seems to us that Major Tucker is in jail to-day mainly because the Bombay authorities are not willing to admit that they made a mistake in taking the position which they first did. We believe that the Salvationists have an undoubted right to go in processions and to sing through the streets, and we doubt not they will exercise it.

Approves of the conviction and punishment of Major Tucker of the Salvation Army by the Presidency Magistrate.

The Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 11th March observes that the decision of Mr. Dosábhái Frámji in the Salvation Army police case has the hearty approval of all sections of the community of Bombay. The indefensible behaviour of Major Tucker and his companions, defiant alike of the law and the guardians of the public peace, left no alternative to the police but to prosecute the offenders again. The Magistrate found the accused guilty on the clearest evidence, but showed every inclination to treat the prisoners leniently and held out all legitimate loopholes to give them a chance for escape from the punishment to which they had become liable, provided they should promise to mend their ways. But the Salvationists emphatically declared that as soon as they should get another chance they would again do deliberately what the police believe from reliable information that it is not at all advisable to let them do. Under these circumstances the Magistrate had no option left but to sentence Major Tucker to one month's imprisoment, lighter sentences on former similar occasions having proved futile.

The New Budget.

Criticises the budget statement for 1883-84.

In noticing the revised estimates of revenue for 1882-83 and the budget statement for 1883-84, the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 17th March regrets that India has been made to pay 80 lákhs of rupees on account of the cost of the Indian contingent of the Egyptian Expedition, with which India had no concern whatever, and observes that if this unjust burden had not been thrown on her there would have been this day a balance of 86 lákhs of rupees in the Indian treasury. And in such a contingency a new loan of one kror only would have sufficed for the construction of remunerative public works, and India would have been saved from another kror being added to her national debt. Since a balance of nearly half a kror of rupees is shown in the budget estimate for 1883-84, it would be well to know whether it is intended to abolish the license tax or decrease its incidence. Though either proposal would be proper, yet the tax has been retained in order to allow the authorities to handle it so as to enable them to tide over financial difficulties. It is a matter for regret that the estimate shows an increased loss from exchange and no hint is given as to when this drain is to cease. Again the income from opium is falling at a time when it is decided to charge India with the cost of the wars in which England may be engaged. Seeing that the revenues are large, and though India was called upon to contribute to the cost of the Indian contingent in the Egyptian Expedition she met the unforeseen demand and yet there is a small balance in hand, some persons consider that the condition of finance is satisfactory. But they forget that the taxes are extremely heavy, while the income of the country is diminishing. To make the future prospect of the country still more gloomy, the income from opium threatens to disappear on account of the misguided exertions of certain parties in England.

Criticises the budget statement for 1883-84.

In noticing the revised estimates of revenue for 1882-83 and the budget statement for 1883-84, the Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 17th March considers them satisfactory and congratulates Major Baring upon the same. It is not a little gratifying, observes the Jáme Jamshed, that the able Finance Minister should have succeeded in removing the fear of the levy of a new tax and in showing a surplus of six lákhs of rupees after paying India's share of the expenses of the Indian contingent of the Egyptian Expedition. The increase of six per cent. in the consumption of salt on account of a reduction in the salt duty points out the desirability of reducing the duty still further, as the price of the article on account of the heavy duty is still so high as to be beyond the ability of the poor people to make a sufficient use of the condiment. The budget mentions in general terms that the trade in such imports as were exempted from duty increased seven per cent. during the last ten months; but it is desirable to know how much the imports in Manchester cotton cloth have increased. The Manchester manufacturers asserted that their goods were not sufficiently consumed and the poor people were not properly clothed in India on account of the heavy import duty. Sir John Strachey believed their statement and abolished half of the import duty on their goods, but experience has shown that though the duty was removed there was no increase in the consumption of cloth, which may be attributed to the objectionable practice of sizing the cloth heavily. The abolition of the duty was therefore a mistake. The proposed reduction of eighteen per cent. in the cost of the carriage of wheat and other grains by railway from Delhi and Agra to Bombay is sure to result in the reduction of the price of wheat in the English market, and this step may ultimately benefit India. The deferring of the publication of the details of the loan for remunerative public works till July next is considered judicious on the part of the Finance Minister by experienced merchants, as the money markets of Bombay and Calcutta are tight just now and there is probability of their improving in July.

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Lessons derivable from the recent agitation against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 11th March, in an article headed "What has the recent agitation about the Jurisdiction Bill taught us?" observes:—The agitation, as was expected, has subsided. Men have come to their senses and the Viceroy's speech appears to have sufficiently cooled the heated brains of interested, self-conceited imprudent and inconsiderate agitators. To those who look at the question from a partisan point of view, the very introduction of the Bill appears to have done mischief; and they hold that Lord Ripon could have avoided all the greater mischief that the recent agitation is calculated to have done by at once proclaiming that the Bill would be shelved as an inconvenient measure. But to us, who, from the very nature of circumstances, have been privileged for a time to take a dispassionate view of the whole question, it appears that Lord Ripon could have done no greater good to the country by introducing the self-government schemes or a dozen Education Acts. We advisedly keep the question of the Bill aside and look at the short-lived, ill-timed and selfish agitation only with a view to find out what lessons the Natives ought to take from their fellow-subjects who attempted to rend the earth and skies with their loud cries. From a Calcutta paper it appears that the grand but foolishly managed demonstration at the Town Hall was not in reality got up by intelligent, honest and patriotic Englishmen, but that it was convened at the request of indigo and other planters. This circumstance, coupled with another equally important fact that truly patriotic and honest sons of Britain have already commenced to wash their hands clean of the rabid proceedings at the meeting, goes to prove conclusively that the lower strata of society, Native or English, are as low, as narrow-minded, as ignorant and as excitable as they have ever been, and therefore public opinion necessarily means the opinion of those only who from their education and influence, moderation and good temper, have claims to be heard. So long as their creed is tolerated and their feelings are not hurt, all is right with them and their ideal of a happy political condition is realized. This impenetrable mass is certainly inconvenient for purposes of good government, and we fear Lord Ripon will have to make some provision for their education. The Education Commission, it is hoped, will do something for Natives, and we are now constrained to admit that Lord Ripon was not quite unwise in making special provision for the education of Eurasians and Anglo-Indians. The first lesson taught by the agitation, therefore, is that education on a much wider scale should be demanded. The second lesson is that Natives should thoroughly master the history of their own nation, as composed of different sects and creeds, for the present agitation is no more but an imitation of what the Sikhs did in the time of the Moghals. If as loyal subjects of Her Imperial Majesty we wish to form an Indian Empire, we can never do so until we learn to make "the sparrow strike the eagle," as the Sikh prophet put it. By the Jurisdiction Bill Lord Ripon has only begun, in the words of the great Edmund Burke, "to enquire into abuses which bring upon us ruin." Let us learn to strike an eagle-like opposition like the present, and if we do this, Lord Ripon will succeed in securing the active confidence and sincere co-operation of the people. Let us once for all remember that Lord Ripon wishes to secure the attachment of the people to the throne, which, in the words of Mr. Gladstone, is at once the strength, the glory and the safety of the nation. The third and perhaps the most important lesson the leaders of Native society ought to derive from the agitation is that if in their opinion a thorough social intercourse between Europeans and Natives is advisable and practicable, all attempts at bringing it about will fail in the present state of English society. Attempts must therefore be made first to make the middle and lower classes of English society to appreciate the worth of individuals, whether Europeans or Natives, and then only they will know what cemented friendship between Natives and Europeans can do. The recent agitation has indeed taught us many a lesson useful to national life. We heartily thank the Native community for the exemplary patience and moderation it has shown on this trying occasion.

Makes remarks upon the discussions on the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill in the Imperial Legislative Council.

The Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 13th March is rejoiced that in the Imperial Council the majority supported the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, and observes that the opponents brought forward the weak arguments that the Europeans are an important community in India, that they highly appreciate their rights and privileges, that the Jurisdiction Bill when enacted will be highly disadvantageous to them, and that frauds and perjury are common crimes in this country. The latter argument has been completely answered and need not be further noticed. As for the former plea, one or two members on the opposition side even went so far as to warn the Viceroy of the danger likely to proceed from the great agitation prevailing among Europeans, and advised His Excellency not to leave Calcutta for Simla this season. The European agitators have already gone so far as to incite volunteers and European soldiers, and might well be supposed likely to commit further mischief, and hence if the warning be on their account it may not be called inappropriate. As for Natives there need be no fear of their committing any indiscretion, and if any apprehension be entertained on their account the Viceroy should disregard it and proceed to Simla as usual. The arguments in favour of the Bill advanced in the Viceregal Council will exercise a pacifying effect on the agitation raised in England, particularly on the minds of the members of Parliament who are to give a final decision as to whether the Bill should be passed. The number of the supporters of the Bill will in all likelihood increase by the addition of the Governors of Bombay and Madras and their Councils, the India Council and the former and present Secretaries and Under Secretaries of State for India. [The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 12th March expresses some of the sentiments noted above. The Káside Mumbai (98) of the 12th and the Broach Samáchár (83) of the 15th March admire the independence and firmness of Lord Ripon in this matter. The Kásid expresses a doubt as to the passing of the Bill, for the Europeans are so much excited that the Home Government will have it postponed for the present.]

Regrets that the enactment of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill has been left to the decision of Parliament.

In noticing the proceedings of the Imperial Legislative Council in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 12th March observes that the introduction of the Bill into the Council is gratifying, but it is to be regretted that the Viceroy has left the passing of the Bill to the decision of Parliament. There is no doubt that His Excellency has adopted this wise course in order to extricate himself from the unpleasant position in which he was placed. But instead of doing this he should have placed the Bill in such a position as would have enabled the Council to pass it at a subsequent stage. And had he done this, a great advantage would have followed from it, namely, that the public would have had an opportunity of seeing how far the Europeans who hitherto boasted of equity and equitable laws would carry the agitation so vigorously begun by them, and would thus have derived a useful lesson from it. Another advantage would have been that the Natives would have seen that though the Europeans threatened Government, the latter persisted in the right course they had taken. It is to be regretted that these advantages have been lost by the course adopted by the Viceroy. If Parliament were to be misled like the Times, the Bill would be rejected, but this would not be advantageous, inasmuch as Native Magistrates would have to be invested with jurisdiction over Europeans, if not now, at least about seven years hence, and therefore if the same were done now a good political effect would be produced. To impress this fact on the mind of Parliament, which is very likely to side with the European agitators, it is desirable that Natives should memorialize that great national tribunal. [The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 16th March expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Observes that the opposition made by the Honourable Rája Shivprasád to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill proceeded from selfish motives.

In noticing the opinion given by the Honourable Rája Shivprasád that the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill should be thrown out as it was distasteful to Europeans, the Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 11th March observes that his opposition to the Bill proceeded from selfish motives. It is well known that the planters in Bengal are the strongest opponents of the measure, and act most high-handedly with their farmers and labourers, as well as others. The Honourable Rája wishes to secure the support of the planters in the opposition which the zamindárs of Bengal intend to make to the Bengal Rent Bill. From the rumours then prevailing in Bengal the Bombay Gazette had already warned the public that the Rája would oppose the Jurisdiction Bill with the object of securing the planters' co-operation against the Rent Bill. One portion of the prophecy has been fulfilled. [The Gujaráti (91) of the same date severely censures the Rája for joining the ranks of the opposition.]

The Rást Goftár (105) of the 11th March is glad that the natives of Calcutta have submitted to the Viceroy in Council a memorial in support of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, and that the Bombay Branch of the East India Association is getting up a similar memorial. The Goftár points out the advantages of submitting such petitions, and exhorts the people of the mofussil to prefer similar memorials from every important town. [The Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 9th and the Hitechhu (73) of Ahmedabad of the 15th March disapprove of the agitation created by Europeans against the Bill, and say that they have not set a good example to Natives. They advise the people to adopt memorials from all parts of the country in support of the Bill. The Hitechhu says that the Europeans have been tested in three things from this Bill, viz., their loyalty to the Queen, their hatred of Natives and their race superiority, and their hesitation to lower and blaspheme impartial British justice. If a soldier in a Native regiment or a Native member of a volunteer corps were to express his intention of resigning on similar occasions, the Europeans would come forward to proclaim him a rebel and get him duly punished. Europeans will never be as loyal to the British ráj as the poor Indian subjects are, and as long as they are pampered by Government they will go on opposing Government from time to time. Hence it is necessary that an example should be made of them in the public interests.]

Exhorts the people of the mofussil to submit to the Viceroy in Council memorials in support of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

With reference to the meeting of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce held to discuss the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Native Opinion (10) of the 11th March says:— We are often taunted with being constitutionally incapable of holding and managing large assemblies in connection with any public question and are asked to take lessons in this matter from our European friends. Hitherto we believed in their capacity for all these things, but the recent exhibition they have made of themselves in Calcutta makes us think that their boasted powers of organization, order and sobriety are either fast deteriorating or that the feeling of their belonging to the dominant race makes most of them treat with supreme contempt all these qualities. We are not much concerned with what the so-called leaders of the European society do in such matters, or how they behave towards a constituted authority. We hope the Native public will not take for their model as speakers such men as Messrs. Branson, Keswick and others who by their behaviour at the Calcutta meeting have shown clearly what stuff they are made of. The question which has brought all this excitement over the Bengal European community lies in a nut-shell, and had the promoters of it duly appreciated and gauged the position taken up by the Supreme Government with regard to the Bill, they would have been convinced that the excitement so caused was utterly needless. It is alleged that the Bill as it now stands deprives an Englishman of his right of being judged by his peers, but so far as we can understand the alleged complaint has no foundation in fact. The Englishman's right of being judged by his peers is equivalent to our system of trial by jury, and in empowering only a few Native Civilian Magistrates to hold trials of European British criminals, the Bill leaves this alleged right wholly untouched. Investment of Native Civilian Magistrates in the mofussil with the above powers is the mere extension of the privilege which Native Magistrates in the Presidency towns have long since been enjoying, and if the latter are considered even by the European community quite fit to try European criminals, we do not see why the trial by their compeers in the interior should be so strongly objected to. It is a strange circumstance that the same Magistrate who is considered fit in every respect in one place should be considered otherwise in another. Apparently the agitation is directed not so much for the retention of the alleged privilege as against the investment of Native Magistrates with the proposed powers. It may be urged that the jury system is not extended to every part of the country, and that therefore the position of European criminals in respect of their privilege would become anomalous. We would propose that wherever trial by jury is not prevalent, arrangements may be made to allow the number of assessors to be Europeans whenever the criminal may happen to be a European, so that to all intents and purposes the privilege of the Remarks on the attitude of Europeans with respect to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

European may not suffer. Difficulties with regard to the want of assistance of good counsel in the mofussil are worthless, and it would only appear strange if they are not pressed with all the force of an argument to gain the object in view. It is also urged that like the Hindus or Mahomedans, who enjoy the benefits of a personal law under certain circumstances, the European British subjects in this country should be allowed the privilege of being tried by Magistrates of their own race. The argument may appear to be sound, but it is not at the same time to be forgotten that if any personal advantage is enjoyed it is only in civil matters, and no one would object to their having a personal law of their own in such matters. But the plea of a personal law only remains in theory, as all Indian law is now being based upon English jurisprudence and all legal enactments, whether civil or criminal, that are now enacted have for their groundwork the principles of British common law. We may not therefore be wrong if we say that the present Indian criminal law is almost personal so far as Europeans in this country are concerned. Consequently the plea of the necessity of a personal law in the case of Europeans loses much of its force. In criminal matters everyone must be tried by the same rules, and we do not see why European British subjects alone should even at this day be not subjected to the same rules. Hitherto there were reasons why Europeans were tried under different rules, but with the advancement of the country the necessity for a separate provision has passed away, and we are not given any sound arguments in support of the same provision being still continued. At the last Tuesday's meeting of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce one of the speakers observed that the introduction of the Bill into the Supreme Council was most inopportune. If by such a remark the speaker meant that the curtailment of their rights would induce Anglo-Indians to put in every obstacle in the way of the other important measures before the Supreme Government, he was to a certain extent right. This ground excepted, no further reasons can be shown to support the argument of inopportuneness. Practically there is no connection whatsoever between the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill and the other measures in the hands of Government. If the European community out here take it into their heads to oppose the other measures of Government because the latter happen to bring in the above-mentioned Bill, their interference would be unjustifiable. There is another reason why the Jurisdiction Bill should be passed into law. It is known to all that many Natives lose their lives at the hands of Europeans, and that the punishments passed on the latter are comparatively mild. If the Bill before the Supreme Council were passed and Native Civilian Magistrates were clothed with powers to try European British subjects, ten to one the life of a Native which is now held at so low a price by the lower orders of the European community would not be so frequently exposed to danger at the hands of many a white lover of shikár. We are not to be understood to say that in every case in which a European is a criminal justice is not done. But the opinion is gaining ground that the punishments inflicted are generally of a mild character and not commensurate with the offences committed. We have every reason to believe that the clothing of the Native Magistrates with these powers will lessen to a certain extent the number of offences which are committed against the lives and persons of the poor inhabitants of the country. The European community may rant and rave, but if the Bill is passed, we seriously believe that the dangers to which the life of a Native is exposed in the mofussil will be considerably lessened. There is another point the European view with regard to which is quite mistaken. They seem to seriously believe that the Bill in question originated with the present Viceroy. Anyone who has taken the trouble to wade through the literature on this subject will have seen that the question primarily originated with the late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, who seems to have taken up the matter and represented the necessity of the measure, and hence the Bill now before the Council. It is not only Lord Ripon but almost all the previous leading administrators of India who are in favour of the law. Under the circumstances it is almost childish in some of the leaders of the European community to tax the present Viceroy with being the prime mover of this piece of legislation when really he has done nothing more than give his support to it like his other predecessors. We are sorry that those who attended the Calcutta meeting should have shown such disrespect to the representative of Her Imperial Majesty, and in doing so should have only laid themselves open to the charge of disloyalty and disrespect to the throne.

Censures the Europeans for taking an attitude of opposition against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

With reference to the meeting of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce held to discuss the provisions of the Jurisdiction Bill, the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 12th March says:—The objections to the obnoxious measure urged at the Chamber's meeting are that the Bill is unnecessary; that it is premature; that it is inopportune; that it has been introduced into the Council without first consulting the community whom it affects; that the trial of Europeans only is a personal law of Europeans as there are other personal laws enjoyed by Natives, and therefore should not be interfered with; that in the mofussil, where the law will operate, there are no facilities for obtaining legal assistance, no public opinion and no press, which are the best guarantees for a fair trial in a Presidency town; and that the official supporters look upon it only theoretically. We shall consider these objections in order. The first three objections have, we think, only to be stated to be refuted. They are on the face of them weak and unsustainable. It has been said that the Natives for whose behoof the measure is intended do not desire it, have not asked for it, that they would be quite content with what they have obtained by the scheme of local self-government and other reforms of Lord Ripon; further, that the law as it stands at present did not work injustice to any party. Now we must emphatically assert that this is a gratuitous misrepresentation. Nothing can be dearer to any enlightened Native than the enjoyment of his just privileges and equality in the eye of the law, as guaranteed by the Queen's Proclamation. The invidious distinctions made by the Criminal Procedure Code have always been felt as unmerited reflections on the Native character and as undue partiality to one class of subjects. The Natives have been meek and uncomplaining, and have been thankful for the small favours occasionally shown them because they know their complaints are like crying in the wilderness and will do them no good. But we deny that their silence can be construed into either indifference, acquiescence, or approval. They always felt strongly about it, but have not raised their voice against it out of sheer helplessness. They would certainly hail the day when the good genius of the English nation would perceive the injustice and remove it. As we have said, every educated Native is not only not indifferent to the fate of Mr. Ilbert's Bill, but is very deeply interested in it, earnestly hopes for its success, and is grateful for the recognition of the evil which it indicates. That the present law is working harmoniously is really no objection to an amendment of it, if it is clear that the law unduly favours one class and thus impliedly casts a slur on the other, and if the amendment will make it work more harmoniously. The argument as to its being premature is based upon the circumstance that there are not at present many Natives in the public service who will be benefited by the change. We should have thought this a reason rather for making the change than against it, for if the number of the recipients of the higher powers is small the possibility of evil is minimized, and the experiment may be safely tried. But the number of qualified Native Magistrates and Judges has nothing to do with the desirability of the change. It is the inherent justice and the morality of the change itself that must be considered. The real question is, should there be different tribunals for different classes of Her Majesty's subjects? and if the principle that all subjects are equal in the eye of the law is once conceded, we fail to see how it can be contended that there should be different tribunals. If the measure is in itself right and just, the sooner it is passed the better, no matter how many persons may claim advantage of it. We doubt not the opposition to the Bill will be as strong twenty years hence as now, though the number of qualified persons will have increased by that time. Then it is urged Government have already too many irons in the fire, and it is not advisable for Government to undertake the present Bill now. The proposed Bill makes only a few alterations in the procedure of criminal courts. We fail to see how it will interfere with the administrative energies of the Government of India. Once the change is made and acquiesced in by the people, it will not require any supervision or direction from the Executive Government. It will be then the function of the High Court to see that the change is worked properly. The Government of India as well as the local Governments will be free to work out the great reforms they have lately initiated. The point that is somewhat strongly made is that Government did not consult the non-official European public whom the change in the law most concerned. We wish Government had taken the precaution of sounding the views of the European community through their representatives, but even as it is Government have only announced their intention of introducing the measure into the Legislative Council. They have not passed the law. They have promised to publish it, and allow full opportunity for its discussion. There is therefore no reason to go into hysterics for such a harmless omission. No doubt the position of Government would have been strengthened if they had fortified themselves by securing the opinions of the non-official Europeans as they did those of the officials, and we venture to think, if Government had taken the precaution before the controversy began, the non-officials would have been quite as unanimously in favour of the Bill as the officials have expressed themselves to be. The non-official European is at least as generous in his impulses as the official, and we confidently believe that we should have got as good a consensus of opinion from the former as from the latter, if only the former had been consulted before the flames of the Calcutta conflagration spread abroad. The objection as to the privilege being personal law is supported by the high authority of Sir James Stephen. With the greatest respect we submit that the personal law here contended for is of a different species than that enjoyed by Natives. The law of property and inheritance—the personal law enjoyed by the Natives—is secured to them by statutes of Parliament, and it is quite consistent with the equal administration of justice to all classes. The Natives do not claim exemption from the jurisdiction of any courts lawfully constituted for the administration of justice. In fact we do not see how any subject is entitled to demur to the jurisdiction of any lawfully constituted court on the ground of the colour, creed or nationality of the individual chosen by Government to preside over the court. The exemption claimed by the ignorant, uncivilized purda lady from appearance in a court can surely not be pitted against the exemption claimed by the enlightened civilized European from trial before a Native Judge. What the European wants is that he shall be tried by Europeans alone. He is quite willing to be governed by the same law, but he requires that Government shall appoint a European in each case where a European offender in concerned. Are Government prepared to yield to such prejudices of every other class of their subjects? What is there to prevent a Hindu, a Pársi, a Mahomedan, a Jew and all the multitudinous classes of Her Majesty's subjects from claiming a court in which one of their own class will preside? Surely the European ought to be ashamed of claiming such childish exemptions. The objection as to the want of legal facilities in the mofussil applies to Europeans as well as to Natives. What is there to put the European in a worse position than a Native, and how is that want remedied by the trial being held by a European? It will be conceded that the officer whom Government appoint is competent to properly discharge the functions of his office, be he Native or European. We fail to see then how other things being equal the European will be at a greater advantage before a European than before a Native Judge. The supporters of this objection do not contend that the Native Judge will be corrupt or venal in the case of a European offender. If there is false evidence against a European, the Judge ought to be as competent to detect it as he is supposed to be in the case of a Native. If Europeans are thus afraid of trusting their liberties to Native Judges, are we to suppose that injustice occurs in all the trials that are held by the Native Judges? Is the liberty of a European more valuable than that of a Native? Really we do not understand, as Mr. Fleming says, what the European fears. As to the theoretical and the practical views of the question, we think those who have to administer the law may be trusted to take a more practical view of the subject than those who are to submit to the law. It cannot be contended with reason, we think, that the Chief Justice and the Civilian Judges of such large experience as those of the High Court should not have considered the state of the mofussil and the moral and intellectual character of their Native subordinates before giving their decision. Another consideration occurs to us which seems to have been overlooked in the discussion. By the definition of a European British subject he need be only born, naturalized or domiciled in the United Kingdom and so forth. Suppose a native of India has a child born in England and brought up and educated in India, and suppose the child growing a man becomes a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge, is he or is he not to exercise jurisdiction over European British subjects? He is himself a European British subject, but how is he better qualified than any other Native Judge or Magistrate to judge? The proper test is, as Sir Charles Aitchison has put it, personal fitness and not birth or race or service distinctions. We trust Englishmen here and in England will adhere to this test, and when the appeal goes to Parliament we trust the question will be discussed and decided according to the broad principles of sound statesmanship. We cannot too highly admire and praise the firmness of the Viceroy and his colleagues, and we trust they will be supported by the enlightened English nation. Meantime our people must be up and doing. We must not be passive listeners in the debate, but must make our voices heard by the Imperial Parliament, and with Government on our side we are sure to succeed. We must not leave every constitutional means untried to secure victory.

Pronounces the strong opposition raised by Europeans against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill a "white mutiny."

The Rást Goftár (105) of the 12th March observes that the "white mutiny" against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill has spread throughout the country. The volunteers were advised to give up their arms, and, according to the telegram received by the Bombay Gazette on the 8th instant from its Calcutta correspondent, an attempt has been made to influence the minds of the British soldiery against the Bill. Now, if inciting the soldiers against the Government be not sedition, what else can it be? And is it not the same offence to instigate the volunteers to lay down their arms? After alluding to the absence of any demonstration evinced by the Calcutta volunteers at the parade held for the distribution of prizes at which Lord and Lady Ripon were present, the Goftár proceeds to remark that the volunteers in the mofussil speak of laying down their arms, and such of the Anglo-Indian newspapers as side with them say that Government may for the sake of pleasing the Natives take away the rights of Europeans, but the latter will not submit to such deprivation without fighting and spilling blood. This excitement shows that several perfidious Europeans have set to the work of encouraging sedition in the country. They hold meetings of Europeans in different cities and towns, and shower on Natives abuses which are quite sufficient to incite Natives and to kindle the flames of mutiny. The attempt to incite the volunteers and the European soldiers proves that certain Europeans are trying to create mutiny and sedition under the plea of Mr. Ilbert's Bill. It is suspected that some enemies of the present administration are at the bottom of this movement, because the alleged cause of the disaffection is so trivial. The Native Magistrates and Judges who will be empowered to try European culprits under the Jurisdiction Bill are not more than a dozen, and experienced and able officers only will be selected for exercising this new power. These officers are of the same standing as the Native Presidency Magistrates who have tried European culprits for several years past without any complaint being made against their decisions. [The Gujaráti (91) of the same date expresses somewhat similar sentiments. The Deshi Mitrá (87) of the 8th March observes that the passing of the Bill will greatly lessen the cases of murderous assaults on Natives by Europeans in the mofussil.]

Remarks on the attitude of Europeans with respect to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

With reference to Mr. Ilbert's Jurisdiction Bill, the Subodh Patrika (11) of the 11th March says:—To all sober, thoughtful and unprejudiced persons the present excitement in the European community all over the country, and especially in Calcutta, must appear altogether unreasonable. The non-official Europeans have indeed made a mountain of a mole-hill and raised a storm in a tea-pot. This is not the first time that the question with regard to the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates over European British-born subjects has been introduced into the Viceregal Council. This subject was fully discussed ten years ago, and was shelved on that occasion only because a majority of 7 against 3 voted against the Bill. Some of the highest Government officials were then in the minority. There was therefore nothing strange or unexpected in the conduct of the present legal member in bringing the same question again before the Council at the instance of the Government of Bengal after the lapse of ten years, during which period liberal principles of government might well be supposed to have made sufficient progress to allow of very glaring and unjustifiable anomaly which still exists in the Indian Criminal Procedure Code remaining on its pages. There is therefore no cause that we can see for the wild excitement of the present moment. We can only look upon it as a flame lighted by ignorance, stirred by selfishness, and fanned into fury by race prejudice. To no other cause can we ascribe the misstatements and misrepresentations of the object and scope of the Amendment Bill, the attribution of interested and party motives to Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert, and the foul and calumnious aspersions that have been cast on the race, the character, and the loyalty of the natives of this country by the excited European populations of Calcutta and other places during the last fortnight. The argument that the Government did not previously sound the sense of the non-official Europeans in the matter is irrelevant to the point, and does not in the least justify the outburst of maddened feeling. As we have observed elsewhere on this subject, what non-official community is ever consulted by the Legislature when any Bill affecting their rights is introduced? Echo answers, what? Every important community has representatives in the Legislative Councils through whom it may speak whatever it has to say on every Bill. This is especially the case with the non-official European community, which though proportionately a small body has always one or more representatives in the Legislative Councils, Imperial as well as Provincial, and in the matter in hand the official classes represent the European much more than the Native. Such flimsy arguments therefore show their own weakness. In such matters the best result is invariably obtained by all parties coolly discussing the subject and helping the Legislature to come to a just, impartial and wise decision and not by hurling abuses at the heads of the Government and the Natives as was done by Mr. Branson of Calcutta.

Remarks on the attitude of the Europeans in Calcutta with reference to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Arunodayá (14) of the 11th March, in commenting upon the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, observes that even the most rampant Anglo-Indian will not dare to say that Native Magistrates are incompetent; and if they are not incompetent, there is no valid reason for not investing them with the power of trying Europeans. Are Native Magistrates to be debarred from trying Europeans because the former are the descendants of the conquered race and the latter the descendants of the conquerors of India? The European agitators of Calcutta make this a special ground for the exemption of Europeans from the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates, but this contention is most impudent and injurious to the best interests of England. The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill did not originate with Lord Ripon. Its provisions were suggested by several high European officials and they were approved by the authorities in England. No sovereign can continue to rule long in opposition to the wishes of his subjects, and foreign domination particularly is likely to suffer from a want of observance of this principle. The Europeans of Calcutta have assumed an attitude of menace towards Government in this matter. This is extremely dangerous, since Natives are likely to imitate the ways of Europeans for whom and for whose opinion they entertain great respect. What would be the result if the Native sepoys were to threaten to lay down their arms in imitation of the conduct of the European volunteers? The contingency of the happening of such an event is extremely improbable; but if it were to come to pass, the blame would rest on the agitators of Calcutta. The threat of the volunteers is most absurd. The natives of India have made much progress during the last fifty years. They have now come to understand their own rights. It is therefore meet that Government should acknowledge this fact and alter the system of administration accordingly. By doing away with the distinction which at present obtains between Natives and Europeans, England will gain eternal glory.

Says that the European agitators against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill have set a bad example to Natives.

In a leader headed "A bad example to Natives," the Rást Goftár (105) of the 11th March observes that Government ought to punish the perpetrators of the "white mutiny" and put down the evil at once. The mutinous Europeans have excited race antipathy between the rulers and the ruled, endangering the peace of the empire. The reckless agitators have set a bad example to Natives to abuse others, to bring false accusation against Government, to be unanimous in opposing a distasteful law, to stop business, to make stormy speeches, and worse than all this, to incite the volunteers and the European soldiers to lay down their arms. There was no law more tyrannical than the defunct Vernacular Press Act, and yet Natives did not on the passing of it make so much as one-hundredth part of the agitation created by Europeans against the Jurisdiction Bill. If Europeans are not prohibited from hatching sedition, Natives will very naturally conclude that the conduct of Europeans is quite legal and constitutional, and might on some future occasion try to walk in the footsteps of their European fellow-subjects. The European agitators denounce Natives in public meetings as rogues, misers, liars and cheats, and abuse their mothers. In the meeting at Calcutta the agitators said that Natives were born vicious and their mothers reared them in vice, and so long as Native mothers are not so good as European dames no Natives should be given jurisdiction over Europeans. [The Yajdán Parast (117) of the same date expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill and remarks in connection therewith.

With reference to the meeting of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce held to discuss the provisions of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Subodh Patrika (11) of the 11th March says:—Then as to the reasons against the Bill, the first is that argued by Sir J. Stephen, namely, that because Natives have personal law, therefore Europeans should have them also. As we observed the other day, the fallacy of this argument lies in the fact that the so-called personal laws relate to property and not to crime as in the case of the Europeans. No Native, whatever his rank or class, has any privilege in criminal matters. The next and the only other argument is that Native Magistrates are not competent to dispense justice, the administration of which in the mofussil is defective. It may be observed in regard to this that the Bill seeks only to invest the Native Civilian Magistrates and Judges who are competent for the task with jurisdiction over Europeans. This ground is met simply by abuse of the Natives and of the Government. A European Magistrate, however young, speaking through interpreters, unacquainted with the inner life and customs of the people, and having nothing to lose for his mistake or his freak, can try any Native however exalted in rank, temporally a Rája, spiritually a high priest,—and if he convicts, the European press and public exult over the triumph of British laws, which recognize no distinction between man and man, and point a moral for the behoof of the castle-ridden Native. But reverse the picture and contemplate the possibility of the trial of a European loafer or a mechanic by a Native officer who knows the English language and literature well, understands English life, and has everything to lose if he knowingly and even unknowingly commits a mistake, and what is the verdict?—why, that the world is going to pieces! Such is the feeling which is brought to bear in judging of the proposed legislation and which even a Christian preacher and a missionary finds it in their conscience to avow and for which Sir J. Stephen supplies an apology! If, as we are told, the result of the passing of the measure be to withdraw European capital from the country, we may say we prefer poverty to vicious legislation and one-sided administration. The resignation of the European volunteers too we can survive—it may result in a little saving of the cost of the accoutrements and the services of a military officer, which we believe are supplied by the State. The threat, however, of "white mutiny"—to borrow the expression of the Times of India, the Bombay champion of the Bengal rowdies,—which is held in terrorem over Government, is not an edifying lesson to Natives or a taking example of loyal behaviour, and Government cannot afford to surrender itself before mere clamour.

Some remarks relating to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Shiváji (59) of the 9th March, in commenting upon the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, observes that in semi-barbarous countries like Turkey, Egypt, China and Japan European culprits are tried by the indigenous authorities of those countries. This being so, it is astonishing that the Europeans in India should raise objections against European offenders being tried by Native gentlemen as well educated as themselves. There can be no doubt that Europeans look upon the natives of India as a contemptible set of human beings. One hundred years of English rule have not made them better, at least such is the opinion of the Europeans in India. Under these circumstances the Natives ought to desire for a termination of their connection with England. But they are far from wishing such a consummation. By contact with Europeans the Natives have made great progress in civilisation. Native Magistrates can be found who are competent to try Europeans guilty of crimes of every degree of heinousness. It is to be regretted that the Native public should appear to be apathetic regarding the fate of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill. Natives should come forward and give their strong support to Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert.

Disapproves of the opposition raised by the press of England to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In noticing the sentiments expressed by the English press on the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Lok Mitrá (74) of the 11th March says :—It appears that, with the creditable exception of the Pall Mall Gazette, all the leading weekly papers more or less have taken their cue from the grossly exaggerated telegram first flashed by that fussy individual known as "the Calcutta correspondent of the Times," and from the highly spiced and one-sided reports sent later on by some of the Calcutta press that is vehemently opposed to Mr. Ilbert's measure. That the Saturday Review should condemn the Bill is no wonder; for it has all along, consistently of course with its Tory politics, done its best to throw ridicule on the more important measures so happily inaugurated by Lord Ripon. And when we take into consideration the fact that certain known Anglo-Indian writers contribute the political and financial articles to the columns of that journal, such one-sided views may be taken for what they are worth. Not that we are intolerant of such views. They would command attention if they were based on facts. But, unfortunately, they are generally a tissue of prejudices and studied perverseness. Only the other day it indicted an article on publicity in Indian legislation which was replete with inconsistencies as to the value of the Vernacular press. The writer then thought very highly of it. Not so when the Gagging Act was passed. Then it was loudest and most acrimonious in its denunciation. It then thought the Vernacular press most potent for mischief; that though limited as to circulation, its contents were extensively made known by being read out in temple and mosque, in every village and hamlet, in every yard and public chauki. As for the politician of the St. James Gazette, it would be simply kindness to pass over his heated and inflated declamations. His utterances are as rabid as those of the Calcutta agitators. But we confess to a feeling of disappointment when so impartial a weekly as the Spectator, which on the whole keeps itself well informed with the views of Natives, should have, in the first wild excitement created by the Calcutta correspondent's telegram, been led away also. Only last year it gave some very sage reflections on the Englishmen's disability to discover the real thoughts and feelings of Indians. The accomplished writer questioned why there was mental seclusion in India. It is this mental seclusion which leads, when such a controversy as the one now unfortunately raging comes to the surface, to bitter antagonistic feelings. If Europeans, Englishmen especially, were to mix more with and conscientiously endeavour to find out the real thoughts of Natives, they would advance the cause of the Indians, and at the same time they would be better able to read the genuine Native character. At present there is too much of race rancour, too much of race pride, too much of sweeping generalization from isolated facts—all contributing in their way to keep alive a feeling of sullen and silent hostility, which it only requires some social or political incident, however trivial, to kindle into a regular conflagration. We dare say when the facts of Mr. Ilbert's proposed amendment begin to be well and faithfully understood, journals of fearless impartiality and liberal sentiments like the London Spectator will be better able to judge of the merits of the present controversy and realise all its hollowness. It must be remembered that while all the noisy diatribes of the leaders of the agitation are being regularly wired to England and taken up as rational arguments the views of the other side are not at all put forth. At the best one influential Native gentleman alone has had the moral courage and patriotic zeal to telegraph to the Pall Mall Gazette the real facts of the case. We are quite sure when the views of the Native press and Native associations, now getting perfectly articulate, are before the British press, there will be a disposition on the part of at least all impartial writers who are free from factious spirit or party heat to judge of Mr. Ilbert's Bill on its own merits. In a controversy of this nature time alone is wanted. It would be hopeless to expect anything like a dispassionate review of the whole question for some weeks yet to come. The great political principle involved is whether a number of foreigners, who at the best do not compose two per cent. of the population, as pointed out by us last week, mere birds of passage who come from purely selfish interests to stay in the country for a time and bid good-bye to it as soon as a decent competence is earned,—whether the interests of such a class of people are to be allowed to have sway at the sacrifice of the true interests of a vast mass of two hundred millions of the population. The question for the British Parliament to consider and once for all to decide is simply this,—whether these temporary settlers, as nine-tenths of European British subjects in India are, have a right to superior privileges not enjoyed by the people at large—privileges not warranted by the Queen's Proclamations issued on two important political occasions—privileges which so long as they last only tend to keep the existing tension of race feelings and animosities to the detriment of that harmony which is essentially imperative in the administration of so vast a country composed of so many races and creeds. In fact, whether, as Macaulay justly observed half a century ago, "Natives of India may well put up with something less than justice, or that Englishmen in India have a title to something more than justice"? That is the real point at issue. All other issues are scarcely relevant, such as the theory of confidence, the fear of miscarriage of justice, and the apprehension of the bag and baggage policy by foreign capitalists. These are vain idols which must be knocked on the head, as they are simply the result of wild fancy, and have very little substratum of reasoning about them. It is to be sincerely hoped that Natives in all parts of the country will lose no time in adopting memorials, at public meetings, setting out the true aspects of the controversy and urging on Her Majesty's Government to sweep away once for all the so-called anomalies. Now or never. Indians may rest assured that this is the most opportune juncture to state their case temperately but firmly. They must organize as vigorously as their opponents are now determined to do. Let them employ all constitutional methods,—aye, raise even a patriotic fund for so national a cause. They must ask for fair field and no favour. And if the British Parliament is true to its time-honoured and traditional instincts, to its horror for all sorts of tyranny and race injustice, to its love of impartiality and equality in law, it must decide in their favour. The reaction must set in. But it depends on our countrymen alone how they set about producing that reaction which shall ultimately give triumph to their cause. There is ample time between this and November next. Let all prepare themselves for this great struggle. For if the cause is not to be fought out now, it will not be fought out for another half a century.

Observes that the Calcutta and other Bengal volunteers ought to be disbanded.

The Yajdán Parast (117) of the 11th March observes that the Calcutta and some other volunteers of Bengal threatened to lay down their arms if the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill was passed into law, and this threat was tantamount to a mutiny. Though they have not yet carried the threat into execution, yet they have given an insult to Lord and Lady Ripon, and this conduct ought not to be passed over without taking due notice of it. They have set a bad example to other volunteer corps and to Natives, and have proved that they cannot be trusted in times of emergency. They ought therefore to be disarmed and disbanded. [The Dátardun (86) of the 8th March disapproves of the inconsiderate conduct of the Calcutta volunteers in the matter.]

Protests against the abuses showered by Europeans on Natives in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

With reference to the uncommon agitation made by Europeans against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Lok Mitrá (74) of the 11th March observes that the Europeans, Eurasians, Jews and Armenians of Calcutta have set an example which has been found contagious and has been imitated by their brethren in all parts of Upper India. Their elegant vocabulary and choice methods of expressing their feelings have been readily drawn upon by the unreasoning rabble that in the name of constitutional agitation have set flowing a seething stream of the most disgraceful and disloyal invective. One of the speakers at the Calcutta meeting elegantly spoke of the jackass kicking the lion; but the performances of some of these inventors of choice Billingsgate do not fall much short of the achievement of their asinine prototype. They bullied and roared, they cursed and they swore, they cheered the Queen, profaned the National Anthem by winding up their riotous blustering with its sacred strains, groaned at Mr. Ilbert, hissed Mr. Gupta, and brayed at Lord Ripon. Never was a spectacle so degrading presented by a body of so-called gentlemen, who took leave of their senses for a while, and are now so ashamed of themselves that they are making frantic efforts to suppress the true picture of their tavern-house proceedings from the just condemnation of the British public. Lord Ripon has truly shown himself the lion of the parable while all these antics are being performed round him ; and convinced as he is that Mr. Ilbert's Bill is not at all calculated to give just cause for the hollow and insensate fury which has been got up, he calmly awaits the verdicts of the British House of Commons. India will confidently rely upon the justness and liberality of that great assembly, which will be swayed only by just and prudent counsels, and set no store by the clamour and seditious spirit which have been so unscrupulously set up. The bullying spirit seems to be still rampant. The disgraceful exhibition made by Mr. Branson having met with just punishment, a number of Europeans have come to his rescue and are abusing the lawyers who rightly resolved to abstain from sociál or professional intercourse with their firebrand orator as conspirators, and some silly people have even held out threats of a criminal prosecution. The only redeeming feature in Mr. Branson's conduct has been that he apologised for his indecent onslaught upon those whom he now acknowledges he esteems as his friends. But surely a man who can so far forget himself as to pander to the feelings of a "responsive" audience at the expense of his unoffending fellow-citizens and to egg on this brainless mob into almost demoniacal fury against their fellow-subjects deserves to be ignored by those whose feelings he so wantonly outraged. [The Bombay Punch (81) of the 17th March condemns the conduct of the Calcutta Europeans who showered abuses on Natives.]

Praises the Natives for not retaliating the abuses showered upon them by the European agitators against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Rást Goftár (105) of the 11th March praises the Natives for not being excited by the abuses showered upon them and their mothers by the European agitators against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, and not retaliating the abuse. Such retaliation would have served no useful purpose and widened the gulf between Europeans and Natives. This attitude of Natives has made the agitators reflect upon their own conduct and has led to desertions among their ranks. Thus Natives have finally gained victory in this distasteful quarrel.

Observes that the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill should not be withdrawn.

The Rást Goftár (105) of the 11th March observes that the telegram to the Bombay Gazette from its London correspondent that Government would withdraw the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill had disappointed the public, who therefore anxiously awaited the proceedings of the last meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council. The introduction of the Bill into the Council and its further progress have driven away the fear, at all events for the present. It ought to be remembered that a serious mistake would be made if the Bill were withdrawn. The very reasons advanced by the Rást Goftár for making no delay in passing it apply mutatis mutandis to its withdrawal. The Europeans who have raised improper and disloyal opposition to the measure would rejoice over its rejection, and an impression would be created that because the faults found by them with Natives were true and Government were convinced of the same the Bill was withdrawn. It would have been better that the Bill should not have been introduced into the Council at all than that it should be rejected now. [The Gujaráti (91) of the same date and a correspondent of it make somewhat similar remarks.]

In noticing the great excitement prevailing among the Europeans in India and the vehement agitation made by some of them in opposition to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 11th March observes that the Natives ought not to retaliate the abuses showered on them by some inconsiderate Europeans, and disapproves of the strong writings upon the subject which appeared in the Amrit Bazar Patrika. In the midst of these race conflicts the Jurisdiction Bill as it now stands should be withdrawn and a sensible compromise should be made. The local Governments should be authorized to convene a bench of European and Native Judges to try a European offender whenever it be thought fit to do so. The system of mixed juries might also be advantageously introduced. This mode of trial should be adopted till Europeans are everywhere perfectly used to the justice dispensed by Natives. It is not worth while annoying Europeans on an isolated point while India stands greatly in need of various services from that community. In noticing the meeting of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce for protesting against the Jurisdiction Bill, the Mitrá admires the moderation and decorum which characterized its proceedings, and observes that they are likely to secure due attention on the part of the Supreme Government. With regard to the protest made by the Native members of the Chamber against taking up the subject at all, the Mitrá remarks that it was not beyond the scope of the meeting to discuss the question of jurisdiction. If the European members honestly believed that their community in India had grounds for feeling that the legislative measure would be repugnant to their feelings, they were warranted in saying that European enterprize in the country might be affected. There is however no reason whatever to suppose that European enterprize would suffer because half a dozen Native Civilians were clothed with jurisdiction over Europeans. The Chamber, however, is not likely to get all it wants, for in fairness it ought not to get all that. To speak of a revolting miscarriage of justice under the auspices of Native Civilians, while it is all that is desirable under covenanted Europeans, is a partial and groundless statement.

Suggests a compromise in the matter of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In noticing the agitation made by Europeans against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Gujaráti (91) of the 11th March describes a case alleged to have occurred about five years ago in which some Native cultivators accused two Europeans of beating them. The case was tried by a mofussil Magistrate, who did not believe the evidence produced by the prosecutors, and declared the accused not guilty. The description alleges partiality on the part of the Magistrate towards his countrymen.

States a case in which a European Magistrate was partial to his countrymen who were accused of assault by two Native cultivators.

The Svadesh Vatsal (111) for the month of Fálgun (March) approves of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, condemns the great agitation made by Europeans as unnecessary and uncalled for, and hopes that the measure will be soon passed. The arguments set forth are similar to those used by most other vernacular newspapers, and noticed at length in the previous weekly summaries. [The Gujarát Monthly Journal (92) for the month of Paush (January) points out the invidious distinction made between European and Native offenders as regards their trial and punishment, and hopes that this defect in the British law, which ought to be the same for all classes without distinction of race or creed, will be soon removed.]

Approves of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 11th March says:—The Native community has now seen in what light the heaven-born subjects of Her Majesty, sent by the Almighty Jesus in his infinite mercy to rule over us, look upon the poor black-complexioned Hindu. The pride of race and intellectual superiority have now come forward in all their bareness unsoftened by any feeling of sympathy for their fellow-subjects. While on the one hand we are pained to speak thus of one class of Europeans, we cannot at the same time help thanking another class of Europeans of a different type. Though they appear to be in the minority, their voice being drowned in the tall talk of the Calcutta pseudo-patriots, they are doing their duty manfully and honestly. They are trying to uphold the national character of England for uprightness and liberality of views. The proceedings of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce in this matter were quite in keeping with its traditional policy. They were marked by a singular absence of any race feeling or expression of contempt for the Natives. Their views may differ from ours, still we cannot but admire the straightforward and polite manner in which they were expressed. The Native members of the Chamber have acted wisely in putting on record their protest. On the whole we are glad that the Bombay Presidency has signally proved that in intellectual capacity it carries the palm of all others in India.

Approves of the way in which the proceedings of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce were conducted in the matter of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Remarks upon the Proceedings of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce at a meeting on the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In noticing the proceedings of the meeting of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce held on the 6th instant in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Rást Goftár (105) of the 11th March expresses gratification that the Chamber did not shower abuse on Natives as was done by some speakers at the meeting of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, but is sorry that the Bombay Chamber disallowed the protest made by the Native members against taking up the subject at all. The Goftár also regrets that Messrs. Thorburn, Mowat and Bythel, the principal speakers in the meeting, offended Natives by observing that a Native Magistrate, however well educated, will be unable to do justice in a case in which an European is an accused party in the mofussil; that the crime of perjury prevails extensively among Natives, and that therefore if they conspire against a European the Native Magistrate will not be able to do justice. The speakers otherwise praised Natives, but the shortcoming they have attributed to them is not light, and the Native members of the Chamber ought to sever their connection with it. The Goftár is much pleased with the communications from Professor Wordsworth and Mr. John Fleming, C.S.I., in support of the Bill, published in the Bombay Gazette, and severely censures Mr. Edalji Jamsetji Khory, Barrister-at-Law, for opposing the Bill. [The Gujaráti (21) and the Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the same date express somewhat similar sentiments. The Yajdán Parast (117) of the same date expresses sentiments similar to those put forth by the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 8th instant and noticed at page 15 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending the 10th instant.]

Local Self-government.

Thinks that the arrangements for local self-government in this Presidency are unsatisfactory.

The Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 12th March observes that although there is very little time left between this and the introduction of the imperial scheme of local self-government into this Presidency, yet the Bombay Government have not published the arrangements they propose to make in regard to that scheme. Looking at the movements going on at Ahmedabad, Surat and other important places, it seems that the lists of wards, voters and candidates have been settled, and the day fixed for the election is the 20th instant. So far it is all right, but looking closely into the matter it appears that Government have not deviated in the least from their original obstinate course. It has been settled for Surat that twenty-four commissioners will manage municipal affairs, twelve of whom will be returned by the rate-payers and twelve by Government, who will nominate either Government officials or private individuals. This arrangement is objectionable, but the one said to have been made for Ahmedabad is still more so. Twenty-eight delegates are to sit on the municipal board of the city, of which twelve will be returned by the rate-payers and sixteen by Government, who will appoint some Government officials and some private individuals. The presidents of the municipal boards for the towns of Nadiád, Viramgám and several others will, it is said, be non-officials, but the presidents of the boards of Surat and Ahmedabad will be the Collectors of the respective districts. Thus the two great excellences of the original scheme of self-government have disappeared from the arrangements made for this Presidency. If these are the final arrangements for carrying out the scheme, they are not different from the existing state of things and will not give effect to the intentions of Lord Ripon. The cities and towns of the mofussil and the political associations of the Presidency ought to ascertain whether the above statements are true, and if so, to protest against them.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 12th March observes that after the publication of the imperial scheme of local self-government the Bombay Government issued a resolution to the effect that half the number of the municipal board would be returned by the rate-payers and the remaining half by Government. It was also declared that there should be twenty-four members on each board. But in their resolution No. 761, dated the 21st ultimo, which gives the rules for the elections at Surat, Government have declared that the corporation of the city should consist of twenty-eight delegates, and that sixteen of them will be returned by Government and twelve by the rate-payers. These rules will be adopted at a special general meeting of the corporation. The said Government resolution has given rise to much comment. The intention of the imperial scheme was to give preponderance to the representatives of the rate-payers, but the Bombay Government have decided to admit a larger number of Government nominees than those of the rate-payers. The people of Surat therefore believe that under this arrangement the real object of the local self-government scheme will not be carried out.

Complains that Government have decided that in the municipal boards of Surat the number of the Government delegates should be larger than that of the rate-payers.

The Gujaráti (91) of the 11th March says that a non-official president will not be appointed under the local self-government scheme in any place except Surat, and this decision has, it is said, been arrived at on a report made by the different Collectors. It is very strange that Mr. Jagjiwandás alone should have been found fit for the presidentship. Have the Collectors made a close search for competent persons? asks the Gujaráti.

Is sorry that at no other place except Surat will a non-official president be appointed under the scheme of local self-government.

Municipalities.

The Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 11th March observes that the proposal initiated by the Collector of Customs, Salt and Opium and taken up by Government that the duties levied on beer, wines and spirits by the municipality of Bombay are illegal and should be given up, is evidently based upon wrong assumptions and a mistaken reading and erroneous construction of the views and orders of the Government of India on the subject. The Municipal Commissioner has, however, satisfactorily explained that the meaning of these orders and their bearing on the municipality are different from the construction put upon them by Government. He has proved that the duties are perfectly legitimate and in accordance with the views and sanction of the authorities; and that the revenues arising therefrom having been made amongst others the basis for guarantees for various loans raised by the municipality for important sanitary works, they cannot be well abolished. He has also urged that if Government persist in their view of the case as now propounded, and insist on depriving the Corporation of their legitimate source of income, they will have to make adequate compensation for the same from the provincial revenues. It is therefore to be hoped that Government will pay all due consideration to Mr. Olivant's arguments.

Says that the town duties levied on beer, wines and spirits in Bombay should not be repealed.

A correspondent of the Yajdán Parast (117) of the 11th March disapproves of the resolution of the Surat Municipal ty to extend the local public garden, as the park is quite sufficient for the wants of the city, and recommends that the corporation should provide a good supply of water for the city, from the absence of which the citizens are suffering a great many inconveniences. The Parast supports the complaint and prayer of the correspondent, and recommends them to the favourable consideration of the authorities concerned. [The Surya Prakásh (76) of the 10th March expresses similar sentiments.]

Says that the city of Surat stands in sad need of a good supply of water.

Native States.

The Gujarát Monthly Journal (92) for the month of Paush (January) observes that the game law has been in force in Káthiáwár for the last two years, but has done no good. On the other hand it has caused considerable inconvenience Suggests that the game law in Káthiáwár ought to be abolished.

and misery to Vághris, Kolis and other poor classes who maintained themselves on the produce of the chase. To the agriculturists also the law has caused no little inconvenience. They used to fire guns to frighten away animals from their fields and never used shot except when the animals which attacked their fields were large game on whom the mere report of a gun produced no effect. The agriculturists are afraid of using fire-arms for the protection of their crops for fear of being charged with the infringement of the game law. The law is enforced in the case of poor people alone; the high class European travellers, the Girásiás, Jamádárs and other rich classes can kill game whenever they like without obtaining any license. The Shrávaks and the Hindus who do not use flesh ought not to be glad for this law, for it does not totally prohibit the destruction of game, but allows it being done in certain seasons. The rich people alone can get licenses while the poor people only suffer inconvenience. There is no necessity for this law, and it is to be hoped that the Political Agent and the representatives of the Native States will abolish it at their approaching annual meeting.

Approves of the action taken by the Bombay Government with regard to the oppression exercised by the Dhrángadra State over the girásiás of Satápar.

The Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 9th March expresses joy at the action taken by the Bombay Government in the matter of the complaints of the girásiás of Satápar against the oppression exercised over them by the Dhrángadra State. Fortunately the Dhrángadra authorities have not succeeded in their plan of depriving the poor girásiás of their girás. It is well known that the potentates of Káthiáwár are at present resorting to various tricks to deprive the girásiás of their girás. The oppression of the Pálitána Darbár on the girásiás of Timba and that of the Vánkáner Darbár on a Bráhman landholder are well known. There was likelihood of the repetition of the Junágad tragedy at Satápar, but the timely interference of Government restored peace and protected the rights of the tálukdárs. The Rája of Dhrángadra and other arbitrary Native kings ought to remember from this case that they will not succeed in their unworthy objects.

Attitude to be observed by the members of the Bombay Government towards the authorities of the Junágad Darbár in the matter of the massacre of the Maiyás.

With reference to the Junágad massacre, the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 12th March says:—It will be a satisfaction to the tender-hearted citizens of Bombay and elsewhere to learn that the Kárbhári of Junágad with his subordinates in the service of the Chief of Junágad has come down to Bombay. There is a report current that Colonel Watson's enquiry, although it was private, has ended somewhat unfavourably to the Junágad Government. Whether this is true or not, the presence of the Kárbhári in Bombay indicates that the Government of Sir James Fergusson does not mean to let the affair alone. We hear that the Kárbhári and his men have come down here to explain themselves to Government. We should all wish them success; but we would beg to offer one suggestion in the interests of justice. The Maiyás are yet unrepresented; neither such of them as died heroically on the Kanada Hill nor the survivors can send their man to Bombay. Any explanation, therefore, that the Darbár of Junágad may have to offer should be submitted in writing, and all personal or official interviews with either His Excellency or any member of Council or Secretary should be strictly prohibited. There should be no oral explanation allowed. The question is of a serious nature. A large number of men have been admittedly slaughtered by the Junágad Sibandi. The question to be determined is, whether under the circumstances the Sibandi acted on the offensive or defensive. The burden lies on the Darbár to prove that the conduct of their Sibandi was such as to justify this deed; and while the Darbár ought to be allowed all reasonable facility in proving this, Government ought to allow nothing that shall give the public reason to think that the authorities have been somewhat lenient in the matter.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
24th March 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

British Government: Praises of the — for the many political boons conferred upon India by it 3
Death of Natives caused by European soldiers: The best means of preventing — is to prevent the soldiers from going on hunting excursions 6
Egyptian War: Remarks in connection with the cost of the Indian contingent in the 6
Kerosine oil: A suggestion for not admitting certificates given in America about the quality of the — imported into Bombay ... 7
Land Improvement Act of 1871: Causes of the inoperativeness of the — and takávi advances 3
Liquor shops at Surat: A suggestion that all — should be closed on particular holidays 7
Mhowra Bill Commission: A reply to the 31st question asked by the ... 7
Representative Government in India: Remarks in connection with Colonel Osborne's proposal for the abolition of the Supreme Government and the introduction of 3
Salt: A complaint regarding the prohibition of the importation of — by sea into Guhágar and the neighbouring villages 5
Salvation Army:
A censure on the Bombay authorities for their attitude towards the... 8
Approval of the conviction and punishment of Major Tucker of the . 8
Term of office:
An exhortation to the natives of India to memorialize Her Imperial Majesty the Queen to extend the — to Lord Ripon... ... 5
Remarks in connection with the petitions for the extension of the — to Lord Ripon 4
Vaccinators in Kaládgi: Want of 5

PART II.—The New Budget—

The Budget Statement for 1883-84: Criticisms on the—
The Bombay Samáchár 8
The Jáme Jamshed 9

PART III.—Legislation—

Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill:
A case showing the partiality of a European Magistrate to his countrymen accused of assault by two Native cultivators ... 22
A censure on the Europeans for their attitude of opposition against the... 14
A protest against the abuses showered by the Calcutta and other Europeans on Natives in connection with the 20
A suggestion for a compromise in the matter of the 22
An exhortation to the people of the mofussil to submit to the Viceroy in Council memorials in support of the 12
An observation to the effect that the — should never be withdrawn . 21
Approval of the 22
Approval of the way in which the proceedings of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce were conducted in the matter of the ... 22
Disapproval of the opposition raised by the press of England against the... 19
Lessons derivable from the recent agitation against the ... 9
Opposition of the Honourable Rája Shivprasád to the — characterized as proceeding from selfish motives 11
Praises of the Natives for not retaliating the abuses showered on them by the European agitators against the 21
Regret at the enactment of the — being left to the decision of Parliament 11
Remarks on the—
The Shiváji 18
The Subodh Patrika 18
Remarks on the attitude of Europeans with respect to the—
The Arunodayá 17
The Native Opinion 12
The Subodh Patrika 16

Page.

PART III.—Legislation—(continued)

Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill—(continued)
Remarks on the discussions in the Supreme Legislative Council on the 10
Remarks on the proceedings of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce in the matter of the 23
The Calcutta and some other Bengal volunteers ought to be disbanded 20
The European agitators against the — have set a bad example to the Natives 17
The strong opposition raised by Europeans against the — termed a "white mutiny" 16

PART IV.—Local Self-government—

Local self-government: Arrangements for — in the Bombay Presidency unsatisfactory 23
Local self-government at Surat:
A complaint that Government have decided that in the local municipal board the number of Government delegates should be larger than that of the rate-payers 24
Sorrow at the decision of Government to nominate a non-official president at Surat only 24

PART V.—Municipalities—

Bombay Municipality: A prayer for the non-abolition of the town duties levied by the — on beer, wines and spirits 24
Supply of water in the city of Surat: Sad need of a good 24

PART VI.—Native States—

Dhrángadra State: Approval of the action taken by the Bombay Government with regard to the oppression exercised by the — over the girásiás of Satápar 25
Game law in Káthiáwár: A prayer for the abolition of the 24
Junágad—Slaughter of the Maiyás: Attitude to be observed by the members of the Bombay Government towards the authorities of the Junágad Darbár in the matter of the 25

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

RECEIVED 17 APR 83

[CONFIDENTIAL]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 24th March 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly ...	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do. ...	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly ...	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Dín Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	925
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do. ...	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do. ...	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do. ...	575
11	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do. ...	600
12	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do. ...	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly.	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly ...	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do. ...	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do. ...	260
18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do. ...	275
*19	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do. ...	200
20	„ Daivadnyă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
21	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
22	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly ...	425
23	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do. ...	140
24	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do. ...	116
25	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do. ...	100
26	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do. ...	285
27	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do. ...	85
28	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly.	400
29	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
30	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	145
31	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do. ...	130
*32	„ Karnátak Mitră[4]	Belgaum	Do. ...	200
33	„ Kesari	Poona	Do. ...	3,500
34	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do. ...	125
35	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	300
36	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly ...	220
37	„ Mahárâshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly ...	1,000
38	„ Mahárâshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do. ...	250
39	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly ...	100
40	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	150
41	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do. ...	100
42	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly ...	700
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Do.	Do. ...	200
44	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly ...	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do. ...	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do. ...	103
47	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do. ...	250
48	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily ...	350
*49	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly ...	200
50	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti).	Do. ...	200
*51	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly ...	200
52	„ Saddharm Díp	Alíbág	Do. ...	600
53	„ Satyă Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ..	243
54	„ Satyă Sadan	Alíbág	Weekly ...	400
55	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do. ...	140
56	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly...	275
*57	„ Sharabh	Alíbág	Weekly ...	200
*58	„ Shetakari	Poona	Monthly ...	400
59	„ Shiváji[3]	Do.	Weekly ...	200
60	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do. ...	90
*61	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do. ...	200
62	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do. ...	150
63	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do. ...	240

[1] Maráthi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles.
[4] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
64	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly	600
65	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly	250
66	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
67	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
68	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*69	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
70	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*71	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
72	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do.	400
73	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
74	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	725
75	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
76	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
77	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
78	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
79	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
80	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
81	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
82	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	950
83	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
84	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
85	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
86	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
87	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do.	1,000
*88	„ Dnyán Prasárak	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
89	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
90	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
91	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*92	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
93	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*94	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
95	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
96	„ Kaira Vartmán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*97	„ Kaisar-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
98	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
99	„ Kusum Guchhá	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
100	„ Nágar Udayá	Do.	Do.	300
101	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
102	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
103	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
104	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
105	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
106	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
107	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	400
*108	„ Sauráshtrá Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
109	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*110	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
111	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
112	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár	Umreth	Fortnightly	62
*113	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
114	„ Vartmán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
115	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
116	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	300
117	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
118	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*119	„ Karnátak Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
	URDU.
*120	The Altáf	Bombay	Weekly	200
*121	„ Armagán	Do.	Do.	200
*122	„ Dabdabe Islám[5]	Do.	Do.	200
123	„ Khayir Kháhe Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly	300
124	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
*125	„ Muzhire Shawkatul Islám	Do.	Do.	200
	PERSIAN.
126	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles. [5] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases, an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out; and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well-known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No, 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Approves of the new resolution of the Government of India on grazing lands and cattle fodder.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 18th March says:—The Government of India's efforts for the improvement of agriculture seem to be unceasing. It has issued another resolution on the importance of protecting existing grazing lands and otherwise devising a systematic method whereby fodder reserves may be established. This very able and suggestive resolution is most welcome, and it will be a satisfaction to friends of the country to hear that the experiments to be made in Upper India and elsewhere are likely to prove fruitful. The conservation of grazing land and the protection of cattle have an important bearing on the economical question of the day. Whatever tends to their improvement must necessarily benefit the agriculturist. The steps now taken will be a fresh link in the chain of the general legislation for the amelioration of the ryot's condition, for which Lord Ripon's Government is so anxious. The opinions of local Governments are solicited in the same matter. We shall welcome them with equal pleasure. [The Dátardun (86) of the 22nd March praises Lord Ripon for issuing this resolution.]

Recommends that competitive examinations for clerkships in Government offices should be held in the Bombay and other presidencies.

With reference to the competitive examinations for clerkships in Government offices recently held in Calcutta, the Jáme Jamshed (95) observes that in preparing students for the Matriculation Examination sufficient attention is not paid to the study of the English language and the practice of English composition, and in support of this assertion it may be remarked that scarcely one-fourth of the students who passed the last Matriculation Examination of the Bombay University were able to write a note in correct English. It is desirable that increased attention should be paid to the acquisition of English than is done at present. There is a universal complaint in the Bombay and other presidencies that vacant situations in Government offices are given away on recommendations, and hence incompetent persons are frequently employed. Competitive examinations for clerkships in Government offices should be held in all presidencies, and matriculated candidates should be given preference over others.

Promotion among Subordinate Judges and remarks in connection therewith.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 19th March in a Maráthi leader quotes the opinions of a correspondent on the subject of promotion in the Judicial Department. The correspondent states that the present system of giving promotion among Subordinate Judges is very defective. When any vacancy occurs in the higher grades, Subordinate Judges obtain promotion by mere seniority, no attention being paid to the nature or quality of their work. The result is that there is little incentive for good and able men to exert themselves, while bad and indifferent Judges do not suffer for their shortcomings. Again if in granting promotion no distinction is made between those who are corrupt and those whose character for integrity stands high, there is no reason why officers should abstain from accepting bribes. The number of corrupt officials is by no means small. In commenting upon the above statement, the Indu Prakásh observes that as the law at present stands the giver and taker of bribes are equally liable to punishment under the Penal Code. Under this system there is great inducement for bad Judges to carry on their nefarious practices. It would be well if promotion among Subordinate Judges were regulated according to the quality of their work. There is an easy way of testing this. The Appellate Courts have good opportunities for judging of the capacities of the Judges in the lower Courts when appeals are made from the decisions of the latter to the former. Promotion should be withheld from any Judge who has acquired notoriety for corruption. The section of the Penal Code relating to the giver of bribes should be repealed, and acceptors of bribes should alone be made liable to punishment.

Rumoured abolition of the Judgeship at Kaládgi and remarks in connection therewith.

The Dnyán Bodhak (23) of the 18th March says that it has heard that it is intended to abolish the Judgeship at Kaládgi and to transfer certain tálukas of the Kaládgi District in which the Kánarese language is spoken to the jurisdiction of the Judge at Dhárwár. The Dnyán Bodhak considers such a step inadvisable. It would be better to transfer the head-quarters of the Kaládgi District to Bijápur and to retain a District Judge at that station. If there is not sufficient work to keep a Civil and Sessions Judge fully employed, the judicial work of a few tálukas in the Sholápur Collectorate should be transferred to his jurisdiction. The Dnyán Bodhak trusts that the Judgeship of the Kaládgi District will not be abolished.

Scarcity of water in the Bhimthadi Táluka.

A correspondent of the Din Bandhu (5) of the 18th March states that in the Bhimthadi Táluka great scarcity of water is being felt. The yield of the crops has been very scanty owing to the failure of the rains, and the agriculturists are in great distress because they are unable to find water for their cattle. They are thinking of migrating to other places with their cattle. Great want of water is also felt at the Pátas station.

Damage to kharif crops in the Dhárwár District.

The Chandrodayá (118) of the 10th March says that much damage has been done to kharif crops in the district of Dhárwár owing to the fall of rain having been unseasonable and heavy. Even the rabi crops have suffered. The ryot has come into great difficulties. He will have to incur debt to meet the assessment. How can the poor ryot maintain himself under such circumstances? It is to be hoped that Government will take measures to remedy the evil.

Construction of a bridge over the creek near Sajot in the Broach District.

The Satyá Mitrá (107) of the 18th March requests the Executive Engineer of Broach to construct without delay a bridge on the creek near Sajot as the people of Shakarpor Bháta will not be able to remove to the former village as ordered by Government unless the bridge is ready. As sanction has already been given for the construction of the work, no delay should be made in commencing it.

Takes exception to a certain remark of the Pioneer regarding the employment of Natives in the Public Works Department.

The Subodh Patrika (11) of the 18th March says:—The Pioneer thinks it is witty when it remarks that it would regard with less aversion the policy of the Government of India in the matter of the employment of Natives in the Public Works Department if the ricketty serais which the new engineers will build would be certain to fall in on some of Lord Ripon's political advisers. The writer was not abashed by the recollection of the notorious tumbling down of barracks which were constructed by European engineers at Allahabad itself years ago. We would recommend him to ponder over the surprise expressed by the London Spectator that the descendants of those who had constructed the ghâts over the Ganges at Benares and irrigation tanks and (we may add) the numerous temples and other edifices all over the country, which appear everlasting compared with the edifices made by European engineers, should be thought incompetent to serve in the Public Works Department. If the incompetency is a fact, it can only be due to the education imparted in the schools and colleges taught by European engineers and scientific men. How will the Pioneer like this conclusion?

Regrets that Major Tucker of the Salvation Army should have been made to wear a convict's dress.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 23rd March regrets that Major Tucker of the Salvation Army was taken to the High Court in a convict's dress to plead his appeal to the Court. The Major committed neither theft, nor fraud, nor any heinous offence. When a defrauding insolvent who has cheated his creditors is put to no inconvenience whatever beyond a certain restraint on his liberty, the Salvationists' leader certainly did not deserve the treatment accorded to the perpetrator of an odious crime. In England persons guilty of the offence of which Major Tucker has been convicted are not subjected to any indignities beyond a certain restraint on their liberty. Neither the police nor the jail authorities can be blamed for the treatment accorded to the Major, which ought to be put to the account of the Indian law regarding jail discipline. It is desirable that this law should be amended at the earliest opportunity.

The New Budget.

Considers the budget statement for 1883-84 satisfactory.

The Lok Mitrá (74) of the 18th March says:—The financial statement just made by Major Baring is satisfactory as far as it goes. If it had not been for the heavy cost of the Egyptian Expedition, which amounts to nearly 80 lákhs of rupees, the surplus at the end of the current year would have amounted to close upon 86 lákhs, which could easily have been applied to works of public utility. If the Indian Exchequer had not been burdened with the payment of the 80 lákhs towards the cost of the war in Egypt, the available surplus could have been utilised in reducing the extent of the proposed new loan to a material degree, and thus the ever increasing burden of India's debt and payment of interest thereon would have been lightened. The estimates of revenue and expenditure for the next year, which it is said have been very carefully framed, show an anticipated surplus of about 45 lákhs of rupees. It is to be hoped that no unforeseen contingency will arise to absorb this surplus or create a necessity for a fresh loan. It might naturally have been expected that in view of this large surplus some modifications would have been made in the incidence of the iniquitous license tax; but though the Government recognize the inequalities in the incidence of that tax no change has been proposed, and the Government reserves to itself full liberty to deal with it hereafter. This is perhaps to be regretted, though it is a subject for congratulation that it has not been found necessary to levy any fresh taxes or increase the burden of existing ones. The loss by exchange continues to increase year after year, and it is impossible to say when this heavy drain on India's resources will cease. The opium revenue affords another ground for serious consideration. The strength and extent of the agitation set on foot by influential anti-opiumists in England and the rapidly growing demand for the Chinese indigenous drug ought to warn a person against congratulating India on the stability of her financial situation. The anxiety arising from this circumstance, coupled with the admitted fact that the burden of taxation is daily weighing more and more heavily on the people of the country, ought to prevent optimist writers from indulging in raptures on the supposed sound and healthy state of her finances. Perhaps the gloomy picture of the Hyndman school of political economists is overdrawn, but no more are the sanguine assertions and cheerful anticipations of their opponents based on a truer appreciation of the real financial condition of the country. There is perhaps as little justification for the gloomy forebodings of the one class of writers as for the triumphant jubilee of the other, but there can be no manner of doubt that the most judicious management and the most stringent economy in all branches of expenditure are absolutely necessary if it is intended to prevent India from drifting into insolvency. [The Bombay Chronicle (71), the Rást Goftár (105) and the Yajdán Parast (117) of the 18th and the Bombay Punch (81) of the 24th March also express satisfaction with the arrangements of the budget.]

Makes further remarks on the budget statement for 1883-84.

In again noticing the revised estimates for 1882-83 and the budget statement for 1883-84, the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 19th March observes:—That the expenses of the empire come up nearly to the amount of the revenues every year is a fact by no means satisfactory. In some years there is a surplus, but it is very small, and sometimes there is a deficit. Even the petty dealer is seldom so indiscreet as to spend all his earnings; while in the case of this large empire it is otherwise. The two principal grievances from which India suffers at times and which make a heavy demand on her resources are famine and war, and it is only reasonable to lay by a certain sum annually to meet sudden calls. The necessary saving can be effected by curtailing certain items of expenditure. About four krors of rupees disappear annually from loss in exchange. If England were to introduce a bi-metalic currency as advised by able French, American, English and Indian financiers, this loss would be prevented. About eight krors of rupees are annually spent on non-productive public works. This item should be abolished totally. If however some provision needs to be made for these works, the amount set apart for productive public works should be indented upon. To spend about twenty krors of rupees annually is not certainly discreet, considering the financial situation of the country. Nearly sixteen krors of rupees are spent upon the army and the same amount is required to meet the home charges, and due economy can be well exercised in regard to them. Fifteen krors are incurred for civil charges in India, and this item may be curtailed by employing in several places Natives on comparatively small emoluments. It is to be regretted that even Major Baring carries the impression that India possesses the ability to supply as much money as may be required on an emergency. It is true that Indian revenues are pliable, but an increase in them inflicts great hardships on her people.

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Remarks in connection with the attitude of Europeans regarding the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

With reference to the Jurisdiction Bill, the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 19th March says:—The representative associations in India have already combined in sending a joint memorial to the Government of India on the subject. But that is clearly not enough. The matter ought to be placed in the hands of Mr. Bright, Mr. Fawcett and Mr. O'Donnell, who have hitherto advocated the cause of the people of India from their places in Parliament. They should be supplied with facts and arguments bearing on the principle of the Bill. It would be well if public meetings were called at the more important towns in this country and memorials on the question to the House adopted. But the danger that at such meetings the speakers may be carried away by sentiment and unconsciously led to imitate the unfortunate example of Mr. Branson has hitherto prevented the leaders of the Native community in the Presidency towns from convening public meetings. But now that some of the Anglo-Indian papers in Calcutta still persist in calling upon European citizens in India to unite and fight for their cause, the silent attitude of Natives is likely to be misconstrued into tacit approval of the principles or policy of the opposition. That there is very great likelihood of this misconstruction of the Native sentiment on the Bill would appear from the ingenious but incorrect statement which the Times of India made a few days ago to the effect that the Natives themselves did not care for the Bill. The slightest want of vigilance on the part of Natives is under these circumstances calculated to seal the fate of the Bill, and it is not for the sake of the Bill alone that the people of India are bound to be vigilant. If the Bill is rejected or withdrawn, there is every chance that every attempt in future to give Natives similar privileges would be strongly opposed. What is really on trial now is not whether Native Civil Servants and Magistrates are fit to try European offenders, but whether Natives can successfully co-operate and oppose the agitation of those who think it a menace to British prestige to give the people of India any new rights or privileges. In view of these circumstances it is but advisable and even necessary that the case should be placed in the hands of some members of the House of Commons. In making this suggestion we cannot lose sight of a fact to which attention has been called and the significance of which is worth consideration. The passing of the Bill into law is sure, it is said, to set the European and Native communities by the ears and perpetuate the existence of race antipathy, which all had thought had died away or was dying away, but which the present Bill has unfortunately called out to a considerable degree. The Bombay Gazette, whose utterances on this vexed controversy have been remarkable for their respectable tone and which has discussed the question with a freedom from bias that is admirable, alludes to this circumstance and suggests a compromise to Government. The suggestion is that it should be left optional for a European British offender to be tried by one of his race or a Native.

By acting upon it, says the Gazette, the Government might be able to close a very unwelcome controversy, which cannot be long continued without great risk of permanent estrangement between two races, upon whose harmony and co-operation the welfare of Her Majesty's Indian subjects depends. It quotes the opinion of an experienced Calcutta resident, who thinks that it were well the Bill were withdrawn, lest it should, if passed into law, divide the two communities in India. But it seems to us that the withdrawal of the Bill will be equally unfortunate. The Native community will very naturally ascribe the withdrawal to the feeling of antipathy, by which those who oppose the Bill are admittedly actuated. To recede now would be to encourage the so-called advocates of British prestige and discourage the Natives altogether; to give an unworthy handle to the hauteur of the former and inspire the latter with feelings of distrust and hatred against Government. As the Viceroy has put it, the reform now proposed will have to be carried out sooner or later, and rather than carry it out when the number of Native Civil Servants will be large, why not carry it now, when their number is so small that the reform has every chance of being carefully carried out and watched? As to the permanent estrangement between the two races, we submit it is unavoidable under any circumstances, so long as Europeans and Eurasians make common cause of what is after all a sentimental grievance and wish to keep Natives down merely because their colour is different. The fault is not with the Natives. The right to hold certain offices in the empire implies the right to exercise all the rights appertaining to those offices, and it is but natural that Natives raised to such offices should feel it an insult to be debarred from trying European British subjects. There are only two reasons worth the name of argument urged in defence of this bar. The first is that it is the birth-right of a European to be tried by his own peers; that it is his personal law; and that it is founded exactly on the same principle as that according to which purda ladies are exempted from appearance in court. The civil or private law of a country is different from its criminal or public law. In the former the question is as between A and B; in the latter as between the Empress vs. A. If knowing that a purda lady is exempted from appearance in court A enters into some transaction with her, he does it with his eyes open and is estopped from contending that the exemption is unjust. When a European commits an offence, is Her Majesty to be held estopped from contending that he shall be tried by those who have her confidence? The European was never asked to commit an offence, and it is absurd to talk of personal laws in criminal cases. To be tried by peers is no doubt a personal law; but the application of this doctrine to the question of trial of European British offenders by Natives cuts rather the other way. European gentlemen have sat as jurors in the trial of Native offenders; European gentlemen have also sat as assessors in such cases. If Europeans are the peers of Natives, is it not but common sense to hold that Natives are the peers of Europeans? What strikes us as most singular is that too much should be made of the other argument, namely, that Europeans alone are in a position to try Europeans justly, by reason of their intimate knowledge of European customs and manners. One has yet to learn what the customs and manners of a man who is on trial for robbing or forging or perjury has to do with the question whether he has committed the offence charged or not. But however that be, this argument shows that those who oppose the present Bill do not know the real merits of the question. If the reason of the distinction between Native and European offenders was that European officers alone are fitted by reason of their knowledge of the habits and customs of men of their race to try European offenders, the definition of the term European British subject would not have included Natives born in England, America, &c. According to the definition of the term both in the old and the new Criminal Procedure Code, a native of India has only to be born in England or Australia or Africa to be ranked for the purposes of the Criminal Procedure Code as a European British subject, and if appointed a Magistrate, to be competent to try a European British offender. Does mere birth enable a man to know the customs and manners of the people amongst whom he was born? We submit, this part of the argument of the opponents of the Bill is most unsatisfactory. A careful analysis of it reduces their grievance to one of pure sentiment arising out of race prejudices. And they seek to give that sentiment the appearance of a practical grievance by talking of personal laws, which have in verity no reasonable bearing on the criminal laws of the empire. That being so, how far is Government to respect the unreasoning sentiment of a class of Her Majesty's subjects? Allowed that that class is more influential than the other classes; allowed that their opposition is very strong;—but is the British Government to be reduced to the level of a government respecting persons and not measures? We repeat that the Government would be teaching a very bad lesson to its subjects if it were to listen to threats and useless reasoning and withdraw a measure which has sound, practical reasoning on its side, but to oppose which its enemies have had to invent facts and arguments. Ten years ago if a question like this had been raised and there had been furious agitation such as we have now been witnessing, we should have advised the withdrawal of the Bill. But the Native communities have advanced in public spirit and intelligence. A hundred Bransons and Keswicks cannot bully them into silence, and if Government were to cut a retreat after the unworthy clamour raised in Calcutta, the Natives would ascribe it to that very clamour. If British rule in India is to prosper, it can only prosper by holding the balance evenly between all the classes of its subjects; and nothing would be more impolitic and dangerous than to lead the Eurasian and European opponents of the Bill to think that they can dictate terms to the Government of India and decide the fate of its people.

Makes remarks on the discussion in the Viceregal Legislative Council on the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In noticing the debate on the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill in the Viceregal Legislative Council, the Lok Mitrá (74) of the 18th March observes that those who are anxious to have a clear grasp of the merits of this measure, and are willing to pronounce an unbiased opinion thereon, cannot do better than turn to the several speeches for the purpose. There they will find stated at great length the arguments on both sides. No doubt they will discover that the reasoning of the speakers is coloured by intense personal prejudice, while the facts on which their reasoning is based are far from correct. So long as human nature is what it is, the fabrication of false evidence must be more or less common everywhere, and India is no exception to the rule. But to single out the Indians as a race who habitually practise perjury is as much a foul libel as to single out Englishmen as a race who habitually commit brutal murders. Not to go too far, the following sentence from the columns of St. James Gazette may be fairly pitted against Mr. Miller's sweeping allegation. In its article on perjury some twelve or fifteen months ago, it said: "Our own view of the subject, founded upon considerable experience, is that perjury is far more common than most people suppose, and that rash and false swearing, which without being downright perjury has a considerable resemblance to it, is so common that hardly any trial that greatly interests the feelings of the parties takes place in any courts of justice without giving occasion for it." The writer is no doubt a lawyer, and he says that he speaks from considerable experience and not from hap-hazard statements. When perjury is so common in civilized England, with her highly crystallized moral code and refined civilization, why do they make such a hubbub about perjury among the lower classes of Indians? Were a comparison of the statistics of perjury instituted between England and India, it is feared that those who glibly talk of perjury in the latter country would have to hide their heads with shame. This allegation of perjury has been instanced so that the lover of truth who is willing to judge of the merits of Mr. Ilbert's Bill on its own intrinsic merits may guard himself against a too ready acceptance of facts, which when brought to the crucial test turn out to be grossly exaggerated. In the same way the impartial observer may call for evidence touching another statement of Mr. Miller. In order to support his argument about private enterprise being jeopardised by the passing of Mr. Ilbert's Bill, he delivers himself as follows: "European capital has to take account of this fact of perjury, because if an European manager is removed from the charge of the enterprise on which he is employed in the mofussil at a critical moment and imprisoned on a false accusation, the loss and damage may be overwhelming." Now in the interest of truth and justice the Government of India should institute searching inquiries as to the correctness of this allegation. Mr. Miller asserts that what he alleges is "a fact which is known to every zamindár, as well as to every ryot, to every official European equally as to non-officials." Let the Supreme Government call for returns from all the provinces where European capital to a greater or less extent is employed and which employs large cooly labour as to how many European managers have been unjustly dealt with, how many fabrications of evidence against such have been proved, and how far European capital has been jeopardised. At the same time it equally behoves the Government to call for cases wherein European capital as represented by European managers in the mofussil has oppressed coolies, and how often justice has miscarried by poor coolies being allowed to go to prison on false charges. But it would be useless to pick out equally fallacious arguments from the speeches of Mr. Miller, Mr. Thomas and others who spoke at the Council. If any speech on the ministerial side, so to say, has met all the assertions of the opposition, it is that of the learned Dr. Hunter. It is indeed most interesting and instructive. He has exhausted the whole subject from the standpoint of history. He has clearly shown how agitations in the past on similar measures have proved valueless by the subsequent course of events. His defence of the Bill is indeed masterly. The Honourable Mr. Gibbs took his stand upon the administrative necessity of the measure. His Excellency the Viceroy spoke with great emphasis on the subject. The task of administration is daily growing more burdensome and at the same time more beset with anxiety. The anxiety is on account of the political necessity of admitting the natives of the country to the higher offices. Certain powers must be vested in them. Why then should there be a difference? Why should a European, because he is white, be invested with certain powers of which a Native of equal position should be deprived? It is a wholly constitutional question. Race feeling or sentiment or even privilege has nothing to do with it. The Viceroy conclusively argued that now that natives of India are being daily posted to higher appointments, the time is most opportune to give greater practical effect to the broad policy laid down by Parliament in 1833 and subsequently re-affirmed on two great occasions. If the policy is to remain inoperative, more or less embarrassments are sure to arise at no distant date. The sagacity of the statesman is to foresee such embarrassments and provide against them in time. Lord Ripon and his colleagues have only acted as any set of wise statesmen in any civilized country would act under the circumstances rendered imperative by the progress of the natives of India in education. Professor Wordsworth, in that remarkably trenchant letter he addressed to the Bombay Gazette the other day, has observed that twice in her history has England suffered profound humiliation and embarrassments by insisting on maintaining an ascendancy over dependent nations, which under altered conditions it was beyond her power to maintain, and which was really inconsistent with her own interests, and that he had no desire to see that experience repeated in India. This observation is pregnant with meaning, and Lord Ripon seems to have been fully alive to the embarrassments in which the Indian policy of British Parliament would plunge India if at this juncture the Bill were allowed to drop. The principle of the Bill is perfectly sound and constitutional, and though it is now determined to let the Bill alone till November next, it is to be hoped that the House of Commons will give no expression of opinion on the subject, when it is properly brought before it, adverse to that expressed by the Government of this country. When the agitation subsides, it will certainly be discovered by its chief authors that they had simply allowed themselves to raise an outcry for nothing very serious in particular. [The Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 18th March approves of the Viceroy's speech and praises him for the beginning he has made in the matter of impartially giving equal rights to Natives and Europeans. The writer condemns the agitation against the Bill, and says that selfish Europeans are trying to strike a blow against their own rule and are in vain trying to incite Natives to rebellion. The Supreme Government ought to duly punish such Europeans.]

Remarks in connection with the debate in the Supreme Legislative Council on the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Subodh Patrika (11) of the 18th March says:—The keenest agitator as well as the most sober observer of events of the last three weeks must have equally admired the speech of the Viceroy on the Jurisdiction Bill. Indeed if the bullying temper of the European agitators had not got the better of their discretion and reason, that speech would have at once arrested the progress of the agitation. The calm, dignified and firm position taken by Lord Ripon, without showing any ill-will to those who had abused him or without entering into the controversial aspect of the Bill, was but what was to be expected from his high administrative capacity and firmness of character and goodness of disposition. If the agitators ever thought that by their vituperative exhibition they could compel the Viceroy to abandon the Bill, they must have seen that they were greatly mistaken. A petition to Parliament is now talked of, but it will not serve the purpose of the memorialists, and all those who are against or in favour of the Bill cannot do better than leave the Bill to its natural fate after their opinions and those of all the local Governments which are to be invited are expressed. In the meantime there is one suggestion made by the Bombay Gazette which calls for notice. The Gazette, unlike the Bombay organ of the Bengal agitators, has from the beginning taken an independent position and has always without any race prejudice expressed impartial opinions regarding this Bill. The suggestion is that a compromise should be effected by the Bill being passed with an additional clause in it reserving power to the European culprits to choose whether they would be tried by European or Native Magistrates. Such an arrangement will no doubt at once allay the present agitation. But we do not think that the compromise is either desirable or justifiable. It will simply nullify the effect of the Bill. Such a proviso will make the Bill as good as not passed at all, for the powers conferred on the Native Magistrates will remain almost nominal, while race distinction will go on exhibiting itself in almost every case in which a European will have to be tried. It is not wise besides to increase the number of one-sided privileges. Once a privilege is conferred, the person on whom it is conferred takes a tenacious hold of it, which even in altered circumstances he does not like to give up. It may be fairly argued that if Europeans charged with offences are to be granted the privilege of choosing their tribunal, why should not the privilege be extended to Native offenders as well? If such a universal privilege is impracticable because it must be obstructive to the administration of justice, the proposed privilege for one class of people alone will, besides impeding the course of justice, be always keeping alive feelings of race distinctions.

Expresses a hope that Parliament will not allow party feelings to be introduced into the consideration of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 18th March observes:—Though the result of the great debate in the Viceregal Council on Mr. Ilbert's Bill is devoid of any practical result towards the subsidence of the present agitation against the Bill, we cannot but approve of the course the Government of Lord Ripon has wisely adopted and accord it our deep and grateful sympathy in its present situation. It is an advantage that Parliament will have the opportunity of expressing an opinion on the subject. Already questions have been asked in both Houses and the responsible ministers have promised to lay as soon as convenient the papers on the table. It is to be devoutly hoped that into a consideration of this most important constitutional question no party feelings will be allowed to be introduced. For we cannot shut our eyes to what has happened in that great assembly during the last three or four years on matters affecting the interests of India. It would be calamitous were the question debated on other than its own merits. Parliament must in this case be impartial and unmoved. It is absolutely necessary that all party passion and party conflict should be avoided. It must be remembered that influential European merchants and others will leave no stone unturned to induce Lancashire to use her potent voice. When we further consider how dependent ministries, Liberal or Conservative, are on Lancashire votes, we cannot but have cause to fear that justice may miscarry. The cardinal point for consideration is this,—whether in view of the increasing number of Natives who are now entrusted with higher and more responsible offices in the administration it is or it is not politically expedient to take measures in time to remove causes which may hereafter lead to grave political inconvenience. Is it better to anticipate what must inevitably follow and willingly provide for the contingency, or is it wise to wait blindly till coercion is applied to meet it? Wherein lies the wisdom of Government? We think, in spontaneous concessions. Having thrown open the Covenanted Civil Service to the natives of India, and having raised some of the gentlemen in that service to positions of trust, can the Government withhold from them certain powers of jurisdiction, which the State policy demands they ought to have alike with their European brethren. That is the question. Secondly, if for the extending of such powers it is urged by all the highest administrative officers that the time has come, is it politic to hold back because a small interested class raise an objection which has more of sentiment in it than of reason? What is the best policy our rulers can adopt if they have, by other important State measures, sanctioned by Parliament and solemn proclamations, thought fit to raise here an efficient and honourable class of Native public servants? The question Parliament will have to consider is whether it should dictate a policy which the clamours of an interested class childishly demand by what they presume to call right of conquest and so forth, or whether it should declare a policy consistent with its former acts that the Government of India should be administered for the welfare of Indians on the principle of legal and political equality. It is this cardinal question which Parliament must solve, and that once and for ever. Otherwise it may be taken as certain that it will again arise, when an agitation more violent than the present will rage, which it would be much more difficult to allay. There is wisdom in the policy boldly enunciated by the Viceroy in his statesmanlike speech during the debate. He has every confidence in the spirit which actuates Parliament to deal justly with India and the Indians on all great constitutional matters. Hence his present policy will meet with approval. When passion, sentiment and superstition have given way to sober reasoning, it will be soon discovered by the agitators who now oppose the Bill that its small provisions are quite called for and in consonance with British policy, and that they are not at all of a nature to ruin private enterprise and sweep away their families from the Indian soil. The Bill ought not to be retarded to suit the morbid susceptibilities of a class whose interests at the best are selfish and not of a permanent character in the country. Natives of India will be quite content if the principle of the Bill receives due recognition from Parliament and a temperate legislative embodiment here. Let us hope that the statesmanlike instincts of British Parliament, by its moderating influence, will soon set at rest the storm that has been now so needlessly raised and so unreasonably kept up in various quarters. To disapprove of the principle of the Bill would be to commit the gravest of constitutional inconsistencies, and expose the Government of India to a weakness and humiliation which the statesmen at the helm of affairs at Westminster must do all in their power to avert.

Approves of the suggestion made by the Bombay Gazette that a European accused should be allowed the choice of being tried by a Native or European Magistrate.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 18th March says:—Every important town and every cantonment in India that has a mixed population will furnish at least one or two instances of criminal cases in which European British subjects have been the accused and Natives the accusers. The history of such cases will, in eight out of ten cases, show that the accused have either escaped scot-free, or with a trivial punishment, or have been allowed to go with a warning, or transferred, or have turned out to be madmen, or were found guilty of a crime liable to a less punishment than the one of which they were really guilty. Those instances at any rate show that Natives have ground to complain of an inadequate protection against European aggressors. Such cases of inadequate protection are invariably on the increase, which fact shows that the remark that impunity generates confidence and encourages the wrongdoer to commit wrongs is only too true. Every unpunished delinquency has a family of delinquencies, and the only remedy for such a state of things lies in making the judicial service so complete as to afford facilities to every citizen for bringing the culprit before a court of inquiry. An aggressor would not commit a crime if he were quite certain to be caught and punished, so that uninvidious laws and a well organized judicial system would benefit the citizens, not only by redressing their wrongs, but by preventing them from being wronged. We really believe that noble motives like these induced Lord Ripon to introduce the Criminal Procedure Amendment Bill, but to our great regret we find that the inconsiderate and rash agitation of selfish Europeans has come in its way and the Bill is likely to be shelved, at least for a few months. The means for apprehending and punishing offenders should be multiplied by empowering mofussil courts to try and punish European offenders just in the same way as they try and punish Native offenders. We think the agitators against the Bill would not object to such an extension of the powers of mofussil courts, for then the argument cannot apply against European Judges and Magistrates. The objection will then remain in the case of Native Magistrates only, which can best be met by following the suggestion of the Bombay Gazette that the European accused be given the choice of being tried by a Native or European Magistrate. This suggestion is very good and unobjectionable. When the Native Magistrate possesses the same powers as the European one, he will have no reason to complain, nor will the European offender have any reason to submit himself to a trial by a Native Judge. If the Native Magistrate has by his good sense, reputation, uprightness, honesty and love of justice secured a name, the European may go to him; if not, let him have his fellow-casteman as his Judge. In cases of concurrent jurisdiction such a choice is already left to the complainant, as also is the case in civil matters. This is what they call robbing the hornet of its horns without touching the insect, and we think this would do. The Honourable Mr. Gibbs speaks of administrative inconveniences, but we are of opinion that if our suggestion be approved, the difficulties would also be removed.

Contrasts the character of Natives and Europeans in India.

The Lok Mitrá (74) of the 18th March observes that the disgraceful conduct of the European population of Calcutta in denouncing the Jurisdiction Bill has brought out in strong and prominent relief some of the amiable and commendable traits of the Native character. These people, who hitherto prided themselves on their intelligence and culture, on their love of order and equality of laws, on deprecating unlawful and unconstitutional means for seeking redress for grievances, worked themselves up to a pitch of unpardonable frenzy, and raved and roared because forsooth a harmless and perfectly justifiable alteration was proposed in the existing criminal law of the country. The conduct of Natives on far more momentous occasions in the history of their country was quite different. Surely if any body of men ever had legitimate and substantial grounds of complaint and disaffection against their rulers, it was the Natives when the Gagging Act stifled the voice of the people of India and the Arms Act held them up to the opprobrium of the world as disloyal and disaffected people who could not safely be entrusted with arms except under strong and stringent precautions. These, not to mention many more, were measures which affected a whole country more intimately and vitally than Mr. Ilbert's perfectly innocuous Bill, and yet what did they do? Did they show half the wildness and insanity which has been exhibited by their more manly, and intelligent, and enlightened European neighbours? Nothing of the kind. They displayed admirable temper and coolness. They expressed their regret through the medium of newspapers, presented sober and carefully reasoned memorials to the authorities, and, failing to obtain redress for their grievances, quietly dropped the matter. It will be interesting to speculate what wild howls and frantic menaces those European British subjects would have set up if anything approaching the Vernacular Press Act or the Arms Act was sought to be enforced against them. The iniquitous Gagging Act, which so long disgraced the statute book of our country, has happily now been repealed, thanks to the magnanimity and statesmanlike foresight of Lord Ripon. The Arms Act still continues in force to the discredit of those who promoted and enforced it, and yet the Native population of the country loyally abide by the decree of their rulers, despite the abject and helpless state in which they have been placed thereby. What would these highly polished and cultured European British subjects have said if the Natives had on such occasions indulged in a tithe of the abuse of Europeans which the lunatics at the Calcutta meeting poured down upon the natives of the land or of the menaces to Government and constituted authority of the land? Verily those Calcutta Europeans have overshot the mark, and it cannot but be perceived by them now that their reckless and passionate declamations have only spoiled the cause which they intended to advance and accomplish. It is good that the Calcutta Europeans should have behaved as they did, for it has been the means of prominently bringing to the front the admirable qualities of coolness, self-possession and loyalty of Natives on occasions of national excitement.

Comments in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 18th March says:—The character of the agitation against Mr. Ilbert's Bill carries its own condemnation with it, and it must now find that it has strengthened the position of the other side to its own cost. How far the House of Commons listens to the cry yet remains to be seen; but so far as the Government of India are concerned, they seem to be firm and do not at present appear disposed to recede an inch. Taking a comprehensive survey of the whole question and arguments pro and con brought forward on either side, we are not inclined to believe that the position of Government is in any way shaken. In view of administrative convenience, as the Viceroy has argued, the proposed change is quite a necessity; and in view also of the growing assimilation of all law, particularly the criminal law, the rectification of the much-made-of privilege, or rather the great anomaly, is necessary. It has been a standing complaint now that the work of administration is gradually out-growing the normal strength of the whole executive body, and unless Government were prepared to redistribute it on a certain basis it may be that they might not be able to do full justice to it. It is with a view to curtail this cumbrousness of the administration that the Government of India thought fit, we believe, to introduce this measure simultaneously with the scheme of local self-government and other measures. The local self-government scheme proved distasteful to the official world because it deprived it of a large proportion of its powers; the Jurisdiction Bill is hated because it is likely to deprive the non-official world of its supposed right. It is however true that like the scheme of self-government this Bill is not likely to afford the executive any great relief for the present, though as a tentative measure it may be considered the most opportune. It is argued that as the Bill will give the power of trying European British subjects to one or two Native Magistrates at present, it were as well that Government had taken time to consider the utility of the Bill before its introduction. It must be remembered that the removal of administrative inconvenience was not the only ground on which the introduction of such a law was considered desirable. To complete the assimilation of the criminal law of the country by removing this anomaly, the introduction of such a measure was deemed necessary. This general process of assimilation has been going on for a century and a quarter, and we now find that in regard to criminal law alone an anomaly remains. In regard to civil matters the law is the same, be the parties European or Native, and the administration of civil justice, conducted as it is under Native agency to a large extent, is received with every satisfaction by all parties, European and Native alike. It is only with regard to criminal law that an amendment was necessary on the basis on which the Bill is now introduced into the Supreme Council, and it is really a pity that those very Europeans who have never taken exception to Natives administering civil justice to Europeans and Natives alike should object to the extension of their powers under the new Bill. If the European community is afraid that perjury and consequent injustice in the case of Europeans will be rampant everywhere, how is it that with regard to our Native Subordinate Judges no such complaints have ever been made? On the contrary it is said that European merchants and traders prefer Natives to their own countrymen as judges in civil matters. When such is the case, the conduct of the European agitation becomes entirely inexplicable. The argument that Natives themselves had never asked for such powers and that Government were of their own free will conferring the powers upon them is simply groundless. Whenever an amendment of our criminal law was proposed, the Native Press as a whole made strenuous efforts that Government might see their way to the removal of this anomaly, and the last year's Government's promise that they would take the matter into consideration is partly due to the agitation on this subject on the part of the Native Press. The members of the executive Government are of the same race as the non-official European community, and the Government as a whole, subordinate and supreme together, could not have declared that the time had come when Natives should be invested with such powers without a previous thought. As belonging to the same race they cannot be expected to sacrifice wilfully the rights which their fellow-countrymen enjoy in this country. It is on the ground of political expediency, however, that they are contemplating to take the proposed step. Government find that the members of the Native Covenanted Civil Service are in every way equal to their European compeers, and that not to confer on them all the powers which the latter enjoy is to perpetuate a preposterous disability. It is suggested by some Anglo-Indian journalists that Government should offer to make a compromise with the European community, and that instead of investing the Native competitionwállás and those appointed under Lord Lytton's rules with the powers of trying European British subjects the former only should be invested with them. Such a compromise is not worth much. Government cannot afford to make such distinctions between officers who have the same standing and position, with this difference only that the one was appointed to the service after a competitive examination in England and the other without such an examination. Does the mere circumstance of an examination render one fit and the other unfit for the performance of the same duties? Another suggestion with regard to a compromise is to the effect that Native Civil Servants in the mofussil may be so empowered, but that the choice of taking his trial either before a Native or a European Magistrate should be given to the European culprit. Such a proposal means rendering nugatory the effect of the contemplated measure. If Government are at all inclined to do justice to the Native community and the Native Civil Servants, our rulers cannot afford either to propose or accept such a course. The proposals they themselves have made are just and equitable, and if the powers that be are not persuaded to treat the sons of the soil in an off-hand fashion, they are bound to pass the measure as it is.

Comments on the opposition raised by Europeans against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 18th March says:—The opposition to Mr. Ilbert's Bill is growing more virulent in some quarters, and thanks to the hysterical declamations of one or two hireling orators and publicists it is not likely to subside for some time yet to come. Had it been an honest opposition, it would have listened to the temperate and statesmanlike explanation of the Viceroy and the other responsible officers of State. But it appears that Mr. Ilbert's Bill is only the ostensible cause of all this wild excitement, its real object being an organised attack on the liberal administration of India. The repeal of the Press Act, the offer of increased publicity in legislation, and the initiative already taken for the introduction of self-government in the country, were too much for the selfish and progress-hating Tory. He has tried all he could to misrepresent this policy and to discredit its authors. Having failed every way, he has now seized this opportunity of exciting what we regret to call a demoralised mob into open revolt. European planters and traders are in league against the Government; the volunteers threaten to lay down their arms; European railway employés have taken to holding indignation meetings, and some malignant spirits are said to be at work inciting the European army. The agitators have no idea of where their destructive tactics may land them. It is altogether a dreadful muddle and the innocent may have to suffer for the intrigues of the wicked. And what signifies the opposition of all these Europeans put together? Is a righteous Government to be deterred by such a sectional movement when it has the grateful support of twenty-five million subjects? The Europeans think they alone can feel and act. It is a bad mistake, and the sooner they correct it the better for them. Their talk about the right of conquest and of birth and their magnificent sense of superiority will avail nothing. India was never conquered by them, and as for their birth-rights, if they wish to live under Her Majesty's Government in this country, they had better keep those precious rights under their own parish registers. To be allowed to live among and on a foreign people is in itself a privilege, and such Europeans ought to be thankful for the liberality of the Government and the tolerance of the people of India. There cannot be two laws for the subjects of one and the same sovereign. So far we think Mr. Ilbert's Bill is in safe keeping. The battle that is being fought over it is a drawn battle. Happily it is a battle between Europeans and Europeans. Though Natives are vitally interested in the issue, they must refrain from taking an active part in it, trusting implicitly to the justice and self-respect of the Government.

With reference to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Subodh Patrika (11) of the 18th March says:—One of the speakers at the late meeting of Europeans at Calcutta seemed tauntingly to ask if the Government could trust arms in the hands of Natives to be used as loyally as those in European hands. If it was not the same tongue that proposed a march on Government house, the proposal was made at the same meeting, and the men composing the gathering were apparently ready, if they had the power, to treat the heads of Government as so many malefactors, while the brave volunteers purported as a flank movement to lay down their arms and thus leave the poor Government of Lord Ripon to totter for its existence simply because they proposed an amendment in a law to remove race distinction and inconveniences in the judicial administration. But did they not sing the National Anthem at the same time? As charity covers a multitude of sins, the chaunting of the National Anthem seems to throw a cloak over an amount of disloyal talk or menaced action. In fact, the Queen whose safety their song invokes is a mere impersonation of their own selfish interests and exclusive privileges, which might even clash with the general policy or welfare of the empire. The local Times of India, the mouth-piece of the Calcutta infuriates, was therefore right in deprecating the adoption of the English National Anthem by Natives. He stated that the sepoys during the mutinies struck up the National Anthem in marching against the Government armies, and now our white mutineers seem to have sung the Anthem while proposing to march on Government house! Even a dullard must see however, and an ordinarily honest man must admit, that tried by the standard of these rampant Britons the natives of India are and can be far more loyal than any of them. Indeed whatever be the end of the proposed amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code, the uncalled for violence and vituperative misrepresentations indulged in by the agitators both towards the Natives and the heads of Government have made a sad betrayal of the moral stuff of the non-official Anglo-Indian. We have often been told that the Anglo-Indians were a sedate people, judging of public measures and their merits calmly and not, like their misguided countrymen at home, drowning those merits in mere party strifes, forgetful of fact, truth and common sense. It was of course absurd to expect that they, removed from their home politics not only by the distance of half the globe but also by interests, should be exercised about the conservative or liberal measures taking their course in England. But here is a crucial test—a necessary measure of reform diluted with consideration for their prejudices, and yet the Anglo-Indian could not discuss it except in frothy eloquence, abusive misrepresentation, and threats of vengeance on the Government and its supposed protegés, and the very organs of Anglo-Indian opinion which were thus felicitating their constituents on their moral superiority over their untravelled countrymen at home have sinned most in showing that the boasted superiority was a sham and delusion. This conduct must teach a lesson to all concerned.

Observations in regard to the attitude of Europeans regarding the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (97) of the 18th March observes that the privilege for which Europeans are clamouring so much has not descended to them hereditarily, and hence their opposition to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill is absurd. Supposing however that this right has been long enjoyed, it ought now to be taken away on the ground that they have made a wrong use of it. The Kaiser then gives seventeen instances which occurred in 1865 and 1866, in which European culprits were allowed to escape either without punishment or with light sentences. Since the Judges in most of these cases were Europeans, Europeans have forfeited all claims to the right of being tried before a Judge of their own nationality.

Says that Europeans have forfeited their claim to be tried by European Magistrates and Judges alone.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 24th March observes that the opposition raised by Sir James Stephen to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill amounts to this, that if a drunken European railway guard is placed before a Native Magistrate, the former will feel degraded, and the latter being ignorant of his disposition will feel no sympathy for him. In short, Sir James means that if a European commits crime in the mofussil he should not be apprehended and tried for the offence. The impropriety of this argument is too evident to need any comment. The Bombay Gazette suggests that European offenders should be allowed the option of being tried by a Judge or Magistrate of their own nationality. The European offenders generally belong to the lower classes of Europeans, who would not scruple to give offence to Native Civilians by claiming to be tried by European Judges and Magistrates, and hence the suggestion ought not to be accepted. The Europeans of Bengal say that the Bengali Bábus are inimical to them and would not scruple to do injustice in their cases. This argument is also untenable as Native Civilians will never prostitute their honesty and high position for such a thing, as is feared by Europeans. Taking for granted for the sake of argument that the fear is well founded, there is no reason why Hindu, Mahomedan and Pársi Civilians should be prohibited from being invested with jurisdiction over Europeans. The outcry raised against the Jurisdiction Bill has proceeded chiefly from the planters of Bengal, who have been well known for several years past for the ill-treatment of their Native servants. The planters are afraid that in the event of the enactment of the Bill they would be prevented from practising oppression on their employés, and have therefore put up the Calcutta merchants and some of the Anglo-Indian papers to raise their voice against the measure. The Jáme Jamshed severely censures the Europeans of Coorg who have burnt an effigy of Mr. Ilbert in their anger for his advocating the Bill, and observes that it may be well conceived how such unreasonable people must be conducting themselves towards Natives. For duly checking their oppressions it is desirable that not only should the Jurisdiction Bill be enacted, but that a law should be passed authorising the trial of European criminals by a jury composed of Europeans and Natives.

Condemns the opposition raised by Europeans to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Condemns the opposition raised by Europeans to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (97) of the 18th March observes that the strong opposition raised by Europeans to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill is not a result of calm reasoning, but of self-sufficiency. They say that they belong to the ruling race and will not give up the superior rights enjoyed by them in India. Under this conceit they forgot themselves and abused Natives, and even went so far as to incite the volunteers to lay down their arms. They brought lame reasons in support of their prayer, and though they have been completely answered at the discussion on the Bill in the Supreme Legislative Council, still the opposition mania is spreading. However it is gratifying that the party in favour of the Bill is strong, and since the ministry support it, the opposition must fail in the end. The Bill affects only one of the several rights enjoyed by Europeans, who have, it seems, been exasperated more by Lord Ripon's general policy of benefiting Natives than by anything else. Forgetting that their ancestors in India bowed before Hindu princes and Mahomedan rulers, they claim superior rights as if it is so ordained by heaven. Europeans have no doubt conferred many benefits on India, which however have been repaid, and there should now be no hindrance to her children enjoying rights similar to those enjoyed by Englishmen. The times in which Europeans in India were accorded superior rights have altered; Natives have improved in every way so as to deserve rights similar to those enjoyed by Englishmen, and no hesitation ought to be made in making concessions in this matter. [The Bombay Punch (81) of the 24th March observes that credit to Government lies in giving to Native Civilians rights and powers similar to those enjoyed by European Civilians and not in withholding those rights from them. If the perverse European agitators against the Bill were to calmly reflect on this phase of the matter, they would see the hollowness of their agitation.]

Ridicules the measures taken by the Europeans of Calcutta and the Panjáb against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Dátardun (86), a comic paper, of the 22nd March observes that the European residents of the Panjáb intend petitioning the Queen for the recall of Lord Ripon. They should go a step further and pray for his banishment from England, for he will continue his endeavours for the good of India even while he is a resident of England. The Europeans of Calcutta are trying to prefer a petition, signed by European ladise, to the Queen against Mr. Ilbert's Bill. This is very good, for those things which cannot be accomplished by the bravery of men are to be brought about by the entreaties of females. They should also have a similar petition made by their children, and then they are sure to succeed in their object. The Europeans of Calcutta are endeavouring to give a grand public dinner to Mr. Branson, the barrister who showered abuses on Natives, in recognition of his services. This will not be a sufficient recompense for all his labour. Along with the dinner a fund should be started and a statue erected in his honour in the Calcutta Town Hall. Arrangements should also be made out of this fund for enabling Mr. Branson to revile Natives as long as he lives. The "Defence Fund" started by Europeans is not sufficient. They should construct cellars in their houses to hide and protect themselves in times of sudden distress. An endeavour is being made to substitute a fresh and decent report of the meeting held at the Calcutta Town Hall on the 28th February last. This is good, but the necessity of substituting new faces and tongues for those which reviled Natives at the meeting should not be lost sight of. [The Káside Mumbai (98) of the 16th March observes that the reply of Mr. Gladstone to a question put in the House of Commons on the subject of Mr. Ilbert's Bill has driven away the apprehension regarding the withdrawal of the Bill. It would be creditable to the Europeans here if they now give up the idea of sending a deputation to Parliament. If it is carried out, the step will prove very rash and cause great repentance. It will do much more harm than good.]

Replies to the arguments put forth at the meetings of the Bengal and the Bombay Chambers of Commerce in opposition to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

A correspondent of the Gujaráti (91) of the 18th March notices the various arguments put forward by the meeting of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce in opposition to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, and replies to them seriatim. These replies contain no other arguments than those put forth by several other members of the Native Press and described at some length in previous weekly summaries. The Satyá Mitrá (107) of the same date similarly treats the arguments brought forward at the meeting of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce on the same subject.

Railways.

Is satisfied with the settlement of the railway through rates on grain between Delhi and Bombay.

The Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 18th March is heartily grateful to the Government of India for the reasonable settlement of the rates of railway charges for the carriage of grain between Delhi or Agra and Calcutta and Bombay respectively. The through rates between these places were unfavourable to Bombay as contrasted with those regarding Calcutta, and Sir James Fergusson deserves great credit for pressing on the attention of the Supreme Government the injustice done to the mercantile interests of the former Presidency. It is not a little gratifying that this long and keenly debated question should have been satisfactorily settled, and the agricultural industry of Upper India should receive due encouragement from this settlement.

Municipalities.

Disapproves of the extension of the public garden at Surat by the Surat Municipality.

The Vartamán Sár (114) of the 20th March refers to the recent fires in Surat and the insufficient supply of water, and regrets that the local municipality should resolve to extend the public garden at Surat instead of providing the town with a good supply of water. It is to be regretted that the municipality does not look to the approval or disapproval of the citizens in this matter. The question of the extension of the garden was not brought before the general meeting of the municipality, but a circular was sent round and signatures obtained on it through influence and the work was undertaken with a majority of votes. Though a public meeting of the citizens was held to protest against the extension of the garden, and though a petition to the Bombay Government against it is being got ready, the members of the managing committee of the municipality are in a hurry to buy houses or give earnest-money for their purchase. What is the use of spending about Rs. 50,000 on the extension of the garden and then raising a loan for the construction of water-works? Attention should first be paid to the much-needed supply of water and then to the subject of the extension of the public garden and electric lights. [The Deshi Mitrá (87) of the 22nd March disapproves of the extension of the garden, and says that out of the sum of Rs. 50,000 the suburbs, if not the city of Surat, might have been supplied with drinking water, or the halálkhor cess reduced or not levied from the poor, or if the sum is to be used for making gardens, one or two gardens might have been made in the suburbs of the city.]

Native States.

Says that new schools should be opened in the towns of Dábha and Bhudáshan in Mahi Kántha.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 18th March hopes that the Political Officers of Mahi Kántha will hasten to open schools in the towns of Dábha and Bhudáshan of Táluka Dábha, as sanctioned by Mr. Fitzgerald. The want of these institutions is sadly felt.

Berár Affairs.

Says that the pay of Deputy Educational Inspectors and Police Inspectors should be increased.

The Pramod Sindhu (50) of the 19th March says that it has heard with great satisfaction that the pay of Tahsildárs in the Berárs has been increased. It is however to be regretted that the salaries of the employés in other departments have not been raised. Deputy Educational Inspectors and Police Inspectors are entrusted with heavy duties the performance of which requires as great ability and judgment as the performance of the work of Tahsildárs. The pay of these officers ought to be raised all round. Some time ago a suggestion was made about creating a post of Police Inspector with a salary of Rs. 250, but unfortunately the proposal was not sanctioned. Police Inspectors have hardly any chance of promotion, though Tahsildárs can be raised to the posts of Extra Assistant Commissioners. The Pramod Sindhu also suggests that a uniform method of addressing Tahsildárs in public documents should be adopted. The Mámlatdárs in the Bombay Presidency are styled Ráo Sáheb, and the same title should be conferred on Tahsildárs in the Berárs.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
31*st March* 1883.

INDEX:

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Bridge over the creek near Sajot: Prayer for the construction of a — in the Broach District 4
Competitive examinations for clerkships: Recommendation for holding — in Government offices in the Bombay and other presidencies ... 3
Grazing lands and cattle fodder: Approval of the new resolution of the Government of India on 3
Judgeship at Kaládgi: Remarks in connection with the rumoured abolition of the 4
Kharif crops: Damage to — in the Dhárwár District 4
Promotion among Subordinate Judges: Remarks in connection with the system of 3
Public Works Department: An exception to a certain remark of the Pioneer regarding the employment of Natives in the 4
Salvation Army: Regret at Major Tucker of the — being made to wear a convict's dress at the time of his appeal to the High Court ... 4
Scarcity of water: Complaint regarding great — in the Bhimthadi Táluka 4

PART II.—The New Budget—

Budget statement for 1883-84:
Further remarks on the 5
Satisfaction with the 5

PART III.—Legislation—

Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill:
A hope that Parliament will not allow party feelings to be introduced into the consideration of the 10
Approval of the suggestion made by the Bombay Gazette that European accused should be allowed the choice of being tried by a Native or European Magistrate 11
Comments in connection with the 13
Comments on the opposition raised by Europeans against the ... 14
Condemnation of the opposition raised by Europeans to the—
The Jáme Jamshed 15
The Kaiser-i-Hind 16
Contrast between the character of the Natives and Europeans in India 12
Forfeiture of the claim of Europeans to the right of being tried before European Magistrates and Judges alone 15
Remarks in connection with the attitude of Europeans regarding the—
The Indu Prakásh 6
The Subodh Patrika 15
Remarks on the debate in the Viceregal Legislative Council on the—
The Lok Mitrá 8
The Subodh Patrika 9
Reply to the arguments put forth at the meeting of the Bengal and the Bombay Chambers of Commerce in opposition to the ... 17
Ridicule of the measures taken by the Europeans of Calcutta and the Panjáb against the 16

PART IV.—Railways—

Railway through-rates on grain: Satisfaction with the settlement of the —between Delhi and Bombay 17

PART V.—Municipalities—

Surat Municipality: Disapproval of the extension of the public garden at Surat by the 17

PART VI.—Native States—

Mahi Kántha: Want of schools in the towns of Dábha and Bhudáshan in 18

PART VII.—Berár Affairs—

Pay of Deputy Educational Inspectors and Police Inspectors: Prayer for an increase in the 18

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

RECEIVED
24 APR 83
ISLINGTON
VIA BRINDISI

PART I.—Duties and the Public Administration—

Bridge over the creek near Solot: Power for the construction of a — in the Bloomfield District 1

Competitive examinations for clerkships: Recommendation for abolishing — in Government offices in the Bombay and other presidencies ... 2

Clearing jungle and cattle lodged: Approval of the new reservation in the 2

Government of India on 3

Judgeship at Kaladgi: Remarks in connection with the retirement shortly to fall vacant 4

Kharif crops: Remarks to — in the Dharwar District 4

Promotion among Subordinate Judges: Remarks in connection with the selection of 5

Public Works Department: An exception to a certain remark of the Honorable Mr. Inverarity in the 6

Settlement Party: Increase in Major Inverarity's pay — power made to vest a certain class at the time of its appointment to the Hill Court ... 7

Security of water: Complaints regarding Forest — in the Bijapur 8

Tankha 9

PART II.—The Land Budget—

Budget estimate for 1882-83: 9

Famine remarks on do 9

Explanation with the 9

PART III.—Education—

Native Members, Education Dept.: 10

A note from Inverarity with the Hon. Mr. Peile regarding do do introduced into the consideration of the 10

Appointment of the Committee made by the Bombay Gazette that 11

Examination of pupils 11

Government resolution 12

Grants-in-aid 12

Inspection 13

Instruction 13

Native Members, Education Dept. 14

Normal School 14

Primary Education 15

Private Schools 16

Scholarships 16

Text Books 17

Vernacular Schools 18

Village Schools 18

Visits of Inspection 19

PART IV.—Famine—

Famine Relief: Remarks on 19

Famine Relief: Remarks on 20

Famine Relief: Remarks on 21

Famine Relief: Remarks on 22

Famine Relief: Remarks on ... ...

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 31st March 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do.	600
12	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do.	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
20	„ Daivadnyă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
21	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
22	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly	425
23	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
24	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
25	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
26	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
27	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
28	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	400
29	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
30	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
31	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*32	„ Karnátak Mitră[4]	Belgaum	Do.	200
33	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	3,500
34	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
35	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	300
36	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
37	„ Maháráshtră Hitechhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
38	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
39	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
40	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
41	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
42	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly	700
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Do.	Do.	200
44	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
47	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	250
48	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily	350
*49	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
50	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti) ...	Do.	200
*51	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
52	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
53	„ Satyă Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	243
54	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
55	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
56	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	275
*57	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Weekly	200
*58	„ Shetakari	Poona	Monthly	400
59	„ Shiváji[3]	Do.	Weekly	200
60	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*61	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
62	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
63	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

[1] Marathi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles. [4] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
64	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
65	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly	250
66	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
67	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
68	„ Vichárshil...	Málvan	Do.	300
*69	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
70	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*71	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
72	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do.	400
73	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
74	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	725
75	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
76	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
77	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
78	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
79	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
80	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
81	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
82	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	950
83	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
84	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
85	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
86	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
87	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do.	1,000
*88	„ Dnyán Prasárak	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
89	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
90	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
91	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*92	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
93	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*94	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
95	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
96	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*97	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
98	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	700
99	„ Kusum Guchchhá	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
100	„ Nágar Udayá	Do.	Do.	300
101	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
102	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
103	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
104	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
105	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
106	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
107	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	400
*108	„ Saurásh tra Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
109	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*110	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nariád	Do.	200
111	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
112	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár ...	Umreth	Fortnightly ...	62
*113	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
114	„ Vartamán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
115	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
116	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	300
117	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
118	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*119	„ Karnátak Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
	URDU.
*120	The Altáf	Bombay	Weekly	200
*121	„ Armagán	Do.	Do.	200
*122	„ Dabdabe Islám[5]	Do.	Do.	200
123	„ Khayir Kháhe Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly ...	300
124	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
*125	„ Muzhire Shawkatul Islám[5]	Do.	Do.	200
	PERSIAN.
126	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

[5] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

The Yajdán Parast (117) of the 25th March, while referring to the recent decision of the Secretary of State in the matter of the eligibility of Uncovenanted Civilians for the post of Collector of Bombay, observes that nobody can doubt the justice of it. In former times, when education had not made appreciable progress amongst Natives, the propriety of reserving the appointment to the members of the Covenanted Civil Service was admitted. But in these days, when education has made such great strides and when educated Natives having considerable experience of Government service have shown themselves competent to discharge the duties of such posts with credit, it is altogether unjust not to recognize their claims in that behalf.

Approves of the decision of the Secretary of State that Uncovenanted Civilians may be appointed to the post of Collector of Bombay.

The Satyá Shodhak (55) of the 24th March is not very sanguine that any appreciable good will result from the orders recently communicated by the Government of India to the local Governments and their officers regarding the provision of fodder reserves to meet the contingency of a drought. The effects of the stringent forest policy initiated by Sir Richard Temple with the view of avoiding the occurrence of famines are too glaring to need mention, and the policy now introduced regarding fodder reserves will also be worked on the same lines. It will be better if the Viceroy considers the advisability of setting apart plots of ground for pasturing purposes as was done in former times. Under the British rule there are no special pasture grounds, and consequently the difficulty of feeding cattle even in seasons of abundant rainfall is becoming more apparent day by day. This has led to a diminution in the number of cattle required for agricultural purposes, and has thus rendered the cultivators' occupation less paying than before. It is more important to provide for the feed of cattle in those cases where their requirements are not satisfied even in times of a seasonable rainfall than to make provision for times of drought. The Local Government, however, do not care to consider representations made in this sense, and it is necessary that the Supreme Government of Lord Ripon should devote their attention to the matter. The necessity for such pasture grounds will be apparent to the Viceroy if he endeavours to gather information on the subject from experienced, impartial and competent officers. [The Rást Goftár (105) of the 25th March expresses similar sentiments.]

Points out the necessity of providing pasture grounds for village cattle.

The Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 27th March is highly grateful to the Commander-in-Chief of India for issuing an order that certain localities in different parts of the country shall be assigned to European soldiers and others for hunting purposes, and that the police shall see that in those places a collision does not take place between the sportsmen and the Natives. If this order, the Samáchár observes, is strictly carried out much benefit will accrue. Care however should be taken to select hunting grounds so situated that access to them would not interfere with the rights of cultivators of the adjoining fields and subject their crops to any injury. It is also desirable that the sportsmen should be prohibited from killing tame animals and such others as are held sacred by the Natives, and the sportsmen who infringe these orders should be duly punished by a court of justice or the military authorities. Unless the civil authorities lend their aid the good object aimed at by Sir Donald Stewart will not be accomplished. It is therefore to be hoped that Lord Ripon will issue the necessary orders to the civil authorities concerned.

Approves of the order issued by the Commander-in-Chief of India in regard to soldiers going on hunting excursions.

With reference to the recommendation made by Sir Lepel Griffin at the investiture of the Mahárája of Dhár with the Companionship of the order of the Indian Empire that the Native papers should direct their attention to pointing out the defects and shortcomings in the administration of Native States and suggest improvements therein,

Says that the Native press efficiently discharges its duty of exposing the defects and shortcomings of Native States.

the Bombay Samdchár (82) of the 30th March observes that the respectable portion of the Vernacular press already discharges this duty efficiently. The Native papers do not neglect at the same time to point out the excellences of these States whenever there is an opportunity of doing so. It is true that the Vernacular papers contain more comments on the British administration than on that in Native States, but this is owing to the comparatively larger extent of the former than that of the latter, and not from any desire to conceal the defects of Native administrations.

Makes remarks on the admission of Natives into the volunteer corps.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 29th March observes that the Pioneer authoritatively states that the Government of India have hit upon a very convenient plan of dealing with applications from Natives for admission into the volunteer corps. In reply to such applications it is generally to be stated that Government do not see the necessity of starting a separate corps for Natives as they can join the European volunteers. The Government however are perfectly sure that authorities in European corps will not admit Natives, and thus the odium of declining admission is transferred from Government to the officers of the corps. Such policy is highly objectionable. If the Natives are not to be admitted into the corps there is nothing wrong in their being told so to their faces. But this indirect and round-about reply is likely to subject to derision a gentleman by his being denied admission by the officer commanding the corps, and is thus calculated to widen instead of narrowing the breach between Europeans and Natives. If the Government entertain any apprehensions about the loyalty of Natives they are certainly unfounded. But where again is the good of European volunteers if looked at from the same standpoint? Taking hint from the conduct of the volunteers in the matter of Mr. Ilbert's Bill, it will be better to effect a considerable saving in expenditure by altogether abolishing the volunteer corps.

Is sorry that the services of Khán Báhádur Jamsetji Dhanjibhái, the Master Builder in the Bombay Dockyard, and of his Assistant are shortly to be dispensed with.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 28th March regrets to learn that Captain Brent, the Director of Indian Marine, has given notice to Khán Báhádur Jamsetji Dhanjibhái, the Master Builder in the Bombay Dockyard, and his Assistant Mr. Rastamji Ardesar Wádia, that their services will be dispensed with. The post of Master Builder in this Dockyard has continued in the family of the late Lowji Wádia for nearly one hundred years, or since the opening of the Dockyard itself; and much of the credit accorded to this Department in India and in England is due to the members of this family. The Indian as well as the Home Governments have on several occasions acknowledged the useful and important services rendered by the Master Builders. The present incumbent has also rendered similar services and the Local Government have acknowledged them. Notwithstanding all this, Captain Brent is believed to have given the notice to these two servants with the view of employing Europeans in their places. It is therefore to be hoped that Government will, in consideration of the long and important services rendered by the Wádia family, and having regard to the order of the Viceroy directing the employment of Natives in high posts, see fit to direct the withdrawal of the notice. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (78) of the 29th March expresses similar sentiments.]

Complains of the conduct of the employés of Messrs. Shepherd & Co. towards passengers by their boats, &c.

A correspondent of the Satyá Shodhak (55) of the 25th March complains of the vexation caused to himself among other passengers by the wilful conduct of the employés, such as the agent and the crew on boats, of Messrs. Shepherd & Co. on the occasion of a voyage from Ratnágiri to Rájápur and back. The writer also complains of the inconvenience suffered by passengers on account of the absence at the port of Jaitápur of anything to intimate the arrival of the steam ferry. Formerly a gun used to be fired on the occasion of the arrival of a boat and a flag used to be hoisted on the fort. The writer trusts that Government will administer a severe censure to the company for the reckless conduct of their servants towards passengers, and will restore the convenience of a flag and a gun at the expense of the company.

A correspondent of the Bakul (16) of the 25th March represents the advisability of the abolition of either of the Subordinate Judges' Courts at Málvan and Vengurla and the necessity for the establishment of a Court at Khed in the Ratnágiri District. There are only 10 or 20 villages within the jurisdiction of the Court at Vengurla, while there are about 150 villages in the Khed Táluka, and it is but proper that Government should see their way to effect a change in the location of the Courts, which will suit the requirements of the people but will not involve any additional expenditure.

Represents the necessity of the establishment of a Court at Khed.

The Chháva (19) of the 25th March complains of the injustice of an order said to have been issued by Mr. Lord and the Mámlatdár of Dhárwár prohibiting all Mukhtyárs from appearing in their Courts. This order is said to have originated in an unimportant mistake of an individual Mukhtyár. This class of legal practitioners is very useful, inasmuch as the poorer classes can reach them with the limited means at their command, and their exclusion from the pale of the Mámlatdárs' Courts is calculated to inflict great hardship on those who have frequent recourse to them. Pleaders holding sanads charge heavy fees even in ordinary cases, and are practically inaccessible to the poor, who in the absence of any legal advice are sure to fall victims to the technicalities of law. Though the law contains a provision that Mukhtyárs can be admitted only at the discretion of the Magistrate, it is hardly possible that it is capable of bearing such a strained interpretation as to empower a Magistrate to shut the doors of his Court against the Mukhtyárs as a class. The Chháva expresses a hope that the officers referred to will see fit to retract their order.

Complains of an order prohibiting Mukhtyárs from appearing in the Mámlatdár's Court at Dhárwár.

A correspondent of the Jagadádarsh (29) of the 25th March complains of the unwholesome condition of the water of the river Pravara near the village of Lakh in táluka Ráhuri of the Ahmednagar District. The river has been dammed near the village, and on this account water has accumulated over nearly 2 miles of its length. The river forms the only source of water supply to 5 or 6 villages. All the mud and refuse brought by the stream is settled near the dam and this has occasioned the death of many cattle going to the river to drink. The water is also spoiled by the banks of the river being used by the inhabitants for purposes of nature and by hemp fibres being thrown therein to be soaked. It is to be hoped that the district authorities will direct their attention to this matter.

Complains of the unwholesome condition of the water of the river Pravara near the village of Lakh.

The New Budget.

In noticing the section of the financial statement for 1883-84 headed "Effect of abolishing the Import Duties," the Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 25th March observes that Major Baring tries to show that the abolition of the Indian import duties has given a stimulus to the import trade and benefited the country, but a careful perusal of his figures and statements hardly supports this conclusion. He refers to the excess of the imports and exports of the country for the ten months ending 31st January 1883 over those for the corresponding period of the previous year, and to the quantity and value of the articles imported into British India which were exempted from the customs duty in March last. He then states that the total increase in the value of merchandise imported during the ten months was 7·26 per cent., and concludes that the abolition of the duties must have contributed to increase the trade. But in paragraph 92 of the financial statement it is observed that during those ten months the value of the exports exceeded that of the imports by £22,153,355. Increase in imports was in fact no more due to the abolition of the import duties than the increase in exports was. Major Baring's own statement in regard to cotton twist and piece goods, the most important items among the imports, goes to prove, if at all anything, merely the fact that the abolition of the import duties could not have the least effect on the importation of these articles. It was certainly not the abolition of the import duties but the prosperity of the country, the normal increase in the trade, and the requirements of the principle of adjustment between exports and imports in the particular year that served to swell the volume of the imports referred to by the Finance Minister. Further, the greater quantity of imports was mainly of such goods as India does not produce and as could not be affected by the removal of the import duties; and that the said volume was not affected by the abolition of the duties would appear from the circumstance of the imports of goods, on which the duty had always been levied, having fallen off since the abolition of those duties. Again, as regards benefit, if any has accrued from the abolition, India has derived none; the manufacturers of England have been enabled to pocket all that this country has been forced to give up in her sheer helpless condition. The abolition of the customs duties last year, helping as it will the export of cotton goods manufactured in Manchester and elsewhere to the extent of the duty repealed, cannot fail to have the effect of checking the progressive development of the cotton industry of India and injuring the other industries of the country, as for instance the silk industry of Bengal. Major Baring has admitted to some extent the evil effect produced by the abolition of the duties on the silk industry. He contends that no injury to the local industry of sugar has resulted from the abolition of import duties. But if the teachings of political economy be at all true, it must be conceded that the abolition of the duty must tend to check the development of the sugar industry of India in the long run, and thus injuriously affect her agricultural and manufacturing industry also. Nor could the tea industry of India be held to have not been prejudiced by the abolition of the import duties, the evil effects of which are sure to affect the promising tobacco industry also.

Points out the evil effects of abolishing the import duties.

Comments on the financial statement for 1883-84.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 26th March, while commenting on the financial statement for 1883-84, observes :—The instability in the revenue may be gradually cured by the growing prosperity of the country. But in these days of keen competition effort must be made by our people to gain a footing in foreign markets for our produce. The trade returns show that a vast quantity of our agricultural produce finds its way into various countries. We must endeavour to make firmer our grasp on those countries and widen the sphere of our action. For that purpose the quantity of our exportable commodities must be increased and their cost of production must be lowered. To attain these ends new lands must be brought under cultivation, the appliances of production must be improved, the means of conveyance must be multiplied and facilitated, and on the whole a greater amount of energy and capital must be brought to bear on land than that heretofore bestowed. The statement discusses at some length the prospects of the wheat trade, the competition with America, and the numerous advantages America possesses over us. But in spite of our disadvantages we must work, and if we do not beat America we shall beat countries less favourably situated, and earn a living for ourselves. Other subjects the statement notices, such as the sale of stock notes and the operations of the post office savings banks. These have been in existence for too short a time to warrant any generalizations as to their usefulness. The results at present attained are full of hope for the future, but it remains to be seen how far there is a succession of such results. There is nothing to prevent both these schemes being successful and highly beneficial to the people and the Government alike. But it must be a work of time. Meantime we would suggest a speedy extension of these schemes to presidency towns, where they will receive more effectual encouragement than in the mofussil. We trust Government will look to this. The statement announces certain alterations in the mode of accounts, which no doubt will have the effect of making them more comprehensive and readily intelligible. The ten statements of old have been compressed into six, but promise to contain greater details in some particulars. On the whole it cannot be denied that this statement is one more proof of the earnestness, ability, and singleness of purpose which the present Finance Minister has shown himself to possess ever since his arrival in this country. Though engrossed with the cares of administration in the other departments of Government, and contributing a substantial share in the many noble and arduous efforts of His Excellency the Viceroy to raise our country, the Honourable Major Baring has not been forgetful of his own peculiar duties, and has brought to his task a financial foresight and acumen, a capacity for details, and a sincere regard for the welfare of our people, rarely excelled by any of his predecessors.

Comments on the financial statement for 1883-84.

The Indu Prakásh (9), while writing on the same subject in its Maráthi columns, is surprised to find that a financier of Major Baring's ability does not think of effecting a considerable saving in expenditure by applying the shears to the overgrown salaries of European officers. A reduction in this direction when confined within moderate bounds bids fair to afford considerable relief to the finances and to alleviate the burden of taxation weighing heavily on the people. The Indu further refers to the items of uncertain expenditure such as famine and war, and while confessing its inability to say anything regarding the former, expresses its apprehensions regarding the Burmese complications proving a source of financial embarrassment in course of time. In conclusion, the writer takes this opportunity of impressing on the attention of Government the necessity of an increased expenditure for educational purposes. The sums spent by Government under this head sink into insignificance when compared with similar provisions in other countries. An increase in the proposed direction will no doubt be felt as an additional responsibility in the beginning, but there is every reason to hope that the outlay will be more than repaid in the long run.

Criticises the financial statement for 1883-84.

In noticing the financial statement for 1883-84, the Gujaráti (91) of the 25th March observes that this important document has given great satisfaction except in the following particulars:—The fears existing under the administration of Sir John Strachey of a new tax being imposed or of the incidence of some old tax being made heavier than before have disappeared under the present regime, and the people are deeply grateful for the same. But the continuance of the system of raising new loans and thereby increasing the national debt is to be much deprecated. It is really inexplicable why due economy should not be observed in the current expenses and a sum should not be set apart for public works. If the financial condition has to be improved and put upon a satisfactory basis, the system of providing public works by raising new loans should be discontinued. Major Baring has shown a surplus of 45 lákhs of rupees, but since a loan of $2\frac{1}{2}$ krors is to be raised for public works there will be a deficit of more than 2 krors. Almost all countries excepting the United States of America are steeped in debt, and hence perhaps the recommendation to free India from similar liability may not be acceptable; but the circumstances of the latter differ from those of the former countries. The national debt incurred by the other countries has been for their own benefit, while the burden which India bears under the same name has been imposed for the benefit of England. Certainly it is not right that the people who are to bear this burden should not be consulted as to the propriety of imposing it. It is also to be regretted that the license tax has not been abolished, as promised last year. It is a heavy burden on the people and ought to be removed without delay. It is to be hoped that this will be done next year. [The Gujarát Mitrá (72) and the Satyá Mitrá (107) of the same date express satisfaction with the financial statement.]

Recommends the substitution of the income for the license tax.

The Bakul (16) of the 25th March, while referring to the budget estimates for 1883-84, is at a loss to understand why, if the Finance Minister has shown a surplus revenue of 45 lákhs of rupees, the license tax should not be abolished. The writer invites the attention of Lord Ripon to the suggestion made in the columns of some of the papers that the substitution of the income tax for the present license tax will relieve the poorer classes of the burden which at present weighs heavily on them.

Prays for the extension of railways to the interior of India.

The Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 23rd March expresses satisfaction at the means suggested in the new budget for the encouragement of the wheat trade, and observes that India will thereby be benefited in two ways. The condition of the ryots will improve, and consequently the prosperity of this country and the prevention of the great loss annually caused to Government by heavy rates of exchange will be ensured. But this is not all. There is great necessity for the extension of railways to the interior of the country. When India is in a prosperous condition as shown by the budget, why not take a loan of more than 2½ krors and spend the money on the construction of railways?

Local Self-government.

Comments on the obstructive attitude of certain European officers towards local self-government.

The Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 28th March is extremely sorry that certain European officials have evinced a tendency to be swayed in their relations with the scheme for local self-government by the ill feelings roused by the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill. The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, who has strongly opposed the Bill, has begun to look upon the scheme of local self-government with disfavour and has delayed the enactment of the law for bringing the scheme into operation. It is also to be regretted, observes the Samáchár, that the Europeans of one or two places should have refused to join the Natives in taking a part in self-government. It is to be hoped that the Europeans will retrace their steps and show themselves ready to co-operate with the Natives.

Comments on the recent elections in Poona.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 29th March dwells at some length on the results of the recent municipal elections at Poona and animadverts on the procedure followed by the president of the municipality in coming to a decision regarding the successful candidates. An irregularity was particularly noticeable in the case of the elections in ward No. 2 (Sadáshiv Peth). Mr. Mádhavráo Yashwant Ráste, who was a candidate for election in this ward, protested orally as well as in writing against the admissibility of certain votes given in favour of his rival Mr. Káshináth Parshurám Gádgil, and pointed out the injustice of the conduct of the polling officer in having declined to admit the votes of certain gentlemen though presented before the prescribed time. The municipal committee appeared to be of opinion that many of the votes objected to were exceptionable. In the same manner Mr. Gádgil also entered a protest against certain votes recorded for Mr. Ráste, and the committee was also generally of opinion that the complaint was well founded. In the teeth of these facts the votes of eligible as well as ineligible candidates were counted together and the result promulgated apparently with the desire of avoiding all trouble of deciding the points of dispute and of making a speedy end of the business. The contention being thus allowed to stand, the president resorted to the easy mode of solution by which the parties dissatisfied were referred to the civil court. By thus wilfully ignoring the injustice that was brought to prominent notice, the committee has been guilty of a charge of imprudence and criminal breach of duty. The inconvenience occasioned by this narrow-sighted decision of the president appears in its full significance by the absence of any rule, among the rules recently sanctioned for the elections for the Poona City Municipality, providing for a speedy settlement of such disputed cases. It is true that resort to the civil courts is the existing remedy in such cases, but it is fraught with a deal of inconvenience on account of the dilatory nature of all civil proceedings. The Dnyán Prakásh trusts that the Government of Bombay will try to repair this omission and secure the credit of having provided an easy solution of such contests. Such cases in the Presidency town of Bombay are met by a provision empowering the Chief Presidency Magistrate to try them and the aggrieved parties are in a position to get prompt redress. In the mofussil however such powers, instead of being vested in Magistrates, should be conferred on Sessions and Subordinate Judges. The Magistrates in the districts have a close contact with the working of the municipalities, and it would not be proper to invest them with such authority.

Does not approve of the intention of Government to postpone the introduction of the new policy regarding local fund boards till the next year.

The Násik Vritt (41) of the 24th March is informed that the new scheme regarding the revision of the working of local fund boards will come into operation from April 1884 instead of from the current year as hitherto expected. The postponement of this reform is attributed to the insufficiency of the time at the disposal of Government for revising the old Act. The Vritt is not prepared to accept this excuse, and is of opinion that the preparation of new enactments regarding the constitution of the new committees and the procedure of election of members would not take more than a day if the officers of Government were worth the money they receive, and their discussion and final passing could be done in a week or ten days. If the Vernacular Press Act could be read thrice in a single day and passed immediately, it is not apparent why this Act cannot be pushed on with speed. Moreover there is nothing that can come in the way of the new scheme being brought into operation immediately in anticipation of a legal enactment. The people will not object to such a measure, and Government cannot do so, having of their own accord declared their intention of inaugurating the reform. The Vritt trusts that the Government will abandon their intention of postponing the introduction of the new policy, and will fulfil the fervent expectations of the people regarding its early adoption.

Disapproves of the conduct of the municipal commissioners of Broach in refusing to resign their office.

The Broach Samáchár (83) of the 29th March says that the commissioners of the local municipality have declined to resign their office though Government asked them twice to do so with a view to the introduction of the scheme of local self-government in the city. Is it proper that Government should take no action in the matter simply because the commissioners have been appointed by them for a certain period? As Government possess the right of introducing changes in a law whenever it suits their purpose, they should introduce a change now if necessary and prevent a bad example being set. The object of the Viceroy will thereby be accomplished soon, and Government will be considered to have done one of their special duties. From their persistent refusal to resign their office, the commissioners appear to have some object in view. Hence it is advisable that they should be deprived of their posts. Government and the public have seen what good they are capable of doing if they are re-elected either by Government or the people. The Samáchár wishes to see a resolution issued by Government to the effect that these commissioners will never be re-appointed by them. Such a measure will be opportune and just, for the commissioners have been guilty of ingratitude towards their patrons. [The Surya Prakásh (76) of the 24th March disapproves of the conduct of the municipal commissioners and suspects it to be the work of some local official who is opposed to the views of Government. It thinks that Broach should be no exception to the scheme. But if Mr. Borradaile thinks of having the present commissioners re-elected, some by Government and some by the people, his views cannot be approved, for no benefit will result from such an arrangement. The commissioners ought to follow in the footsteps of their brethren of Poona, Surat and Ahmedabad. They will surely be benefited by such a course of action.]

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

A prayer for the passing of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 25th March observes :—The objection raised by nine-tenths of the opponents of Mr. Ilbert's Bill is as to the expediency of the measure at this time. Judging from the ferocity of the opposition, a Native writer cannot but be struck with the fact that educated European gentlemen do not scruple at times to observe an impassable gulf between principle and practice when their vision is obscured by interest. It is possible, according to these gentlemen, for a thing to be perfectly just in theory and yet quite unjust in practice,—so very unjust as to call their worst passions into play and to justify the most reckless exercise of their liberty of speech and action, even to drive them into open rebellion against constituted authority. We were not prepared for such a display of antagonism between conscience and interest. To one who has always looked up to the European in India as an exemplar in the leading concerns of life the present agitation is a most painful spectacle. It is a very rude awakening to him who has reposed implicit trust in the justice and good sense of his European fellow-subjects. In this matter of the Bill the Europeans have roused the slumbering demon of race-feeling and thrown back the entente cordiale between the two nations by a quarter of a century. They began by misunderstanding the object of the Bill and its power, and having rushed into opposition they find it impossible to retire with good grace. Having been conceived in misunderstanding, the opposition under such circumstances must lead to misrepresentation. And it is this gross and deliberate misrepresentation that the Native press resents so bitterly. What is the meaning of the assertion that Natives do not care for the amendment? As a matter of fact, Natives care and for years past have clamoured for much more than what the Bill provides. They justly base their demand on Her Majesty's own gracious pledges. Let those pledges be redeemed. Natives ask for nothing more. They have the Viceroy's word that the Bill will have very limited operation. They have the authority of the Honourable Mr. Gibbs, by no means a hasty legislator nor one likely to yield to clamours for abstract justice, that the measure is both just and expedient. They have Dr. Hunter's assurance that the amendment is no break in the continuity of legislative progress, but that it is on the contrary the outcome of progressive legislation based on historical analogies. And yet our European fellow-subjects are not ashamed of keeping up a wantonly hostile attitude on the ground that the Bill is calculated to bring down the status of the two people at once to the same level. We Natives would be but too glad if all class privileges were to be swept away once for all. But Mr. Ilbert's Bill, at any rate, seeks nothing of the kind. It is a most insignificant reform in itself, though urgently called for now, having been so long delayed. In our opinion this perverse opposition is putting Government in a false position and setting the 200 millions of India a very bad example. Though small in itself, the matter involves a vindication of a great principle, and the civilised world which watches the movement will also pronounce a verdict on the way in which the most advanced of the ruling nations treat a loyal and advancing dependency. The Government of India is on its trial and it stands the test with admirable fortitude. The British Parliament and public are also on their trial: they will doubtless be true to their traditions. Her Majesty's own word is at stake; and for the fulfilment of her sacred pledge, if not in the interest of justice and progress so dear to the great British public, we pray that the Bill may be allowed a safe passage.

Disapproves of the attitude of the press in England towards the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 25th March says:—We may well afford to laugh at the senseless storm that unprincipled men like Messrs. Branson, Keswick & Company have raised in Calcutta by placing themselves at the head of packed up meetings composed of heterogeneous sections of the population; but this disposition to risibility at once changes and one begins seriously to look about him and see whether the heavens are not really coming down upon him. The attitude which the press in England, with one or two honourable exceptions, has assumed against the Jurisdiction Bill seems partly to be the result of hurried and ill-digested information placed in the hands of the English press, and partly owing to the indisposition of a portion of the British public to take time to consider whether the Government out here could be rash enough to do acts likely to shake the empire to its very foundations as it is now represented to be. To enforce the opinions of most of the English journals upon the British public, Sir James FitzJames Stephen, late Law Member of the Government of India, has added the weight of his own authority by declaring that the contemplated change, instead of producing "a uniformity or anything the least like it," is likely to provoke only a strong opposition. He seems seriously to believe that the distinction between the European and the Native is the result of the position of the British in India, and that, unless it is contemplated to conduct British administration in India on Native principles of life or of government, the British people must maintain such distinction as the necessary consequence of England's conquest of this country. But we think Sir James' opinion on this subject is both inconsistent and a quarter of a century backward. In the first place he himself admits that by the passing of the Penal Code in 1860 all "the criminal law in England as concerned Europeans" was superseded; and does it consequently stand to reason why or how a concession should have been allowed to be made under the circumstances in the matter of procedure only? With the introduction of the Penal Code the traditional privilege of being tried by his own peers in the case of an Englishman should have been discontinued, but was retained as an unnatural legacy to which the Europeans could have no legal title. And even when we view the subject from the historical side of the question, we are driven to the same conclusion that the contemplated change is the natural result of the "active principle of continual revision" in the criminal law of the country as the Marquis of Wellesley once said; and this fact is borne out by Sir James' own showing to the effect that Europeans in India who were subject to the jurisdiction of the supreme courts alone before 1860 were subjected to the jurisdiction of European Judges and Magistrates in the interior, while at the presidency towns they were made liable also to that of Natives. If a period of ten years was considered sufficient for subjecting them to the lower grade of our judicial courts, the courts of our Subordinate Judges also included, is not a second period of ten years, when we have a number of highly educated Native Civil Servants in the interior, some of them even better than their European compeers, quite enough in the course of a progressive legal advancement to extend the jurisdiction exercised by Native Magistrates and Sessions Judges in the mofussil? and if Sir James says "no," he cannot but be set down for a most inconsistent person. The argument that India should be treated as a conquered country and not as England's equal has nothing to do either with the competency or otherwise of Native Civilians to try European British subjects, or with the question whether the time has or has not arrived when such men should be invested with the above powers. The above two things are quite distinct and Sir James Stephen unhappily mixes up both of them. But the question of equality of treatment stands on a higher platform, and men of a higher calibre than the author of the last Criminal Procedure Code can alone deal with it. It is for persons like Messrs. Gladstone, Fawcett, Bright and others of their stamp to tread the grounds of higher politics, and it is such men as these who have made England what she now is. The permanency of a government always has for its firm foundations the love and affection of its subject people, and not the jarring discordance of justice and injustice, race pride and equality, and we cannot believe Sir James can be unaware of all this. But Sir James has always stood on the side of muscular Christianity, and his race pride and prejudice seem to have warped his otherwise clear understanding. In one place he says that if the Jurisdiction Bill be passed and Native Magistrates and Judges be invested with power to try European British subjects, the measure will be followed by an utter failure. But we would ask Sir James whether Native Magistrates at the presidency towns have ever been found incompetent or unfit in the performance of their duties as such, and the answer must necessarily be in the negative. Native Magistrates and Judges in the interior are in every sense the equals of our Presidency Magistrates, and we may ask Sir James Stephen not to be anxious on the score of a failure if Native Civil Servants in the mofussil come to be invested with the above-mentioned powers. The attitude which the English press has assumed is quite in keeping with that of the various noisy meetings held in this country to protest against the proposed law. We can appreciate, not the spirit in which the agitation is conducted, but the amount of persevering doggedness with which a sturdy Englishman sticks fast to his rights and privileges, and we would ask our countrymen to take a lesson from him. But the kind of arguments that have been hitherto brought forward in support of the agitation cannot hold water for a moment, and we are sorry abler English journalists in England should not have been able to look through their hollowness. It is a thousand pities that even the London Times should have been harping in the same strain and on the same lame argument of the withdrawal of British capital from India. We wish some stronger reasons were adduced in proof of the impropriety of the proposed measure. As a matter of fact there are no sound arguments against the Bill, and those who are protesting against it are merely catching at straws. In its issue of the 2nd March, the writer in the Times, among other things, says that "official propriety requires that it should be expressed with caution, and stronger motives are not wanting to prevent excessive candour." The above is a bad insinuation against the present Government of India, and we wish the Times had spared us this infliction. We hope the British public does not suppose that the representatives of Her Majesty in this country, who are Englishmen themselves, are now trying something wherewith to overturn the British ráj out here. We regret that a writer of such ability and experience should descend to such a low level. We would ask the English press to discuss the question fairly, dispassionately, and on its own merits, and not to be carried away by a transitory frenzy. We are under a deep debt of gratitude to the British public for the many blessings it has conferred upon us. It is with their assistance that we are gradually careering our way in the path of progress, and we should with all our might beseech them ever to lead us on gently until we shall have reached the common goal of a common ambition. When this is done it will be our turn, as it is even now, to doubly repay in the shape of gratitude what is now being done for us. [The Lok Mitrá (74) of the 25th March expresses somewhat similar sentiments and advises the natives of India to lose no time in sending representations to the authorities in England and India in support of the Bill. The Hitechchhu (73) of 29th March, the Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 23rd and the Khayir Kháhe Islám (123) of the 18th March are of the same opinion.]

Comments on Sir James Stephen's views regarding the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 25th March, while commenting on Sir James Stephen's communication to the Times on the Jurisdiction Bill, concludes as follows:—But we need hardly regret that Sir James has written on this subject. Far from it, his letter, however unsatisfactory as a defence of the agitation against the Jurisdiction Bill, is valuable in so far as its arguments prove too much and support the principle of the Bill instead of knocking it down. To put it shortly, in the first place Sir James admits that the law as it stood before 1872 justly gave rise to a practical grievance and a scandal, and we see that neither the grievance nor the scandal has been fully removed by the Code of 1872. In the second place he thinks Europeans are competent to try Native offenders because they are familiarised with the languages and manners of the latter. We see that similar is the case with those Native Judges to whom Mr. Ilbert's Bill proposes to give jurisdiction over European offenders. And beyond this there is no argument in Sir James' letter. He meant to defend the agitation against the Bill, but he has succeeded in only proving its weakness.

Observes that it is not safe to permit Europeans to make the extensive agitation they have raised against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (97) of the 25th March observes:—Natives have never been guilty of creating an agitation even when their dearest interests and privileges have been affected. Natives have been peaceful and loyal, and have meekly submitted to the decisions passed by the authorities. On the other hand, Europeans have without any cause created such a row about the Jurisdiction Bill as to outstep the bounds of reason. They held public meetings in different places and publicly denounced the authorities and their policy, threatened to induce the volunteers to lay down their arms, and in one place the effigy of a high official was burnt in condemnation of his conduct in the matter of the Bill. Had Natives been guilty of such conduct, they would have been at once denounced as disloyal. It is not good that Europeans should be permitted to have their own way without receiving some check to their thoughtless conduct; for it is feared that by this they might be encouraged to take some more mischievous steps on some future occasion, leading to very serious consequences. [The Dátardun (86) of the 29th March criticizes in its own comic way the conduct of those that burnt Mr. Ilbert's effigy in condemnation of the Bill.]

Says that if Europeans retire from India, the latter will lose nothing.

The Satyá Mitrá (107) of the 25th March observes that the Europeans who have raised an outcry against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill threaten to leave the country if the Bill is passed into a law. But if they carry out the threat Natives will lose nothing. Those Englishmen alone who have no fixed occupation at home come to this country, enjoy power and return home with the riches they may have accumulated. They come here more to enrich themselves than to benefit the country. They are no doubt distinguished for their enterprise and hard work, but these virtues are nullified by their excitable disposition. There was a time when Natives very much required the help of Europeans, but that time has gone and India has now become able to conduct her own government. The Europeans however ought to bear in mind that they will not find such a good country as India.

The Satyá Mitrá (107) of the 25th March observes that though Natives do not hope to be substantially benefited by the enactment of the Bill, yet they have lent a patient and silent ear to the abuses showered on them by Europeans in connection with it. Their patience appears the more striking when it is remembered that they have never taken exception to the decisions of European Magistrates and Judges that were ignorant of the manners, customs and religion of the Natives. There are sufficient reasons for Natives to claim the privilege of being tried by Native Magistrates and Judges, but they mutely submit to the decisions of European Magistrates and Judges, not because the latter are superior to the former, but because they consider it loyal to accept the decisions of those that are clothed with magisterial and judicial powers. The seditious Europeans have now taught the Natives to claim the privilege, and if the former succeed in their demand, the Natives ought to get their right as well. A great difficulty is experienced in correctly interpreting Native evidence to European Magistrates and Judges, and the evidence is sometimes misconstrued by them. Europeans do not like to be tried by Natives because they consider the latter to be rogues and liars; but this is a libel on the Native character. Certainly the Europeans that raise sedition against law and constituted authority, and incite the soldiery to take a similar course, are not fit to administer the law. If the Jurisdiction Bill happens to be thrown out, Natives will be dissatisfied with their trials by European Magistrates and Judges. [The Bombay Punch (81) of the 31st March condemns the conduct of European agitators against the Bill in showering abuses upon Natives.]

Says that the Europeans who have raised an outcry against the Jurisdiction Bill have set a bad example to Natives.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (97) of the 25th March gives nine more instances of the injustice done in disposing of accusations brought against Europeans in 1863 and 1869. In most of these cases the offences were against Natives. These instances are cited to show that Europeans have forfeited their claim to the privilege of being tried by European Magistrates and Judges alone, by the unjust use made of that privilege.

Observes that Europeans have forfeited their claims to the right of being tried by European Magistrates and Judges.

The Lok Mitrá (74) of the 25th March indignantly repudiates the charge of perjury and fabrication of false evidence brought against the natives of India by the speakers at a meeting of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and by the London Times of the 9th February when opposing the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill. The Mitrá observes that Natives do perjure themselves now and then in courts of law, but not more so than Europeans. In fact, humanity being in India what it is in England, the temptation to give false evidence in judicial proceedings is everywhere the same, be it in civilized Europe or semi-barbarous India. Where civilization is most refined, perjury is most rampant; but it is perpetrated so cleverly, thanks to the system of a highly crystallized state of the law of evidence and procedure, that it is hardly detected, though for that matter the lawyers are not unaware of the fact. Perjury is such a deep-rooted crime in England that for the last few years very many English papers have now and then incidentally referred to its growth. The Mitrá then quotes a few extracts from an article which appeared in St. James' Gazette in August 1881 on the extensive prevalence of the crime of perjury in England, and asks whether it is just to single out the natives of India as the greatest offenders, who are no more given to perjury than Englishmen. If there are so many temptations in civilized England to commit perjury, are there not greater temptations in India to do so with impunity where every European in the mofussil is infatuated with the belief that he is the monarch of all he surveys and none dare dispute his right to belabour a poor oppressed cooly or even to shoot him down with the utmost sang froid as if he were belabouring his horse or ass, or were employed in the game of pigeon-shooting? It behoves the Government of India to call for returns of every court of justice in the empire so as to show how many instances have hitherto occurred where the character, the liberty and lives of Observes that the crime of perjury is not more prevalent in India than it is in England.

Europeans have been endangered by the perjured evidence of Natives, and how many where Natives have been sentenced to imprisonment on the prosecution of Europeans. If the lower orders in England thus perjure themselves wholesale in social matters, are people of the same class who, according to the Indian Daily News, form the bulk of the European population in any mofussil town in India, less liable to perjure themselves here in any squabbles in which Natives are concerned? Do they change their skin as well as their nature when they transplant themselves from England to India? Or is it or is it not a fact that there is every temptation for them under the existing anomalies of the law to recklessly indulge in such crimes, when they know that such are more likely to be passed over by a European than a Native Magistrate? The hidden reason of the present cry against Mr. Ilbert's Bill is to be found in the consideration of the questions above suggested.

The Bengal Rent Bill.

Approves of the Bengal Rent Bill.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 25th March says:—The Bengal Tenancy Bill is one of the schemes of economic legislation seldom understood by the public at large. In dealing with this important question the Government of India is endeavouring righteously to inaugurate a system of land tenure which in time to come shall be most conducive to the agricultural prosperity of the country and therefore of the cultivators generally. Thus the Bengal Tenancy Bill is really invested with unusual interest at this juncture. It must be remembered that, as usual, in an important legislative measure affecting vast masses of people, there are two parties whose interests must clash. There is in the present controversy the minority called "zamindárs," who are very rich and influential and therefore able to make their voice heard and respected. There is on the other side the majority, in whose behalf the legislation is intended, composed of millions of peasants, who are poor and almost helpless, and are besides unable to make their grievances known. The former have more than one able representative in the Council. The latter may be said to be represented by the members of the "mábáp sarkár." That in the present instance Government literally stands in the place of "mábáp" or parent of the ryots is evident. There are 130,000 revenue payers, who, under the mistaken system of Lord Cornwallis, pocket a net income from land of 9½ millions sterling at the lowest estimate, though the amount this class actually realises from the occupants of the soil is computed at something between 25 and 30 millions sterling. An idea may be formed of the extent of the cultivated area when we say that it covers 55 millions of acres. On the other hand, who are the majority? The "occupants of the soil" numbering 10 millions, whereof 9 millions pay a rental below £2 per annum, and of these more than 6 millions pay under 10 shillings. Thus it will be seen how unequal is the struggle. That under any other government but that of the British the small but powerful class would have exercised even greater tyranny and imposed more crushing rents goes without saying. And the dire necessity, hastened by the agrarian disturbances a few years ago, that has impelled the benevolent Government to interpose the strong authority of the law between the zamindárs and the impoverished ryots with the view of sweeping away many an abuse that has arisen during almost a century will not be questioned by any reasonable being. Yet how many care to become conversant with this rent question of the day? Mr. Ilbert was quite right when he remarked that it was one of those subjects which no ordinary person could understand. If so, how much credit is due to the Honourable the Law Member for having placed the whole question, from the very beginning, in a clear light,—so clear indeed as to make it impossible for the meanest intelligence to misunderstand it? The grasp of mind and the ability with which he has elucidated this difficult subject leave nothing to be desired. A better and more conclusive case for the necessity of legislation could not have been made out. Mr. Ilbert's speech is a complete and irrefutable answer to the objections of the opponents of the Bill. The Government of India has acted wisely in framing the Bill in conformity with the opinions of such unimpeachable authorities as three successive Lieutenant-Governors of Bengal, the Rent Committee, the Rent Commission and the Famine Commission. When we bear in mind the opinion of another great authority—we should perhaps say, the greatest authority,—not even the bitterest opponent of the present Bill can say that no reason exists for fresh legislation. That authority is no other than Lord Lawrence. The zamindár has usurped the right of occupancy of the cultivator and has indulged systematically in enhancement of rent, arbitrary evictions and unlawful cesses which are now considered as most tyrannical. And the Government, under the powers vested in it by the Regulation of 1793, is doing no more than re-establish those equitable relations that ought to subsist between the zamindár and the ryot. The zamindárs are bold enough to urge that no grounds exist for improving the position of the ryots, whose rights they have usurped, while with cool audacity they lustily demand legislation for improving their own status! Fine logic this for landed aristocrats! We are of opinion that all the arguments, oratorial and editorial, of the Honourable Kristodás Pal will fail to shake the position of Government. Mr. Ilbert has found an impartial advocate of unusual strength in Major Baring. His speech, so teeming with facts close driven and so interesting for the many economical arguments introduced therein, has demolished the chief objection of the zamindárs' representative in the Council touching the inexpediency of legislation with the view to restore to the ryots their rights long withheld. The Finance Minister has also successfully combated the theory of the freedom of contract urged by Mr. Pal. It is enough to say that Mr. Ilbert has nobly discharged the duty entrusted to him, and has besides rendered a great public service by treating this most intricate Bill in a manner to make it well understood by every man of ordinary intelligence, and that too with such impartiality as is sure to enhance his reputation as a lawyer and statesman.

Shows the necessity of a remedial measure like the Bengal Rent Bill.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 25th March says :—The Bengal Rent Bill is a step in remedial legislation which the Government of this country must sooner or later introduce. The land law throughout the length and breadth of India and the relations of landlord and tenant, not only in Bengal but in all the provinces of the empire, are so out of joint with the times that they require a thorough overhauling. The position of the actual cultivators of the soil has been gradually reduced to so low a pitch, that in the interests of the empire some steps are necessary which will in some measure at least give them a moment of relief. The bad state of the revenue laws, together with the utter ignorance of the ryots and its inevitable evils, have brought them to a condition from which even lawlessness would be to them a relief. If this state of things be allowed to continue for some time more, it is not improbable that the cultivators of the soil might take the law into their own hands and try to effect that which should wisely be held out to them by Government. It is a misfortune of this country that the greater bulk of the population of the country are obliged to depend upon agriculture for subsistence. This has been so for a long time past, and the evils that are now the result of that condition are as it were left a legacy to the present Government by its predecessors. In former times, when there was lawlessness and rapine rampant in the land, this evil was not felt. Those unlawful pursuits served as so many safety-valves which reduced the pressure of population on the soil both by means of actual reduction and of diversion to other vocations. That is all gone now, fortunately for men who have something to lose. But one's benefit is another's bane, and the poorer classes have been thrown with a vengeance upon the soil, which is too small and too much exhausted to afford food for the teeming millions. How to relieve these people is a question upon the solution of which depends the future welfare of this country. If matters be allowed to continue as they are, they are sure to grow worse, and then the usual consequences are as sure to follow. For a time the discontent among the agriculturists will not be apparent, being smothered by the glittering civilization above. But it is sure to accumulate energy from this very pent up condition, and will burst into an agrarian blaze all round. Surely this state of things demands redress, and for some time past Government has directed its attention to the amelioration of it. The Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act was passed with the same view, but this measure, which was meant as a certain cure, has operated as a stimulant to the very disease which it was brought forth to cure. The Bengal Rent Bill is now brought forward for the amelioration of the condition of the cultivators in that part of the country. In the recent debate on that Bill all the opinions expressed were able and demonstrated the subject from almost all possible points of view. A remedial action of this character is naturally a very ticklish thing, for it is sure to trench upon the interests of some section of the society. Yet the Bill is on the whole conceived in that spirit of strong and practical statesmanship which characterises the present Government of India. From the time the present settlement was either inaugurated or confirmed by Lord Cornwallis, Government has ceased to have direct connection with the actual cultivators of the soil, and a large and influential body of landlords, otherwise called the zamindárs, have stood up between it and the ryots. The zamindárs alone are responsible to Government for the land revenue, which is permanently settled, and they in their turn were practically left to do what they liked with the tenants under them. This state of things has filled the whole of Bengal with tenants who are in much the same position as the cottiers in Ireland. The continued enjoyment of certain rights by the zamindárs—perhaps rights not conferred expressly but acquired by prescription—has operated so harshly on the tenants under them that it was in the interests of justice and good policy that some such measure should have been formulated.

Education.

Is glad that the Education Commission is not likely to recommend an increase in the college fees.

The Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 27th March is glad that Dr. Hunter has expressed his opinion at a public meeting that it is not desirable to enhance the rate of college fees inasmuch as higher education is sought by the middle and not by the richer classes of the Natives, and that any increase in the fees is calculated to check the progress of that education. The Doctor is quite correct in this view, and the public are grateful to him for expressing it in such unmistakeable terms, inasmuch as it allays any fears entertained on the subject of higher education. After this announcement the Education Commission is not likely at all to go against this view.

Railways.

A complaint regarding the uniforms for Native station masters on the G. I. P. Railway.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 25th March alludes to an order recently issued by the Traffic Department of the G. I. P. Railway Company asking Native station masters and assistant station masters to adopt a new uniform consisting of a black Bráhman coat, trowsers and boots, in addition to their usual skull-caps, and explains the inconvenience likely to be caused by the order. Probably the idea whether the new uniform will suit Native habits and customs of living, and whether it will not trench greatly upon their miserable salaries, seems never to have occurred to the official who has issued the circular order. The department already knows that the salary of a Native station master generally ranges below fifty; he has to support himself, family and other dependents, and any additional expense even on his own person is so much strain upon his purse. We hope the authorities will cancel the ill-advised order, which neither makes the department more efficient, nor adds to the comfort or convenience of those to whom it is to be applied.

Advises the merchants of Bombay to appeal to the Secretary of State for India against the decision of the Supreme Government in the matter of freight on the East India and the Rajputána Railways.

After alluding to the resolutions, contradicting each other, issued by the Government of India during the last eighteen months in the matter of freights on the East India and the Rajputána Railways, the Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 27th March despairs of justice from the Indian authorities to the cause of the mercantile community of Bombay, and advises them to prefer an appeal to the Secretary of State for India. In their resolution of the 2nd March, the Jáme observes, the Government of India say that they have empowered the agents and managers of the different railways to fix whatever rates they like in order to draw to their respective concerns the greatest traffic; but this order is not proper, inasmuch as the different Indian railways are guaranteed by Government, who have therefore the right to interfere in their management in order to regulate properly the different commercial interests. The managers and agents should not be left to themselves in fixing any rates they like in order to advance the commercial interests of one city and injure those of another. The Jáme assures the people of Bombay that the injustice done to their city is so very evident, and the arguments for its redress are so very strong, that an appeal to England is sure to result in their favour.

Municipalities.

Disapproves of the proposal that the municipality of Bombay should open a pawnbroker's shop and suggests another course.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 26th March disapproves of the proposal that the municipality of Bombay should open a pawn-bank for the convenience of the poor people of the city, on the ground that the Corporation will not be able to compete successfully with the Márwádi pawnbrokers. It will be better therefore if the pawnbrokers are subjected to certain rules that would make their dealings with their poor customers beneficial to the latter, and if licenses are issued to such dealers on payment of a certain tax.

Native States.

Condemns the conduct of the Nawáb of Junágad with respect to the slaughter of the Maiyás by the Junágad police.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 25th March says:—Colonel Watson, who was entrusted with the investigation of the Junágad tragedy, has sent in his report to Government. It has not yet been published, but from what has transpired we are bound to say that the conduct of the Junágad Darbár has been of a questionable character. We wish both the report of the Colonel and the explanation of the Darbár were made public, so that any surmises that may be entertained either in favour of the Chief or the Maiyás may at once be removed. Looking to the summary of the report, one is constrained to say that the action of the Junágad Chief was most cowardly. To kill about two hundred harmless people on the mere pretext of their resisting the payment of the land tax and for the Chief to go out with his retinue to enjoy the sight, it is said, of cartloads of the heads of the supposed mal-contents being brought into town, was surely the most detestable action a Native Chief possessed of common sense could have been capable of. If the alleged facts are proved to be true it will be a wonder if the perpetrators are not visited with condign punishment. [Several other Maráthi papers indulge in similar remarks. The Rást Goftár (105) of the 25th March expresses similar sentiments.]

Says that the Junágad authorities should be severely punished for the slaughter of the Maiyás.

The Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 23rd March, in referring to the massacre of the Maiyás by the Junágad police, says that the chief men of Junágad are trying their best to hush up the matter. The massacre is a great blemish on the career of the aged Diwán Sálehindi. Bávdinbhái will find it very hard to give an explanation. The Junágad authorities know the ways of pleasing the British Government, and even when a commission has been appointed to investigate the matter, they think they can win it over to their side by flattery, feasts and other attentions paid to it. Many persons are of opinion that they will succeed in their plans. Major Watson, Acting Political Agent, is said to have made a report unfavourable to the State. Hence the Deputy Diwán Bápálál and Diwán Sálehindi have gone to Bombay to exert their influence with the Bombay Government. It is to be feared lest the Junágad authorities should deceive Government and succeed in their object. The Assistant Political Agent has made a report opposed to that of the Agent. People assert that as Bápálál was at first a Shirastedár to the Assistant Political Agent, it is no wonder that the latter should act according to his wishes. Government ought to order an independent enquiry in the matter, and should severely punish the Junágad authorities with a view to prevent the recurrence of such events. [The Deshi Mitra (87) of the 29th March does not approve of the suggestion that the Junágad State should be degraded for this massacre, and says that the State kárbháris only should be severely punished. If Mr. Gokalji Jhála or Mr. Narsinhprasád had been at this time in power nothing of the kind would have happened. Diwán Sálehindi is no doubt clever, but since the time he has taken to the company of Máhámal Sanchal, fears have been entertained for Junágad. One of the members of Government should visit Junágad and investigate the matter.]

Advises the Cutch Darbár not to permit the Chhappanbhog ceremony to be performed at Mándvi in the month of Chaitra (April—May).

In alluding to the report that Vahuji Mahárâj, a priestess of the Valabhi sect of the Vaishnavas at Mándvi in Cutch, has resolved to perform the Chhappanbhog ceremony in the mandir or temple of Natvarji in that town, the Rást Goftár (105) of the 25th March observes that this town is thickly populated and the temple is so very small that if the ceremony is permitted to be performed therein cholera is sure to make its appearance and commit great havoc among the gathering. Nearly seventy-five thousand persons will very probably assemble to witness the ceremony, and if it is allowed to be held in the sultry month of Chaitra (April—May), great inconvenience will be felt from an insufficient supply of water and an epidemic will break out. The Cutch Darbár should not therefore give permission to perform the ceremony in summer, which might well be performed in one of the winter months in a convenient locality at some distance from the town where appropriate sanitary arrangements could be made. [The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 26th March expresses similar sentiments.]

Suggests precautionary measures for the health of persons visiting the fair held at Múli.

The Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 23rd March says that Government ought at once to put a stop to the fair held at Múli at the time of the Holi holidays. Thousands of people flock to the fair and suffer hardships for want of good food and water. Who is responsible if cholera breaks out at such a juncture? The Mahárâj of the Swámi Náráyan sect should be compelled to locate temporarily in Múli a dispensary under the management of a qualified doctor for the time the fair continues. Otherwise the fair should not be allowed to be held.

RAOJI B. PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
7th April 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Appointments : Approval of the decision of the Secretary of State regarding the eligibility of Uncovenanted Civilians to the post of Collector of Bombay 3

Bombay Dockyard : Regrets that the services of Khán Báhádur Jamsetji Dhanjibhái, Master Builder in the —, and of his Assistant are shortly to be dispensed with 4

Complaint against the employés of Messrs. Shepherd & Co.... ... 4

Hunting excursions : Approval of the order issued by the Commander-in-Chief of India in regard to soldiers going on— 3

Mámlatdár's Court at Dhárwár : Complaint regarding an order prohibiting Mukhtyárs from appearing in the—... 5

Native States : The Native press efficiently discharges its duty of exposing the defects and shortcomings in the administration of— ... 3

Pasture grounds for village cattle : Necessity of providing— ... 3

Sanitation : Complaint regarding the unwholesome condition of the water of the river Pravara near the village of Lakh 5

Subordinate Judge's Court : Necessity for the establishment of a — at Khed in the Ratnágiri District... 5

Volunteer Corps : Remarks on the admission of Natives into the— ... 4

PART II.—The New Budget—

Budget statement for 1883-84 : Comments on the—

The Gujaráti 7

The Indu Prakásh ... ... 6 & 7

Import duties : Evil effects of the abolition of the— 5

License Tax : Recommendation for the substitution of the income tax for the— 7

Railways : Prayer for the extension of — to the interior of India ... 7

PART III.—Local Self-government—

Local self-government :

Comments on the obstructive attitude of certain European officers towards— 8

Comments on the recent elections in Poona under the scheme of—... 8

Local Fund Boards : Disapproval of the intention of Government to postpone the introduction of the new policy regarding — till the next year 8

Municipal Commissioners of Broach : Disapproval of the conduct of the— in refusing to resign their office... 9

PART IV.—Legislation—

Bengal Rent Bill :

Approval of the— 14

Recognizing the necessity of a remedial measure like the— ... 15

Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill :

Comments on Sir James Stephen's views regarding the— ... 12

Danger of permitting Europeans to make the extensive agitation they have raised against the— 12

Disapproval of the attitude of the press in England towards the—... 10

Forfeiture of the claim of Europeans to be tried by European Magistrates and Judges 13

Perjury : A refutation of the argument of greater prevalence of— in India than in England 13

Prayer for the passing of the—... 9

Protests against the— : The evil effects of—made by Europeans ... 13

Remarks regarding India's usefulness to England 12

PART V.—Education—

College fees : Satisfaction at the opinion publicly expressed by Dr. Hunter that it is undesirable to raise— 16

Page.

PART VI.—Railways—

Freight on the East India and the Rajputána Railways: Advice to the merchants of Bombay to appeal to the Secretary of State for India against the decision of the Supreme Government in the matter of — 16

Uniforms for Native station masters on the G. I. P. Railway: Complaint against an order prescribing certain— 16

PART VII.—Municipalities—

Bombay Municipality: Disapproval of the proposal that the—should open a pawnbroker's shop and suggestion of another course 17

PART VIII.—Native States—

Cutch Darbár: Advice to the—not to permit the Chhappanbhog ceremony to be performed at Mándvi in the month of Chaitra (April—May) 18

Fair held at Muli: Precautionary measures for the health of persons visiting the— 18

Junágad: Slaughter of the Maiyás:

A recommendation that the Junágad authorities should be severely punished for the— 17

Condemnation of the conduct of the Nawáb of Junágad with respect to the—by the Junágad police 17

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 7th April 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayá	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do.	600
12	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do.	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyá Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	100
14	„ Arunodayá	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
20	„ Daivadnyá Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
21	„ Daivadnyá Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
22	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly	425
23	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
24	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
25	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
26	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
27	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
28	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	400
29	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
30	„ Jagan Mitrá	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
31	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*32	„ Karnátak Mitrá[4]	Belgaum	Do.	200
33	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	3,500
34	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
35	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	300
36	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
37	„ Mahárashtrá Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
38	„ Mahárashtrá Mitrá	Sátára	Do.	250
39	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
40	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
41	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
42	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly	700
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Do.	Do.	200
44	„ Nyáyá Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
47	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	250
48	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily	350
*49	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
50	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti) .	Do.	200
*51	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
52	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
53	„ Satyá Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	243
54	„ Satyá Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
55	„ Satyá Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
56	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	275
*57	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Weekly	200
*58	„ Shetakari	Poona	Monthly	400
59	„ Shiváji[3]	Do.	Weekly	200
60	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*61	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
62	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
63	„ Suryodayá	Thána	Do.	240

[1] Marátha portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles. [4] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
64	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
65	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly	250
66	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
67	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
68	„ Vichárshil...	Málvan	Do.	300
*69	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
70	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*71	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
72	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do.	400
73	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
74	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	725
75	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
76	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
77	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
78	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
79	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
80	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
81	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
82	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	950
83	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
84	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
85	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
86	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
87	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do.	1,000
*88	„ Dnyán Prasárak	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
89	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
90	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
91	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*92	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
93	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*94	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
95	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
96	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*97	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
98	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	700
99	„ Kusum Guchchhá	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
100	„ Nágar Udayá	Do.	Do.	300
101	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
102	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
103	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
104	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
105	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
106	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
107	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	400
*108	„ Sauráshtrá Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
109	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*110	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
111	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
112	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár ...	Umreth	Fortnightly ...	62
*113	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
114	„ Vartamán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
115	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
116	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	300
117	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
118	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*119	„ Karnátá Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
	URDU.
*120	The Altáf	Bombay	Weekly	200
*121	„ Armagán	Do.	Do.	200
*122	„ Dabdabe Islám[5]	Do.	Do.	200
*123	„ Khádame Hind	Do.	Daily	200
124	„ Khayir Kháhe Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly .	300
125	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
*126	„ Muzhire Shawkatul Islám	Do.	Do.	200
	PERSIAN.
127	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

[5] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ā.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Says that it is the sense of loyalty that makes the people of India submit quietly to whatever is done by their rulers.

The Saddharm Dip (52) for the Hindu month of Mágh (February-March 1883) received on the 2nd March, in an article headed "The loyalty and strength of the people of India," dwells on the causes that account for the marked and peculiar patience of the people in submitting quietly to the iniquities of their rulers. The Natives have indeed every reason to grudge the spirit of partiality observable in the treatment accorded to the ruling and the ruled classes. And if the Europeans were ever subjected to the sort of treatment which it is the general lot of Natives to receive from their superiors, we do not think that they will bear it with the same sort of cold indifference as the Natives. The Natives look upon the English as the rulers of the universe, and ergo an incarnation of God, and they must therefore revere them. It is this sense of loyalty that is deeply ingrained in the nature of the Hindu that makes him averse to dispute the motives of his rulers and submit quietly to their ordinances. The Saddharm Dip has already shown in its issue for the month of Shráwan (August-September 1882) (reported at page 3 of the Report for the week ending 6th January 1883) that it is not the want of pluck or courage that makes Natives reconcile themselves to the acts of their rulers whatever their nature. Other instances also may be cited in support of this theory. It is now an undeniable truth that Native Chiefs cannot treat their subjects in a high-handed fashion. Their present position is indeed very awkward. They are mere puppets and could be made to dance in any manner the sovereign power chooses. Nay, the Residents or Political Agents accredited to the States are ever willing to give a ready ear to the most trivial and unfounded complaints from the people. Even under such circumstances the Native Chiefs are respected and loved by their subjects. And what can explain this? It is nothing but the innate sense of loyalty to their Chiefs. This was very well exemplified by the fact that the subjects of the Baroda State could not be easily reconciled to the dethronement of Malhárráo, notwithstanding the serious charges of maladministration preferred against him. Again it might be considered natural for the people of Baroda to have taken it ill of the British authorities to dethrone their ruler. But what accounts for the unanimous action of the people throughout the length and breadth of India in the matter of securing justice to poor Malhárráo, when they apprehended that injustice was done to him in that delicate matter of the charge of attempting to poison the British Resident? It is attributable to no other cause than that the founder of the Gáekwádi dynasty having used his sword for the good of the country, the people of India could not bear the idea of a descendant of his being subjected to such ignominy. The same may be said of the Kolhápur case, which is quite fresh in every one's memory, and the same cause accounts for the congregational prayers offered on the occasion of the illness of the Prince of Wales some years ago.

Comments on the general policy of Government.

The Gujaráti (91) of the 1st April, in an article headed "How is India governed?" analyses the policy hitherto pursued by the British Government in India, and says that it rests on two principles, (1) to keep the European British subjects contented, and (2) to secure the stability of the kingdom. These two principles are quite inconsistent with each other, and there is reason to apprehend that they may in course of time prove prejudicial to the interests of the kingdom. The unfriendly feeling between the rulers and the ruled is of no ordinary type. All the fat berths are monopolised by Europeans and very few Natives are favoured with them. There is a distinction between the law as administered to Natives and that administered to Europeans. Natives have been debarred from the use of arms, and having been declared undeserving of confidence, Europeans are burning to shut against them the doors of higher education. The new scheme of local self-government is looked upon with disfavour. European traders are receiving every sort of encouragement and any and every Indian interest is sacrificed for their convenience. Nor are Native arts encouraged. Can such an administration be declared to be for the good of the people? Distinctions of race, distinctions of country, distinctions of creed—can these ever contribute to the stability of the British rule? Sir Richard Temple remarked on the occasion of the marriage of Sayájiráo Gáekwád that after the fall of the Romans the only people who could understand how to rule over foreigners were the British. The Romans used to allow the privileges of citizenship to their conquered subjects, but have such privileges been extended to Natives even partially? So long as the distinction between the rulers and the ruled does not disappear, and so long as impartial redress is not granted in all matters to Europeans and Natives alike, there is no reason to suppose that the British supremacy will continue for even a fourth of the period for which the Romans continued to be in power. To place the foundations of the kingdom on a firm basis it is necessary to abolish all caste distinctions, and the only remedy for ensuring its stability is to grant all sorts of concessions to the conquered race in a liberal spirit and to soothe by affectionate treatment their sense of being conquered by foreigners. The Gujaráti is however thoroughly satisfied with the reforms inaugurated by Lord Ripon, and concludes by remarking that if this policy were hereafter consistently followed, it could be said with justice that India is governed for her own sake.

Approves of the resolution of the Government of India on the subject of providing grazing lands.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 1st April, in noticing the new resolution of the Government of India on the subject of providing fodder reserves, observes:—We have no hesitation in saying that everybody will admit the necessity of such a resolution. From the papers quoted in the resolution and from the reports that were read from time to time, it appears to be an unpleasant truth that while attempts have been made to protect human lives from famine, no attempts of a good nature have yet been made to protect the cattle of the country against such a periodical calamity. The cattle of the country have not been replaced yet, though about half-a-dozen years have gone by; and we learn that cattle-diseases infest more parts of the country than hitherto and greatly reduce their number. As in the case of human beings, so in the case of cattle too, an insufficient supply of food gives rise to many diseases, the disastrous effects of which are at this day traceable in every little village. The resolution under notice tries to find out means of insuring cattle against this scanty supply of food, by making arrangements to have tracts of land protected and preserved for the special purposes of fodder and fuel. The unnecessary stringency with which protected forests are guarded so heavily affects the fuel supply of towns and villages, that in cities like Poona fuel has risen enormously in price during the past few years. The prices of fuel have a great deal to do with the deficient supply of manure to the soil, for to make up their want of fuel occasioned by high prices people do not much hesitate to burn cow-dung cakes and similar articles of manure, so that the forests as they are protected at present not only half-feed the cattle but half-feed the land as well. Hence neither the cattle nor the land can be reasonably expected to yield a sufficient crop. That the soil is becoming impoverished is no new cry, but nobody ever attempted to go into the heart of the subject. Some said that the land was only scratched and could not therefore yield bumper crops; others suggested that the Indian ploughs were very rude and could not plough deep; steam ploughs were therefore suggested as the best substitute; a third set of thinkers proposed that Indian manures were not scientifically prepared and therefore did not quite meet the requirements of the land. We do not at all mean to say that none of these theories were correct; but we simply say that these, after all, appear to be the calculations of superficial, half-educated or distant European theorists. One very distinct feature of Lord Ripon's administrative policy is that he does not like to import anything from abroad into this country, and the present resolution is quite in keeping with this policy. Steam ploughs or other agricultural implements would greatly go to assist the improvement of the soil, and thus postpone, if not avert, its impending bankruptcy. But the wise statesman knows that the introduction of steam-worked machinery necessarily involves the importation of foreign mechanics. Though the soil would improve a little thereby, the costly services of the mechanic, coupled with the maintenance charges of the machine, would hardly leave the poor agriculturist anything more than he at present clears. The statesman therefore proposes that the object of turning up the soil deep ought to be gained by improving the quality of the animals of draught, which can be done only by feeding them fat. Feeding fat the oxen necessitates a good supply of fodder, and the present resolution is circulated with the object of bringing into being that supply with protected tracts of forests. Read this resolution with the recently passed takávi rules and the Loans Bill, and it will at once be clear that Lord Ripon is doing the needful in the matter. He creates a supply of fodder, induces the agriculturists to buy a pair of bullocks, and promises that in case the crops should fail the demand for assessments will either be held in abeyance or altogether given up. There is another very important and preventive measure embodied in the resolution. It is this. By causing tracts of waste land to be cultivated, planted and protected, Lord Ripon thinks of producing those conditions in the atmosphere which are necessary for a timely and sufficient rainfall, a guaranteed insurance against famines.

Remarks in connection with the cultivation of exotic cotton in the Dhárwár District.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 1st April says :—In the Dhárwár District for the last five or six years American cotton seed has been imported by Government in considerable quantities and given away to the ryots to sow in their best fields, the only condition being that they should take the greatest possible care of the crop and give in return twice the quantity of the seed from the crop raised. Unfortunately, however, it has been found by experience that, whether owing to defects in the seed itself, which must greatly suffer during the sea voyage, or to the unsuitability of the soil and climate, the exotic cotton plant does not thrive well in that district; so that instead of any beneficial results arising from the attempts of Government to improve the cotton, complaints are heard on the part of the ryots concerned that not only have they not in a single instance realized the large profits which the officers of Government promised to them when giving them, against their will, the exotic seed, but that the crop having entirely or almost entirely failed, they have been obliged to bear a dead loss, having had to make up the assessment on the fields by some other means. If they had not been forced to sow exotic cotton seed, they urge that they would have sown the indigenous variety, which thrives well in spite of unfavourable seasons, and which would have at least yielded a return sufficient to cover the assessment. If these complaints are well founded, and we are inclined to believe that they are, some remedial measure is necessary, unless it is sought to create a feeling of widespread discontent among the landholders. We are afraid that the feeling has been already engendered; and unless it is prevented from taking deeper root, all the well-meant efforts of Government to improve the cotton crop of the district and thereby to open a fresh source of wealth will come to nought. If one thing has been established beyond doubt in regard to exotic cotton, it is that it is a very precarious crop and less able than the indigenous variety to withstand the effects of an inclement season. The obvious remedy that suggests itself is, therefore, that whenever the yield of the exotic cotton is insufficient to cover the assessment of the land sown with it, Government should forego the revenue, or, in other words, grant remissions to the requisite extent. If Government is not prepared to adopt this measure, the sooner it ceases from interference with the cultivator's discretion the better for both; for it is hardly fair to expect that the ryot should go on cultivating with the exotic cotton, for the mere pleasure of Government and at a dead loss to himself, land which he might profitably sow either with indigenous cotton or with food-grains or with any other crop. We think that the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, which is deeply interested in the success or otherwise of this matter, ought to take it up in earnest. It was at the suggestion of this body that the Government has undertaken for a few days past to publish returns for each district showing the extent of the area under cotton cultivation and the prospects of the crop. Its interference, therefore, in the matter under notice cannot be out of place.

Regrets that England should have refused to repeal the English import duty on Indian silverware.

The Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 6th April is extremely sorry to learn from the telegram of the 4th idem that the English Ministry and the Chancellor of the Exchequer have refused to abolish the English import duty on Indian silverware. After alluding to the heavy loss annually suffered by India on account of unfavourable rates of exchange and the refusal of England and Germany to introduce a bi-metallic currency which would remove the cause of that loss, the Samáchár observes that the manufacture of silver into any other shape than that of coin is best calculated to improve this unsatisfactory state of affairs. It should not however be understood that this remedy will benefit India alone. Many other countries will have a share in the benefit, and even England will not be out of its pale. The manufacture of silverware will raise the price of the rupee, and the demand for such ware and the appreciation of its workmanship by England and America are sufficient to keep up that industry. Native workmen have become thorough masters of the art, and any increase in the demand for silverware and ornaments will serve as a stimulus to workers in that line and afford them means of easy subsistence. As matters at present stand, English merchants have reserved to themselves all trade in these wares, and any increase in it would naturally tend to prove beneficial to the interests of England. Under these circumstances the policy of declining to remove English import duty on Indian silverware is really mistaken and disheartening. [The Jáme Jamshed (95) and the Akhbáre Sodágar (78) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Criticizes the forest policy of Government.

The Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha (4) for January 1883 but received in March gives a short history of forest conservancy in the Bombay Presidency and proceeds to remark:—It is thus clear that the Department financially is scarcely more remunerative than it was ten years ago. As regards the extensive and unnecessary employment of European agency in this Department, which is principally responsible for the overgrown expenditure of the Department, it is not more open to that charge than other departments of the State. We also know it as a fact that this is acknowledged by several experienced and conscientious officers of the Forest Department. We have been unconsciously led to lay more emphatic stress on this feature of the departmental arrangements than we had at first intended to do, but we find from a closer study of the reports that this defect lies at the root of much of the barrenness of results about which such outcry is raised at times. The Forest Officers needlessly swell the cost of establishments by arbitrarily attempting to establish forest ranges in the flat parts of the country, which were never meant to be conserved, at the risk of neglecting the more favoured localities. The insane attempt to show good paper results must be abandoned. The Deccan plains may be replanted in parts, but the Forest Department agency is too costly and too sparsely distributed for this purpose. Large administrative measures dictated by a prudent foresight might encourage investors with suitable concessions to conserve the growth of trees in topes and along river banks, but to take away the ryot's land for forest purposes and then make belief of casting seeds broad-cast in parched up soils, never caring to see whether they grew up or rooted, is simply a scandal which can never be too soon put a stop to. In England, France and other European countries large private forests exist in great numbers, and we do not see any reason why the same state of things cannot be brought about here, especially because there are no people in the world who, like the Hindus, have almost a religious reverence for trees. The Government departmental agency is, moreover, as already stated above, too costly for such purposes, and we would therefore most strongly recommend the adoption of the policy of assigning forest areas for conservancy to large capitalists, who would do the work much better than the Department, if only duly encouraged by Government making liberal concessions to them. The Government of India, who have recently recognized to the fullest extent the necessity of encouraging private enterprise in various directions, scarcely requires to be told of the importance of encouraging private enterprise in this direction also. The cardinal principle of real conservancy in regard to forests appears to us to be to let the dry Deccan plains shift for themselves for a time, but to have a firm grip of all the ghát regions and the valleys and river basins. The Forest Department has been in this respect more sinned against than sinning. Considerations of paltry revenue, and to some extent false sentiment, have come in the way of Government supporting the Department in its representations on this point. The Survey Settlement Department has been chiefly to blame in this respect. Except in the Konkan, hill sides, ravines and valleys were assessed and numbered and cut up in lots and made the private property of ryots, and as the full assessment was invariably levied whether the area was brought under cultivation or allowed to lie waste, direct encouragement was held out for wholesale denudation, with the results which we now all deplore. When population was sparse and waste lands in abundance, this evil did not manifest itself in all its potency. Year after year, however, the process has grown from bad to worse, till now we have reached a point when the mismanagement threatens to inflict on us very great evils. All our large rivers and their tributaries take their rise in these mountains and bifurcations eastwards, and the outlook of these denuded regions is anything but welcome to those who can see into the future. Ancient tradition set apart these valleys and hill sides as sacred preserves. Most of these forests were attached to some hill fort, and the men who guarded the hill forts had inám grants of land on the express condition of military service in times of war, and preserving the forests in times of peace. These guardsmen of the hills were ousted from their hereditary charges or their ináms were confiscated, and they were left to eke out their living by cultivating the ground, which they could only do by extensive destruction. The hill forts of Sinhgad, of Purandhar, Rájmáchi, Lohagad and many others might be mentioned as instances in point. These forests were jealously preserved by the old rulers as means of protection in times of war. There were many other places which were dedicated to some shrine or mountain deity, and this religious dedication held back the hand of the marauder. The hills of Harischandragad, of Shivner, the Pratápgad hills opposite Mahábleshvar, the Karti hills, the Trimbak and Bhimáshankar hills, all these were preserved by this religious reverence. There was not a river which took its rise in these hilly regions whose source was not jealously protected by this guarantee. The Revenue Settlement Department, however, rode rough-shod over these traditional restraints, and year after year its officers indulged in vain boasts of the extension of cultivation on mountain sides, and up steep valleys, oblivious of all more paramount and far-reaching considerations having an intimate bearing on the well-being of the people on the plains. The protests of the Forest Department were pooh-poohed and destruction went on. The inevitable consequences have overtaken us; our rivers and streams have been silted up; the fertility of the soil on the plains has decreased; the supply of fire-wood has diminished; the number of agricultural cattle is yearly decreasing; inundations have been more frequent and the loss of life and property great. At the first settlement a large extent of land was left unassessed as gáirán for grazing and rább purposes to the villagers. Even this reservation was held to be against the spirit of the Survey Department, and each fresh settlement absorbed all gáirán lands attached to the villages, and accelerated the destruction. So encouraged and forced upon this downward path, the ryots made sad havoc with their scythe and their sickle, terracing the hill tops with a very rude cultivation, ripping up the bowels of the earth, and exposing them to the inclemencies of the sun and rain. The mountain tribes and aborigines under the same pressure freely resorted to kumri or dahli cultivation, which consists in lopping off branches of trees and burning them to ashes for planting the seeds for one year's crop. Next year they shifted to another plot with equally destructive results. The graziers and gowlis with their wandering herds completed this havoc. These imputations have not been cast on the Survey Department without full and sufficient grounds. The alleged extension of cultivation, which is invariably the burden of these settlement reports, is our best evidence. The confiscation and assessment of gáirán lands has been protested against by the ryots all over the country, and by none more strongly than by the officers of the Forest Department. As an instance in point we refer to the Mulshi Peta in the Haveli Táluka. In the villages of Maleh, Wadvathad, Nanded, Wadusta, Mulshi Budruk, Shergaon, Waluch and Dongargaon as many as 9,226 acres had been left unassessed in 1854 as gáirán land to be occupied by the ryots for grazing and rább purposes. During the last 30 years the whole of this area, with a paltry exception of 160 acres in two villages, has been assessed and given out for cultivation, and only 530 acres in one village have been made over to the Forest Department. The same Department which seeks to confiscate for forest extensions thousands upon thousands of plain lands in the Indápur and Mán Tálukas acts on a contrary principle in those parts of the country where preservation is most needed. No wonder that people deprived of free land for grazing and rán purposes make the largest present use of their poor lots, tear up the trees by their roots, leaven the mountain soil, and turn smiling uplands into barren rocks. The Revenue Officers take up the part of the kumri cultivators against what they are pleased to call the encroachment of the Forest Department. Mr. LeeWarner wrote some months ago in the pages of an English magazine a harrowing account of the pressure put upon these hill tribes by forest rangers. Of course it is a delicate question what to do with these hill tribes; Government must take thought of their needs and not punish them for their ignorance. While all this may be admitted to have much force, there are at the same time considerations which outweigh these humanitarian appeals. The well-being of the whole settled community of the plains depends to a great extent upon the preservation of luxurious vegetation on these uplands. We derive our supply of water and fuel and timber from these sources, and we must take due forethought of the present and future needs and necessities of many millions of people. If indeed kumri cultivation was the only alternative open to save these aborigines from utter destruction, there would be some force in the appeals made on their behalf. But it has been demonstrated that the branches of trees cut down and burnt for ashes are really less helpful to serve as rán and soil to the seeds of Wari and Náchani than the dry leaves of trees which with profuse liberality nature sheds annually for man's wants. Kumri cultivation is only possible in the most primeval conditions of nature, when the excessive rainfall produces a luxuriant vegetation which has to be turned for immediate service, and vegetable matter burnt off-hand produces humic acid. The same service is, however, more economically rendered by burning leaves, and the only difference is that the latter operation is more laborious, though less prodigal and wasteful. In the progress of civilization kumri cultivation must give way to rán cultivation, and this last to a well selected system of vegetable and animal manures. It is self-evident that even the tropical prodigality of our vegetable world cannot stand the destructive effects of the first two systems of cultivation when man destroys more by fire and axe than nature can slowly and spontaneously revivify and recuperate in the course of a single year. Fallen and dry leaves and dead branches and twigs of trees yield from 8 to 25 times more ashes than the wild husbandman secures by the unstinted destruction of living trees and roots and branches. After quoting figures in support of the above assertion the writer goes on to say:—The figures demonstrate clearly what is obvious in itself, that kumri and rán cultivation, when it interferes with vegetable growth and does not utilize dry and dead matter, is suicidal. As the forests are thinned, the soil loses its excess of humic acid and its porous character. The temperature is not kept down as before to a point which attracts the rain clouds, and the rain water does not soak down gently into the bowels of the earth, replenishing its subterranean springs, but runs away with violence, tearing earth and roots and stones and sand from the uplands below into the plains. Every little shower causes inundations, and after the water-flow is over, they leave a thick sediment of silt, which fills up the water courses and impoverishes the soil. The floods near Navsári and in the Khándesh rivers, of which we heard only the other day, when the water rose to a destructive height with a rainfall of ten hours' duration, have become the normal type of our present river system. In the Deccan especially our large and small rivers constitute and regulate the territorial divisions. Every small river system forms a táluka with a hill and watershed separating it from other river systems. The lands in the valley depend upon the river stream, not indeed for any direct supply of water, but for the subterranean supply. Protect and clothe the hills where the rains fall and rivers and streams take their rise, fringe the river slopes on both sides, and if the Forest Department secures these vantage grounds, it may well reconcile itself to let the treeless and waterless plain lands in the eastern districts to the natural force of circumstances. Nature will take care of these distant regions if she is well stocked at her fountain sources. The streams that have disappeared will begin to flood again and the rivers and banks will not be silted. This is the sole and real key of the situation. As long as we do not master the situation in this light, no indiscriminate extensions can prove of the slightest consequence. Of course Government alone can accomplish little in this work of restoration. It is doing its best to atone for the errors of its past neglect. The time has in our opinion arrived when the matter must be taken up by the public. The Forest Department and the Government must give up all idea for the present of making forest extensions in the plain country. This work may well be postponed for another generation. All our present efforts must be directed for the next 20 years at least to the conservancy of our mountains, hills and uplands and the river banks. The vested rights of present occupants must be bought over and adequately compensated, and both the axe and the fire must be laid under the ban. The Forest Department is not at present a revenue-paying department, and it cannot reasonably be expected to be so for a long time to come. With a diminution in the cost of its supervising establishment Government might earn more, or at least be enabled to employ a larger staff. We build our hopes chiefly, however, upon the encouragement of private capitalists to help Government efforts in this work. Government should retain its public interest in this great undertaking, but the work of planting and reboisement can never succeed in the hands of a stipendiary agency. Large areas should be made over to rich capitalists on 20 or 30 years' leases on condition that the lessee should arrange to have his hundred or a thousand large trees per acre during that interval, and his abstinence and trouble should be rewarded by a free and permanent grant of the use of the same under proper regulations as to felling of the property he creates. At present Government pays a miserable fraction to a few khots and rakhaváldárs, but this makeshift can never lead to any permanent good. The work must be entrusted to more thoughtful and intelligent hands if it is ever to bear any fruit. And as we have already shown above, the natives of the country are better qualified, because of their instinctive and religious reverence for trees and vegetable kingdom, to take care of forest conservancy than any officer of the dominant race. The active co-operation of large private capitalists should be ensured by securing to them adequate concessions. These and other questions discussed by us in this paper make out a strong case for inquiry. We wish the Government of India would appoint a competent commission to deliberate on these points, and thus strengthen the hands of the Forest Officers.

Disapproves of the rigorous working of the Forest Act in the Thána District.

The Lok Mitrá (74) of the 1st April observes that the agitation lately set on foot at Thána and elsewhere in connection with the working of the Indian Forest Act has already borne practical fruit in the shape of a memorial submitted to the Government of India by certain wealthy proprietors of villages about Thána and elsewhere. Some time ago large meetings were held, and a most energetic protest was made against the working of the Act in all its rigour, and resolutions were unanimously adopted to submit the grievances to, and seek redress from, His Excellency the Viceroy. The memorial is very temperately worded, and signed by such well known citizens as Messrs. N. Byramji Jijibhoy, Ahmedbhoy Habibbhoy, C. H. Dadysett, Vináyak Pándurang and H. A. Hormasji. After giving the substance of the memorial, the Mitrá remarks that whatever the result of the memorial may be, there is little doubt that His Excellency, with his usual solicitude for the well-being of the people, will accord to the memorial his best consideration. It is well known that of late complaints have constantly been heard from all sides that the Forest Officers in their zeal for the interests of Government have not been mindful of the rights and privileges of proprietors of private forests, and the stories which now and again come to light of the manner in which the Act is being worked lend some colour to the complaints embodied in the present memorial. [The Kaiser-i-Hind (97) of the same date and the Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 3rd April express similar sentiments. The Indian Spectator (1) of the 1st April also alludes to the memorial and makes similar remarks.]

Prays that Government will grant a remission of land assessment in view of the havoc committed by locusts in different parts of the Deccan.

A correspondent of the Din Bandhu (5) of the 1st April prays that in view of the havoc committed by locusts in the different parts of the Deccan, Government will be pleased to grant remissions to the extent of half the amount of land assessment. Unless some such relief is provided there is reason for grave apprehensions that the agricultural classes will be reduced to the greatest straits, and will either succumb to the distress or emigrate to other parts of the country.

The Broach Samáchár (83) of the 5th April does not approve of the continuance of the license tax, the most odious of all taxes. It is not the tax itself but the oppressive working of it which makes it unpleasant to the people in the districts. Hence it is necessary that an officer well acquainted with the condition of the people should be appointed License Tax Collector. The executive duties in connection with the tax at Broach were first entrusted to the Mámlatdárs and were subsequently transferred to the Huzur Deputy Collector, Ráo Báhádur Pránlál Mathurádás. The people were not satisfied with the assessments of the tax by this officer. This year, however, Mr. Borradaile, the Collector of Broach, will himself hear appeals against the decisions of the officer appointed to determine the assessments. Complaints were made in previous years regarding the decisions passed on appeal. People used to say openly that owing to the intrigues of one or two subtle kárbháris justice was not properly administered on appeal. It is to be hoped, therefore, that these complaints will henceforth cease. In this year's lists no mention is made of the period during which appeals are allowable, nor of the officer appointed to hear appeals as was done in previous years. The mistake ought to be rectified, though it appears that the omission was owing to the great pressure of work in Mr. Pránlál's court at the time of the publication of these lists.

A complaint regarding the collection of the license tax at Broach.

The Surat Akhbár (75) of the 2nd April says that for purposes of revenue the levy of a moderate duty on toddy is allowable on principle. Sweet toddy is not at all intoxicating, and hence the fee levied on this sort of toddy is unjustifiable. The majority of those who drink toddy do so not for intoxicating purposes but for sustaining their spirits. In villages and woods toddy forms half the portion of the daily meal of the people, and hence the fee levied upon it must be felt as a heavy burden. Not only is a fee levied on every tree from which toddy is drawn, but fees are also levied on the right of selling it, bringing it into the city and on the vendor of it in the city. When a fee was begun to be levied on every tree yielding toddy, it was thought by the people that smuggling would cease and that good and cheap toddy would be procurable. But the contrary has been the case. It is necessary therefore that with the exception of the fee on trees all the other fees levied on this light beverage should be done away with.

Complains of the heavy burden of fees on toddy.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 2nd April observes that the Honourable Mr. Gibbs will leave Bombay on the 27th April for England, and it is not certain whether he will return to India. During the long course of his service in this Presidency the honourable gentleman has conferred several benefits on the people, and there are several Natives who are indebted to him for the high posts they occupy under Government. He did not forget the people of this Presidency even after he joined the Government of India. He strongly maintained that the people of the Bombay Presidency had long been eligible for local self-government, condemned the Mhowra Bill, and staunchly supported the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill. Thus he has long been the well-wisher and advocate of Natives, who ought to duly acknowledge his important services at his approaching departure from these shores. A public reception ought to be given to him, at which thanks should be conveyed to him for what he has done for them, and he should be requested to continue to take the same interest in the Presidency as he has hitherto done.

Asks the people of the Bombay Presidency to give a public reception to the Honourable Mr. Gibbs at his approaching departure to England.

The Rást Goftár (105) of the 1st April approves of the remarks made by the Honourable Mr. Peile and Mr. Justice West on the occasion of the ceremony for the distribution of prizes to the boys in the Byculla Schools. While quoting the remarks of both these gentlemen, the Rást observes that they were very valuable and served as a very instructive commentary on the recent agitation against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill. Though both the speeches contained no express allusion to the agitation referred to, and were not meant to have even the remotest reference to the Bill, they were very important and could of themselves be connected with the topic of the day.

Approves of the remarks made by Messrs. Peile and West on the occasion of the distribution of prizes at the Byculla Schools.

Comments on Sir Lepel Griffin's speech at Indore.

The Gujaráti (91) of the 1st April refers to the recent speech of Sir Lepel Griffin at Indore, and observes that the remarks, though not quite new, are nevertheless important. Sir Lepel said that if every Native Prince were as good as an ornament of his country, how much would the beauty of the country be enhanced? It might however be put to him in reply—what measures have Government taken to raise the status of Native principalities? In spite of the tall talk about improving them, Government have, since the time the States have been brought under subjection, adopted a decidedly obstructive attitude. Outwardly Native Chiefs are advised to inaugurate reforms in their States and not to oppress their people, but secretly such hard pressure is brought to bear upon them that any attempt on their part in that direction is nipped in the bud. How can the Native States ever hope to raise their heads under these circumstances? Sir Lepel advises the Native press to criticize the administration of these States, but what would be the effect of such criticism? The effect would be nothing else than that the British authorities would mark out such States as the victims of their rage, and would lose no opportunity of insulting and censuring them. The Gujaráti is of opinion that in justice to the Native States the British Government should initiate the policy of exercising reasonable supervision and should also direct their Political Agents to frame their relations with the States in their charge on the lines of that policy.

Comments on Sir Lepel Griffin's speech at Indore.

In noticing the observation made by Sir Lepel Griffin in his recent speech at Indore that the Native press should direct their attention to the exposition of the defects and shortcomings of the administration of Native States, the Yajdán Parast (117) of the 10th April observes that Sir Lepel appears, and very naturally, to be ignorant of the working of a large portion of the Vernacular press. The Vernacular papers are ever ready to criticise any acts of maladministration occurring in Native States. It must, however, be mentioned that it is very difficult to obtain reliable information from such States, because the subjects of those States do not appreciate the benefits of publicity in administration, and their rulers are averse to their acts and measures being subjected to the test of public criticism and try to prevent their finding their way to the columns of a newspaper. Generally the misdeeds and maladministration of Native principalities come to light when they assume such proportions that it is impossible for them to remain in the dark any longer. This can also be accounted for by the absence of newspapers in such States. The attitude of their rulers is positively adverse to the appearance of newspapers. It would have therefore been better had Sir Lepel advised the rulers of Native States to lend their support to the fostering of such wholesome checks in their territories.

Does not approve of the rules issued by the Commander-in-Chief of India for regulating the hunting excursions of European soldiers.

The Panchánan (45) of the 1st April observes that no good will result from the rules recently laid down by the Commander-in-Chief of India for regulating the hunting excursions of European soldiers. The rules provide that particular spots will be reserved for such purposes, but it is not unlikely that Natives may have occasion to go to such spots and thus a collision between them and Europeans is inevitable. Provision has also been made for exempting certain cattle considered sacred by Hindus from being killed. This, however, will not serve as any check on the wilful conduct of Europeans. It may happen, as it now does, that the offender may plead that he shot the animal under the impression that it was not of the prohibited kind and be allowed by the court to escape scot-free. It will thus be seen that no rules can avail under the circumstances, and the best plan is to altogether prohibit European soldiers from going on hunting excursions.

Complains of the injustice of an order said to have been issued by the Mámlatdár of Igatpuri directing certain Mhárs to remove their houses from their present site.

The Din Bandhu (5) of the 1st April publishes a letter purporting to be received from certain Mhárs of the village of Tinlakdi, Táluka Igatpuri, Zilla Násik, who complain of the injustice of an order issued by the Mámlatdár of the táluka directing the Mhárs to remove their houses from their present site. Some people say that the site is required for a camp of exercise for the railway volunteers. Others are of opinion that it is to be utilized for the purposes of a bázár. The vexation caused by such an order and the anxiety felt as to the means of meeting the expenditure of building new houses have served to upset the minds of the poor Mhárs, who pray that Government will see fit to interfere in their behalf.

Suggests that Mr. Jog, City Mámlatdár, may be transferred from Poona.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 2nd April does not understand why Ráo Sáheb Bhagwant Narsinh Jog, City Mámlatdár, should have been allowed by Government to remain at Poona for such a long time. Mr. Jog has during nearly the whole period of his service been in Poona, and for the past 3 or 4 years has been exercising magisterial powers. Apart from the well-recognized principle of not allowing officers exercising magisterial powers to remain in a particular station for a long time, the question of the necessity of removing Mr. Jog from Poona becomes important on other grounds. Mr. Jog is an inhabitant of Poona and also owns a house in that city. He has consequently a large circle of relations as well as of friends and foes. This circumstance does naturally, in the opinion of the people, interfere with the proper exercise of his authority, and shaking as it does the confidence and esteem of the people, prejudicially affects the impartial management of public affairs. It is said that the grievances of the people have found utterance in petitions submitted to Government against Mr. Jog on various occasions. Whatever the truth of the allegations contained in these petitions, the very fact that such petitions were preferred is sufficient to prove that there are in the city of Poona persons who consider that Mr. Jog bears ill-will to them. That Mr. Jog does not care to ignore the importance of his official position for the sake of assisting his friends has very recently been exemplified by the manner in which he exerted himself to secure votes for Mr. Káshináth Parashrám Gádgil, who was a candidate for election as municipal commissioner. However laudable Mr. Jog's action might have been in having assisted a friend, it was certainly not in keeping with his position as City Mámlatdár. Mr. Jog's part should on this occasion have been simply neutral. For though he may not have made a direct use of his authority in canvassing for his friend, still the people could not have divested themselves of the idea that he was a City Mámlatdár. It is therefore to be hoped that having regard to these circumstances Government will direct the transfer of Mr. Jog from Poona. [The Shiváji (59) of the 30th March suggests the desirability of instituting enquiries into the conduct of Mr. Jog in connection with the election of Mr. Gádgil. The Dnyán Bodhak (23) of the 1st April also suggests the advisability of strictly enforcing the rule that officers of the Revenue and Police Departments shall not be allowed to be in one place for more than three years. The strict observance of this rule will prevent the evils that attend on the continued stay of a responsible officer in one particular place. The officers of the Judicial Department also, such as Shirastedárs, Clerks of Courts, District Názirs and Head Clerks, should occasionally be transferred from one district to another.]

Complains of the improper conduct of certain missionaries in the village of Kágwad.

A correspondent of the Dnyán Bodhak (23) of the 1st April complains that certain Christian missionaries have polluted by their touch the water of the tank in the village of Kágwad in Táluka Athni of the Belgaum District and have thus caused vexation and inconvenience to the non-Christian population of the village. The village has no other supply of wholesome water, and the inhabitants have inevitably been driven to use the stagnant and unwholesome water of the wells. This has brought on a fever epidemic and there are fair chances of an outbreak of cholera. If, however, Government consider that the tank is the common property of all the people of the village whatever their caste, creed or denomination, and allow Mhárs, Mángs and Christians to take water therefrom, they incur the serious responsibility of interfering with the religious prejudices of the people. There exist in the village separate conveniences of water-supply for the lower and higher classes of the population, and notwithstanding this, the Christian missionaries try to carry on their proselytizing business by overawing the ignorant villagers, and whenever the latter object to the missionaries having everything in their own way, they are proceeded against in criminal courts.

Recommends the construction of a road from the Phonda Ghát to Málvan.

The Panchánan (45) of the 1st April represents the necessity for the construction of a cart road from the Phonda Ghát to Málvan. The writer explains the causes that have led to the falling off in the traffic viâ Málvan, which was once an important centre of trade, and alluding to the representation on the subject once made to Sir Richard Temple, expresses a hope that the present Government will see their way to redeeming the promise made by their predecessor and accord their sanction to the construction of the road and to the bridging of the river near the village of Nerur.

Suggests the repair of certain roads in the Dhárwár District.

The Chandrodayá (118) of the 31st March regrets that the local fund committee of Dhárwár does not perform its work in a satisfactory manner, and requests the attention of the authorities concerned to the necessity of undertaking a thorough repair of the roads from Dhárwár to Aminbhávi and Kaválgiri. At present these roads are very narrow, and therefore do not allow of the passage of horses and carriages. It is most inconvenient for the passengers to pass by these roads during the rainy season.

Recommends the erection of a dharmashála at Ládvel, midway between Kapadvanj and Dákor.

A correspondent of the Akhbáre Sodágar (78) of the 7th April observes that midway on the road from Kapadvanj to Dákor is situated the village of Ládvel, and a great deal of goods and passenger traffic is carried on by this road. The passengers halt at Ládvel in the day to take their meals and in the evening to pass the night, as the road beyond it is not safe for a night journey. There is however no shelter for travellers, who are therefore put to great inconvenience. The local fund committee ought therefore to erect a small dharmashála at this spot for the convenience of the public.

Disapproves of the order of the Post Master General limiting the number of newspapers exchanged among editors.

The Kalpataru (31) of the 1st April is very much dissatisfied with the order of the Post Master General directing that the number of newspapers circulated among the editors of newspapers themselves shall not exceed one-fourth of the total number of the circulation of such papers. Since the order of Government exempting from postage charges newspapers exchanged by editors among themselves, the intercourse between the several organs of the vernacular press had greatly increased, and the order of the Post Master General above referred to is calculated to again straiten the relations which had so much developed. Since all the vernacular papers cannot aspire to employ special correspondents for the purpose of communicating to them the news in the different parts of the country, and as newspapers are the main source from which the stock of an editor's information can be supplemented, it is the duty of Government to afford all possible facilities for the development of such intercommunication. A careful perusal of the resolution of Government reducing the postage on newspapers convinces one of their unmistakeable intention of encouraging the vernacular papers of the lower class. It is therefore not meet that Government should now discourage the vernacular press by the display of an ungenerous and a narrow-sighted policy for the sake of a trifling gain. [The Chháva (19) of the 1st February expresses similar sentiments.]

Complains of the inconvenience from early closing of the post at Surat.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 3rd April observes that though the passenger train for Bombay leaves the Surat railway station at 9-45 P.M. and the mail train leaves at 1 A.M., yet the post is closed at the latter station at 7-30 P.M. This early closing of the post puts the traders and others to great inconvenience. The registered packets received from the post offices in the surrounding country are also sometimes delayed. The contents of the postal boxes in different parts of the towns are removed to the head office so early as 4-30 P.M., and the post offices in the surrounding villages have been instructed to close and despatch the post one hour earlier than the time hitherto observed. It is to be hoped that the postal authorities will issue the necessary instructions in order to remove the inconvenience complained of.

The Nyáyá Sindhu (44) of 2nd April requests the attention of Government and the authorities concerned to the necessity of sanctioning additional establishment for the post offices that are to be entrusted with the business of savings banks from 1st May 1883. It is acknowledged on all hands that the servants of the Postal Department have already more than enough to do, and to burden them with this additional responsibility without assistance and without increased remuneration would be a policy of killing the goose that laid golden eggs.

Suggests the employment of additional establishment for the work in connection with post office savings banks.

The Prabhákar (48) of the 4th April invites the attention of the authorities concerned to the accidents occasionally occurring to the life of passengers by tram-cars in the city of Bombay. Thousands of persons daily pass by these cars, and there is generally a great probability of accidents on account of passengers getting into and out of the cars while they are in motion. There is a contrivance called the brake, by which the cars are stopped, and if this brake is not drawn tight the car continues to be in motion. It also sometimes happens that furious and untrained horses are yoked to the cars and new and unskilled drivers are employed. These matters deserve the careful attention of the jury when enquiring into accidents in this connection. The police constables do not interfere in matters relating to the Tramway Company. They refer all complaints to their superiors and allow the tram-car on account of which an accident occurs to pass unnoticed. In cases in which the officers of the Tramway Company order the police to apprehend any person on account of his having infringed the provisions of the Tramway Act they promptly obey the orders. This state of things serves to make it impossible for accidents in connection with tramways to be thoroughly inquired into and brought to light, and calls for the earnest consideration of Government. There have been two fatal accidents in a month. One Márwádi and one Hindu are said to have died from the effects of bruises caused by a fall from tram-cars, and their fellow-passengers bear testimony to the fact that the drivers did not stop the cars though asked to do so three or four times, and that the passengers having alighted while the car was in motion fell down and died. [The Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 2nd April makes similar remarks.]

Calls the attention of Government to accidents to passengers by tram-cars.

The Satyá Mitrá (107) of the 1st April observes that the detective branch of the Bombay police does not seem to be quite efficient because it has not of late been able to detect several robberies and thefts. The Mitrá regrets that the Native policemen should be prohibited by their superior officers from apprehending European offenders even when the offences are committed under their nose. The Native policemen are required in such cases to report the matter to their immediate superiors, who alone can apprehend the offenders; but before these officers arrive at the scene of the disturbance the offenders either commit more mischief or escape. What can be the reason of the Native policemen being prohibited from apprehending European offenders? The Mitrá is sorry that very few Natives are employed among the higher grades of the Bombay police service, but does not fail to admit that Sir Frank Souter has considerably improved the force.

A few remarks on the Bombay police.

The Chháva (19) of 1st April says that there has been a case in Bengal in which thirteen villagers have been charged with having committed assault on the person of a European while he was going a-hunting. But can there be any truth in such a charge? If the police can promptly trace minor offences committed against Europeans but cannot trace even murders of Natives committed by Europeans, are there not sufficient grounds to form an opinion regarding their impartiality? Is it possible that Natives, who are afraid of Native police officers, can make bold to lay hands on a European? Nothing could have led the policemen to secure the conviction of the so-called offenders but a mean desire to subserve to the wishes of Europeans.

Comments on the conduct of the police in a case decided in Bengal.

The New Budget.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 1st April remarks:—The new budget is not of a sensational character. It is a sober statement of accounts, cautiously prepared, so as to show the true state of the finances of the country. A modest surplus of half a million is estimated, which may perhaps swell to a million, barring the dreaded contingency of famine, which is always such a great stumbling-block in the path of every Indian Finance Minister. Now, while we admit that it is a good thing to be told that there will be a surplus, it strikes us whether surpluses in general, be they a million or five millions, are a true index of the prosperity of the people at large in India as she is at present situated. The empire's finances may flourish while the prosperity of the mass of the people may be doubtful. It is a fallacy to a certain extent to assert that the people are accumulating wealth when the financial statements show surpluses. After all, surpluses are derived from the income of the country. That income is not poured out from heaven or derived by magical means by the Government of the day. It is in reality a portion of the produce raised by the people and of the profits, if any, of the foreign trade. Now a good deal of pleasant speculation is indulged in about the prosperity of the people based on the figures of imports and exports. In the same way a good deal too much is made about the elasticity of the Indian revenue. We submit that both are moot points. Major Baring has made certain observations on these topics in his latest financial statement. But we fear his reasoning is not quite convincing. Far be it from us to question his motives. To talk of "elasticity" when the wail of "the precariousness of the opium revenue" is given out in no uncertain tone, and when it has been for the second time hinted as broadly as possible that the salt duty might be raised in a year of emergency,—when two such important sources of revenue are liable to fluctuations, it is idle to talk of "elasticity." As to surpluses, the question is, do they in any way point to the accumulation of national wealth? Major Baring has more than once said that the country is extremely poor. We should like to see proofs that wealth is pouring into the country and is retained by the people. When we see that salt, now somewhat cheapened, may be again made dear, when the beggarly population of the country, something like 40 millions, has to go half starved every day of the year, when education of the most elementary sort is unknown to 98 per cent. of the population, when a sixth of the net revenue is obtained from a foreign country, when the system of administration by foreign agency drains at the least 20 millions sterling of the country's produce in divers forms, is it not a mockery to talk of surpluses, however large? England, with a population of 3½ krors, takes from her people about 8½ per cent. of the national income, and that income daily increases in bulk. There is no precariousness of revenue there in important items. Again, the case of the education of the masses is entirely different. There nearly 80 per cent. of the population or more receive some kind of instruction. In a country like ours there can be nothing like national wealth to speak of. There can be no accumulation of capital. Whatever there is of accumulation is carried abroad year after year without hope of return. Famines tax the utmost financial resources of the empire. In short, the material prosperity of the people at large is at a very low ebb. Nearly 70 millions sterling (of which 6½ come from a foreign people) are derived from the country having 200 million souls and boasting of a miserable income of 400 millions sterling per annum at the utmost! To speak exultingly under such circumstances of surpluses is a cruel mockery. For true surpluses, which are a material index of the wealth of the people, we must go to the United Kingdom and the United States. From this point Indian budgets are delusive, however large the surpluses they may show from year to year.

Says that surpluses, however large, in Indian budgets are not a reliable index of the wealth of the people.

In noticing the financial statement for 1883-84, the Shivâji (59) of the 30th March alludes to the annual heavy loss of 3⅓ krors suffered by India on account of unfavourable rates of exchange, and regrets that due measures should not have been adopted to prevent its recurrence in future. The cause of this loss, observes the Shivâji, might be removed by making all items of expenditure payable in England, in the current coin of India, the rupee, and not in pounds as has hitherto been done. The exorbitant salaries paid to European officials may also be reduced, as the circumstances which led to their being fixed at the high figures at which they stand exist no longer. Major Baring deserves the thanks of the country for devising a new system of keeping the State accounts so as to make the financial statement easy to understand. The Shiváji condemns the establishment of post office savings banks on the ground that the sums therein invested represent so much capital of the country taken out of the hands of the people.

A few remarks on the financial statement for 1883-84.

Comments on the military budget estimates for 1883-84.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 2nd April criticizes at some length the remarks of General Wilson on the budget estimates of military expenditure for 1883-84, and observes that it is very doubtful whether any appreciable good has resulted from the disbandment of certain regiments as remarked by the General. General Wilson has also remarked that a considerable saving would have been effected in the expenditure for the year had it not been for the serious damage suffered by the stores in the Kirkee Factory. It is also stated that the damage has been going on for a number of years, but that it has only been recently brought to light. How was it, asks the Indu, that this damage was connived at so long? There are officers paid handsomely for supervising the factory, and why should they not be held responsible for the damage caused through their negligence? The extent of damage has not been stated, nor the measures which have been taken in the matter. Have not the people, from whose pockets the money thus wasted originally came, a right to call for an explanation of this negligence? General Wilson has made an attempt to soothe the susceptibilities of Natives by remarking that the reductions in the army have affected Europeans and Natives alike. But the loss of employment could not have been felt as a hardship by the Europeans so much as by the Natives. The former must certainly have been provided for in other departments, as a European of ordinary abilities and education is believed to be fairly competent to manage any department in India. General Wilson further alludes to the permanent arrangements made for the supply of the means of transport as a safeguard against contingencies such as the Afghan War, which exposed the various shortcomings of the Transport Department. The necessity however for keeping up such a permanent expenditure is not apparent to the Indu. The loyalty of the Native States in India is now quite out of the question, while there does not appear to be any powerful rival on the frontier. Such transport arrangements therefore can only be of use on occasions like the Afghan War and the Egyptian Expedition. But these partake of the nature of Imperial wars and were undertaken more in the interests of England than those of India. These and such other items contribute to swell the military expenditure of the Indian Government without yielding anything in return. Moreover this department has served to be the greatest drain on the wealth of this country, inasmuch as vast sums of money are carried to England in the shape of military pensions. It is in vain to hope that the evils arising from such sources will be speedily removed, but it is nevertheless the duty of a generous Viceroy like Lord Ripon to leave no stone unturned to minimise them.

Suggests the abolition of all export duties and the restoration of import duties.

The Kesari (33) of the 3rd April, referring to the remarks of Major Baring on the subject of the advantages that have resulted from the abolition of import duties on cotton piecegoods, observes that it may perhaps be maintained without fear of contradiction that the removal of the import duties has not prejudicially affected the interests of the existing cotton mills in India. But it is quite plain that it has come in the way of starting new mills. Every such mill requires at the outset the patronage of Government and the people, and in its absence it is impossible that the wares turned out by it can successfully compete with foreign goods. The abolition of import duties will therefore serve as a deterrent to capitalists who may be willing to embark their capital in this line. It is said that the Indian mills cannot produce yarn beyond a certain degree of fineness, but every attempt at improving upon the present stage has been retarded by the abolition of the import duties. There is another point worth considering in connection with the improvement of the financial condition of India. Under the present circumstances it is not very desirable that the quantity of imports should increase, while it is of the greatest importance that the exports should swell as much as possible. It is a rule that under a similarity of circumstances and an equality of restrictions the exports and imports of a country are generally equal. If such a state of things happens with respect to India, she will have to bear fully the loss resulting from unfavourable rates of exchange on the money that she has to send to England on account of the salaries and allowances of English officers. There is only one remedy for the removal of this evil, and that is to keep up a ratio between imports and exports, such that the exports should exceed the imports by the amount that is necessary to be paid to England in cash. To compass this end it is essential that all export duties should be abolished and a duty levied on all foreign goods imported into India.

Recommends the abolition of all duties on Indian exports.

The Poona Vaibhav (47) of the 1st April discusses at considerable length the question of the necessity for the abolition of all export duties. It is generally observable that all conquered countries are in a disadvantageous position in relation to the country of the conquerors. Of all the foreign nations that at different times swayed the destinies of the people of India the English only, being far in advance of them in mercantile affairs, have been instrumental in retarding the progress of their trade. The wealth of a country does not suffer much if the foreigners ruling it make the conquered country their abode. India has no room for complaint that her wealth was drained by the Mahomedan conquerors, though there may be other scores on which their rule was unpopular. The Mussalmans after conquering this country made it their abode till even after their fall, and whatever riches they extorted from the people were after being enjoyed by them left in this country. Moreover they not only did not mar the prospects of the trade of this country, but offered encouragement to some indigenous manufactures. On the other hand the English rule has been directly instrumental in bringing about a supersession of indigenous industry and manufactures by foreign skill and improved machinery. England is a purely commercial country and her prosperity cannot be achieved except at the sacrifice of the interests of some other countries. Where are the cotton and other wares that were once the pride of India? They have been superseded by the foreign goods inasmuch as they could not successfully compete with superior intelligence and economy of labour, and because Natives have no voice to dictate the use of indigenous products nor the power to impose higher duties on imported articles. But this is not all. The duties on imports have been abolished and this has served as an additional stimulus to foreign trade, and the people have been tempted to buy the cheaper articles of the foreign market. There has thus been a general depression of trade. The class of people carrying on independent avocations is becoming extinct day by day, and the whole of the country being enervated to the last degree has been reduced to a state of utter dependence on foreigners. It is thus clear that this present state of helplessness has been brought on by the circumstance of our rulers being foreigners, and it behoves the English to direct their attention to the good of this country, whom they have squeezed to the last drop for the purpose of enriching themselves, but who having stood the trial with exemplary patience has never exhibited the least signs of dissatisfaction. It is not however all that can be capable of such liberal views. No sooner did Lord Ripon proclaim the policy of encouraging Native industry and indigenous manufactures than an outcry was raised in England against it. No sooner did the fact that convict labour was utilized in turning out cotton wares in Indian jails reach the ears of the Manchester merchants than they at once set about the task of raising an agitation against it and were not satisfied until the system was abolished. The only way of accomplishing the object which the noble Viceroy has in view, viz., the development of the internal resources of India, is to remove all export duties on Indian produce, and it is to be hoped that this question will have all the consideration it deserves.

Local Self-government.

Does not approve of the rule issued by Government to regulate cases of disputed elections.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 5th April does not approve of the additional rule issued by Government to meet the cases of disputed elections. The Collector of the district, who under this rule is empowered to hear appeals in such cases, is ex-officio president of all the municipalities in his district, and to invest him with the power to hear appeals in cases decided by him in his capacity of president, nay to make his decision final, is incompatible with all rules of propriety. Though it cannot be said that such decisions will as a rule be unjust, still it goes without saying that there is reason to apprehend injustice in cases in which an officer passing an order in his original jurisdiction is invested with appellate authority.

Is not satisfied with the Government nominations on the city municipal board of Dhárwár.

The Chháva (19) of the 1st April is thoroughly dissatisfied with the nominations of Government to the vacant seats on the city municipal board of Dhárwár. All the nominated members with one single exception are old members. Notwithstanding the rule that municipal commissioners should not hold their office for more than three years, why is it that the same members are elected for every successive term? There has not been a single instance in which the services of these commissioners have been important or valuable; on the contrary there have been cases in which these members have been instrumental in causing injury to the interests of the people. Do the Government intend to fleece the ryots? The nomination of these members can only be justified on the presupposition of such an intention. But then there is no reason why Government should think of plundering the ryots or of misappropriating the public money. The only argument in favour of such nominations is that Government require such members as will always say "aye" to any proposals initiated by them. The Chháva then proceeds to quote specific instances in which these nominees have sided with Government against the people, and after suggesting the nomination of members of independent spirit and fresh energy, exhorts the people of Dhárwár to enter a most emphatic protest against the nominations made on behalf of Government.

Reviews the results of the elections for certain city municipalities.

The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 1st April reviews the results of the elections that were held at Poona, Ahmedabad, Surat, Nariad and Viramgám, and expresses great satisfaction at the justice done by the people to the responsibility imposed on them. The elected members have on the whole been unexceptionable, and the people of these towns and cities deserve great credit for the choice they have made. The conduct of Mr. Best in having supported the election of his subordinates deserves commendation, and it is said that Mr. Giles also evinced a considerable amount of interest in the matter. Mr. Chatfield should see that the cause of the members of his Department is promoted.

Hopes that the Educational authorities will not mind the complaints made against the election of certain members of that Department as members for the city municipality of Surat.

The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 1st April is informed that an attempt is being made in certain quarters to secure the cancellation of the elections of certain members of the Educational Department as commissioners for the city municipality of Surat. Some persons are jealous of the preferment shown to these gentlemen and want to avenge their own supersession by making false representations to Messrs. Giles and Chatfield and thus to have their rivals transferred to other places. There is no reason to suppose that the Educational authorities will lend their ear to such complaints. On the contrary there is every reason to be confident that they appreciate the value of the services of such men to the municipality. The Mitrá then details the disadvantages under which these gentlemen achieved success, and expresses a hope that their mean rivals will be defeated in their attempts.

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Says that it is ingratitude for the English to say that they conquered India by force of arms.

The Chháva (19) of the 1st April refers to the argument brought forward by certain opponents of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill that the British have conquered India by the force of arms. Though nobody can advise the natives of India to make amends for the state of humiliation to which they have been subjected by being conquered by taking up arms against the British and thus driving them out of India, still a refutation of the argument above referred to will not be out of place. This flight of locusts (the British) first landed in this country as far back as 1600 A. D. At that time they were not the owners in India of anything more than a broken glass and a pair of spoons and forks. They begged of the Emperor of Delhi to allow them shelter. Poor Emperor! if he had seen through the crafty intent of these beggars he would never have acceded to their request. These traders, as they called themselves, then began to devise, with a wonderful cunning, schemes for drawing into their meshes the various royal families. They asked for permission to possess a few weapons, and gradually gaining power they commenced in 1744 the policy of creating dissatisfaction among rival families. If they had courage, why should they not have acquired territories by fighting pitched battles instead of resorting to such sly and underhand shifts? Had it not been for the Native soldiers, could the English have stood the fearful siege of Trichinopoli? If the former had not given the latter the rice and remained content with the water in which it was boiled, where would the English have been? The present generations are suffering for the kind treatment their ancestors accorded to the English.

Says that Europeans are remarkable for their feeling of race pride.

The Shubh Suchak (60) of the 30th March observes that race pride is the peculiar attribute of an Englishman. However high his official position, an Englishman will not be backward to assist his fellow-countryman, and this even without regard to self-respect and at the sacrifice of justice and even of personal pecuniary interests. European soldiers have many a time been guilty of committing wilful murders of Natives and have been allowed to escape with light punishment. Europeans do not fear to commit even the most wicked offences because they are conscious that theirs is the ruling race, and as race pride is the peculiarity of Europeans they are confident that the offences with which they are charged will never be proved against them, and if at all they are proved they are sure to be let off very easily. Or there is again the convenient alternative of affecting madness. As the doctors appointed to declare the condition of the offender's mind are Europeans, they will not as a matter of course run counter to the general tendency to acquit the accused. These and such other causes have served to make Europeans assume an overbearing attitude towards Natives. It was this feeling of race pride that actuated the Viceroy when he directed the adoption of special measures for the education of Eurasian children, and it is also the same feeling that is at the bottom of the agitation that has been raised against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Points out the mistake of Europeans other than Englishmen being made to join in the agitation against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 2nd April observes that when the Government of India have in connection with certain special laws included Frenchmen, Germans, Italians and other Europeans and Americans among Englishmen, it is no wonder that the Englishmen of Bengal who have opposed the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill should have enlisted the sympathies of all Europeans and Americans for the performance of the work undertaken by them. But these Englishmen and English authorities do not appear to see the mistake they have committed in this matter. The natives of India are not bound to pay to other Europeans the respect which they pay to Englishmen. Again the foreigners who are allowed superior privileges in India are not generally well disposed towards England and her people; they do not allow Englishmen the same commercial freedom which they enjoy in this country, nor do they permit Englishmen to occupy lucrative and high political offices under their Governments—nay, they are actuated by feelings of jealousy against England in political matters. Under such circumstances Englishmen ought to entertain the best of regards for the natives of India and should not estrange themselves from them for the sake of the foreigners. Englishmen consider Natives inferior to foreigners; but this they ought not to do, as they and Natives are the subjects of the same sovereign, and they should take care that the foreigners get no undue advantage over Natives.

Says that the Europeans have forfeited their privilege of being tried by European Magistrates and juries.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (97) of the 1st April gives ten more instances that occurred in 1870, in which the accused European British subjects were either shown undue consideration or were declared not guilty of the serious crimes perpetrated by them by the juries composed of their own countrymen. These instances are quoted to support the contention of the Kaiser that since the European Judges and juries have been guilty of undue partiality to their countrymen Europeans have forfeited the privilege of being tried by European Magistrates, Judges and juries.

Says that the cry raised by Europeans against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill is inauspicious.

The Bombay Punch (81) of the 7th April, in an article headed "Pride goeth before Destruction," observes that for a long time it has been widely rumoured about that the Russians are advancing on India. They are adopting various means for the accomplishment of their object. "Coming events cast their shadows before," says the proverb. Is not the present attitude of Europeans and their disaffection towards Government paving the way for the advance of the Russians? What great calamity is the foresighted Lord Ripon going to bring upon Europeans that they should have brought their name and community into disgrace by their inconsiderate opposition to Mr. Ilbert's Bill? Their action is very inauspicious, for the hearts of our enemies are thereby gladdened. If Russia would otherwise succeed in her object twenty years hence, this disaffection would assist her to gain it in half that time. [The Káside Mumbai (98) of the 6th April condemns the cry raised by Europeans against Mr. Ilbert's Bill, and advises them to carefully consider the views set forth by Mr. Hume and Sir Arthur Hobbhouse in favour of the Bill. The Dnyán Vardhak (89) for the month of April, the Vidnyán Vilás (115) for the same month, the Suryodayá (63) of the 2nd April, the Shiváji (59) of the 30th March and many other Maráthi papers express similar views. The Mufarrehul Kulub (126) of the 1st April also condemns the conduct of those who have opposed the Bill and advises Government to pass the Bill in spite of all opposition. The Bombay Samáchár (82) and the Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 3rd April, the Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 30th March and the Ahmedabad Samáchár (77) of the 4th April advise the people of India to adopt memorials in favour of the Bill with a view to strengthen the hands of the Government of India.]

The Bengal Rent Bill.

Recommends the adoption of a remedy like the Bengal Tenancy Bill in this Presidency.

In an article headed "Land Assessments in India," the Native Opinion (10) of the 1st April dwells on the benefits likely to result from the Bengal Tenancy Bill, and observes:—Government by this measure try to give a sort of permanent settlement to the actual cultivators of the soil, and in our opinion they have hit upon the only practicable remedy for the amelioration of the condition of our peasants. All the speeches in the Council made on behalf of this Bill unmistakeably show the sincerity of conviction as to the benefit of this extension. We have repeatedly suggested the permanent settlement as the only cure for what may properly be called the national disease of India, and we are glad to see that the cure is about to be applied at least in Bengal. What with permanent settlement granted to the zamindárs and the permanent settlement about to be conceded to the ryots, we have no doubt that Bengal will run faster than it has done in the path of prosperity and happiness. This disease is not local. It permeates the whole body of the country. We have our own share of it on this side of India and we would heartily invite Government to apply the remedy here also. If but the thousand and one projects worked and unworked for bettering the condition of the Deccan ryot be thrown aside as false remedies and this cure of permanent settlement be applied in their place, we have no doubt that our ryots will prosper, and that Government will also be rid of what potentially is likely to develop into a serious danger to the peace of the empire. The present condition of Ireland and the causes of its growth have, more than anything else, thrust this question, at least as it respects Bengal, upon the attention of the Government of India, and we hope that the same circumstance will direct the attention of Lord Ripon and his enlightened Government to a similar misery and difficulty in the Deccan. What we have seen and heard of the Rent Bill of Bengal gives us a hope that our wishes will be granted and the Deccan peasantry will eventually be blessed with a permanent settlement.

The Shubh Suchak (60) of the 30th March, referring to the rules recently published by Government on the subject of securing the widest circulation of legislative measures, suggests that copies of new Bills, &c., should be sent to important social and political bodies and associations. It is also advisable to ask pleaders in the mofussil to form themselves into associations under the presidency of the several District Judges, and such associations should be invited to give their opinion on the legislative measures of Government subject to such rules as the Governor in Council may lay down. The writer also suggests that public libraries should be supplied with copies of new Bills.

Suggests certain means of securing the widest circulation of new legislative measures.

Education.

Referring to the appointment of Mr. Wáman Abáji Modak as Principal of the High School at Bombay, the Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 5th April says:—This is undoubtedly one of the very few good acts done by the Government of Sir James Fergusson during the last three years of its existence. We believe we are stating the fact when we say that we owe the appointment under notice to the influence of the Honourable Mr. J. B. Peile, C.S.I, the junior member of Government in the Bombay Executive Council. It is well known that Mr. Peile was formerly the Director of Public Instruction in Bombay and was the first to signalize his administration of the Educational Department by bestowing upon able and worthy Native gentlemen the higher appointments in that Department, which up to that time used to be reserved for European gentlemen. Like the Elphinstone High School, the Poona High School and several other leading High Schools used to have European Head Masters, and before the accession of Mr. Peile to the Directorship of Public Instruction it used to be an article of creed with the Department that the Head Masters of these High Schools should invariably be Europeans, and that the efficiency of the said schools would inevitably suffer by the substitution of Native for European Head Masters. Mr. Peile practically proved by his liberal policy that these fears were utterly groundless, and that they were attributable to the self-complacency of a class of people whose vanity was thereby gratified and who were reluctant to admit that anybody besides themselves could maintain the efficiency of these public schools intact. The experience of the last twelve years has conclusively proved that Mr. Peile was fully justified in inaugurating the liberal policy he did during his administration of the Educational Department. And we confidently predict that the Elphinstone High School in Bombay, which has been for the first time entrusted to the sole care of Native management, will in no way suffer by any loss of its former prestige and efficiency. Mr. Modak is one of the most successful Native Head Masters in this Presidency, and moreover he is by no means a stranger to the particular institution over which he has now been called to preside; for it will be remembered that half a dozen years ago he acted for some months as Vice-Principal of that institution, and what is more to the purpose, during that time he gave every satisfaction to his superiors. Under these circumstances we cannot but congratulate the Government of Sir James Fergusson upon the happy selection they have made in this particular instance, whereby an excellent opportunity has been afforded to a representative Native officer of the Educational Department to disprove the accuracy and truth of the oft-repeated assertion that under Native management an institution like the Elphinstone High School will not prosper. [The Native Opinion (10), the Rást Goftár (105) and the Yajdán Parast (117) of the 1st April and the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 2nd express similar sentiments.]

Approves of the appointment of Mr. Modak as Principal of the Elphinstone High School.

The Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 1st April observes that the confirmation of Mr. Wáman Abáji Modak as Principal of the Elphinstone High School is a great mistake. There is no doubt about the great intelligence and acquirements of Mr. Modak. But the main object of this school is to give the best English education possible to some eight hundred Native boys, and that object cannot be so well attained Disapproves of the appointment of Mr. Modak as Principal of the Elphinstone High School.

as is desirable in the interests of the pupils by any other race of teachers than those brought up in England and trained under thoroughly competent English teachers according to the most approved system of the day. The popularity of the Elphinstone High School is already on the decline, and is sure to suffer still more by the appointment of Mr. Modak. The mistake ought therefore to be speedily rectified. [The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 2nd and 3rd April expresses similar sentiments.]

Municipalities.

Recommends that a public garden should be laid out on the site of the Rotten Row in Bombay.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 4th April disapproves of the expenditure of Rs. 900 sanctioned by the Bombay Municipal Corporation for laying out a public garden on the Mahálakshmi flats, and recommends that the Rotten Row on the Esplanade be removed and a garden made in its place. The Row is used by a very few riders, and is simply an eyesore in an airy and quiet place, which may be well utilized for the purposes of a public garden.

Approves of the establishment of a pawnbroker's bank.

The Surya Prakásh (76) of the 31st March, in referring to the scheme for the establishment of a pawnbroker's bank now under the consideration of the Bombay Municipality, observes that it would prove beneficial to the poor if carried out. As an experimental measure money may be advanced to the poor in the beginning on the security of another person. The poor now stand in need of money to engage in trade, and if the municipality renders them assistance in this respect the measure will do considerable good to the country. If the poor are busy and occupied in some trade, they will not find it difficult to pay municipal taxes, as is the case at present.

An advice to the Ahmedabad Municipality regarding the appropriation by Government of half the income derived from the sale of land in the city.

The Hitechchhu (73) of Ahmedabad of the 5th April says that since the introduction of the City Survey Department in Ahmedabad, Government take as their due half of the income derived from the sale of land in the city. The other half is given to the local municipality. This arrangement must have been devised mainly with the view of placing the Government in a position to realize the expenses incurred by them in connection with the city survey. The major portion of the expenditure has already been recovered by Government. The municipality ought now to ascertain whether the half share appropriated by Government is in satisfaction of the expenses incurred or whether it is in virtue of their proprietary right in the land. The Hitechchhu thinks that it is the former, but if this right is to be exercised in perpetuity it is very unjust. If Government have this privilege, the municipality ought to take proper steps to put a stop to its enjoyment. If Government has proprietary right in the land, this right is transferred to the municipality by reason of the transfer of the land to the municipality at the time of its creation. If the officers of the Survey Department have registered such land in the name of Government, it is their mistake, which ought not to be allowed to remain uncorrected. The land belonged to the panchayat from the time of the ancient kings who ruled the city. The municipality should therefore point out to Government the injustice of their action in this matter, and appropriate for its own use the revenue derived from sales of land. If Government persist in maintaining this position, half the share should be given to them from the sale of land on public roads only. It is to be hoped that the municipality will duly fight out the question. It will thereby render valuable service to the people, who are heavily burdened with municipal taxation.

Requests the municipality of Kapadvanj to remove the potters' kilns from the town.

A correspondent of the Akhbáre Sodágar (78) of the 7th April complains that the brick and earthen pot kilns in the town of Kapadvanj are a source of annoyance and danger to the people living in their neighbourhood. These people are much annoyed by the smoke which rises from them and are afraid of their houses being burnt by the sparks flying from the kiln fires. The municipality ought to compel the potters to remove the kilns to an out-of-the-way place.

Native States.

The Rást Goftár (105) of the 1st April observes that the suspicions entertained regarding the intention of the young Ráo of Cutch to represent his claims to the gádi of the State have unfortunately been verified. The Ráo has abandoned the original plan of visiting the Nilgherries and has proceeded to Simla with the view of having an interview with the Viceroy. This change in the original programme indicates a movement in the direction of securing the management of the State to the young Rája. The Rást warns the Local and Imperial Governments not to commit the indiscretion of conferring great powers on raw youths before they attain the age of 21 years. The evil effects of such indiscretion have already become apparent in the case of the young Gáekwár. The Gáekwár is said to be far above the average prince in point of education and mental culture, and the mischief which the bestowal of power has worked in such a youth is an additional argument against the policy of entrusting young princes with responsibilities. The so-called education of young princes of which so much is generally made does not go further than a competency to read and speak English, and does not rise higher than the ordinary fourth standard of government schools. When they come of age the princes are represented to be educated, sharp, energetic and firm, but as soon as they assume the reins of Government the shallowness of their misrepresented virtues becomes at once apparent. There is a class of intriguers in every State, and notwithstanding the fact that they actually retard the education of the young princes they take every opportunity of representing the princes favourably to the public and to the British authorities with the view of paving their way to the throne and of thus serving their private ends. Such intriguers are the bane of Native States, and so long as this class is not exterminated it would be safe to postpone the installation of young princes until after they attain the age of 21 years.

Recommends that the Ráo of Cutch may not be raised to the gádi until after the age of 21 years.

Referring to the recent affray at Hyderabad, the Indian Spectator (1) of the 1st April says:—Nawáb Bushir-ud-Douláh may be smarting under a sense of injury. He may fancy he has a grievance because his claims to the sole Diwánship of Hyderabad have been overlooked. This feeling of injury may have made him reckless, or perhaps by such lawless acts he wishes to show that he is powerful and that those to whom the reins of government have been entrusted are unable to preserve the public peace. Whatever may have been the motives of the Nawáb, we earnestly hope that a thorough inquiry will be made in this matter; and should it be found that the Nawáb is in any way directly or indirectly responsible for the outrage, he should be taught a lesson so that he may henceforward remember, and other nobles of Hyderabad may learn, that the days are gone by when every nobleman in India who could afford to keep a band of ruffians in his service could send it out to do reckless battle against officials engaged in the discharge of their public duties, with impunity. If the Nawáb is responsible for this, then we say that he is not fitted to occupy the position of a member of the Council of Regency; for such conduct, bad enough in anybody else, is intolerable in a man who has a seat in the Council of the State. [Many vernacular papers write in the same strain.]

Prays for a thorough inquiry into the recent affray at Hyderabad.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 1st April is not much pleased with the appointment of Kázi Shabuddin to the Diwánship of Baroda. Though it is gratifying that an officer having a considerable experience of the Baroda administration has been appointed to the responsible post of prime minister, still having regard to the circumstance that the greater bulk of the subjects of Baroda profess the Hindu religion it is very doubtful whether the selection has been a happy one. The grand scale on which religious charities in Baroda have hitherto been organised is already known throughout the length and breadth of India, and it cannot be expected that a Diwán of the Mahomedan profession can administer that department with efficiency and without wounding the sensibilities of the masses. History shows that the Mahomedan conquerers offended most the religious prejudices of the people of India, and though this cannot at this day be predicated of Kázi

Does not approve of the appointment of Kázi Shabuddin as prime minister of Baroda.

Shabuddin individually, still it cannot be asserted that Hindus can safely confide in a Mahomedan Diwán. If therefore the selection has been made by the Gáekwár himself, it cannot but be considered to be an act of rashness and imprudence. [The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 1st April is thoroughly satisfied with the changes effected in the Baroda administration. The Gujaráti (91) of the 1st April is not pleased with the appointment of Kázi Shabuddin.]

Disapproves of the nomination of Kázi Shabuddin as Diwán of Baroda.

The Hitechchhu (73) of Ahmedabad of the 5th April does not hope for any good resulting to the Gáekwádi subjects from the nomination of Kázi Shabuddin as Diwán of Baroda. Kázi Shabuddin is neither independent nor clever in administrative policy. He is not only not equal to Sir T. Mádhav Ráo, but he is wanting in foresight and ability to meet intrigues. He does not even like independent action. His assistant is of the same type. It is no wonder that the people should feel surprised at his nomination. Baroda will now become a place for shows and festivities. The Hitechchhu is pleased only with his knowledge of Gujaráti. [The Bombay Punch (81) of the 7th April disapproves of the change in the administration of Baroda. The Vartamán Sár (114) of the 3rd April says that Baroda has nothing to lose by the resignation of Sir T. Mádhav Ráo. Kázi Shabuddin is an experienced officer, and it is to be hoped that he will manage the affairs of the State satisfactorily. But the present is not the time for expressing joy at the Kázi's appointment to the post of Diwán.]

Complaint against Baroda administration.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 1st April, writing from Deshra near Bilimora in the Gáekwár territory, complains of the injustice of a tax of Rs. 3 per house levied on all oilmen in that village, while there is no tax levied on other trades. The writer styles this practice as the relic of the late despotic administration, and observes that it is the duty of every prime minister to do away with such old vestiges of injustice.

Complaint against Cambay administration.

A correspondent of the same paper, writing from Cambay under date the 20th March, states that in Samvat 1929 a suit was going on between one Harakhchand Amichand and his wife. In the course of this suit about 18 account books of Harakhchand were brought forward for examination by certain arbiters. These books have been lost and are not traceable. Harakhchand died, leaving behind him his two sons Rupchand and Pemchand. The latter have represented to the Diwán and the Political Agent that the loss of these books has caused damage to the extent of Rs. 15,000, but no redress has as yet been given. It behoves the Diwán to bear in mind the claims of Rupchand to consideration for service in the State.

Comments on the administration of the new Diwán of Cambay.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 1st April, writing from Cambay under date the 27th March, complains that thieves have been causing a considerable amount of disturbance of late. Pársis have begun to monopolize the State service. The Diwán has initiated the policy of dismissing hereditary servants of the State who did service on light emoluments and of entertaining the services of highly paid Pársis. This policy will naturally have the effect of driving away from the State old servants and of substituting for them outsiders that will carry the wealth of the State to their own parts of the country and thus injure the prospects of its internal trade. The new Diwán's way of doing business is also unsatisfactory, inasmuch as it does not facilitate a prompt disposal of all complaints.

Disagreement between the Hindus and Mahomedans of Dhoráji.

The Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 30th March quotes the petition to the Bombay Government preferred by the Hindus of Dhoráji against the oppression exercised on them by the Mahomedans of that place, and remarks that it is not creditable that the Mahomedans should exercise unbearable oppression with respect to religion on the Hindu subjects of a Hindu Thákor and that Major Nutt and other officers should not listen to them. It is to be hoped that the Bombay Government will investigate the matter. Otherwise fears are entertained of evil consequences resulting from this state of things.

Berár Affairs.

The Varhád Samáchár (65) of the 2nd April does not like that the Judicial Commissioner of the Berárs should propose to pass the months of April, May and June at Yevatmál. This place, observes the Samáchár, is a small village where good provisions cannot be had even for exorbitant prices, and the suitors will be much inconvenienced by being required to go there. The Judicial Commissioner's court ought to remain at Akola, the recognized head-quarters, after the touring season is over. The Resident ought to be memorialized to prevent the Judicial Commissioner from spending the hot season wherever he likes.

Disapproves of the intended removal of the Judicial Commissioner's court to Yevatmál for three months.

The Urdu Akhbár (12) of the 10th March observes that several large thefts have recently occurred on the railway line in the Berárs, and it is believed that they were committed by the gang of Bhámtyás or professional thieves that came to Akola from Poona and lately went on to Bhusával. This gang was not detected until it reached the last-named place. The Berár railway police ought to have a detective branch to trace such parties.

Recommends the employment of detectives in the Berár railway police.

The Urdu Akhbár (12) of the 10th March complains that the road which goes from Shevgaon to Tunki by the side of Bávanvir has fallen into disrepair in several places, and great inconvenience is thereby caused to carts passing by that road. The authorities concerned ought to repair this road at once.

Invites attention to the bad state of certain roads.

RAOJI B. PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
14*th April* 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári: Complaint regarding the heavy burden of fees on toddy ... 10
Accidents to passengers by tram-cars: Calls the attention of Government to— 14
Complaints:
Regarding the injustice of an order of the Mámlatdár of Igatpuri directing certain Mhárs of Tinlakdi to remove their houses from their present site 11
Regarding the improper conduct of certain missionaries in the village of Kágwad in the district of Belgaum 12
Cultivation of exotic cotton: Remarks in connection with the — in the Dhárwár District 5
Forest Act: Disapproval of the rigorous working of the — in the Thána District... 9
Forest policy of Government: Criticism on the— 6
General administrative policy of Government: Comments on the— ... 3
Grazing lands: Approval of the resolution of the Government of India on the subject of providing — for famine contingencies ... 4
Hunting excursions of European soldiers: Disapproval of the rules issued by the Commander-in-Chief of India for regulating the— ... 11
Import duty on Indian silverware: Expression of regret at the refusal of England to repeal the English— 5
Land assessment: Prayer to Government to grant a remission of — in view of the havoc committed by locusts in different parts of the Deccan.. 9
License Tax at Broach: Complaint regarding the assessment and collection of the— 10
Loyalty of the people of India: Sense of — makes them submit quietly to whatever is done by their rulers 3
Native States: Comments on Sir Lepel Griffin's speech at Indore regarding the administration of—
The Gujaráti 11
The Yajdán Parast 11
Police:
A few remarks on the Bombay— 14
Comments on the conduct of the — in a case decided in Bengal ... 14
Postal matters:
Complaint regarding the inconvenience from early closing of the post at Surat 13
Disapproval of the order of the Post Master General limiting the number of newspapers exchanged among editors 13
Suggestion regarding the employment of additional establishment for the work in connection with post office savings banks ... 14
Public service:
Approval of the remarks made by the Honourable Mr. Peile and Mr. Justice West on the occasion of the distribution of prizes at the Byculla Schools 10
Recommendation to the people of the Bombay Presidency to accord a public reception to the Honourable Mr. Gibbs on his approaching departure to England 10
Suggests the transfer of Mr. Jog, City Mámlatdár, from Poona ... 12
Public Works:
Recommendation for the construction of a road from the Phonda Ghát to Málvan 13
Recommendation for the erection of a dharmashála at Ladvel midway between Kapadvanj and Dákor 13
Suggestion regarding the repair of certain roads in the Dhárwár District 13

PART II.—The New Budget—

Budget statement for 1883-84: Remarks on the— 15
Export duties: Recommendation for the abolition of— 17
Import duties: Suggestion for the abolition of all export duties and the restoration of— 16
Military Budget Estimates for 1883-84: Comments on the— ... 16
Surpluses in Indian budgets not reliable 15

Page.

PART III.—Local Self-government—

City Municipal Board of Dhárwár: Dissatisfaction with the Government nominations on the— 18
City Municipality of Surat: Expression of hope that the Educational authorities will not mind the complaints made against the election of certain members of that department as members for the— ... 18
Disputed elections: Disapproval of the rule issued by Government to regulate cases of— 17
Elections for certain City Municipalities: Review of the results of the— 18

PART IV.—Legislation—

Bengal Rent Bill: Recommendation for the adoption of a remedy like the — in the Bombay Presidency 20
Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill:
Conquest of India: It is ingratitude for the English to say that the — was effected by force of arms 18
Forfeiture of the privilege of Europeans of being tried by European Magistrates and juries 19
Inauspiciousness of the cry raised by Europeans against the — ... 20
Mistake of Europeans other than Englishmen being made to join in the agitation against the— 19
Race pride: Europeans are remarkable for their feeling of— ... 19
Publicity in legislation: Suggestion of certain measures for securing— 21

PART V.—Education—

Appointments: Approval of the appointment of Mr. W. A. Modak as Principal of the Elphinstone High School 21
Disapproval of ditto 21

PART VI.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad Municipality: Advice to the — regarding the appropriation by Government of half the income derived from the sale of land in the city... 22
Bombay Municipality:
Approval of the establishment of a pawnbroker's bank by the— ... 22
Recommendation to the — for the laying out of a public garden on the site of the Rotton Row... 22
Kapadvanj Municipality: Request to the — to remove the potters' kilns from the town 22

PART VII.—Native States—

Baroda:
Complaint against the — administration 24
Disapproval of the appointment of Kázi Shabuddín as Diwán at—
The Hitechchhu 24
The Native Opinion 23
Cambay:
Complaint against the — administration 24
Comments on the administration of the new Diwán of— ... 24
Cutch: Recommendation that the Ráo of — may not be raised to the gádi until after the age of 21 years 23
Dhoráji: Disagreement between the Hindus and Mahomedans of— ... 24
Hyderabad: Prayer for a thorough inquiry into the recent affray at— ... 23

PART VIII.—Berár Affairs—

Berár railway police: Recommendation for the employment of detectives in the— 25
Judicial Commissioner's Court: Disapproval of the intended removal of the — to Yevatmál for three months 25
Public Works: Suggestion regarding the repair of certain roads ... 25

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

RECEIVED 3 MAY 83 VIA BRINDISI

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 14th April 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayá	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do.	600
12	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do.	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyá Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	100
14	„ Arunodayá	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
20	„ Daivadnyá Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
21	„ Daivadnyá Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
22	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly	425
23	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
24	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
25	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
26	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
27	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
28	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	400
29	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
30	„ Jagan Mitrá	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
31	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*32	„ Karnátak Mitrá[4]	Belgaum	Do.	200
33	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	3,500
34	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
35	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	300
36	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
37	„ Maháráshtrá Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
38	„ Maháráshtrá Mitrá	Sátára	Do.	250
39	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
40	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
41	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
42	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly	700
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Do.	Do.	200
44	„ Nyáyá Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
47	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	250
48	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily	350
*49	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
50	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*51	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
52	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
53	„ Satyá Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	243
54	„ Satyá Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
55	„ Satyá Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
56	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	275
*57	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Weekly	200
*58	„ Shetakari	Poona	Monthly	400
59	„ Shiváji[3]	Do.	Weekly	200
60	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*61	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
62	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
63	„ Suryodayá	Thána	Do.	240

[1] Marathi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles. [4] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
64	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
65	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly	250
66	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
67	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
68	„ Vicháráhil...	Málvan	Do.	300
*69	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
70	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*71	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
72	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do.	400
73	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
74	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	725
75	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
76	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
77	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
78	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
79	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
80	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
81	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
82	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	950
83	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
84	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
85	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
86	„ Dátardun ... ... — ...	Bombay	Weekly	525
87	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do.	1,000
*88	„ Dnyán Prasárak	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
89	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
90	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
91	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*92	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
93	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*94	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
95	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
96	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*97	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
98	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	700
99	„ Kusum Guchehhá	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
100	„ Nágar Udayá	Do.	Do.	300
101	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
102	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
103	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
104	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
105	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
106	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
107	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	400
*108	„ Saurásháirá Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
109	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*110	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
111	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
112	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár ...	Umreth	Fortnightly ...	62
*113	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
114	„ Vartamán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
115	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
116	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	300
117	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
118	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*119	„ Karnátá Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
	URDU.
*120	The Altáf	Bombay	Weekly	200
*121	„ Armagán	Do.	Do.	200
*122	„ Dabdabe Islám[5]	Do.	Do.	200
*123	„ Khádam-é-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
124	„ Khayir Kháh-e-Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly ...	300
125	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
*126	„ Muzhire Shawkatul Islám	Do.	Do.	200
	PERSIAN.
127	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

[5] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or ा) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

The Saddharm Dip (52) for the Hindu month of Fálgun (February-March) received on the 3rd April, in an article headed "The Loyalty and Strength of the People of India," observes that if the English boast that they have been maintaining their power in India by the force of arms, they are much mistaken, inasmuch as their power has its support in the loyalty and goodness of the people of India. In the present times there can scarcely be found a man who can be so credulous as to believe the oft-repeated assurance that the English have been ruling India for her good and from disinterested motives, and that when they see that all the internal discords are set right and that the Natives are able to shift for themselves without difficulty, they would quietly return to their country. We have now become perfectly alive to the fact that the British rulers are swayed by purely selfish motives. The enormous salaries that their officers receive are a sufficient premise to lead even a rustic to a conclusion regarding the mission of the rulers. From the time that this country came in contact with these wise and civilized rulers, poverty has been making a sure advance, and at the present time people have been nearly reduced to a state of starvation; and if the administration were carried on on the same lines it would be difficult to foretell the future of India. Hindus have become wise by their intercourse with the English, but of what good is that wisdom to them? It is not at all in keeping with their general good nature. To go to a foreign country, to devise schemes for making space for putting in the thin end of the wedge of one's policy, to beguile people by sweet promises, to adapt oneself to circumstances and to gain one's object thereby, to create jealousy between two parties and to see the fun of their mutual fight, to eat one's words when necessary, to frighten others under a lion's skin, and thus by hook or crook to fill one's pockets—these tricks have the Hindus learnt from their rulers. But to them they are useless. Hindus are well aware that any attempt on their part in the interests of their native country will interfere with the political happiness of the English, and such attitude they consider inconsistent with their loyalty. Thus loyalty makes cowards of them all, and with this regard the currents of all their plans for the regeneration of their country and for securing happiness to themselves turn awry and lose the name of action. How wonderful and satisfactory is it then that the Hindus, notwithstanding the humiliation and loss to which they have been subjected by their rulers, should not have swerved from the path of loyalty!

Says that the dominion of the English in India has been maintained through the loyalty of the people.

The A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak (80) for the Hindu month of Fálgun (February-March) says that though the British ráj has conferred many benefits on India, the latter is being simply ruined. Though full 150 years have not elapsed since the success of the British arms at Plassey, India has now been reduced to a mere skeleton. This state of India is very discreditable to the independent conquering race and is a heart-burning sore to the patriot. This country was not ruined under the Mahomedan sway though the Mahomedans freely plundered her, because the money extorted from the people remained in the country, while the costly British administration has brought ruin on her. Several impartial Englishmen acknowledge the truth of this statement with a rueful heart. But those selfish people who maintain that India is rich are guilty of deceit and trickery. In the words of Dr. W. W. Hunter, nearly ten krors of the people of India are eking out their existence in a state of semi-starvation, and under such a state of starvation the present burden of taxation is unjust, oppressive and unbearable. The annual income of a native of India is on an average Rs. 20, while that of an inhabitant of rich England is Rs. 300. While the administrative expenditure in England is only $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the revenue, that in India is 22 per cent. Moreover the home charges are a great drain on India's wealth and have reduced her to a state of poverty. In 1855 the revenue stood at Rs. 29,13,30,000 and the Indian debt at Rs. 55,53,11,200, while now when the revenue has greatly increased the debt stands at 125 krors of rupees. How creditable is this policy! The true reason of this state of things is that "India is subjected to a most unnatural and destructive treatment." The political expenditure of India is very unjust. India has to defray, in addition to the expenses of the military service, a portion of the expenditure on British wars. India has to pay for the education of several Englishmen in their native soil, and the reward she gets is that they come out here on handsome salaries while those of Natives are very low. The money earned by them is remitted to England. In short, England owes her present greatness to India, which in her turn has been reduced to beggary. Such injustice is unbecoming to England. If England were under the French or German yoke, would she have put up with such injustice? Certainly not. England's bravery could not have lain dormant then. England should only think of that condition in order to deal justly by India. India asks for justice at her hands. She should consider herself very fortunate in having acquired India. "India is the brightest jewel in the diadem of England, and if she throws off that jewel she will deprive herself of her best wealth." The present sway of the English over this country is owing to the assistance rendered to them by the Native Princes and the Native public at the time of the mutiny of 1857. England is not a little indebted to India. She should therefore attend to the wants and prayers of her dependency. The enormous salaries of Governors, Commissioners, Collectors, High Court Judges and other officers ought to be curtailed. There are many departments the expenditure of which can easily be reduced. Natives can serve very well on low salaries. The salt tax and other similar taxes should be done away with. The writer concludes by requesting the Government of Lord Ripon to introduce the necessary changes in the administration and thereby to save India from ruin. He also exhorts Natives to be up and doing.

Complains of the costly administration of the British in India.

Comments in connection with the cry that the British should leave India and retire to England.

The Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 6th April, in a communicated article headed "The English should leave India!" observes that if the British Government were to think of leaving this country and returning to England, their action would be considered very noble. No means would be spared to commemorate their name in India. But all this is outward show. Their real aim must be to squeeze India and enrich England. With a view to annoy the natives of this country several Europeans say that India is a burden to England and it would be better to let her alone. Others advocate the retention of India on purely benevolent principles and express apprehensions that if the English returned to their country India will be a scene of civil and internecine war and confusion, and that Russia or Afghanistan will take the opportunity of making an advance. Others again are of opinion that as some time English soldiers will have to shed their blood in doing this benevolent act, the English should take the earliest opportunity of retiring from this country. Europeans holding such different views are to be met with both in England and in India. The greatness and position of England as one of the Great Powers are owing to India. Krors of rupees are drained off to England in various shapes every year. Thousands of England's sons find a livelihood in the country. Under these circumstances to say that India is a burden and that the British administration of this country is carried on out of benevolence and for the preservation of order in the land is nothing short of deceit. If India is governed by the English out of benevolence, and if she is a burden to her, England can safely retire from the country. The Indians would gladly take this burden upon themselves and take care of their own interests. The editor of the Samsher acknowledges in a note that it is for the interests of England to continue her hold on India. But to say that the English should leave India and that Indians would take care of themselves is not proper, for it must take a long time before Natives can manage their own affairs.

Is glad to hear that Lord Ripon does not intend to resign the Viceroyalty of India.

The Bombay Punch (81) of the 14th April, in referring to the rumoured resignation of Lord Ripon as Viceroy of India, says that India would be a wilderness without the eminent Ripon. May that day never dawn which would see Lord Ripon, the well-wishing father of India, leave her shores! May he shine upon India as the sun illuminates the heavens, and may the inauspicious forebodings of foolish persons fail! The contradiction given to the rumour by Mr. Gladstone in the House of Commons has restored freshness and bloom to the pale face of this country. The contradiction has laid low the enemies of India and has gladdened the hearts of her friends.

Suggests certain reforms in the constitution of the Legislative Councils of India.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 8th April says:—The Times of India in its issue of Tuesday last thus concludes its leading article on Major Baring's financial statement:—"The Financial Minister himself has expressed a regret that the condition of the law precludes the possibility of any discussion of the existing financial situation in the Legislative Council. The sooner the law is altered the better it will be for India." We agree with our contemporary in toto. The necessity of reforming the Legislative Councils has become so very pressing that if the task is undertaken even to-day it will not be too soon. It is certainly very desirable that these Councils should be made elective; but if the Government of India be not prepared for such a change we would content ourselves with having the powers of the Legislative Councils a little more enlarged. We would wish that these Indian Councils should be made somewhat like the Legislative Council of Ceylon. Members of Legislative Councils ought to have the power of asking the executive questions on matters of administration; the financial budget should be placed before them and discussed as if it were a legislative measure; and besides the right of asking questions, Legislative Councils ought to possess the power of vetoing the acts of the executive in certain important matters. If these changes were introduced the Indian Legislative Councils would do immense service to the country. [The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 8th April is also of opinion that the annual financial statement should be discussed in the Legislative Council, and suggests the appointment of a Native member in the Council simply with the view of representing the interests of India in financial matters.]

Suggests that seditious Irishmen taking refuge in the United States should be severely dealt with.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 11th April observes that the discontented Irishmen are mistaken if they suppose that by destroying public buildings by dynamite explosions and committing other serious mischief the English nation will be frightened and make improper concessions after which they are so much panting. Irishmen themselves are solely responsible for the evil condition in which they are placed; and had they allowed the ministry to adopt preliminary measures of improvement, Ireland's condition would have by this time considerably improved. Seditious Irishmen have been encouraged in their foolish work by several thoughtless and worthless Americans. After severely censuring Mr. Richelieu Robinson for making a motion in the House of Representatives that the United States' Government should request England to make over Ireland to the Americans in sale or in gift, the Jáme advises the British ministry to enter into a new treaty with the United States with the view of securing the extradition of the seditious Irishmen who concoct treason while residing in these States, and to inflict the extreme punishment of the law on the sedition-mongers.

Is sorry that England should not abolish the import duty on Indian silverware.

The Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 8th April regrets that the Government of England that induced the Government of India to abolish the customs import duties, an important and valuable source of revenue to this country, on the ground of free trade principles, should persistently refuse to give up the comparatively insignificant item of the English import duty on silverware. Thus the principles under colour of which a grievous wrong has been perpetrated to this country are found to be of no avail when a modicum of justice is sought to be obtained for India.

Recommends a reduction in the land revenue assessment and in the duties levied on food-grains.

The Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 13th April is grateful to Lord Ripon for reducing the duty on salt and thereby creating an increase in the consumption of this indispensable condiment. The increased demand has already augmented the revenue from this source, and in course of time the increase in demand promises not only to cover the loss occasioned by the reduction of duty, but to realize more income than was derived before the reduction. This actual experience of a reduction in the duty levied on an article of universal consumption leading to an increase in the revenues ought to induce Government to reduce the duty imposed on food-grains and the land revenue assessment. If a reduction is made in this direction more land will be cultivated and more food will be consumed than is the case at present. Much land is lying waste and many poor people do not get enough food to satisfy their requirements on account of the heavy land assessment and the high price of food; and a reduction in the State demand will in all likelihood extend agriculture and increase the consumption of the food-grains.

Complains of the non-representation of Poona in the Bombay Committee for the Calcutta International Exhibition.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 8th April says:—A notification in the Bombay Government Gazette publishes the names of 28 gentlemen who have been nominated to form a committee for the purpose of ensuring the adequate representation of the products of the Bombay Presidency at the Calcutta International Exhibition. We are extremely sorry to find that among the 28 nominees there is not a single gentleman from Poona. Even the Legislative Council of the Presidency finds room for one gentleman from this city, and we do not know how it was that no gentleman from it attracted the notice of Government in this matter. His Excellency, or at any rate Mr. Nugent, ought most certainly to have a better knowledge of this city. Poona deserves better treatment in this matter, because for the last ten years it has practically shown that it takes a lively interest in these matters. We have a regular Exhibition Committee and a Museum Committee, and Government ought to have asked the president and members to co-operate. We however hope it is not too late to correct the mistake, and Mr. Nugent will do justice to this city by asking His Excellency to add to the list the names of a few gentlemen representing Poona.

A complaint regarding the levy of the license tax at Broach.

The Broach Samáchár (83) of the 12th April complains of the way in which the lists of persons liable to pay the license tax were pasted in the streets of Broach. Though nearly ten days have elapsed since they were pasted, yet from their wretched condition it appears as if they were not pasted at all. Several ignorant tax-payers are afraid of going to the court and getting the necessary information. It is to be feared that some of the tax-payers will lose the right of appeal owing to their ignorance. While notices of the Police, Municipal and other departments remain pasted in public streets for a long time, how is it that these lists have become disfigured so soon? Mr. Borradaile ought to investigate the matter, and if there be no more printed copies of the lists to spare, written lists ought to be re-pasted in three or four public streets for the information of the public. If Mr. Borradaile himself hears appeals the people will be much satisfied, because the assessing officer cannot hear appeals. If Mr. Borradaile cannot do so owing to pressure of work, it is to be hoped that Ráo Báhádur Chunilál will be entrusted with the work.

Complains of the stringency of the forest rules.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 8th April, in an article headed "The Pindhari system in the administration of Forests," refers to the memorial addressed to the Viceroy by the principal proprietors of certain freehold villages with forests attached thereto in the Salsette Táluka, and remarks:—It was expressly provided in Act VII. of 1865, called the "Government Forests Act," that the rights of individuals or communities should in no way be affected. That was a very judicious provision. It would have been a breach of faith had the Government of the day attempted to abridge by legislation the rights and privileges which its predecessors had deliberately granted. Under section 18, however, the Act was not made applicable to the Bombay Presidency, because it was thought that the local forest rules and some of the provisions of the Penal Code were adequate for the purposes of Government. The Act was amended in 1878 and this Presidency was included in its provisions. It unfortunately introduced a section which has since then been considered by almost all proprietors to whose villages forests are attached as a most mischievous one. Whatever the intention of the Legislature, the myrmidons of the Forest Department have made that section an instrument wherewith to inflict loss and hardship on private proprietors. In the words of the memorial, "a provision was also made therein to secure such forests by a slow and ruinous process, viz., by imposing in the first place certain restrictions and prohibitions on the rights of proprietors of such forests and lands, and by placing them under the management of Government officers for disobedience of such prohibition, and then acquiring them for public purposes under the Land Acquisition Act, or giving up, after some years' trial, in a state not so profitable to their owners as they were in when taken charge of by Government officers." Can language more graphically describe the effects of this legal torture or thumbscrew? For what does it amount to, after all, in practice? When a Native State arbitrarily lays hold of the property of its subjects and refuses to pay adequate compensation for it, the Political Agent condemns the iniquity of the transaction in no measured terms. The same act, however, assumes a totally different aspect when perpetrated by a British officer in a British district, powerfully armed by British legislation! What a wonderful way of judging one and the same action! When the inalienable right of a subject in a Native State is abridged, affected, or wholly swept away by the arbitrary will of the Chief, it is denounced as lawless tyranny. Will the British Government deny that Chapter 6 of Act VII. of 1878 is a legal tyranny, a discreditable attempt at acquiring the rights and privileges absolutely granted and conveyed years ago to private persons and put into solemn covenant and declared as proof against change or modification? Is it honest? The memorialists strongly objected to the passing of the Bill in 1878, but, as usual, their prayer was disregarded. The memorialists then stated that if the Government were of opinion "that inconvenience would be experienced by the Forest Department in carrying out the provisions of the Act in question by saving private rights, then such rights should be acquired at once and in a straightforward way under the Land Acquisition Act, instead of acquiring them under the lingering and ruinous process prescribed in sections 35, 36 and 37 of the said Act No. VII. of 1878." But the Government was unmoved,—nay, the Bombay Government, or rather the Forest Department of the Presidency, published rules, as authorised under the provision of section 41, to regulate the transit of timber and other forest produce belonging to private persons. Unnecessary disputes, annoyance, loss of time and loss of money are the results which have been found in practice since the rules, which are more stringent than the Act itself, were put into force in November last. Now, we are far from denying the right of Government to conserve forests and their produce as well as to protect the revenue derived therefrom. But what we contend is that care should be taken that in its excessive zeal it should not infringe the unquestionable right of those who are entitled to a different treatment. Even if their forests are to be acquired it would be more honest to do so by taking them over at once under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act than by submitting their proprietors to a slow process of legal torture which would facilitate their parting with the forests at ruinously low valuations. There cannot be much doubt in any unbiassed mind that such is the secret aim of Chapter 6. We cannot help calling the process legalised Pindhárism. We have more than once expressed our opinion that the course which legislation has for some years taken in this province as well as elsewhere has hardly been of a nature to secure contentment among the people. And especially where revenue matters are concerned and where the interests of the State conflict with those of private persons, Government has not been slow to drive a coach and six through all their previous solemn compacts and covenants. Might overrides right. That is the long and short of it. This is scarcely a desirable state of affairs. It leaves a painful impression on the public mind that despite all its boasted talk of respect for maintenance of private rights in their integrity, Government is ever ready, whenever State exigency demands or opportunity offers, to cast it to the winds. How far such an attitude on the part of Government is conducive to loyalty and contentment we would leave it to be inferred. The agitation on the same subject of harsh forest rules at Thána and other places ought to open the eyes of Government. It is earnestly to be hoped that the Government of Lord

Ripon will show its sense of justice by complying with the very reasonable prayer of the memorialists. It is essential that the reputation which the British enjoy for honesty and good faith should be maintained.

Compares the English with the Indian budget.

The Gujarátí (91) of the 8th April is very sorry that the Indian budget does not stand comparison with the English budget. The very fact that there has been an increased surplus of revenue in spite of the expenses of the Egyptian War shows that Mr. Gladstone's administration is wonderful. While the English budget exhibits a surplus of nearly three krors of rupees it is to be regretted that in India the surplus should only amount to 45 lakhs. Moreover the English revenues have shown a surplus notwithstanding a reduction in the income tax and the import duties. Provision has also been made for the payment during this year of 8 krors of the national debt. It is not known when the national debt of India will be paid off. Major Baring should try to show a surplus similar to that in England, and the British Government should abandon the unjust policy of making India pay for a war that was undertaken in their interests.

Disapproves of the contemplated visit of the Amir of Afghánistan to India.

In a paragraph headed "The Amir's contemplated visit to India," the Native Opinion (10) of the 8th April says:—Next cold season is expected to bring along with it a grand Darbár in honour of the present Amir of Kábul. What the object of this visit may be has not yet transpired and may never transpire. We never approve of a hot and cold policy. The Amirs of Afghánistan, since the times of Dost Mahomed, have never come to be treated as warm allies or friends, and hence whenever they found an opportunity or were compelled by circumstances they played into the hands of Russia. To such a policy we owe all Afghán troubles, heavy costs on their account, and the heavy burdens of annual subsidies in money and war material from our revenues to keep up a friendly appearance. We think the present Government should plainly tell the Amir, when he comes to India, that he will be given no more subsidies, no matter whether he maintains our friendship or turns out an enemy. India can well afford to stand without him if her people are contented and her resources are properly handled. England's resources backed by the people of this country can easily ward off any number of outward attacks. But the main condition of this security is the happiness and contentment of the people of this country, and to this end Government ought to direct their resources instead of diverting them to such fruitless schemes as the Kandáhar and Sibi railway. [The Bombay Punch (81) of the 14th April disapproves of the contemplated visit and says that the Amir's object in so doing appears to be to get some money from India.]

Comments in connection with the establishment of post office savings banks in the Bombay Presidency.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 8th April, in referring to the establishment of the post office savings banks in the Bombay Presidency from the 1st of May next, says:—In England these banks have been found to be wonderfully useful in creating and encouraging a desire for savings amongst the working classes, and it remains to be seen what good this new arrangement does to the Indian labourer. The rates of wages are very low in India and we do not think that the Indian labourer is in a position to save a four-anna piece during a whole week. Another great difficulty is that the labourer will hardly understand how, when, and where he can deposit. If the postal department cares to secure success to the scheme, it would be extremely necessary to advertise this arrangement very widely, so that before long the remotest kunbi will know of the institution. We fear these banks will not be much resorted to by the middle or the well-to-do classes, for they afford no greater advantage either in interest or in convenience than the present savings banks. The procedure in depositing as well as in withdrawing money is equally complicated and tedious. But if the branch city receiving houses in large cities were allowed to receive deposits, it would be a sort of convenience which would induce men to resort to the new banks.

Suggests that the present delivery peons at Cambay should be removed and others brought in their place.

The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 8th April comments on the unsatisfactory nature of the replies given by the Postal Department to complaints regarding loss of posted packets. The Mitrá cites two instances in which packets containing copies of the Gujarát Mitrá newspaper addressed to certain subscribers in Cambay did not reach their destination, and in reply to representations made in that behalf the postal authorities were good enough to say that if the said packets had been posted they could not but be delivered to the parties addressed, or that no trace of the lost packet could be found in the absence of proof that it bore a particular address and that it was properly posted. Similarly a packet containing the Deshi Mitrá of the 29th March and addressed to a subscriber at Cambay has been lost. Under these circumstances and considering the unsettled state of affairs at Cambay, the Mitrá considers it highly probable that the packets have been tampered with by the postal delivery peons, and suggests that the present peons should be removed to other places and that such others should be brought in their place as may be above the intrigues of the Cambayites.

Suggests a reform in the practice of keeping soldiers always supplied with bullets, &c.

The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 8th April represents the danger of keeping European and Native soldiers supplied with a certain number of bullets on all occasions. These soldiers are in the habit of going out on hunting excursions, and being apt to create affrays with the people even on the most trivial pretexts they make use of their rifles against their adversaries. The Mitrá quotes the incidents at Benares and Poona as instances in point. In the former case a European soldier killed one of his superior officers at drill time, and in the latter a Native soldier had the audacity to kill a number of his neighbours and to wound others in a fit of excitement. The usefulness of the present practice is not quite apparent. In England it is the practice with the soldiers when relieved to give over charge of bullets, &c., to the officers next on duty, and if the same practice were observed in India there is no doubt that offences of the nature adverted to would decrease.

Condemns the conduct of the authorities of the district of Sátára in having allowed interference with the religious prejudices of the people of certain villages.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 9th April quotes extracts from a letter received from the village of Waduth in the district of Sátára, the inhabitants of which complain of the vexation caused to them by the conduct of certain converts to Christianity in mixing with them at their ghâts, (landing-places), polluting the water by their touch, and interfering with their sacred and religious observances. The inhabitants represented the matter to the First Assistant Collector, who on personal inspection first ordered the Native Christians to use the stream below the ghát. On second thoughts, however, the First Assistant Collector in a fit of anger allowed the converts to use the ghát itself, and since this verbal order the said converts have been indulging in the freaks of throwing water on the Hindus and thus defiling their bodies and sometimes of pushing them. Though there is no guarantee for the truth of the whole of this account, still it appears to the Indu that the principal facts are true. It appears very strange that the Assistant Collector should have passed two orders in a short time. Why should he have changed his first order? Was he justified in issuing an unlawful order in a fit of anger? And then why should the people obey an order that is unlawful? It may be proper to allow the Christians equal rights and privileges with the Natives, but is it not at the same just to have a regard for the object with which landing places are constructed at the cost of lákhs of rupees by private individuals on the understanding and under the belief that the object of their charity will not be violated? Europeans have no idea of the extent to which the feelings of Natives are wounded by what is called pollution by touch, and it is the duty of Government to punish every such interference with the religious prejudices of Natives. It also behoves the authorities in the Sátára District to give this question their best consideration and to redress the grievances of the people of Waduth. [The Kesari (33) of the 10th April, and the Mahárâshtrá Mitrá (38) of the 12th April express similar sentiments. The Native Opinion (10) of the 8th April dwells on the abstract question of the impolicy of allowing an interference with the religious prejudices of certain sections of the community by others, and expresses an opinion that such conduct of the Christian missionaries deserves to be promptly checked.]

Says that it is inadvisable to abolish the Senior Assistant Judge's Court at Kaládgi and to divide the work between the Sholápur and Dhárwár District Courts.

The Hitechchhu (27) of Kaládgi of the 8th April does not approve of the intention of Government to abolish the Court of the Senior Assistant Judge at Kaládgi and to divide the judicial work of the district between Dhárwár and Sholápur, a District Judge being appointed at the latter place. The transfer of the five tálukas to the north of the Krishna to the jurisdiction of the Sholápur Court will cause great inconvenience regarding the language of the Court and the keeping of records. It is said that the High Court have been led to recommend this change to Government on the ground that the judicial work of the district had of late diminished to a great degree. But this diminution in the work has been the effect of the famine of 1879-80, and it is very likely that the work will by-and-bye resume its former proportions as railway communications gradually increase the trade and consequently the prosperity of that part of the country. Moreover it is very inconvenient for a single revenue district to be under two judicial authorities. For instance, suppose that a criminal case within the jurisdiction of an Assistant Collector and First Class Magistrate in charge of the three tálukas of Bágalkot, Bádámi and Hungund has on legal grounds to be transferred to another First Class Magistrate, and there is no other First Class Magistrate within those three tálukas. The case will naturally have to be referred to a Magistrate in the other five tálukas of the district. But these five tálukas having been judicially transferred to another district, the First Class Magistrate in them is subordinate to the Magistrate of that district under section 10 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the inconvenience of the situation is thus obvious.

Suggests certain reforms in the Subordinate Judges' and District Pleaders' Examinations.

The Jagaddárarsh (29) of 8th April observes that the nature of the Subordinate Judges' and District Pleaders' Examinations under the revised standards has not been satisfactory. The writer criticises the papers set at this year's examinations and observes that they were on the whole objectionable. The standards appointed as tests for the successful candidates are high and require to be lowered. There should be two separate examinations for District Pleaders and Subordinate Judges. In the former 33⅓ per cent. of the aggregate number of marks should be considered sufficient to pass a candidate, while in the latter 50 per cent. should be the test. No questions should be set from the Indian Law Reports for the six months previous to the date of the examination. The questions should be clear and should first be approved by the Judges on the Appellate Side of the High Court. If these suggestions were adopted there would be left no cause for complaint, and the fact that the questions were approved by the High Court would be a warrant for the competency of the candidates who come out successful.

Censures the Honourable Mr. Norris of the Calcutta High Court for imprisoning a juror who did not understand English.

In alluding to the report that the Honourable Mr. Norris of the Calcutta High Court detained in Court for a day a juror who did not understand English properly, and at last ordered that his name should be struck off the list of jurors, the Akhbáre Sodágar (78) of the 10th April observes that in Bombay no enquiries are made when preparing the list of jurors as to whether they possess a sufficient knowledge of the English language, and if the same is the case with Calcutta it was no fault of the juror mentioned above that he was on the jury list though he did not understand English properly. It was very hard on him that he should have been made to suffer punishment for no fault of his. The Honourable Judge has committed several strange acts similar to the above, and they have been attributed to his inexperience. But when experienced persons can be found, why should the responsible post of a Judge be conferred on an inexperienced gentleman?

Wishes that Mr. Pherozsha Merwanji Mehta may be appointed Acting Judge to the vacancy which will be created on the departure of Sir Charles Sargent.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 10th April hopes that the rumour that the temporary vacancy on the Bombay Bench caused by the departure of Sir Charles Sargent on leave will be filled by the appointment of Mr. Pherozsha Merwanji Mehta, Barrister-at-law, turns out true. Mr. Mehta is an able counsel well versed in law, and has devoted considerable attention to public questions. No Native has yet served as a Judge on the Original Side of the High Court, and Mr. Mehta's appointment will therefore give great satisfaction to the Native public. [The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 8th April expresses similar sentiments.]

Suggests a reform in the mode of criminal punishment.

A correspondent of the Bodh Sudhákar (18) of the 11th April takes the opportunity of the well known proposed amendment in the Criminal Procedure Code for suggesting a reform in the mode of punishment awarded under the Code. As the intention of all punishments provided under the law is to deter the public at large from the commission of crimes, it is plain that the object cannot well be accomplished by confining the offender in a prison and thus securing for him seclusion from the eye of the world. It is therefore proposed that when an offender is convicted of an offence he should be taken to his place of residence and should be paraded before his friends and neighbours; his offence should be proclaimed to the people, and, in short, every means which would have the effect of subjecting him to mental torture should be resorted to. Now that education has improved the moral tone of the people, this is an appropriate method of diverting them from crime.

Suggests that all religious preachers should be prohibited from preaching on public roads.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 10th April observes that the Commissioner of Police in Bombay has acted properly in prohibiting the processions of the Salvation Army on the ground that they are calculated to hurt the feelings of Natives. The preachings of Christian missionaries and priests of other religions on public roads also offend the feelings of Natives though the preachers may take care to praise their own religion and not to attack the religions of other persons. It is therefore to be hoped that the Commissioner will prohibit all preachers from preaching in public streets.

Wishes that the University clock in Bombay may keep local time.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 11th April observes that the clock newly set up on the University Tower will be a great convenience to Bombay, and the people desire that it should keep local time. The public has been put to much inconvenience on account of Madras time being observed in Government offices and some other places by order of His Excellency the Governor. A large number of the local mercantile firms also desire that local time should be kept by this clock. The University authorities should therefore decide according to the wishes of the public, and if they fail to do so the municipality should not make any grant for lighting the tower at night. It is also to be hoped that Sir James Fergusson will withdraw his order directing the observance of Madras time, which has become a source of great annoyance. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (78) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Complains of the bad condition of the road between Kapadvanj and Nadiád.

A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (73) of Ahmedabad of the 12th April says that the road between Kapadvanj and Nadiád is very much in want of repairs. Dust keeps flying about on this road, which is much used. The road between Mehmadabad and Kaira is on the other hand kept in good condition. The reason appears to be the solicitude of the officers concerned to look to the comforts of Europeans who use this road.

Local Self-government.

Disapproves of the opposition raised by Lord Lytton to the scheme of local self-government.

In alluding to the opposition raised by Lord Lytton in the House of Lords against the scheme of local self-government promulgated by the Government of India, the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 12th April observes that His Lordship's remarks that the scheme is in contravention of the general policy of Government and is calculated to prejudicially affect the relations at present existing between the Europeans and Natives, are of little value. The scheme of self-government has been approved by Europeans and Natives, and those of the former who have been dissatisfied with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill have had nothing to say against the scheme itself. Lord Kimberley has adequately met Lord Lytton by stating that the scheme is by no means likely to affect the present British Indian policy and is not meant to introduce representative government in India. As observed by the Secretary of State, the scheme is not a creation of Lord Ripon: it was brought into existence and approved of by Lords Canning, Lawrence and Mayo. Lord Ripon has simply brought it forward believing rightly that the present was the fittest opportunity for its introduction. Education has made such an advance in India that its people can safely be expected to carry out the scheme successfully. The principles of the scheme have been at work throughout the country for many years past and have been successfully developed. Nothing further is necessary to vouchsafe the success of the scheme than that it has met with the approval of five ex-Viceroys of India. Lord Lytton's is the only dissentient voice. [The Jáme Jamshed (95) and the Dátardun (86) of the same date also condemn Lord Lytton's opposition on somewhat similar grounds. The Káside Mumbai (98) of the 13th and the Bombay Punch (81) of the 14th April disapprove of Lord Lytton's conduct and say that nothing else could be expected from a Viceroy who did nothing for the natives of India during his term of office.]

Disapproves of the recent municipal elections at Belgaum.

The Karnátak Mitrá (32) of the 5th April regrets that the members elected by the people as their representatives on the city municipal board of Belgaum are not of the proper stamp. The Mitrá points out that this has been the result of the ignorauce of the people regarding the procedure of the ceremony of election and also of the irregularity which was observable in counting the votes and declaring the result. In order that the object of Lord Ripon should be duly satisfied it is necessary that the votes should again be carefully scrutinized and the results revised, and the Mitrá hopes that Mr. Jervoise will do the needful in the matter. [The Dnyán Bodhak (23) of the 8th April also expresses its dissatisfaction with the results of the elections and advises the Collector to cancel the election of the undeserving members and to hold a fresh election for supplying their places.]

Complains of delay in the notification of elections held under the scheme of local self-government in the several municipalities of Gujarát.

The Vartamán Sár (114) of the 10th April says that though nearly a fortnight has passed away since the new elections under the scheme of local self-government have taken place in the several cities of Gujarát, the results have not yet been notified in the Bombay Government Gazette, nor have memoranda been sent to the commissioners who have been elected. This interregnum in the municipal government of Gujarát is much to be regretted. What is the Revenue Commissioner about? Why are not these elections notified in a Government Gazette Extraordinary? If this cannot be done at once, why not send memoranda to the persons who have been elected and to those who are to be still nominated by Government giving the necessary intimation? Much has to be done after the elections have been duly notified.

Recommends Mr. Whitworth for the appointment of president of the city municipality of Surat.

The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 8th April says that there is not a single person in Surat who is qualified for the appointment of president of the city municipality. The Mitrá would rather have Mr. Whitworth as president than any non-official who is unable to stand on his own legs and who can be led away by external pressure and

Local Self-government.

In alluding to the opposition raised by Lord Lytton in the House of Lords against the scheme of local self-government promulgated by the Government of India, the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 12th April observes that His Lordship's remarks that the scheme is in contravention of the general policy of Government and is calculated to prejudicially affect the relations at present existing between the Europeans and Natives, are of little value. The scheme of self-government has been approved by Europeans and Natives, and those of the former who have been dissatisfied with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill have had nothing to say against the scheme itself. Lord Kimberley has adequately met Lord Lytton by stating that the scheme is by no means likely to affect the present British Indian policy and is not meant to introduce representative government in India. As observed by the Secretary of State, the scheme is not a creation of Lord Ripon: it was brought into existence and approved of by Lords Canning, Lawrence and Mayo. Lord Ripon has simply brought it forward believing rightly that the present was the fittest opportunity for its introduction. Education has made such an advance in India that its people can safely be expected to carry out the scheme successfully. The principles of the scheme have been at work throughout the country for many years past and have been successfully developed. Nothing further is necessary to vouchsafe the success of the scheme than that it has met with the approval of five ex-Viceroys of India. Lord Lytton's is the only dissentient voice. [The Jáme Jamshed (95) and the Dátardun (86) of the same date also condemn Lord Lytton's opposition on somewhat similar grounds. The Káside Mumbai (98) of the 13th and the Bombay Punch (81) of the 14th April disapprove of Lord Lytton's conduct and say that nothing else could be expected from a Viceroy who did nothing for the natives of India during his term of office.]

Disapproves of the opposition raised by Lord Lytton to the scheme of local self-government.

The Karnátak Mitrá (32) of the 5th April regrets that the members elected by the people as their representatives on the city municipal board of Belgaum are not of the proper stamp. The Mitrá points out that this has been the result of the ignorance of the people regarding the procedure of the ceremony of election and also of the irregularity which was observable in counting the votes and declaring the result. In order that the object of Lord Ripon should be duly satisfied it is necessary that the votes should again be carefully scrutinized and the results revised, and the Mitrá hopes that Mr. Jervoise will do the needful in the matter. [The Dnyán Bodhak (23) of the 8th April also expresses its dissatisfaction with the results of the elections and advises the Collector to cancel the election of the undeserving members and to hold a fresh election for supplying their places.]

Disapproves of the recent municipal elections at Belgaum.

The Vartamán Sár (114) of the 10th April says that though nearly a fortnight has passed away since the new elections under the scheme of local self-government have taken place in the several cities of Gujarát, the results have not yet been notified in the Bombay Government Gazette, nor have memoranda been sent to the commissioners who have been elected. This interregnum in the municipal government of Gujarát is much to be regretted. What is the Revenue Commissioner about? Why are not these elections notified in a Government Gazette Extraordinary? If this cannot be done at once, why not send memoranda to the persons who have been elected and to those who are to be still nominated by Government giving the necessary intimation? Much has to be done after the elections have been duly notified.

Complains of delay in the notification of elections held under the scheme of local self-government in the several municipalities of Gujarát.

The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 8th April says that there is not a single person in Surat who is qualified for the appointment of president of the city municipality. The Mitrá would rather have Mr. Whitworth as president than any non-official who is unable to stand on his own legs and who can be led away by external pressure and influence. Mr. Whitworth is a real gentleman, is honest and just. He never makes any distinction between Natives and Europeans, and this has been amply testified to by the sentence he passed on Mr. Wharton, a line inspector on the B. B. and C. I. Railway. We strongly recommend to the Governor in Council that Mr. Whitworth be appointed president of the Surat Municipality. He enjoys the full confidence of the people, who are of opinion that if officers of his stamp come to India the stability of the British dominion will ever remain unaffected.

Recommends Mr. Whitworth for the appointment of president of the city municipality of Surat.

Points out the illegality of the constitution of the new municipal board at Ahmedabad.

The Hitechchhu (73) of Ahmedabad of the 12th April says:—The new municipal board at Ahmedabad consists of ten ex-officio commissioners, 7 nominated by Government and 12 elected by the rate-payers, making a total of 29 commissioners. This constitution of the corporation is illegal, inasmuch as it is not in accordance with the District Municipal Act No. VI. of 1873 now in force. In section 7, clause 1, it is laid down that "the number of such non-official commissioners shall always be not less than double that of the ex-officio commissioners." In the present case the number of non-official commissioners is less by one than double that of the ex-officio commissioners. The proceedings of such an illegally constituted municipality would be unlawful. It is therefore essentially necessary that one more name should be added to the list of non-official commissioners. We thank Government and the Commissioner, N. D., for not only removing the City Magistrate of Ahmedabad from the corporation, but depriving him also of the permanent chairmanship, which he has hitherto held. Now we beg of Government to grant the non-official commissioners the privilege of electing a chairman from amongst themselves instead of allowing the Collector and president to nominate one. Is it not absurd on the very face of it that whereas town municipalities have the power given them under the Act to elect one of the commissioners to be chairman, city municipalities should have no such power? The Supreme Government and the Government of Bombay have in their resolutions on the scheme of local self-government expressed a desire of invariably appointing a non-official to be chairman of city and town municipalities. We trust His Excellency Sir James Fergusson will be pleased to empower the non-official commissioners of the Ahmedabad municipality to elect one of their number to be chairman. The chairman should as a rule be appointed from amongst the non-official commissioners in rotation every third month. If the chairman were, however, for the present, to continue in office till the amendment of the District Municipal Act under the self-government rules, we would recommend Ráo Sáhebs Ranchodlál Chhotálál, Mahipatrám Ruprám and Abáji Vishnu Káthavate for the post. Any of them would make a competent chairman.

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Exhorts the people of Bombay to submit to Parliament a petition in favour of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Lok Mitrá (74) of the 8th April is sorry that no movement has yet been made by the Bombay Branch of the East India Association to support Mr. Ilbert's Bill. While the Natives in other parts of India are energetically exerting themselves to strengthen the hands of Government by submitting petitions in favour of the measure, Bombay with all its boasted enlightenment and political activity is quietly looking on as if it was not at all concerned in the result of the contest. It is a matter of indifference whether large meetings are held or not; but some movement must surely be set on foot at this hour of the day to defeat the wanton and senseless outcry raised by a number of disappointed and selfish men ostensibly against Mr. Ilbert's Bill, but really against that wise and noble policy of a Government which seeks to do its duty by the natives of the country in compliance with political exigencies. Why is Bombay so apathetic and listless in the midst of such general excitement? Is it because the passing or rejection of the Bill will not in any way affect it? If so, it is a very short-sighted and injudicious reasoning. The principles involved in the controversy are most momentous and must be strenuously supported; and it is for the upholding and maintenance of these principles that all India should make a joint effort. [The Bombay Chronicle (71) of the same date expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

The Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 6th April remarks that as Europeans have come forward to assert that they should only be tried by persons of their own nationality, Natives should also assert that they should be tried only by their own countrymen, for Europeans are not acquainted with the manners, social customs and religion of the natives of the soil. When Europeans have no confidence in the Natives, why should the latter have confidence in them? When such an outcry has been raised against Mr. Ilbert's Bill simply because two Native Civilians of good families out of a population of 24 kror souls are to be entrusted with the power of trying Europeans, it cannot be understood why Natives should not raise a similar outcry against them. [The Nyáyá Prakásh (103) of the 9th April condemns the opposition raised by Europeans against the Jurisdiction Bill, and remarks that if caste distinctions are to be observed in the enactment and administration of law, where would the impartial British justice be? Then the tiger and the lamb cannot be said to drink water from the same bank of a river in the British ráj.]

Says that the natives of India should follow in the footsteps of those Europeans who have raised an outcry against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Education.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 9th April observes that country schoolmasters in Bombay hold their schools in places which are close, dirty and too small to accommodate conveniently the number of students attending them, and the consequence is that the children's health is spoilt, particularly in the hot season. Government ought to prohibit this cruelty. The Supreme Government are about to pass a law on the subject of education, and it is highly desirable that the enactment should contain clauses prohibiting the attendance at school of children under seven years of age and requiring that the school boys up to the age of ten should get two months' vacation in the hot season.

Says that country schools in Bombay are held in close and dirty places.

A correspondent of the Bakul (16) of the 8th April states that the amount of the land revenue assessment of the village of Mancha, Tarf Khárepátan, táluka Devgad, of the Ratnágiri District, is nearly three thousand rupees and a large number of Bráhmans reside in it. The villagers requested the educational authorities to open a school in the village, but received a reply to the effect that no school would be opened unless the villagers built a school-house and made some other provisions. But of late the villagers have been very ill at ease on account of the plague of locusts. It is therefore to be hoped that Government will not insist upon the fulfilment of the conditions mentioned above and will open a school at once.

Recommends that a school should be at once opened in the village of Mancha, táluka Devgad, Ratnágiri District.

Railways.

In gratefully noticing the recommendation made by the Supreme Government to the several Indian railway companies in the matter of providing commodious carriages for female passengers, the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 10th April observes that on the G. I. P. and B. B. and C. I. Railways females are made to travel in carriages in which males are not allowed entrance, and so far the arrangements are satisfactory; but in the third class carriages the arrangement for the provision of urinaries is not so satisfactory as it is in the first and second class carriages, and sometimes the female passengers are put into carriages which have no water closets at all. The lamps in the third class carriages assigned for females sometimes do not burn sufficiently brightly. These defects ought to be removed at once. The Samáchár is also thankful to the Supreme Government for instructing the railway authorities not to overcrowd the carriages, particularly in the hot months of the year. [The Káside Mumbai (98) of the 11th April says that Government have laid the Native public under great obligations by this measure. The railway companies would be doing nothing more than their duty by carrying out this suggestion, as the major portion of their income is derived from poor Native passengers.]

Makes some suggestions in regard to the accommodation for female passengers by the railways.

The Rást Goftár (105) of the 8th April is glad that Government have recognized the necessity for opening a new station near Sopara on the B. B. and C. I. Railway. The Rást dwells on the advantages of a station to the commercial interests of that place, and expresses a hope that the railway authorities will give their mature consideration to the recommendation of Government.

Hopes that the railway authorities will comply with the recommendation of Government for the opening of a railway station near Sopara.

Municipalities.

The Vartamán Sár (104) of the 10th April disapproves of the resolution of the Bombay Municipality to open a pawnbroker's bank. Now-a-days when Government have reserved for themselves the trade of selling Government books, the business of printing, the working of savings banks, the manufacture of salt, &c., when the dealers in these different trades and concerns are complaining of the loss of their business, this resolution of the Bombay Municipality will injuriously affect the calling of money-lenders. When Government and municipalities engage in such business, how can poor traders maintain themselves against such competition? It is true that Márwári money-lenders harass their victims, but the remedy lies in a resort to the Indian Penal Code. It is not just that the municipality should monopolize this business and make others suffer for the sins of a few. If a pawnbroker's bank is to be at all opened, why not allow an independent joint-stock company to do it? The municipality will not be much benefited by this measure, for those who are given to lavish expenditure and to incurring debts will not renounce their habits. What security can these persons give when they have none to offer? If advances are made without securities, the bank will soon have to run into insolvency. The money-lenders and those who resort to them ought to be left to shift for themselves as best they can.

Disapproves of the resolution of the Bombay Municipality for the establishment of a pawnbroker's bank.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (97) of the 8th April pronounces as impracticable the recommendations made by Dr. Blanc to the Town Council of Bombay that a pawn bank should be opened and medical aid should be given to the poor at their residences, but observes that the assertion made by the doctor that the poor people hesitate to go into the hospitals deserves some consideration. It is complained that sufficient conveniences for all classes of the people are not to be found in the hospitals, and that any complaints made on the subject are not attended to by the authorities. The doctors in charge of charitable medical dispensaries do not attend at the appointed hour, and when they come there is generally a crowd of patients who are hurriedly examined and otherwise disposed of. Sometimes the doctors do not at all visit the dispensaries and then the patients return home without any medicine after waiting for a long time. The Corporation ought to direct their attention to the removal of these grievances.

Mentions some grievances in connection with hospitals and charitable medical dispensaries in Bombay.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 12th April regrets that the Municipal Commissioner of Bombay should not have fulfilled his promise given at a meeting of the Corporation to restore the old names of streets which have been inadvertently altered. The Jáme gives three instances in which the old names of streets which have some historical associations have been unnecessarily changed. Such alteration in the names of streets has become a source of anxiety to owners of landed properties in those streets, and it is to be hoped that the old well known names of streets will be restored at once.

Says that well known old names of streets in Bombay which have been altered should be restored at once.

The Karnát Vritt (119) of the 8th April complains of the injustice of a proclamation issued in the town of Belgaum prohibiting the use of tom-toms after 9 P.M. It is probable that this has been the outcome of the action of certain Europeans who may have been disturbed in their sleep by the noise of the tom-toms. As the Disapproves of an order prohibiting the use of tom-toms in the town of Belgaum.

present, however, is a marriage season among the Hindus, who consider these tom-toms as an indispensable accompaniment for the celebration of the ceremonies, it is no wonder that the order prohibiting their use should have wounded the feelings of Natives. Such an order is in direct violation of the assurance of Her Majesty the Queen-Empress given at the time of the famous Proclamation of 1858 that Government will not interfere with the manners, customs and religious observances of the natives of India. [A correspondent of the Mahrátta (2) of the 8th April makes a similar complaint.]

Advises the new municipal board of Ahmedabad to revise the financial budget of the municipality submitted in February last.

The Hitechchhu (73) of Ahmedabad of the 12th April says that the local municipality at present stands indebted to the tune of 1½ láklis of rupees, which burden the new municipal board will have to bear. Moreover, the financial budget of the municipality submitted to the commissioners in February last is not reliable. The loan raised by the municipality is to be paid off in ten years, Rs. 12,000 being the amount of the annual instalment and Rs. 6,000 the interest on the loan. Rs. 1,000 are also to be paid annually to the Ranchodbhái Hospital Fund as interest at the rate of 5 per cent. on the sum of Rs. 20,000 deposited with the municipality on account of the hospital endowment. Thus the aggregate amount to be paid annually is Rs. 19,000. But instead of this amount appearing in the budget, Rs. 9,395 are set down for this purpose. How will the remaining Rs. 9,605 be paid off? The surplus at the end of the year is estimated at Rs. 6,377. Even if this surplus is used in satisfaction of the debt, Rs. 3,228 will still remain to be paid. Moreover the actual income of the municipality will fall short of the estimated amount, inasmuch as the income from bazár fees and the house tax imposed on the suburbs of the city are unstable items. Under these circumstances the new municipal board should turn its attention to the examination of the budget statement. At the time of such revision the board should also take into consideration the item of Rs. 10,000 to be paid to the City Survey Department. This sum cannot be set down in the budget as an item of expenditure, for the committee has still to discuss the subject with Government.

Want of a good road at the landing place at Kaira.

The Kaira Vartamán (96) of the 11th April says that nearly half the town of Kaira fetches water from the river near the hermitage of Hetgar Báva. The women who go there to fetch water frequently fall down and break their water pots by stumbling against the scattered ruins of the castle. The municipality ought therefore to remove these obstacles and make a level road. As the steps of the landing place at Bári are covered with sand and as the municipal sweepers do not sweep them, those women who go there to fetch water meet with accidents. Arrangements should therefore be made by the municipality to have the steps kept clean. A road should also be constructed in the sandy place as is done every year from the banks of the river to the steps of the landing place.

Native States.

Comments on the resignation of Sir T. Mádhav Ráo.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 9th April is not much pleased with the resignation of Sir T. Mádhav Ráo. It was certainly the duty of the Supreme Government to have satisfied themselves that the young Gáekwád of Baroda was able to stand on his own legs before they sanctioned the removal of an able Diwán like Mádhav Ráo. A trial of at least two or three years was necessary before the Supreme Government could have been so satisfied, and it is difficult to see how they could have erred in such an important respect. From all accounts and on a general review of all the circumstances of the case, the very fact that the Mahárája was obliged at such an early stage of his administration to go all the way to Calcutta to seek the advice of the Viceroy in certain secret and political matters indicates that there is a screw loose somewhere and that the Mahárája needs assistance to set it right. The secret has not yet transpired, but it is conjectured by those who are conversant with the subject that it involves many a delicate question. Be the secret what it may, it was evidently the duty of the Supreme Government to have guarded against such a contingency. Though the British Government deserve all thanks for having committed the administration of the State to the care of the Gáekwád, still the thought that no provision has been made for guarding against future friction is very painful. The good of the Native States of India, though no doubt dependent on their rulers, is in a greater degree at the discretion of the Government of India. It is very desirable that the administrations of newly fledged princes should go on without obstruction, and that there should be no occasion for the paramount power to interfere in them. For this it is necessary that the princes should be gifted with wisdom, and the Supreme Government should be possessed of sincere regard for them, and whatever may be wanting on one side should be made good by the other. It will thus be seen that the main responsibility in an affair like the present rests on the English Government, who have declared their intention of doing good to this country. This responsibility they must accept and any retraction on their part will be as prejudicial to the interests of the Native State as to the prestige of the British Government. Any steps towards granting liberty to raw and inexperienced princes should be taken with great caution. The present policy of the British Government, and especially that of Lord Ripon, is very liberal and there is therefore no reason to fear for complications arising in the affair under discussion; but if this policy is changed and men like Lord Dalhousie assume the reins of Government, such trivial omissions will appear grave in their eyes and the nation will ever have to rue them.

Comments on the appointment of Kázi Shábuddin to the Diwánship of Baroda.

The Gujaráti (91) of the 8th April, referring to the recent changes in the personnel of the Baroda administration, observes that the people and the ministry of Baroda are expressly of opinion that neither the State nor the prince will derive any benefit from the appointment of the new Diwán and that therefore the major portion of the people are dissatisfied with the Kazi's selection. A correspondent of the Gujaráti reports that the Mahárája himself is not satisfied with the new arrangement, and that it is conjectured that the Supreme Government had recommended an outsider for the post of Diwán, but the Mahárája not approving of the nomination, but at the same time recognizing the necessity of having a Diwán in the absence of Sir T. Mádhav Ráo, made the present appointment. The Mitrá however cannot believe that the Supreme Government should have brought any pressure to bear upon the Mahárája in the matter of appointing a Diwán, but the circumstance that the appointment was made immediately on the return of the prince from tour looks very suspicious. Baroda requires a Diwán gifted with qualifications of a high order and a spirit of patriotism, and it is of still greater importance that he should have studied European and Asiatic politics. All departments of administration in Baroda betray a sort of confusion and a statesman that can initiate a new policy will be very useful. Hitherto every Native State has been governed by its own prince, and the relatives of the ruler have had a voice in the management of affairs. This system requires to be reformed and the voice of the people needs to be recognized. If the Mahárája hopes to carry on the administration on new lines of policy without the assistance of the Diwán the people will have no room to complain of the Kazi's appointment. But if he relies on the support of the Diwán it is in vain to expect that the Kázi will acquit himself satisfactorily in the discharge of his new duties. Under these circumstances it is impossible to say when the new régime will collapse.

Complaint regarding the Dhrángadra State.

The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 8th April says that it has received information from a correspondent that the Hindu subjects of the State of Dhrángadra have been much offended at the procession which was organized a few days back by certain Lotiyas (Boras). They therefore laid their complaint before their Chief, but instead of meeting with redress they were abused and kept under custody. The merchants therefore have made a strike and the Chief having locked all their shops has expelled them from his territory. Thus about 4,000 people have left the town and are proceeding towards Wadhwán. The Mitrá promises to report the full particulars of the case in its next issue.

Affairs at Gondal.

The Gujaráti (91) of the 8th April publishes a news letter regarding affairs in Káthiáwár in which it is stated that the people of Gondal have suffered much on account of the delay in redressing their grievances. One Devji Gamot was given a sound beating by a Mahomedan because he gave evidence against Bawa Miya. In the same manner one Sura Rabari received sword cuts from some unknown person for giving evidence against Ismael Miya.

Wadhwán affairs.

The Gujaráti (91) of the 8th April learns from a very reliable source that the Thákor of Wadhwán, who was to go to England, has abandoned his intention of doing so because he did not approve of the condition imposed by the Government of Bombay, viz., that he should place his territory under the administration of a British officer as has been done by the Thákor of Morvi. The Thákor deserves credit for having thus declined to yield to the wishes of the Bombay Government. If the Thákor of Morvi has really acceded to such a condition it is a matter for regret. The Gujaráti asks what authority the Government of Bombay have to impose such a condition. It does not see any valid reasons for the Bombay Government to thus interfere with the wishes of a Native Chief. If such pressure is brought to bear upon the Thákors of Káthiáwár, they can never rise above their present sphere. What is necessary is to allow them freedom in the administration of their affairs, and they will soon improve themselves.

Asks the Rádhanpur State to make proper sanitary and police arrangements at the annual fair to be held at Loti.

A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 13th April states that the water of the sacred tank at Loti in the Rádhanpur State becomes impure at the annual fair which is held in honour of the idol of Mahádev. In this tank some Bráhmans throw the cremation ashes and bones of their dead relatives, and the pilgrims bathe there in large numbers. This makes the water so foul as to stink horribly. The authorities of the State should prohibit bathing by pilgrims, and should send a party of police to preserve due order among the large number of the pilgrims who congregate on the occasion of the fair.

Berár Affairs.

Disapproves of the reply given by the Resident of Hyderabad to certain Natives of Berár who applied to him for permission to enrol themselves in a volunteer corps.

In noticing the reply given by Mr. Jones, the Acting Resident at Hyderabad, to certain Natives of Berár who applied for permission to form themselves into a volunteer corps, the Pramod Sindhu (50) of the 9th April observes that since the Resident knew personally most of the applicants it was sanguinely expected that he would make a recommendation to the Supreme Government to permit the applicants to be enrolled as volunteers. But it is to be regretted that the reply received is likely to lead the public to construe it into a want of confidence in respectable Natives on the part of Government. After noticing the opinions recorded by the Pioneer and Mr. Hume that there is no objection to permit Natives to enrol themselves as volunteers, and after remarking that the Natives of the Panjáb are not likely to be permitted to become volunteers, the Sindhu observes that Government do not seem to desire that Natives should enrol themselves as volunteers; and if this be the real case, why should they not make a clean breast of the affair instead of resorting to such indirect replies? If Government will not allow Natives to form themselves into a separate corps, they might admit Natives to the existing corps.

RAOJI B. PAVGI,

Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
21*st April* 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Amir of Afghánistan: Disapproval of the contemplated visit of the — to India 8

Appointments: A recommendation that Mr. P. M. Mehta may be appointed Acting Judge of the High Court during the absence of Sir Charles Sargent 11

British administration in India: Complaint regarding the costly nature of the — 3

"British should leave India": Comments in connection with the cry that the — 4

Budget: Comparison of the English with the Indian— 8

Calcutta International Exhibition: Complaint regarding the non-representation of Poona in the Bombay Committee for the — 6

Complaints: Comments on the conduct of the district officers in Sátára in having allowed interference with the religious prejudices of certain sections of the community 9

Criminal punishments: Suggestion for a reform in the mode of— ... 11

Examinations: Suggestion of certain reforms in the District Pleaders' and Subordinate Judges' — 10

Forests: Complaint regarding the stringency of the rules regarding —... 6

Import duty on Indian silverware: Expression of regret at the refusal of England to repeal the English— 5

Irish affairs: A suggestion that seditious Irishmen taking refuge in the United States should be severely dealt with 5

Judicial matters:

- Censure on the Honourable Mr. Norris of the Calcutta High Court for imprisoning a juror who did not understand English ... 10
- Pointing out the inadvisability of abolishing the Senior Assistant Judge's Court at Kaládgi and of dividing the work between the Sholápur and Dhárwár District Courts 10

Land revenue assessment: Recommendation for a reduction in the — and in the duties levied on food-grains 5

Legislative Councils of India: Suggestion for certain reforms in the constitution of the — 5

License Tax at Broach: Complaint regarding the levy of the — ... 6

Loyalty of the people of India: The English have been maintaining their dominion in India on the strength of the — 3

Military matters: Suggestion of a reform in the practice of keeping soldiers supplied with bullets, &c. 9

Postal matters:

- Comments in connection with the establishment of post office savings banks in the Bombay Presidency 8
- Recommendation that the present delivery peons at Cambay may be removed and others brought in their place 9

Preaching in public streets: A suggestion that all religious preachers should be prohibited from — 11

Roads: Complaint regarding the bad condition of the road from Kapadvanj to Nadiád 11

University clock: Expression of a wish that the — in Bombay should keep local time, and that Government should altogether do away with the observance of Madras time 11

Viceroyalty of India: Expression of joy at the statement that Lord Ripon does not intend to resign the — 4

PART II.—Local Self-government—

City Municipality of Surat: Recommendation for the appointment of Mr. Whitworth as President of the — 12

Local self-government scheme: Disapproval of the opposition raised by Lord Lytton to the — 12

Municipal elections at Belgaum: Disapproval of the recent — ... 12

Municipalities of Gujarát: Complaint regarding the delay in the notification of elections held under the scheme of local self-government in the several— 12

Municipal board at Ahmedabad: Illegality of the constitution of the new— 13

Page.

PART III.—Legislation—

Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill:
Exhortation to the people of Bombay to submit to Parliament a petition in favour of the— 13
Natives of India should follow in the footsteps of those Europeans who have raised an outcry against the— 14

PART IV.—Education—

Schools:
Country — in Bombay are held in close and dirty places... ... 14
Recommendation for the opening of a school in the village of Mancha, Táluka Devgad, Ratnágiri District 14

PART V.—Railways—

Accommodation for female passengers: Suggestions in regard to the—... 14
Railway station near Sopára: A hope that the Railway authorities will comply with the recommendation of Government for the opening of a— 15

PART VI.—Municipalities—

Bombay Municipality: Disapproval of the resolution of the — for the establishment of a pawnbroker's bank 15
Hospitals and charitable medical dispensaries in Bombay: Some grievances in connection with — 15
Municipal Board of Ahmedabad: Advice to the new — to revise the financial budget of the municipality submitted in February last ... 16
Roads: Complaint regarding the want of a good road at the landing place at Kaira... 16
Streets in Bombay: Prayer for the restoration of well known old names of — which have been recently altered 15
Tom-toms in the town of Belgaum: Disapproval of an order prohibiting the use of— 15

PART VII.—Native States—

Baroda:
Comments on the resignation of Sir T. Mádhav Ráo 16
Comments on the appointment of Kázi Shábuddin to the Diwánship. 17
Dhrángadra: Complaint regarding— 17
Gondal: Complaint regarding certain malpractices of Mahomedans at—... 18
Rádhanpur State: Request to the — to make proper sanitary and police arrangements at the annual fair to be held at Loti 18
Wadhwán: Comments on the abandonment of the intention of going to England by the Thákor of — 18

PART VIII.—Berár Affairs—

Volunteer corps: Disapproval of the reply given by the Resident of Hyderabad to certain natives of Berár who had applied to him for permission to form themselves into a— 18

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

RECEIVED 15 MAY 83 VIA BRINDI

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 21st April 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayá	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do.	600
12	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do.	{280[1] {160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyá Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	100
14	„ Arunodayá	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
20	„ Daivadnyá Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
21	„ Daivadnyá Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
22	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly	425
23	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
24	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
25	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
26	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
27	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
28	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	400
29	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
30	„ Jagan Mitrá	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
31	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*32	„ Karnátak Mitrá[4]	Belgaum	Do.	200
33	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	3,500
34	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
35	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	300
36	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
37	„ Maháráshtrá Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
38	„ Maháráshtrá Mitrá	Sátára	Do.	250
39	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
40	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
41	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
42	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly	700
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Do.	Do.	200
44	„ Nyáyá Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
47	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	250
48	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily	350
*49	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
50	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti) .	Do.	200
*51	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
52	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
53	„ Satyá Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	243
54	„ Satyá Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
55	„ Satyá Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
56	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	275
*57	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Weekly	200
*58	„ Shetakari	Poona	Monthly	400
59	„ Shiváji[3]	Do.	Weekly	200
60	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*61	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
62	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
63	„ Suryodayá	Thána	Do.	240

[1] Maráthi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles. [4] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
64	The Svadesh Mitra	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
65	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly	250
66	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
67	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
68	„ Vicháráhil	Málvan	Do.	300
*69	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
70	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*71	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
72	„ Gujarát Mitra	Surat	Do.	400
73	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
74	„ Lok Mitra	Bombay	Do.	725
75	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
76	„ Surya Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
77	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
78	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
79	„ A'rya Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
80	„ A'rya Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
81	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
82	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	950
83	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
84	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
85	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
86	„ Dátardun ... ... — ...	Bombay	Weekly	525
87	„ Deshi Mitra	Surat	Do.	1,000
*88	„ Dnyán Prasárak	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
89	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
90	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
91	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*92	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
93	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*94	„ Hitopadeshak Ratna	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
95	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
96	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*97	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
98	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	700
99	„ Kusum Guchchhá	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
100	„ Nágar Udayá	Do.	Do.	300
101	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
102	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
103	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
104	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
105	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
106	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
107	„ Satya Mitra	Bombay	Do.	400
*108	„ Saur shtra Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
109	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*110	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
111	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
112	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár ...	Umreth	Fortnightly ...	62
*113	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
114	„ Vartamán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
115	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
116	„ Vidya Mitra	Bombay	Do.	300
117	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
118	The Chandrodaya	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*119	„ Karnáta Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
	URDU.
*120	The Altáf	Bombay	Weekly	200
*121	„ Armagán	Do.	Do.	200
*122	„ Dabdabe Islám[5]	Do.	Do.	200
*123	„ Khádam-é-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
124	„ Khayir Kháh-e-Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly ...	300
125	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
*126	„ Muzhire Shawkatul Islám	Do.	Do.	200
	PERSIAN.
127	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

3 Frequently admits English articles.

5 This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Points out the necessity for a public enquiry into the overgrown expenditure of Indian administration.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 15th April says:—A recent telegram announces that Mr. Stanhope is about to move Parliament to enquire into the annually increasing public expenditure in the United Kingdom. The national expenses of the United Kingdom have increased 30 per cent. during the last 15 years. A portion of them no doubt must be taken as having been incurred for several war expeditions that had to be despatched in various quarters of the globe. Despite this fact it is considered that expenditure is growing apace and that a commission of enquiry is needed to have this tendency checked. If then such a necessity is felt for a scrutiny of expenditure in England, may we ask whether there is not a greater necessity for a similar scrutiny here? We are now told in unmistakable terms that our revenue is threatened with a material falling off in opium receipts. Salt may still yield for some time to come a smaller revenue than it did prior to the reduction of the duty last year. If so, is it not statesmanlike to meet such a considerable falling off in the absence of any other source of 'elastic' revenue by reduced expenditure? The Government of India, in their remonstrance against the arbitrary manner in which the Home Government proposed in July last to burden India with the cost of the Indian contingent to Egypt, openly announce that civil and military expenditure is growing apace, that provincial expenses cannot be controlled, that expenses necessary for the moral and material development of the country have to be foregone, and that in times of emergency the imperial treasury has to bear a great strain. Why do they not then resolutely set themselves to the task of remedying these grave evils that retard the progress of the country instead of talking of surpluses and elasticity? It is superfluous to add that more than in England there is a sad necessity for a public enquiry into our overgrown expenditure. England is passing rich and can afford to bear the strain. Not so India, as responsible authorities have publicly proclaimed. Here the least untoward thing disturbs the balance sheet and involves the Government in dire difficulties. And knowing this they sit complacent as if enjoying the situation!

Criticises the statement made by the Finance Minister that the Indian finance is elastic.

The Lok Mitrá (74) of the 15th April observes:—The fact is being slowly recognized that so long as the Government of India rely on opium and salt revenues, the financial condition of India cannot be said to rest on a sound basis. The precariousness of the receipts from the former has now been acknowledged in all quarters, and it is only a question of time when opium may entirely disappear as an important item of revenue from the annual financial statement of the country. When so much is now said of the so-called 'elasticity' of Indian revenue, it is worth enquiring whether any real elasticity can be predicated of it so long as opium receipts fluctuate from year to year. Nay, it may be further asked whether it is financially safe to at all enter it as an item of receipt in the annual budget. That the temptation to do so is great cannot be denied, for in the absence of any other kind of revenue which might replace it, it is not possible for the most talented Finance Minister to ignore it. Has the Indian Government any source of indirect taxation to fall back upon to recoup the loss of six or seven millions sterling? This is the problem which ought to engage the attention of the authorities, and as long as they are unable to devise any new system of indirect taxation that will not be felt by the masses, so long must they desist from talking of the 'elasticity' of the Indian revenues. But this is just the word of which Major Baring has for the first time made use in his recently published statement. Turning to the economic facts revealed by Major Baring in his speech the other day on the Bengal Rent Bill, it is found that he speaks in plaintive terms of the condition of the peasantry. Nay, so far as he has quoted the figures of agricultural produce and assessment for the various provinces, it may be inferred that it is not possible to hit upon any tax in a country so poor as India that can balance expenditure when opium receipts fall to half the amount that they now yield. Again in the despatch of the Government of India on the expenses of the Indian contingent, it has been deliberately urged that "Indian finance is exposed to some special vicissitudes which should always be borne in mind," and in the next paragraph opium is described as a "fluctuating source of revenue" and as a "danger" that may at any moment disturb the balance sheet of the empire. The Government is at its wits' end to substitute any other equally large source of receipt. The people are admittedly poor and "their consequent inability to bear taxation" is recognized. The Government is obliged to acknowledge in the same despatch that "low taxation, a careful economy in the resources of the country, and prudent reforms in its fiscal system are necessary." Can any prudent financier under such circumstances boldly declare that the revenues of India are "elastic"? If they are really so, how is it that the Government does not expunge opium revenue from the credit side of its accounts? Why do they not utilise it for purposes of reducing the public debt as the Economist very pertinently suggests? The fact is that they cannot do it. Then why talk of "elasticity"? The revenue of a country is said to be elastic when its government can wisely dispense with a precarious item however large, and safely rely on increased receipts from some other sources which are considered as steady and least threatened with "danger." Is there any other source to replace the loss of opium revenue? None whatever. On the contrary it is plain that if any attempt is made to omit it from the heading of receipts a deficit would stare the cleverest Finance Minister in the face. He must either find out the means to raise a revenue of seven millions, or say even six or five, or reduce expenditure to that extent. But while they all talk of overgrown military and civil expenditure none dare rigidly apply the shears to them. But they speak of the "salt" revenue as elastic,—so elastic that the Finance Minister stated both this year and the last that he would rely upon it in times of emergency like famine or war! Now let us examine whether in the first place it is statesmanlike to increase the duty in times of famine. Salt is a necessary of life with the masses. Who are the masses? Of course the impoverished and indebted agriculturists. It is they who in times of famine suffer most. It is among them that dire distress prevails. It is they who die by thousands for want of food. Is it wise, is it humane, is it Christianlike that the vital necessary of life should be made dearer for this class of people when they are actually starving, and when salt goes a great way to sustain their skeleton frame and even to prevent them from dying of epidemic diseases? It is now recognized by free traders that the necessaries of life should be brought as cheaply as possible to the door of each poor man. Is there a doubt that the salt duty therefore needs to be further reduced? Nay, the Government of India have acknowledged in the despatch above referred to the expediency of further reduction. Now, how are the two statements to be reconciled? In one breath it is said that it ought to be raised in times of emergency, while in another it is asserted that oppressive as it is even now it must be reduced! One would suppose that the sooner the salt duty is entirely abolished the better. In fact, it should have no place in the annual budget in the same way as opium revenue. When therefore twelve or thirteen millions of receipts disappear from the receipt side of the account and are counterbalanced by a corresponding reduction on the expenditure side, then alone it can be acknowledged that Indian finance is maintained on a healthy footing with all prospects of "elasticity."

Suggests measures for the removal of the loss from exchange for the Home remittances.

In noticing the heavy loss which befalls India on account of unfavourable rates of exchange for Home remittances, the Shiváji (59) of the 13th April recommends a reduction in the amount of the remittances by employing Native agency more extensively in the administration of India and by making all costs of the Indian establishments in England payable in the Indian coin. The Shiváji further suggests that the Indian rupee should be made current in England and the English shilling should be made a legal tender in India. If these suggestions were adopted the heavy loss from exchange would altogether disappear.

Comments in connection with the address delivered by Mr. Bright on his installation as Lord Rector of the University of Glasgow.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 15th April, in referring to the address delivered by Mr. Bright to the students of the University of Glasgow on his installation as Lord Rector, remarks :—The Indian Government have always followed exactly in the footsteps of the English Government at home. From time to time they have imprudently engaged themselves in wars merely for territorial aggrandizement or for avoiding fancied dangers to their empire. The acquisitions thus made are represented as wonderfully glorious, while the loss of millions of souls and of money is altogether forgotten, and the poverty to which the whole nation is reduced is a matter of no concern to the ruling race. If statistics of the civil and military expenditure of the Indian Government are compiled in the same way as those of England, the proportion between the civil and military expenses in this country will not fall short of that of England. But we have no industries to make up our losses, the greater proportion of us are still labouring in shameful ignorance, and besides we have to pay for the costly government of a civilized people. The consequence is that our poverty has been far more severe and unbearable than that of the lower classes of people in the United Kingdom. This poverty pervades nearly all the classes of the people, but especially the lower classes. If in Scotland one-third of the people dwell in homes of one room, in India the proportion will be found far higher, while probably one-tenth of the population will be found altogether homeless. It is to be hoped that by the efforts of men like Mr. Bright the English nation will some day or other be roused from its indifference, lethargy and conservatism, and free India from most of her political disabilities.

Animadverts on the conduct of the detractors of Lord Ripon.

In an article headed "Lord Ripon and his detractors," the Native Opinion (10) of the 15th April says:—An attempt is being sedulously made by some irresponsible publicists in England and individual members of Parliament to represent or rather misrepresent to the British public that the present Government of India is now sitting on a smouldering volcano, and that nobody knows when that volcano may burst forth into volumes of fire. According to the traditions of British party politics, the party out of power, by an exercise of their wholesome vigilance, check Government from running on a fatal course, and thus direct their attention to measures that conduce to the common weal and good government of the empire. In this view opposition and criticism may be looked upon as a great boon; but when these assume the nature of hostility and try to pick up holes where there may be none, the party functions are degraded into a spirit of bitter animosity. Such is the character of the opposition to the present administration; we undertake to say nothing with regard to Ireland, because we are not good judges of the present position of that country; but so far as India and its present administration are concerned, we may say with the weight of an authority that the conduct of our affairs is in the safest hands. But an outcry is now raised in England by interested parties that unless the present Indian administration is changed and Lord Ripon is recalled the scenes of 1857-58 may be re-enacted and the empire be lost. The character of such opposition—rather hostility—bears its own condemnation on the very face, and cannot much interest the fair minded; but it may at the same time be interesting to know the real or imaginary causes which have raised the storm against the present Viceroy. The Viceregal measures which seem to have offended most the European community both in India and in England are the two Bills on our legislative anvil—the Jurisdiction and the Local Self-government Bills. And what do these Bills accord to the natives of the country that they should come to be looked upon as destructive of the first principles of British rule in India? One empowers the Native population to look after the cleanliness of their streets, roads and gutters—in short the general conservancy of their households,—the other accords Native Civilian Magistrates of high standing power to try British offenders, which power Native Magistrates do enjoy even now in the presidency towns. We should like to be enlightened as to how these harmless measures can be expected to affect the first principles of British rule in this country,—we mean the British supremacy over us. By supremacy we believe is not meant a deprivation of the ordinary rights of citizenship, for that would simply mean a perversion of the term supremacy into tyranny, and the British people, whether here or elsewhere, do not mean to pander to the unrighteous zeal of those who seem so anxious to play the role of some of the white Czars of the Russians. Even they are gradually giving way to the force of the all-pervading reforms and progress, and we feel surprised to find one of the foremost nations of Europe, professing to have undertaken the mission of raising us in the scale of nations, denying to us the very preliminary privilege of citizenship. But are the proposed measures in any sense so radical as to lay the axe at the very foundations of the British empire in India, or is the party in power giving to the people of India privileges the like of which the party out of office has never given? If we are to believe our own experience, the Conservative party themselves, who are now crying down Lord Ripon, gave up an Englishman's most cherished rights, viz., entrance into the heaven-born service, to the natives of this country. We do not say that they were wrong in opening the service to us: what we find fault with is the trait in their character—that while they would connive at and approve of their doings, they would unmistakeably point to a mole in the eyes of others where there is none. And what did Lord Lytton himself, who has lately condescended to draw such a gloomy picture of the present administration, do with regard to the introduction of Natives into the same service under the new statutory rules? We do not mean to say that either Lord Lytton or his other Conservative compeers did anything unnatural in throwing open both the covenanted and uncovenanted services. What we find fault with is their temerity in misrepresenting matters the like of which they themselves have done when in power. [The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 16th April and several other Maráthi and Gujaráti papers also make unfavourable comments on Lord Lytton's remarks against the administration of the present Viceroy.]

A wish for the continuance of Lord Ripon as Viceroy of India.

The Káside Mumbai (98) of the 18th April, in referring to the rumoured resignation of Lord Ripon as Viceroy of India, remarks that the very idea of His Lordship's resignation is very displeasing. The resignation of a Viceroy who persistently follows the policy of making the millions of India happy and who has given ample proofs of sincerity of purpose cannot but create sorrow throughout the country. When the Native public is adopting memorials for an extension of his term of office for another five years, what an amount of grief will it feel instead if the original term of His Lordship's office is curtailed? [The Surya Prakásh (76) of the 14th and the Bombay Punch (81) of the 21st April express sorrow at the prospect of losing Lord Ripon, and consider the conduct of his mean detractors shameful.]

Remarks in connection with the publication of the official correspondence on the expenses of the Indian contingent despatched for service in Egypt.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 15th April says:—The correspondence between the Secretary of State for India and the Government of India regarding the expenses of the Indian contingent despatched for service in Egypt leaves no doubt that a grave injustice has been done to this country. All the arguments that the Indian Government have urged in support of their contention that it would be unjust to saddle India with a portion of the cost stand unrefuted. Lord Ripon and his able colleagues could not have addressed themselves to the subject in a more vigorous and trenchant manner. Such being the truth, it is a matter of deep regret that the Liberal administration now in power should have forgotten the principles they inculcated when in opposition. In the first despatch of August it was urged that the telegram of 24th July conveying the somewhat autocratic order that it was proposed that the "Indian revenues shall bear all expenses of the Indian contingent for service in Egypt" was a complete "surprise." And why? For the very good reason that "British policy in Egypt has been up to the present time wholly under the direction of Her Majesty's Government in England. The Government of India have never been consulted as to the principles by which, having regard to Indian interests, that policy should be guided." What may we infer from these sentences? Simply this, that whenever it suits the British Ministry, it can override all constitutional restraints and carry out the object it may have in view by sheer force. They talk of doing justice to India and acting strictly on the principles of the East India Bill of 1858. But it is now notorious that that sort of talk is mere political cant. Instances will readily occur to the mind of the reader where it will be found that the opposite policy has been adopted with equal facility and for achieving a similar purpose, namely, to save the pockets of John Bull at the expense of the famishing millions of India. Let us quote as an illustration the late Afghan war. Is it necessary to recall that famous statement of the Finance Minister of the day, who flourished a phantom surplus to serve a political purpose, and at the same time coolly declared that Indian finance was fully able to pay the expenses of that unhallowed war? The difference in the tactics was only this, that the Tory Government were able to enter on the war with a light heart inasmuch as the responsibility thereof was acknowledged by the then Government of India. The Liberals have done another injustice, but with this difference, that they did not at all consult the Government of India. Such is the elastic conscience of men in power who hold the destinies of India in their hands. There is no difference in kind in the moral wrong which a Conservative or Liberal Government may inflict on India and her people. At the best there is only a difference of degree. The Liberal, having a shred of conscience left to him, tries to soften the mortification of the Indians by sops in the shape of what he is pleased to call a "contribution," as if India was justly entitled to bear such war expenses and that the "contribution" was purely an act of generosity! What an array of unanswerable arguments have the Government of India put forward in the objections they have taken to the course so autocratically proposed in that telegram of the 24th July! Such arguments could only emanate from an intimate acquaintance with the true aspect of Egyptian affairs as they stood last year. We discern Major Baring's hand in the framing of the despatch. And what reply has the Secretary of State given to the arguments? Absolutely none. After the receipt of a subsequent despatch that enters more closely into the present impoverished condition of India, and after the discussion elicited here and in England as to the impropriety of burdening India with the expenses of the service of her troops in Egypt—a discussion which alone extracted the contribution of £500,000—a despatch follows which states in the concluding paragraph that all attempts at giving the subject "a controversial character" have been avoided. A more impotent and illogical despatch could not have been framed, and a foregone conclusion, viz., to saddle India with costs anyhow, could not have been supported by worse reasoning. After admitting the arguments of the Indian Government regarding the remote and indirect interest of India in the Egyptian imbroglio, the Secretary of State observes that no other course could have been possible in such circumstances, and the presence of the Secretary of State for India in the Cabinet afforded the constitutional guarantee provided by Parliament for the due representation of Indian interests. There is an obvious fallacy underlying this very plausible argument. In the first place, it must be remembered that though it was well known that events would lead to war, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India never sounded the Indian Government on the subject. It is well understood that on all important subjects on the anvil the opinion of the Government of this country is formally or demi-officially asked either by a despatch or telegram. But in the present instance all such formality was purposely dispensed with. And why? Because Lord Hartington knew too well from private sources what opinion Lord Ripon and his able colleagues would give. And he thus coolly sat upon the first safety-valve of "constitutional" procedure. But admitting for a moment that he was within his right in not consulting the Indian Government as he was the minister responsible to Parliament, we may ask whether his presence in the Cabinet did actually afford that "constitutional guarantee" which is referred to in the 11th paragraph of his reply? Did he point out to the Cabinet that the precedents were against the proposal which it contemplated making and which was formulated in the telegram of 24th July? Is not the East India Bill distinct on this point? By what process of reasoning did Lord Hartington convince himself and the Cabinet that India was liable to share in the cost of the expedition? What inference are we to draw from the bold but perfectly truthful assertion of the Government of India that they "do not understand on what principle of political equity India can be called upon to defray any part of the cost of armed intervention in Egypt unless the Australian and other colonies are called upon to pay their proportionate share"? The inference is that might still overrides right. The colonies are so powerful that they would have treated with contempt any hint conveyed to them to bear their share in the war expense. But India is weak, and notwithstanding the fact that her present rulers have nobly performed their part of the duty, the Mabárája at Westminster has culpably abused his position. Had Lord Hartington made as determined a stand as Lord Ripon did, the Indian treasury would have been richer to-day by £641,000.

Approves of the desire of the Duke of Connaught to accept an appointment in India.

The Bombay Punch (81) of the 21st April approves of the desire of the Duke of Connaught to accept an appointment in India. Let him have the post of the Viceroy or a Commander-in-Chief, but at any rate let him come out to India and see for himself the condition of the people of this country. Let him see the awe, pomp, and exclusiveness of Europeans in India, and then adopt some efficacious means for the amelioration of the depressed condition of the natives of the soil. He may reside in any part of India, but what is wanted is that he should judge for himself of the condition of this country.

Comments on the Amir's intended visit to India.

Referring to the intended visit to India of the Amir of Kabul, the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 16th April observes that though it is desirable and natural that such friends as the Amir and the British authorities should mutually exchange such visits, still a move of this nature on the part of Afghanistan is unprecedented. The British Government had friendly relations even with the predecessor of Abdul Rahman, but there had been no such interview as is now contemplated. The real object of the Amir's visit has not transpired; but it does not require much stretch of imagination or intellect to conjecture that the object of the visit is not simply that of a friendly interview, but that there are some political motives at the bottom. That the Russians have been making a gradual advance in Central Asia, that they have been receiving friendly treatment at the hands of the Persians, that the Kabul Darbár has been divided into two factions, and that the Russians have an eye on India—all or some of these circumstances are believed to have some connection with this political step. There is much truth in the remarks of a certain journalist that if there are political motives underlying this ostensibly friendly visit, the matters to be discussed had better be settled by written correspondence than by a personal interview, and these remarks deserve the careful attention of both the parties. Abdul Rahman must have been thinking of taking steps against the advance of the Russians and he has no other support than that of the British Government, and it goes without saying that the latter will at once fall in with his views. But it is necessary that both the parties should take care not to bring about a recurrence of the events of Shah Suja's time. Abdul Rahman is not the sole ruler of Afghanistan. There are many other Chiefs. The British Government ought first to make sure that the plan devised by Abdul Rahman meets with countenance from them. In fine, this is a very delicate matter and requires to be handled with ability, tact and judgment and with due regard to the sad experiences of the past. [The Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 13th April disapproves of the contemplated visit of the Amir to India, and says that Government should give no countenance to the Amirs of Afghanistan because they have proved faithless.]

Thanks Lord Ripon for instructing the subordinate Governments to open permanent art-museums in important cities and towns.

The Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 16th April alludes to the recommendation made by Mr. Caird, the President of the late Famine Commission, that industrial and art exhibitions should be opened from time to time, as one of the means for the advancement of Native arts and industries and for the mitigation of the miseries arising from famines, and tries to show how such exhibitions tend to bring about the desired results. The Samáchár expresses the gratitude of the people of India to Lord Ripon for having instructed the subordinate Governments to purchase as far as possible indigenous articles for the use of the State, and for issuing orders to the different local Governments to establish in each important city or town within their respective jurisdiction art museums and to continue to make new additions to the collections made in them. Such museums as these, observes the Samáchár, are sure to encourage and improve Native arts and industries.

Fears that the policy initiated by the Government of India of sending Native engineers to England at the expense of the State for studying practical and technical engineering will injure the prospects of the alumni of the Indian Civil Engineering Colleges.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 15th April says:—Under a new resolution of the Government of India two Native assistant engineers of the Provincial Public Works, Panjáb, have undertaken to go to England to study practical engineering there under eminent engineers, the Government undertaking to bear all charges for their passage. We commend the zeal of the two Native gentlemen who have ventured to cross the black waters at the cost of what may be dear to them. State patronage in this way may encourage others also to visit the land of our rulers on the above errand. But we suspect the deputation of these people to England gives a sly thrust to the prospects of the alumni of our own Civil Engineering Colleges. Those who may undertake the journey may be promoted to the higher ranks, but in the case of those who will not do so their disinclination to go will prove an obstacle in their way to promotion. Nor can we say that Government can ever continue to pay the passage of everyone going to England for the purpose. This assistance must stop somewhere, and we only hope that the authorities do not make a visit to England as the only qualification for promotion in the higher grades of the engineering service.

Approves of the intention of the Bengal Government to open veterinary schools.

The Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 18th April heartily approves of the intention of the Government of Bengal to establish veterinary schools in that presidency. The Samáchár dwells on the subject of the importance of agriculture to the masses in India, the necessity of cattle for carrying on husbandry, the absence of a sound knowledge of the veterinary art among the agriculturists, and the large mortality of cattle, and observes that as Natives have long been praying Government to supply this great desideratum it is gratifying that the attention of the Bengal Government has been directed to it. The Bombay Government should not delay to provide veterinary schools for this presidency, if the subject has not already been taken up by the Supreme Government.

Recommends the employment of Indian labour in factories and on railways.

The Arunodayá (14) of the 15th April learns that a school has been established in the Madras Presidency for the purpose of training candidates in the art of engine-driving. Such a measure is quite in accordance with the principle that India is for the Indians, and is also in harmony with the policy inaugurated by Lord Ripon. The supposition that factories and railways worked by steam power are calculated to benefit a country is proved to be correct from an English standpoint but not from that of India. England finds a favourable market for all the wares that are turned out by the combined labour of her people, and hence her factories are a source of profit to her. But the same is not the case with India. The Indian people have not a sufficiently large field even for their manual labour, and hence a large number of people already find no employment; and the introduction of railways and such other improvements having a tendency to supersede bodily labour by new modes of turning out work has served to augment the number of unemployed masses of the population. Moreover the importation of foreign skilled labour for these new improvements has contributed in some measure to make these reforms prejudicial, instead of beneficial, to the interests of the country. In these circumstances the establishment of the school above alluded to ought to be hailed with joy as a step in the right direction. The Arunodayá does not maintain that such improved machinery will never prove advantageous to India. It on the contrary asserts that if the maxim of "India for the Indians" be followed in its entirety and its full significance recognized, such reforms cannot but be fruitful of much good. The several devices adopted in England for securing a favourable market for her merchandise ought to be attempted for the sake of India. But instead of this what we see is that the starting of a few mills in India aroused the jealousy of England, and the authorities did not shrink from taking umbrage at an unthought-of precept of political economy for abolishing the import duty in India on English piecegoods. Nay, Indian mills have been subjected to restrictions the like of which are not witnessed in England. In short, no effort has been left untried that was calculated to put down the mill industry of India and to make Indian wares dearer than those of England. Though under the present circumstances it cannot be hoped that the same remedies as are used in the interests of English trade will be adopted for the sake of India, still the exclusive employment of Indian labour cannot fail to go a considerable way in securing benefit to this country and to redound greatly to the credit of England. The loss occasioned by the supersession of country cart traffic by railways can be made up by the exclusive employment by the several railway companies of Native labour. Such a step will also serve to liberate Government from the guarantee of certain rates of interest to the railway companies, and a diminution in the expenditure of the companies will lead to a reduction in the rates of charges, i. e., to an alleviation of the burden of a kind of tax on the people.

Says that the land revenue assessment should be reduced in order to encourage the extension of the agricultural industry.

The Lok Mitrá (74) of the 15th April observes that the wisdom of Lord Ripon's policy in reducing the salt duty has been amply vindicated. The consumption of that useful commodity has increased, and with it the revenue derivable from that source. A fair trial of a similar character may well be given to the land revenue assessment. A reasonable reduction of the assessment will bring a larger area of land under cultivation, which besides increasing the produce will give employment to a large class of the people. In all parts of India there are vast tracts of land lying idle simply because the heavy Government exactions do not allow of their being cultivated with profit. If the experiment should work as satisfactorily as there is every reason to suppose it will with judicious management, a great step will have been taken towards the solution of a difficult and complicated problem, viz., the amelioration of the condition of the people.

Suggests a reduction in the rates of assessment.

The Panchánan (45) of the 15th April says:—Agriculture was once considered the best occupation in India, and the truth of this view was borne out during the first years of the English rule. The introduction of the system of revenue survey, however, rendered that profession positively ruinous. If the officers entrusted with the working of this system were to pay more consideration to the rates assessed by them, they would be satisfied that injustice has been committed on the poor ryots. The injustice becomes graver when such officers out of a false feeling of delicacy fail to represent the matters in their true light or altogether neglect the duty of revising their work with care. Under any circumstances the lot of the poor people of the Ratnágiri District is really pitiable. The cry is general that arid pieces of land, which usually would not pay more than one rupee of assessment, have been assessed at the rates obtaining in the case of the best garden lands. The people have no interest in raising such a cry unless it has the foundation of truth. There has never been any complaint regarding the heaviness of assessment on the best soil. On the contrary the people are of opinion that the rates on such land are lower than they should be. It therefore behoves the officers of Government to sift the matter carefully and to effect a proper adjustment between the different rates assessed on the soil with a view to stop this cry. Otherwise people may abandon their holdings, or at least may be overtaken with a powerful feeling of disaffection.

Recommends the institution of an enquiry into the damage caused by locusts.

The Panchánan (45) of the 15th April, while referring to the havoc committed by locusts in the Ratnágiri District, observes that the operation of the Indian Arms Act has rendered people helpless. If at such a juncture the people had pistols, rifles, guns and ammunition, they would have been in a position to protect at least their particular fields from the depredation of locusts. As, however, Government have undertaken to protect the interests of their subjects, it is high time that they should recognize the necessity of taking steps for the alleviation of the distress caused by this plague. A careful enquiry should be instituted into the extent of damage caused by locusts through the agency of Mámlatdárs, the truth of whose reports should be verified by the Collectors by personal inspection, and the amount of remissions to be granted should be settled.

Complains of the hardship caused by the suppression of salt-works in Ratnágiri.

The Jagan Mitrá (30) of the 16th April states the inconveniences caused by the suppression of the manufacture of salt in Ratnágiri, and prays that the Government of Lord Ripon will take the matter into their favourable consideration. The Mitrá is emboldened to make this appeal on account of the decision passed by the Government of India in the matter of a similar appeal from the inhabitants of Shiravade, and expresses a hope that Lord Ripon will not fail to recognize the hardship caused to the poor people of Ratnágiri by being deprived of their only article of trade with the country above the ghâts.

Complains of the unjust treatment received by Khots in the Ratnágiri District.

A correspondent of the Satyá Shodhak (55) of the 15th April, writing from Dápoli, complains of the unjust treatment received by Khoti landholders at the hands of Government officers. Though the Khots have been legally authorized to receive rents from their tenants according to old custom, still they do not receive assistance from Government in the realization of the revenue due to them. Hitherto it has been the practice with Mámlatdárs and Mahálkaris to comply with requisitions for such assistance, but lately they have been ordered not to entertain such applications. What is however more strange is that the portion of a tenant's property that is indispensable for his maintenance is not liable to sale for default in the payment of the Khot's dues, while there is no objection to the sale of similar property in the case of Government villages. The Khoti Act contains a provision for the eviction of tenants in cases of default in payment of Khot's dues, but this power of eviction is not delegated to the Khots in the orders granting them assistance in the recovery of their dues. Government also appropriate the proceeds of the sale of trees that are felled by private individuals in a Khoti village. It is unjust that while the Khot has to pay the jamábandi for the whole of his village, Government should receive the proceeds from the sale of trees.

Complains of the injustice of an order prohibiting the use of tomtoms in Ratnágiri.

The Satyá Shodhak (55) of the 18th April complains of the vexation caused to the people of Ratnágiri by an order prohibiting the use of tomtoms after 9 P.M. Such an order is unjust and its injustice is felt more keenly at the present season, which is one of marriage festivities and religious festivals. The Shodhak mentions the steps taken by the people in the matter of securing a modification of the order complained of, and says that the order was the outcome of the action of certain European ladies and gentlemen whose auricular repose was disturbed by the noise of instruments that are listened to by the whole body of the population with calmness and patience. It would have looked more graceful in the European ladies to have put up with such a nuisance at least for the sake of humouring Natives. It is not beneficial to the interests of Government that their officers should thus interfere with the religious observances of the people, and should sow the seeds of disaffection by subjecting the people to arbitrary mandates. To prohibit the use of tomtoms on occasions such as marriages and the Holi and Rám Nawami festivals is nothing short of a direct violation of their manners and religious customs and an offence to their feelings. It is therefore to be hoped that the District Magistrate will give a patient and calm consideration to this matter and remove the grievance by cancelling the order complained of. [The Bakul (16) of the 15th April makes a similar complaint.]

Points out certain defects in the rules for the working of the postal savings banks.

The Dhárwár Vritt (22) of the 12th April points out certain defects in the rules recently published regarding the working of postal savings banks, and requests that the authorities concerned will see fit to supply them. The condition of declaration imposed by the rules is sure to be felt as an encumbrance by many, and it will be sufficient to substitute for it the simple enquiry that is provided in the case of deposits in the ordinary savings banks. The convenience caused by the sub-post offices being authorized to receive deposits must be acknowledged, but there is no provision for immediately meeting with applications for withdrawing money from the banks. The necessity of a reference to the head office is likely to cause trouble. Moreover there is no mention made in the rules of the maximum amount that may be received by the banks, nor is there any provision declaring whether it is allowable to keep accounts simultaneously with the postal and ordinary savings banks.

Suggests certain reforms in the Sanitary Department.

The Din Bandhu (5) of the 15th April dwells at considerable length on the necessity of certain reforms in the Sanitary Department of this Presidency. The Bandhu deprecates the practice at present in vogue of conferring the appointment of Inspector of Sanitation and Vaccination on shirastedárs and clerks in the offices of Deputy Sanitary Commissioners. These persons have very little professional knowledge of their work, and are therefore unfit to discharge the duties appertaining to the office of Inspector in a satisfactory manner. It is therefore desirable that such responsible posts should be solely reserved for Hospital Assistants and Assistant Surgeons, whose education in colleges will serve them in good stead in making them competent Inspectors. It is also necessary that a uniform should be prescribed for all Inspectors, and they should be required to keep a sword or bayonet at their own expense. These officers while on tour often suffer a great deal on account of having no weapon and having no distinguishing badge to proclaim their rank to the public. These officers should also receive the ex-officio title of Ráo Sáheb or Khán Sáheb, and a form of diary should be prescribed for them with the view of enabling their superior officers to judge of the amount of work done by them. A system of periodical reports should also be established.

Comments on the rules regarding the examination and employment of probationers in the Registration Department.

The Dhárwár Vritt (22) of the 12th April does not approve of the rules recently published by Government regarding the examination and employment of probationers in the Registration Department. The condition that a candidate who does not succeed in getting employment within one year from the date of his passing the examination must again pass the necessary examination is very hard. The length of period prescribed for the confirmation of probationers is also improper.

A prayer for the location of a registry office at Mahudha.

The Kaira Vartamán (96) of the 18th April prays for the location of a registry office at Mahudha. If Mr. Spry were to call for information regarding the number of documents registered every year from Mahudha and the surrounding villages and the income derived therefrom, he would see his way to grant the prayer. What the people pray for is justice. If a registry office cannot be permanently located in Mahudha, the Sub-Registrar of Nadiád should be ordered to hold his office in Mahudha for a certain number of days every month, as is done at Kaira, Dákor and Ránder.

Complains that the list of jurors recently published is not correctly prepared.

In alluding to the list of persons eligible to serve as jurors in the High Court of Bombay, recently published in the Government Gazette, the Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 16th April observes that the list of special jurors contains the names of some Natives who ought to have been included among common jurors, and in the list of common jurors are to be found names which ought to be put in the list of special jurors. It is a disagreeable duty for a public organ to point out such names, and the Sheriff being a Native of high position in society is in a position to do the needful. Again, while 120 Europeans are selected from their comparatively small community to serve as special jurors, only 80 Natives are chosen for the same purpose. Every partner of every European firm is appointed a special juror, whereas the partners of several well-known Native firms are chosen to serve on the common jury. European secretaries of several public companies and European brokers are made special jurors, whereas Native agents of several cotton mills and several Native merchants are appointed as common jurors. Thus no sound principle appears to have been followed in making selections, and it is therefore to be hoped that a better selection will be made when preparing a new list.

Desires the removal of the unruly gangs of the Kabulis which are wandering in this Presidency.

The Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 16th April observes that for some time past reports have been received that a gang of Kabulis has been committing plunder and spreading panic in the Salsette Táluka of the Thána District. News has also been received from Bhusával that about five hundred Kabulis had gathered at that station, that a misunderstanding having arisen between their two parties one of these parties had to be taken to Manmád, and that to prevent the other from doing mischief to the rail-roads the railway volunteers had to be called out. Under these circumstances it is desirable that the public should know what steps have been taken by Government to remove the panic spread by these Kabulis. They ought to be removed to some place where they would not be able to commit mischief.

Requests the Supreme Government to appoint a commission to enquire into the working of the police.

In noticing the report made to Government by Mr. Warburton, the Acting Superintendent of the Thuggee and Dacoity Department in the Panjab and the North-West Provinces, in which that officer has, among other things, mentioned that during the short period of his administration he has ascertained that in thirty cases the police have obtained the conviction of innocent persons, the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 20th April observes that this is not the first time that the above-mentioned accusation has been preferred against the police of this country. Government should therefore appoint a commission for the purpose of instituting close and searching enquiries into the working of the police throughout the whole of India. Government have already recognized the necessity of an Education Commission and the question of police administration is not of less importance inasmuch as it affects the safety of the life, property and honour of the people.

Recommends an enquiry into certain evil practices of medical men.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 16th April complains that rumours are rife that the medical men who possess the exclusive privilege of certifying to the soundness of the health of new employés under Government and to their fitness for serving in any part of India, are given to extorting money from the candidates for employment, who are generally very needy and therefore yield to their demands. The Indu dwells on the objectionable nature of such practices, and advises Government to institute minute and secret inquiries by means of detectives. The sufferers can never be expected to come forward to tell their own tales, and unless Government take up the matter there is every chance that the misery will be perpetuated to the greatest hardship of the poor.

Disapproves of the verdict given by a special jury at the trial of Private Dwyer at the late criminal sessions of the Bombay High Court.

In noticing the trial of Private Dwyer at the last criminal sessions of the Bombay High Court for shooting a Native at Sátára, the Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 20th April observes that five eminent medical authorities deposed on oath that the accused was feigning madness and gave good reasons for making this assertion. The Honourable Justice Scott laid great stress upon the evidence of the above-mentioned witnesses in the charge he gave to the jury. Notwithstanding this, the jury gave the verdict that the accused was a lunatic. This decision is surprising, and it is still more surprising that the trying Judge did not record his protest against the wrong verdict. If special juries give a wrong verdict in a plain and simple case like that of the accused Dwyer, there is no necessity of convening special juries to try cases of murder.

Says that theft should be made a bailable offence.

A correspondent of the Surat Akhbár (75) of the 16th April says that while criminal breach of trust and fraud are considered bailable offences, theft, though insignificant, is not regarded by law as a bailable offence. The consequence of this is that innocent persons frequently suffer. Hence it is necessary that Government should make the crime of theft bailable with certain limitations.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 16th April is glad that the Senate of the Bombay University have decided by a majority that the new clock in the Rájábái Tower shall keep Bombay time. When this conspicuous clock is to show the local time, and Madras time does not suit the people of Bombay, it is to be hoped that Sir James Fergusson will withdraw his order about the observance of Madras time, and remove the cause of complaints made on this score by the public. [The Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 18th April expresses similar sentiments. The Rást Goftár (105) of the 15th April however does not understand why so much importance should have been attached to such a trifling subject. It is immaterial to the people what time is generally observed, and it would have been more graceful in them to have responded to the call of the Governor to observe a uniform time throughout the city when they could have done it by the simple contrivance of changing the position of the minute hands of their clocks and watches.]

Hopes that His Excellency the Governor will withdraw his order to keep Madras time in Bombay.

Local Self-government.

The Suryodayá (63) of the 16th April does not understand why the Bombay Government have been delaying the enactment of the necessary law for the introduction of the scheme of local self-government into the Bombay Presidency. The scheme has already been introduced into the Central Provinces and measures in that direction are in progress in the provinces of Bengal, Burma and the North-West. The Bombay Government have not, it is feared, abandoned their attitude of persistent resistance towards the new scheme. It is however to be hoped that they will not delay the measure till they receive another reprimand from the Supreme Government, but will see fit to secure the good wishes of the people by prompt action in the matter.

Requests the speedy enactment of the law relating to local self-government.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 15th April says that the three years' term of office of the present municipal commissioners of Kapadvanj expired on the 31st March last and that arrangements are being made for the appointment of new members. The writer recommends that no change should be effected in the members for the present, inasmuch as if after the new members are appointed it is proposed to extend the privileges of local self-government to the municipality there will be great difficulty in securing their resignations.

Says that new commissioners should not be appointed in the place of those whose term expired on 31st March until the question of extending the privileges of local self-government to the municipality at Kapadvanj is settled.

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In alluding to the opposition raised by Lord Salisbury in the House of Lords to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 19th April observes that His Lordship argued that since in every foreign country a European is tried by his own countrymen alone the same rule ought to be applied to India, and since that rule has been in force for a long number of years in the Indian realm the same ought not to be disturbed. His Lordship also remarked that in Turkey, Egypt, China and other foreign countries cases between Europeans or Europeans and Natives are decided by the European consuls. The premises advanced by His Lordship are correct, but not so the conclusion drawn from them. India is not a foreign country like Turkey, Egypt or China. In the latter countries the Government and the people are quite foreign, whose conduct with the Europeans very much depends upon how the latter act with them. The laws of these countries are considered to be defective by the Europeans, and it is believed that the sacred character of justice is not properly preserved in them. These foreigners moreover do not entertain good feelings towards Europeans. In such circumstances it is right that Europeans should have no faith in the justice dispensed by the foreigners, and should reserve to themselves the right of being tried by their own countrymen. On the other hand India is not a foreign country in the sense in which China, Turkey or Egypt is. India is ruled by the British Government under British laws, and justice is dispensed in strict accordance with those laws. The European and Native dispensers of justice are servants of Government, who have studied the laws and made themselves fit to dispense justice. There are appellate courts of different grades one above the other, and final appeal lies to the authorities in England. The people of India are the loyal subjects of the British Crown and are influenced by good feelings towards Europeans, as has been proved beyond doubt on two conspicuous occasions, viz., the Indian mutiny of 1857 and the assumption of the Imperial title by Her Majesty the Queen. In these circumstances the arguments advanced by Lord Salisbury against the Jurisdiction Bill are quite beside the mark. [The Káside Mumbai (98) of the 20th April expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Disapproves of the opposition raised by Lord Salisbury to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Complains that the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha was not consulted by the Bombay Government in the matter of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 15th April says:—We learn from a Bombay paper that the Jurisdiction Bill has been forwarded by the Bombay Government to the Mill-owners' Association for opinion. We certainly do not understand why it should have been sent to one association in preference to others. We do not know if the Bombay Government has so soon forgotten that a representative association exists in Poona. If the Bombay Government really means to ascertain what the general opinion on the Bill is, it should see that all public bodies are consulted.

The Bengal Rent Bill.

Approves of the Bengal Rent Bill.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 15th April says:—The Bengal Tenancy Bill is no doubt to a certain extent an encroachment upon the rights implied, if not expressed, of the zamindárs; but taking into consideration the justness of the principles involved, we see no reason why the zamindárs should grudge to their tenants and ryots this extension of the permanent settlement. The evils of leaving the ryots to the mercy of their landlords are too well known and we cannot blame Government for taking steps in time to prevent these evils. What we wish is that Government should bind themselves by the same rules when they themselves occupy the position of landlords. The Bill is of great importance to the Bengal ryots in so far as it improves their position by granting to them a right to claim compensation for improvements in land not secured by the metayer system and the right of occupancy unknown to a cottier. The fixing of a maximum limit for enhancement of rent, which brings the tenant very near to a peasant proprietor, consistently with the permanent settlement granted to the landlord, is another favourable feature of the Bill. To the Bombay ryots also it is equally important on account of its clear enunciation of the principles of revenue settlement, which in time are sure to be extended to other presidencies, though not unless a cry is raised for the same.

Railways.

A suggestion to the Rájputána-Málwa Railway.

The Hitechchhu (73) of Ahmedabad of the 19th April says that owing to the busy character of the present season great want of waggons is felt on the Rájputána-Málwa Railway. It is therefore natural that merchants should offer, and station masters and goods clerks who are badly paid by the company should accept, bribes for the speedy conveyance of goods To prevent this evil it is necessary that a few rolling-stock inspectors should be employed. Their duty should be the supervision of the daily want and supply of waggons to the different stations in the districts under their respective charges. It is also necessary that the traffic inspector should be able to converse with the Native merchants in their vernacular. He should freely mix with them and impartially attend to their wants. Mr. Finigan, the present traffic inspector, is unable to attend to his duties properly, owing to the vast extent of the district under his charge. He should be relieved of a portion of his work to enable him to discharge his duty satisfactorily. It would be better to entrust the work to a Native well acquainted with the language of the district.

Economy and efficiency would both be secured by giving the post to a Native. If perhaps a qualified Native is not at hand for the purpose, the services of one may be applied for from the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company. It is to be hoped that Mr. Vining, Traffic Superintendent, Sábarmati District, will attend to this suggestion.

Municipalities.

Makes remarks on the constitution of the new Town Council of the Bombay Municipality.

The Lok Mitrá (74) of the 15th April remarks that the recent election of Town Councillors by the Corporation presents several curious and noteworthy features. Two out of the three Europeans elected by that body are officials who would surely have been nominated by Government if the Corporation had not honoured them with their confidence, the large body of Hindu rate-payers has had only one representative, while the Mahomedan community has been altogether left out in the cold. Such a result can hardly be considered satisfactory. Why the Corporation should have gone out of its way to elect two officials when non-official members in every way qualified for seats on the council were available it is difficult to understand. The exercise by Government of its right to nominate the four members now required to make up the full complement of the council has given a representative to the Mahomedans, but it has raised the number of the official members to six. One more Hindu councillor should have been appointed, and either the Honourable Ráo Sáheb Mandlik or Mr. Javerilál Umiáshankar would have been a desirable acquisition to the council. As it is, the European and official elements are very strong, and the council can hardly be said to be a fairly representative one. Altogether the constitution of the new Town Council will not commend itself to the approval of any right-thinking man. The preponderance of the official element and the nomination of an official Chairman at a time when the local self-government scheme is on its trial must be regarded as the reverse of satisfactory or encouraging. It is hardly creditable to the intelligence, public spirit, and independence of the Corporation that Mr. Nowroji Fardunji, who with all his faults has been a most valuable member, was elected only by an accident, because it was only an accident that Mr. Mehta, whose casting vote saved Mr. Nowroji's seat, happened to be the Chairman of the Corporation on the day of the election. Mr. Dádábhái Nowroji should have been elected to the council. His long and varied experience, his devotion to the good of the people, and his fearless and disinterested advocacy of their rights would have made him a most useful and valuable member. Surely it is high time some new and vigorous blood were infused into the body, the present system of electing the same members over and over again being hardly calculated to advance the cause of municipal government in this city. [The Rást Goftár (105) of the 15th April expresses similar sentiments. The Yajdán Parast (117) of the same date is of opinion that Government should have nominated only Hindu and Mahomedan members. The Bombay Punch (81) of the 21st April disapproves of the preponderance of Europeans in the new Town Council.]

Approves of the elections made for the new Town Council of Bombay.

The Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 15th April considers the election of the eight members of the new Town Council of Bombay by the Municipal Corporation as satisfactory, and remarks that the nomination of four more members by Government to complete the council is also happy. The Chronicle however regrets that the Honourable Ráo Sáheb Wishwanáth Náráyan Mandlik should not have been elected a councillor.

Complains of scarcity of water in Bombay.

The Lok Mitrá (74) of the 15th April observes:—Scarcely has the hot weather set in before the periodical cry of the scarcity and foulness of the water supplied to the city has again sprung up. Enormous sums of money have been expended in constructing, improving and enlarging the Vehar and Tulsi lakes. With the building of the Tulsi reservoir it was confidently asserted by the municipal authorities, who always look to the affairs of their own departments through coloured spectacles, that the cry of scanty water would be a thing of the past; and yet though a large sum of money has been devoted to raising the dam of the Tulsi lake on the recommendation of our engineers, the public are again confronted with what threatens to be a water famine at no distant date. The subject was referred to by a member of the Town Council at one of its meetings the other day, but it provoked no discussion, and the matter was dropped as if it was a trifling matter with which the Town Councillors had no concern. Is all this the outcome of the boasted system of local self-government? Unless the arrangement under which the Town Council has been regulated for some time past is done away with and members who understand their responsibilities and duties to the rate-payers are elected to the council, and new members admitted from time to time, there is little hope of matters mending. If the members of the Corporation and Town Councillors were to work half as hard and energetically in doing their duty to their electors after they have been returned as they do in vying with one another in securing the largest number of votes, many of the defects of the administration would disappear; but the zeal of many of these representatives of the people cools down to freezing point directly they have secured the coveted seats.

Suggests that the working out of the new drainage scheme should be stopped.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 15th April, in a paragraph headed "Our Drainage Works," says:—Now that the new Corporation has been formed, its composition such as it is does not hold out the hope that full justice will be done to the burning question of drainage works. Though the work has been in its full swing, the recent lectures on the subject by our worthy townsmen Dr. Blaney and the Honourable Mr. Mandlik have given the Native public a rude shock as to the number of diseases the completion of the drainage works might bring in their train. It was suggested at the time that until the result of the enquiry into the Calcutta drainage works was out the work should be stopped. But the suggestion was not heeded and the works are now being pushed on. The result of the Calcutta inquiry is now out, and Mr. Thomas Jones, a member of the commission, reports that the Calcutta works "have proved a disastrous failure." He recommends that further expenditure on these works should be stopped until an engineer-expert from England overhauls the whole system and proposes remedial measures. Will our own Corporation pause for a moment and ponder whether it is advisable for them not to run on and take an unenviable responsibility on their shoulders? We hope they do pause.

Animadverts on the proposed extension of the people's park at Surat.

The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 15th April protests against the proposed extension of the people's park at Surat. The original circular embodying the proposition was circulated among the municipal commissioners and the opinion of the majority has been acted upon in spite of the amendment suggested by Mr. Kálábhái, viz. that the proposal should be laid before the new board on their coming to office. There has besides been no provision made in the last budget for the execution of the proposed work, and how can it be undertaken in the absence of due provision? Such a technical objection can generally be waived in the case of minor and emergent works. The emergency of the extension of the people's park is however not established, and even if it is, such a large sum as 30 or 40 thousand rupees cannot be expended without due provision in the budget. In spending such a sum in the teeth of such facts the existing board is undertaking a serious responsibility. The injustice of this affair was duly represented to the Government of India and the Bombay Government by the Hita Vardhak Sabha of Surat. But the Local Government declined to interfere with the action of the municipality and the Supreme Government advised that a representation on the subject should be submitted through the Local Government. Whatever may be the steps that the Sabha may deem it advisable to take in the matter, how can the present expenditure of such a large sum be prevented? The Mitrá then apostrophizes the commissioners and the president for their persistently obstinate attitude in the matter, and advises them to retrace their false steps while they have not yet advanced too far, and to divert the funds proposed to be spent on the people's park towards a scheme for supplying water to the town. [The Suryá Prakásh (76) of the 14th April says that as the matter has advanced too far, the most advisable thing under the circumstances is that the new board should undertake the work of the extension of the park.]

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 20th April states that four steam-engines are working in the different parts of the town of Surat, namely, the flour mill engine in Wádifalia, the iron foundery engine in Nahánpara, electric light engine in Chowk, and the ice factory engine in Muglisara, all these quarters being thickly populated. It behoves the authorities concerned to adopt the necessary precautions to avoid serious injury being done in the case of an accident to the people living in their neighbourhood.

Suggests that due precautions should be taken to avoid serious mischief being done by an accident to the four steam-engines working in the different parts of the town of Surat.

The Hitechchhu (73) of Ahmedabad of the 19th April observes:—Now that a new municipal board has been formed, we offer a few suggestions to it. It has hitherto been the practice to simply post notices of general meetings of the municipality on the walls of its office. This practice does not fulfil the desired end, viz., that of giving due information regarding such meetings to the public. It often happens that people have either absolutely no information about them or that they come to know of them some time after they have been held. The best course, therefore, would be to publish advertisements concerning them in a local newspaper. This course is followed in many other town and city municipalities, and we do not understand why it should not be followed here. In these notifications mention might be made of the business to be brought before the meetings. It would also be well if the proceedings of the meeting were furnished to one or more of the local newspapers for publication. It is also desirable that arrangements should be made for providing seats for visitors at the meetings. The new board ought to make a searching examination of the accounts of the expenditure on the new road. It is a general belief that the public money has not been properly spent towards the construction of this clumsy road. It is also said that proper discretion has not been used in awarding compensation in some cases. A professional health officer for Ahmedabad should be appointed. The health of the city is at present entrusted to three hands, called conservancy supervisors, who have no knowledge of hygiene. The aggregate of their monthly pay amounts to more than Rs. 250, while the services of a duly qualified man can be secured for Rs. 150. Such an arrangement will not only be an improvement, but will also effect a saving of more than Rs. 100 per mensem. Such a health officer should not be a Government servant and he should not be permitted to engage in private practice. The old municipal body has, it appears, disposed of the promissory notes of the value of Rs. 20,000 deposited with it in trust on account of the Ranchhodlál Dispensary Endowment. It is proposed to contribute towards the expenses of the dispensary the annual interest accruing thereon. This is a breach of trust. The new board ought to take an early opportunity to set apart the above sum. The establishment and other charges should be curtailed as far as possible, since they have increased considerably. Retrenchment is possible in every branch of the department. The saving thus effected may render possible the total abolition of, or a reduction in the tax on food-grains, which bears very hardly on the poor. The examination of the luggage of people at the gates of the city with the view of ascertaining that it contains no taxable article is very troublesome and annoying. We do not think any appreciable income is derived therefrom. Personal luggage should be exempted from search at the gates as is the case in Surat and other places. It would be advisable for the new board to publish a detailed account of the receipts and disbursements every year for the information of the tax-paying public.

Suggestions to the new municipal board at Ahmedabad.

Native States.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 15th April, in referring to the questions raised in Parliament regarding Mysore, observes:—On the 9th of April last a committee of inquiry was demanded to inquire what concessions were made during the minority of the Mahárája and what connection the Indian authorities had therewith. The special committee was refused, but it was promised that the Indian Government would be asked to submit a report on the subject. We have always held, and still hold, that the interests of a Native State are not very carefully watched during the ruler's minority, and if any concessions were made during the minority of the Mysore prince, they certainly could be due to nothing else than Mysore affairs in Parliament.

this want of interest. It is not only with reference to Mysore that such an inquiry is necessary, but we are of opinion that such an inquiry is necessary in the case of all Native States that have minor rulers and are governed in trust for them.

Complains of the conduct of British officers at Hyderabad in the matter of securing the consent of the Hyderabad Darbár to the project for the construction of a line of railway from Chanda to Hyderabad.

Referring to the project for the construction of a line of railway from Chanda in the Central Provinces to Hyderabad in the Deccan, the Satyá Shodhak (55) of the 15th April observes:—The Pioneer is informed that while the chief nobles of the Hyderabad State advise the postponement of this project on account of the heavy expenditure involved therein, the British authorities are trying to extort the consent of the Darbár by means of pressure. If there be any truth in this report, the conduct of the British officers is indeed very reprehensible. Though it cannot be denied that the construction of the proposed railway will prove very advantageous to the State of Hyderabad and will develop the means of communication with distant provinces, still having regard to the circumstance that the Nizám is very soon to come to the throne, that the Council of Regency is not a thorough master of the financial situation of the dominion, and that the people generally are loath to make a speedy end of the business, it is not intelligible why British officers should have thought it fit to resort to coercion. As in 1853, the present Liberal Ministry may not have the intention of appropriating a portion of the Hyderabad territory. But such high-handed action of their officers naturally serves as a text for various and vague commentaries by the people, and thus Government are credited with intentions that have no foundation. It is therefore desirable that the officers concerned should abandon their policy of exercising pressure on the Darbár in this matter.

Approves of the result of the enquiry into the mismanagement of the Cambay State.

In noticing the Government resolution regarding the mismanagement of the Cambay State, the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 20th April observes that the view expressed by Government regarding the administration of Mr. Laud proves the truth of the several complaints made against him by the subjects of that State. The conclusion drawn by Government is quite correct and was prophesied by the Samáchár before the enquiry into the affair was commenced. Though the course taken by the Cambay subjects was unique, they were justified in adopting it; and though they could not prove every grievance they alleged, yet the foundations on which those grievances were raised were strong enough. It is however not strange that they could not substantiate all their statements, since the evidence in support of them was given in great hurry and under considerable excitement. The result of the investigation has repaid the troubles they took in the matter, and it is to be hoped that they and their prince will hereafter live on friendly terms. [The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the same date expresses a similar opinion and requests Government to publish Mr. Spry's report. The Akhbáre Sodágar (78) of the 19th also expresses its approval of the result of the enquiry and of the Government resolution thereon. The Bombay Punch (81) of the 21st April is not quite satisfied with the resolution, and remarks that Government have tried to please both the parties in this matter.]

Says that affairs at Cambay have not yet been placed on a satisfactory footing.

The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 15th April says that since the removal of the chief officers of the Cambay State murders in open daylight and thefts and robberies have begun to be committed. The Mitrá cites 11 instances in which thefts have been committed during the past few days, and observes that since an experienced officer like Mr. Umedrám cannot effectually cope with such commotions, it is evident that he does not get proper assistance from others. The people have begun to defy the authority of the State. They decline to pay more than what they did before the administration of Mr. Shámráo, and thus great difficulty is being experienced in the collection of revenue. Thus have the intriguers in Cambay succeeded in doing injury to the State, and so long as competent officers like Mr. Dámodardás are not available, and so long also as those that defy the power of the State are not hunted down and met with condign punishment, the affairs at Cambay will not resume their normal state.

Remarks in connection with the slaughter of the Maiyás by the Junágad police.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 16th April, in an article headed "The Junágad Massacres," says:—Under the circumstances one cannot avoid the conclusion that a most unwarrantable carnage has been committed and that till an impartial and satisfactory inquiry is able to convince the public that it was committed under very sheer necessity and to avoid a greater evil the ostensible cause for it must be held to have been the land-hunger of the Junágad State. Is it a fact that on the day of the slaughter, when the corpses of the slain were to be brought into Junágad, the court went out with pomp and ceremony to receive their "faithful and victorious police," and the talk all over the town that day was that the administration had at one stroke added to the State "girás" land of the annual value of a lákh and a half rupees? Such things are being publicly talked of and yet the Government will not clear the mystery. The late Malhár Ráo Gáekwád was not guilty of sacrificing to his avarice or his lust the lives of his subjects, and yet he was justly asked to vacate the throne he dishonoured by his mal-administration. The Bhávnagar State in a fit of religious frenzy punished with death some wretches who had slaughtered a cow for purposes of eating at a time of great scarcity and hardship, and for this inconsiderate act Bhávnagar for more than half a century was denied judicial powers over the greater part of its territories. Poor Porbandar for a fault scarcely tangible has been reduced from a first class State to a third class one. And in all these cases the action of the Government was prompt, their decision speedy and unvacillating. Colonel Phayre's life was not more valuable than the lives of the Maiyás who were massacred by the Junágad Sibandi. And yet when Government found that an attempt was made on the Colonel's life they took very effective measures for eliciting the truth and put Malhár Ráo on trial. If the massacres in Junágad were the doings of the Sibandi alone neither directly nor indirectly prompted by the Darbár, then the conclusion is unavoidable that the Junágad administration is composed of men who cannot manage their police with discretion, and the sooner they are made to vacate their places for better men the safer for the State and its people. If on the other hand the massacres were prompted by the Darbár, the same conclusion forces itself on the mind and perhaps in a more striking manner. Such being the case, the sooner the mystery is cleared up the better for the reputation of those concerned. Junágad has a dependent State that pays its tribute through its agency. Over that State it is allowed to exercise a sort of undefined and uncertain supervision. This superior authority it is said Junágad does not exercise for the good of the subordinate State. The mess the Junágad Darbár has made of the Maiya question lends colour to this view. Will it not be just and politic, we may ask, to deprive Junágad of this power by way of punishment at this juncture? Certainly it has shown its unfitness to be entrusted with such powers. Its real resources at the same time would not suffer any loss. The subordinate States would have breathing time allowed them, which would enable them to effect internal reforms. They would thus come in for a share of those benefits which have accrued to Káthiáwár from the famous settlement of Colonel Walker, by which each Chief is to conduct the internal administration of his territory under the enlightened supervision of the British power without any interference or molestation from his neighbours, and from which arrangement by a mere freak of fortune or ignorance the Junágad States have been excluded. Such a measure in itself is highly desirable in the interest of good government in Sorath and has the advantage of being previously recommended by such authorities as Colonel Keatings and others. The "girás" that the Maiyás held in many of the villages was so held, it is believed, by them by virtue of "sanads" which the joint holders of these villages had granted them. It was not properly speaking competent for Junágad on its own account only to confiscate or reduce the "girás." Such being the case a fresh commission must be granted to them to test and sift the fairness and legality of the first award by Government. At all events liberal damages must be awarded to them for the heart-rending losses they have suffered and a satisfactory arrangement made for their future peaceful existence. The delay in disposing of the question on the part of the Government of Bombay has already excited comments amongst Natives, and we hope the affair will not be hushed up but properly enquired into and decided.

Disapproves of the changes in the Baroda Administration.

The Rást Goftár (105) of the 15th April regrets the changes that have taken place in the Baroda Administration. Sir T. Mádhav Ráo has resigned the post of Diwán and Kázi Shábuddin has taken his place. Khán Báhádur Pestonji Jehángir has also left the State service and returned to his former masters. The value of Mr. Pestonji's services is amply testified to by the honour Government have done him by conferring on him the appointment of Tálukdári Settlement Officer, and the Gáekwád has committed a serious mistake in having dispensed with the services of such a valuable officer. The same may be said of Sir T. Mádhav Ráo. Though it cannot be denied that this statesman was guilty of being too subservient to the wishes of European officers, still taking his administration of Baroda all in all it cannot be forgotten that he conferred immense benefits on the State. The Mahárája should have utilized the services of such high officers for placing the administration on a sound basis, and by doing away with them he has deprived himself of their most necessary assistance. The departure of Sir T. Mádhav Ráo has been the signal for the commencement of intrigues, and it is to be regretted that the Mahárája has begun to lend his youthful ears to them. Whatever poor Baroda has hitherto suffered, it has suffered on account of such intrigues, and the present changes in the administration are an unmistakeable sign that the Mahárája has begun to be drawn into their meshes. It is time that His Highness should make an attempt to keep clear of them, as if he is once caught in them there is no further chance of liberation. [The Bombay Punch (81) of the 21st April disapproves of the Mahárája losing the services of an able officer like Khán Báhádur Pestonji Jehángir. The Gujaráti (91) of the 15th April on the contrary censures the administration of Sir T. Mádhav Ráo, and says that he did nothing worth mentioning in return for the vast sums he received from the State. The Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 13th April expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Suggests for the consideration of the Cutch Darbár certain questions in connection with the Chhappanbhog ceremony to be performed at Cutch Mándvi.

The Rást Goftár (105) of the 15th April is glad that its protest against the performance of the ceremony of Chhappanbhog at Cutch Mándvi in this hot season has produced the desired effect on the Cutch Darbár. The Darbár have become alive to the gravity of the situation, and it is to be hoped that they maintain their own till the last moment. They have allowed the ceremony to take place on the understanding that Vaishnavas from other parts of the country will not be allowed admittance, and thus the danger from overcrowding has been removed. The Rást, however, again warns the Cutch authorities that invitation cards have been circulated all over the country for the past month and a half, and that crowds of people from different parts of the country are sure to flock to the scene of the ceremony. It will then be impossible to prevent them from witnessing the ceremony, and if the Darbár connive at it, hundreds and thousands of souls will fall victims to the demon of religious frenzy. Even a powerful and well organized government like the British does not sanction the performance of such ceremonies except in the cold season, and takes great care to see that the safety and comforts of the visitors are well looked after. Mándvi and its surrounding villages contain a population of nearly 75,000 souls. Of these nearly 40,000 people will go to witness the ceremony, and this number stands a fair chance of being enormously supplemented by visitors from Cutch and other parts. As the Diwán of Cutch intends to examine beforehand the extent and conveniences of the place where the ceremony has to be performed, it behoves him to take into consideration the means of ingress and egress. The old temple cannot accommodate more than 100 persons, nor has it any doors by which great numbers of visitors can pass. The Diwán should also ascertain what police and military force will be necessary for maintaining order in the congregation and for regulating the entrance and exit of visitors. It is also necessary to see what arrangements are required for the supply of drinking water to the visitors and for affording medical aid to the sufferers. A strict guard should be kept at the gates of the town to prevent the entrance of strangers. The Rást feels sure that on a mature consideration of the above particulars the Diwán will, with the Rást, recognize the necessity of prohibiting the performance of the ceremony in the hot season.

Gives the particulars of the recent disturbance at Dhrángadra.

The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 15th April gives the following account of the disturbance in the Dhrángadra State :—There has been a long standing custom in Dhrángadra, as in many other States of Káthiáwár, that the Boras are not allowed to start processions on horseback. On the 31st March the Boras applied for permission to start such a procession, which was granted. The Rája, however, took the precautionary measure of securing an agreement from the Hindus that they would create no agitation in the matter. This served to keep down the Hindus and to elate the Boras. The Boras were not satisfied with simply starting the procession, but indulged in abusive language while the procession was passing through the Hindu quarters. The Bráhmans remonstrated against the use of abusive language, but the Boras having assumed a fighting attitude the Bráhmans retracted. The same scene was repeated in the quarters of the Depala sect. Next day the matter was reported to the Rája, who caused a large number of Hindus to be arrested, and sent about a hundred of them to prison. Thereupon some respectable leaders of the trading community waited upon the Rája and prayed for the release of the prisoners. Instead of complying with their prayer the Rája abused the Mahájans and told them that they might leave his State if they chose and that he did not want them. The Mahájans returned to their homes and struck work. The Rája then sent for blacksmiths and sweetmeat-sellers and enquired of them whether they liked to stand by the Mahájans or himself. They replied that they preferred standing by the Mahájans. Immediately on hearing this reply the Chief ordered their houses to be locked and drove them away from the town. Their wives and children also were turned out without being allowed to take with them the necessary apparel, &c. A coppersmith's wife, who had only been confined three days, entreated to be allowed to remain in her house for five days more. Her prayer was disregarded and the infant consequently died on the outskirts of the town. In the same manner a tailor and a shoemaker's wives were driven out of their houses while they were in a mature state of pregnancy. One of them was confined when she was scarcely out of the town and the other was delivered in a waste. The number of these exiles is computed at 4,000, and they are said to have found shelter in the village of Narichana, where they are well looked after by the girásias. This affair almost exactly corresponds with the recent exodus from Cambay, with this difference that while the Cambay Government were desirous of coming to terms with the disaffected, the Rája of Dhrángadra declines to have anything to do with the exiles and proposes to people his town anew. The discontented public have sent for counsel from Bombay. An officer came from Dhrángadra to effect a reconciliation with the people at Narichana, but the people replied that they would listen to no terms unless the imprisoned men were set at liberty. The Rája on hearing of this reply not only flatly declined to release the prisoners but threatened to punish them more severely. He is determined upon plundering the property of the exiles that has been confiscated, even at the risk of losing his State. Such is the account of the recent disturbance. The picture appears to the Mitrá to be one-sided and it is willing that it should be corrected and contradicted. The Mitrá requests Government to lose no time in instituting an enquiry into the merits of the case and to punish the offenders with an unsparing hand. [The Gujaráti (91) of the 15th April also expresses similar sentiments.]

Berár Affairs.

Makes remarks on the disposal of the case against Mr. Mackoy, the head clerk to the Deputy Commissioner of Akola.

The Varhád Samáchár (65) of the 16th April observes that the enquiry into the case of Mr. Mackoy, the head clerk to the Deputy Commissioner of Akola, has ended and the Commissioner has issued his orders on the subject. It is said that the head clerk has been acquitted of criminal or dishonest intention, and found guilty of gross neglect of his duties and has been therefore dismissed from the service. This decision does not appear to be correct. At the trial of Parashram, Mr. Mackoy made certain statements which were quite sufficient to raise grave suspicions regarding his complicity with Parashrám, and which could not be gainsaid afterwards. Clerk Anandráo stated some facts in his examination, which went to show that Mr. Mackoy must have been an accomplice of Parashrám. The latter was a tool in the hands of the former, and yet Mr. Mackoy escapes with simple dismissal from the service, while he who was simply a tool in his hands has been sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

Makes remarks on the rules for the examination of candidates for pleadership.

With reference to the rules for the examination of candidates for the office of pleaders published in the Hyderabad Residency Orders of the 2nd instant, the Pramod Sindhu (50) of the 16th idem observes that these orders plainly prohibit the appearance of a vakil in a revenue court. This is not a proper ruling, as in many revenue cases witnesses are examined, evidence is called for and received, and the cases are regularly proceeded with; and in such cases the help of a pleader is highly desirable. The candidates for the pleaders' examination ought to be required to possess a knowledge of the revenue laws and the pleaders should be allowed to practise in the revenue courts. The 17th rule authorizes the Examination Committee to prevent a candidate that is ill prepared from appearing at the subsequent examination. It is not plain whether the prohibition is to last only for the year next after that in which he presented himself unprepared, or whether it is to apply to all future examinations. It would be better if some official were to examine the candidates superficially and grant them certificates that they are eligible for presentation at the examination. The 18th rule lays down that after the examination committee gives a certificate to a candidate as to his having passed the examination, the Resident reserves to himself the right of according permission to plead in the courts of the province. There appears no reasonable ground why the Resident should possess such discretionary powers.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
28th April 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Administration of Lord Ripon: Condemnation of the— 5
Amir of Afghanistan: Comments on the intended visit of the — to India 8
Appointments: Approval of the desire of the Duke of Connaught to accept an appointment in India... 8
Art museums: Expression of thanks to Lord Ripon for instructing the subordinate Governments to open permanent — in important cities and towns 8
Complaints:
Regarding the hardships caused by the suppression of salt-works in Ratnágiri 11
Regarding the injustice of an order prohibiting the use of tomtoms in Ratnágiri 11
Regarding the unjust treatment received by Khots in the Ratnágiri District 11
Criminal law: Suggestion that theft should be made a bailable offence ... 13
Criminal sessions: Disapproval of the verdict given by a special jury at the trial of Private Dwyer at the last — of the Bombay High Court... 13
Home remittances: Suggestion of measures for the removal of the loss from exchange on account of— 4
Indian finance; Criticism of the statement made by the Finance Minister that the — is elastic 3
Indian labour: Recommendation for the employment of — in factories and on railways 9
Land Revenue Assessment:
Recommendation for a reduction in the — with a view to encourage the extension of the agricultural industry 10
Suggestion for an adjustment of the rates of — in the Ratnágiri District 10
List of jurors: A recommendation for the revision of the — for Bombay... 12
Locusts: Recommendation for an enquiry into the damage caused by—... 10
Madras time: Expression of a hope that the Governor of Bombay will withdraw his order regarding the observance of — in Bombay ... 14
Medical profession: Recommendation for an enquiry into certain evil practices of the— 13
Police: A request to the Supreme Government to appoint a commission to enquire into the working of the— 13
Postal Savings Banks: Defects in the rules for the working of the— ... 11
Public expenditure: Necessity for an enquiry into the — of India ... 3
Public peace: Expression of a wish that measures may be taken for the removal of the Kabulis wandering in this Presidency 13
Public speeches: Comments in connection with the address delivered by Mr. Bright on his installation as Lord Rector of the University of Glasgow 5
Public Works Department: Expression of a fear that the policy initiated by the Government of India of sending Native engineers to England at the expense of the State for studying practical and technical engineering will injure the prospects of the alumni of the Indian Civil Engineering Colleges 9
Registration Department: Comments on the rules regarding the examination and employment of candidates for service in the—... ... 12
Registry office at Mahudha: Prayer for the location of a— 12
Sanitary Department: Suggestion of certain reforms in the— ... 12
Veterinary schools: Approval of the intention of the Bengal Government to open— 9
Viceroyalty of India: Expression of a wish for the continuance of Lord Ripon as Viceroy of India 6
War in Egypt: Remarks in connection with the official correspondence on the expenses of the Indian contingent despatched for service in Egypt. 6

Page.

PART II.—Local Self-government—

Law relating to local self-government: Request for a speedy enactment of the—... 14
Local self-government: New commissioners should not be appointed in the place of those whose term expired on 31st March until the question of extending the privileges of — to the municipality at Kapadvanj is settled 14

PART III.—Legislation—

Bengal Rent Bill: Approval of the— 15
Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill:
... Complaint regarding the non-consultation of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha by the Bombay Government in the matter of the— ... 15
... Disapproval of the opposition raised by Lord Salisbury to the— ... 14

PART IV.—Railways—

Rájputána-Málwa Railway: A suggestion to the — regarding the appointment of rolling stock inspectors 15

PART V.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad: A suggestion to the new board of the — Municipality ... 18
Bombay:
Approval of the constitution of the new Town Council of the — Municipality 16
Comments on ditto 16
Complaint regarding the scarcity and foulness of water in the town of— 16
Suggestion for stopping the working out of the drainage scheme ... 17
Surat:
Animadversion on the proposed extension of the people's park at — by the municipality 17
Suggestions for taking due precautions to avoid serious mischief being done by an accident to the four steam-engines working in the different parts of the town of— 18

PART VI.—Native States—

Baroda: Disapproval of the changes in the — administration... 21
Cambay:
Approval of the result of the enquiry into the mismanagement of the — State 19
Complaint that affairs at — have not yet been placed on a satisfactory footing 19
Cutch: Questions for the consideration of the — Darbár regarding the Chhappanbhog ceremony to be performed at Cutch Mándvi ... 21
Dhrángadra: Particulars of the recent disturbance at— 22
Hyderabad: Complaint regarding the conduct of British officers at — in the matter of securing the consent of the Hyderabad Darbár to the project for the construction of a line of railway from Chanda to Hyderabad 19
Junágad: Remarks in connection with the slaughter of the Maiyás by the — police 20
Mysore: Affairs at — in Parliament... 18

PART VII.—Berár Affairs—

Case against Mr. Mackoy: Remarks on the disposal of the —, the head clerk to the Deputy Commissioner of Akola 22
Examination of candidates for pleadership: Remarks on the rules for the— 23

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

RECEIVED 23 MAY 83 VIA BRINDISI

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERAR
For the Week ending 28th April 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayá	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do.	600
12	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do.	{280[1] 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyá Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	100
14	„ Arunodayá	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
20	„ Daivadnyá Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
21	„ Daivadnyá Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
22	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly	425
23	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
24	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
25	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
26	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
27	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
28	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	400
29	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
30	„ Jagan Mitrá	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
31	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*32	„ Karnátak Mitrá[4]	Belgaum	Do.	200
33	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	3,500
34	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
35	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	300
36	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
37	„ Mahárashtrá Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
38	„ Mahárashtrá Mitrá	Sátára	Do.	250
39	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
40	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
41	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
42	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly	700
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Do.	Do.	200
44	„ Nyáyá Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
47	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	250
48	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily	350
*49	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
50	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*51	„ Puna Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
52	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
53	„ Satyá Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	243
54	„ Satyá Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
55	„ Satyá Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
56	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	275
*57	„ Sharábh	Alibág	Weekly	200
*58	„ Shetakari	Poona	Monthly	400
59	„ Shiváji[3]	Do.	Weekly	200
60	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*61	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
62	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
63	„ Suryodayá	Thána	Do.	240

[1] Marathi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles. [4] Contains articles in Kánarese also

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Places of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
64	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
65	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly	250
66	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
67	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
68	„ Vichárshil...	Málvan	Do.	300
*69	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
70	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*71	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
72	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do.	400
73	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
74	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	725
75	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
76	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
77	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
78	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
79	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
80	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
81	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
82	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	950
83	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
84	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
85	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
86	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
87	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do.	1,000
*88	„ Dnyán Prasárak	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
89	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
90	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
91	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*92	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
93	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*94	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
95	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
96	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*97	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
98	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	700
99	„ Kusum Guchchhá	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
100	„ Nágar Udayá	Do.	Do.	300
101	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
102	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
103	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
104	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
105	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
106	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
107	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	400
*108	„ Saurashtrá Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
109	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*110	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
111	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
112	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár ...	Umreth	Fortnightly ...	62
*113	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
114	„ Vartamán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
115	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
116	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	300
117	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
118	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*119	„ Karnátá Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
	URDU.
*120	The Altáf	Bombay	Weekly	200
*121	„ Armagán	Do.	Do.	200
*122	„ Dabdabe Islám[5]	Do.	Do.	200
*123	„ Khádam-é-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
124	„ Khayir Kháh-e-Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly ...	300
125	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
*126	„ Muzhire Shawkatul Islám	Do.	Do.	200
	PERSIAN.
127	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

[5] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or ा) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Says that India should take a warning from the present condition of Ireland.

The Shiváji (59) of the 20th April reviews the present state of affairs in Afghánistan and Ireland. Referring to the former country, it says that the Amir has not yet been able to establish his sway throughout his dominion, and that he has resorted to the shift of keeping up friendly appearances with the British Government with the intention of securing their assistance for making his position firm in his country. But when his object is served or when he despairs of help from that quarter, he will not hesitate to retract the overtures he has made or to break the friendship he has shown himself so solicitous to cherish. In these circumstances it is necessary for the British Government to be very cautious in entering upon any particular line of policy. The state of things in Ireland on the other hand is more distressing. The people there have begun to devise various contrivances for committing destruction and doing injury to their oppressors. The very circumstance that the people of Ireland, who are so near the chief seat of the British Government, should be discontented with the rulers who indulge in tall talk about their assiduity in doing good to the distant dependency of India, warrants the inference that there is some defect in the administration and that the Irish are not allowed the full measure of justice due to them. Matters would not have come to such a pass if timely and adequate redress had been granted to the people. The people of India should become wise by the example of the Irish. It is in vain to expect that proper justice will be done to a foreign country like India when the Irish, who are the equals of the English in point of status and who moreover are their neighbours, are so shabbily treated. Though it must be admitted that rulers of the stamp of Lord Ripon are very straight-forward and just, yet such Viceroys of India are an exception, while those of Lord Lytton's class are the rule.

Comments on the agitation raised in England against Lord Ripon's policy.

The Maháráshtrá Mitrá (38) of the 26th April refers, with feelings of deep concern, to the recent agitation in England against the policy of Lord Ripon's Government and to His Lordship's rumoured resignation of the Viceroyalty of India. It is not clear what interests the agitators intend to serve by such conduct. If they hope to nip in the bud the scheme of local self-government inaugurated by Lord Ripon, they are much mistaken, because Lord Ripon's successor cannot go against the avowed policy of his predecessor. Such a state of internal discord in England indicates a bad look-out for the future of the British empire in India. Mutual quarrels have sprung up, jealousy has gained a firm ground, egotism has begun to affect the brains of the people, and immoral practices have become the order of the day. In short, all the causes that led to the fall of the Marátha and Musalmán powers have begun to show themselves. It is therefore to be hoped that the English nation will endeavour to avert such an impending fate and devise means for leading India to a safe harbour.

Approves of the intention of the Duke of Connaught to take up an appointment in India.

The Panchánan (45) of the 22nd April approves of the intention of the Duke of Connaught to accept an appointment in India. It is of great importance that our sovereign should know how the people of the country are affected towards the rulers, what the present condition of this dependency is, whether the people deserve to be called loyal, and whether the laws enacted are for their welfare. Up to this time we have been favoured with visits by the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh, but their visits were not attended with good results. Nay, it would not be wrong to say that India suffered a great deal on their account. But these two royal visitors made only a temporary sojourn in this country, while the Duke of Connaught has the intention of taking up the command of one of the Indian brigades. It is advisable to await the result of this Duke's visit before venturing on an opinion on the question.

Remarks that the volunteer corps are a burden on the State treasury.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 25th April flatly repudiates the charge of inimical attitude towards European volunteers brought against the Native press, and observes that the volunteers are a burden on the State treasury. The Bombay Gazette remarks that there are 12,000 volunteers in India, and in their absence the Indian army will have to be increased by at least 6,000 soldiers. But it ought to be remembered that ten years ago there were no volunteers, while the numerical strength of the army was what it is at the present day. The volunteers are given to assuming airs and for trifling reasons threaten to lay down their arms, and if they resort to such a threat in time of war Government will find themselves in an awkward position. Volunteer troops cannot be fully depended upon for the protection of any country, and the truth of this assertion impresses itself more forcibly in the case of India, where the constitution of the corps is very defective. All Eurasians should not be allowed to enlist themselves as volunteers. Government servants of all castes and creeds should be permitted to enter the corps, and then there would be no chance of its members proving as untractable and unruly as the Bengal volunteers have done. Such volunteers as these will prove far more useful than the volunteers of the present day. If the regular troops had been guilty of such misconduct they would have been visited with heavy punishment. Was it then wrong in any member of the Native press to recommend the disbandment of the volunteer corps under the circumstances? [The Akhbáre Sodágar (78) of the same date expresses similar sentiments. The Jáme Jamshed of the 21st April is glad that a reduction of Rs. 30,000 has been made in the expenditure on volunteer corps, and recommends a further reduction by the disbandment of all parties of volunteers in towns and cities. It has great faith in the usefulness of railway volunteers and advocates their maintenance.]

Says that the British Indian Government ought to check the vagaries and follies of King Theebaw of Burmah.

In alluding to the objects of the embassy which it is rumoured the Government of Burmah intend sending to Paris, the Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 23rd April observes that King Theebaw has ruined his kingdom, has given a rude shock to the trade of Rangoon, and has involved himself in heavy debts. He sells the monopolies by public auction, and the merchants of Rangoon have frequently prayed the British Indian Government to confer a good and peaceful rule upon Burmah in order to duly protect the trade of that country. King Theebaw is barbarous, deceitful and perfidious. At the time he sent the embassy to Simla he was engaged in the work of increasing his army. He has manufactured some Henry-Martini rifles with the aid of Italian workmen and intends to turn out more. His cruel murders of his relations are well known. The British Indian Government ought to adopt stringent measures to keep him under check.

Requests Government to abolish the export duty levied on rice.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 28th April observes that ten years ago the export duty on wheat and some other kinds of grain was abolished, and since then the export trade in these articles has considerably increased to the great benefit of the country. If therefore the export duty on rice were abolished, this article also would be largely exported and the country vastly benefited. It is true that the export duty on rice yields the large amount of more than seventy-five lákhs of rupees, and if it be given up it would not be easy to make up the deficit. But in the interests of free trade and for the ultimate benefit of the country the export duty on rice needs to be given up and the deficiency made up by the reimposition of the import duty on cotton goods which has been recently abolished. The Jáme apprehends no keen competition in the market for the exportation of this article, and is of opinion that it will find an extensive sale in Great Britain and Ireland, inasmuch as it will serve as more tasty and substantial food than potatoes.

Prays the Bombay Government to open veterinary schools.

It is gratifying to find, observes the Lok Mitrá (74) of the 22nd April, that the importance of opening veterinary schools in India is being gradually recognized. The Government of Bengal is already contemplating the establishment of such an useful institution, and the Director of Public Instruction has been consulted on the subject, but that officer has not yet submitted his views to the Government. There can be no doubt that the establishment and successful conduct of such schools will prove an inestimable blessing to the agricultural classes in India, and through them to the whole country, the material prosperity of which will thereby be considerably enhanced. It is surprising how the Government, which have done so much to promote the diffusion of medical science in this country, should have so long neglected to direct their attention to the opening of veterinary schools, which are quite as necessary and useful as medical schools and colleges. Now that a beginning in this direction is about to be made in Bengal, the other Governments should not content themselves with simply looking on instead of promptly taking up the matter themselves for consideration with regard to their respective administrations. Bombay ought to take the lead in initiating this useful and interesting experiment and thus justify its proud title of urbs prima in Indis. [The Jâme Jamshed (95) of the 24th April makes similar observations.]

A complaint regarding a change in the jurisdiction of certain law courts in Upper Sind Frontier.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 22nd April, in an article headed "The new Courts in Upper Sind Frontier," says:—A judicial farce has been played for the last year in Upper Sind Frontier by order of His Excellency the Governor in Council. This new farce differs from all other farces in two things: (1) the people have no option but to attend it, and (2) no option but to pay for it. The people of Upper Sind Frontier did what they could to ward off the calamity. They sent petitions after petitions to all the powers that be, His Excellency not excepted. They even sent emergent telegrams. But the farce ran on as usual and runs on still. In the meantime abundant mischief has been played, which unfortunately cannot be unplayed. The whole of Upper Sind Frontier is governed by a Deputy Commissioner and his Assistant. Both are invested with plenary revenue and magisterial powers. They have plenty to do and little leisure. In this instance Government did not see why the civil judicial work should not be done by the officers above-mentioned. Accordingly, all of a sudden and without the least warning, a notification appeared in the Government Gazette creating the Deputy Commissioner a District Judge and his Assistant a Subordinate Judge. But there was already a Subordinate Judge at Jacobabad having jurisdiction over the whole of Upper Sind Frontier and some more places besides. He was, however, told to pack off with his establishment to Ghotki and thence to exercise jurisdiction over the whole of the Rohri Division—a division the jurisdiction over which had formerly for the sake of convenience been divided between the Sukkur and the Jacobabad courts. The Rohri people complained bitterly of this change. Sukkur was closer to them than Ghotki. Their town was much more important than Ghotki and far ahead in trade, wealth and population of this insignificant little village. It was the head-quarters of the Assistant Collector of the division, and if the local limit of the jurisdiction of a Subordinate Judge were to be assimilated and co-ordinated with those of a Sub-divisional Magistrate, it was difficult to see why their head-quarters should not be the same. It was quite clear that without Rohri the Sukkur court, having already a narrow local jurisdiction, could not have much to do; and it was equally clear that the Rohri people, divided from Sukkur only by the Indus, would meet with great difficulties in the execution of their decrees if they were annexed to any other court. The question is whether the English administration of justice being notoriously costly and dilatory, the cost and delay should be further increased by a hasty revision of the local jurisdiction of the courts without the least regard to the interests and convenience of the people and without any the least reference to their wishes or to their views. That the cost and delay have been increased to the Rohri people we challenge any one to deny. That there was no administrative reform imperatively necessitating such change is equally beyond doubt. Where then is there any justification for this hap-hazard alteration of the local limits of the courts,—an alteration fraught with so much mischief and inconvenience? Is it not a retrograde measure to supplant a purely judicial officer by a three-headed monster of a functionary who has too much to do in his revenue and magisterial capacities to allow of his paying any attention to his civil work? Is it wise or expedient or fair to appoint persons altogether innocent of the very complicated and intricate law they have to administer without the least previous training or experience? We are told that for the first two months there was no officer to receive any plaint and many suits thus became time-barred, that even later on there was no regular process-serving establishment and the processes either of the Jacobabad court or of other courts sent to it for service could not be served, that there was even no Munshi to keep a register of suits or a memorandum book, that the suitors often found on the day of hearing that the Judge had gone on circuit or was required at some other place owing to some emergent revenue or magisterial business, that several cases filed in January or February 1882 were for the first time proceeded with in November or December, that the most ridiculous mistakes were made by the new Judge in the trial of cases, that the civil work was taken up by fits and starts and finished in a happy-go-lucky fashion, and that it still continues to be so dealt with. The new Subordinate Judge takes but little interest in it, first, because he is not paid a single pie for this extra duty; secondly, because he has but little time left after performing his usual functions as a magistrate and a revenue officer; thirdly, because he feels himself perfectly incompetent for the work; and fourthly, because he has neither a shirastedár nor a názir, neither a process-issuing nor a process-serving establishment, neither a good law library nor an efficient bar. The new District Judge labours under the same disadvantages, and cares as little for his civil work. He has but little to do, because the Subordinate Judge has yet done but little! Up to this day, though a full year has now elapsed, the Munshis attached to the revenue and magisterial offices of the Subordinate Judge continue to do the civil ministerial work without any extra remuneration, and hence always unwillingly and therefore inadequately. Up to this day there is not a single bailiff, messenger or peon attached to the court, and the summonses are served by the police whenever they can be spared. If a defendant or a witness lives in an out-of-the-way village, the Tapadár or the second or third class magistrate has to serve the summons upon him at leisure. This is the system introduced in Upper Sind Frontier by our benign Government!! Under it the number of suits has terribly declined, trade is palsied, and private transactions are few and far between. None sue but those whose claims are about to be time-barred or those who cannot come to any amicable arrangement, however prejudicial to them. Is not this a pretty pass to bring the people to? A brave new Judge unbroken to his work, raw and inexperienced, ignorant of the principles as well as the practice of civil law, is set to administer justice without any establishment and without any incentive to work. He wants to be relieved of his thankless duties. The people want to be relieved of him. The whirligig of time has shown the utter impracticability and absurdity of the whole scheme; but though suitors may come and go, this judicial farce has evidently to go on for ever, as there is no sign yet of the cancellation of the obnoxious notification.

Comments on the appointment of Mr. Lester de Fonblanque as Deputy Registrar of the High Court.

The Rást Goftár (105) of the 22nd April complains that injustice has been done to a deserving officer by the appointment by the Chief Justice of the High Court of a foreigner to the post of Deputy Registrar vacated by Mr. Adams. Sir Charles Sargent has hitherto achieved a name for justice and has endeared himself to the people of Bombay. The Chief Justice is leaving India on furlough, and it is to be regretted that at such a time he should have incurred the displeasure of the officials of the Court by this act of injustice. One Mr. Lester de Fonblanque is to be brought to Bombay all the way from Egypt. This gentleman is quite unknown in this country and does not appear to be a barrister-at-law, and the supersession by him of old, experienced and qualified officers cannot be explained on any grounds, and does not deserve a better name than a pure job. Mr. Limji Nowroji Banáji is the greatest sufferer in this affair. He is a barrister-at-law and has for many years past been discharging the duties of Head Clerk to the Prothonotary in an efficient manner—nay, he has practically been doing the duties of the Prothonotary himself. He has also acted as Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Ahmedabad. Mr. Adams and other officers of his rank are not barristers, and though out of regard to their standing in the service it might be unjust to replace them by new barristers, still it must be urged that such posts, as they fall vacant, should not be conferred on persons that are not of that legal status. The Chief Justice may have special reasons for the appointment he has made, and we would be glad to give them publicity; but in the absence of such reasons we cannot desist from calling into question the justice of the measure, which is calculated to cast a slur not only on Mr. Limji but on the whole of the Native community. We earnestly ask Government not to approve of this appointment when it comes before them for confirmation in the usual course.

Complains of injustice arising from a defect in the criminal law of the country.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 22nd April says:—We are sorry we have one more occasion of referring to the invidious distinction which the criminal law of the country makes between the different communities of Her Majesty's subjects. Who will deny that the distinction is certainly unjustifiable after reading the particulars of the Shepherd case recently tried in the Ratnágiri Court? The particulars are: Mr. Shepherd and a Native captain on one of the steam-boats plying between Bombay and Ratnágiri were ordered to take their trial before a European Magistrate, and were found guilty under the Native Passenger Ships Act. Mr. Shepherd being a European had a right of appeal against the decision of the Magistrate who tried him. He exercised his right and the decision of the Magistrate was quashed by the Sessions Court. The other accused being a Native had no such right, and though in the same boat with Mr. Shepherd had to rest contented with the decision of the Magistrate. Two persons accused of the same offence and found guilty by the same Magistrate stand in two different situations, simply because of the accident that one happens to be a Native while the other is a European. The present case is only of a trivial nature, but we can suppose one which is serious. Then what would the Calcutta agitators say? Are they prepared to say that even in the present case the requirements of justice have been met? Dare they say that the Native has rightly suffered? Can the law which allows an appeal to one accused, while it refuses the right to another, be said to be just and impartial? [The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 23rd April also refers to the same case and says that it is high time that the British Government should take measures to remove the unevenness of justice administered to the two sections of their subjects. The Yajdán Parast (117) of the 22nd April expresses similar sentiments.]

Comments on the compromise effected by the Chief Presidency Magistrate with the members of the Salvation Army.

Referring to the recent decision of the Chief Presidency Magistrate in the matter of the processions of the Salvation Army, the Dnyánodayá (7) of the 26th April observes that if the case had come for decision before Mr. Dosábhái Frámji, he would have sentenced the offenders to terms of imprisonment which would have been looked upon with favour in some high quarters. The fact is significant and deserves to be noted that whenever Salvationist offenders have been placed on their trial before European Magistrates they have been invariably acquitted, but that when they appeared before Mr. Dosábhái they were either severely fined or put in prison. The Dnyánodayá fears that this circumstance will strengthen the conviction of Europeans that Native Magistrates would unsparingly punish European offenders if they were invested with the power of trying them.

Recommends that a Pársi should be appointed as Acting Clerk to the Pársi Chief Matrimonial Court.

In alluding to the report that a European gentleman will be appointed in the place of Mr. Jehángirji Mánakji Shroff as clerk of the Pársi Chief Matrimonial Court, the Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 22nd April observes that the duties of the clerk require a special knowledge of Pársi manners and customs and tact to deal with Pársi females, &c., having business in the Court, and hence it is indispensable that the clerk should be a Pársi gentleman. It is therefore to be hoped that a Pársi gentleman will be appointed for the duties of the clerk.

Complains of the treatment of prisoners in the Ahmedabad Jail.

The Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 20th April says that prisoners in the jail at Ahmedabad are now allowed only a piece of rag to cover their nakedness. This economy on the part of Government is not at all commendable. While krors of rupees are drained off in other ways, it is impolitic to treat poor prisoners in this manner. It is very cruel not to allow raiment for their bodies and shoes for their feet in this hot season. Why do not Government take the opinion of medical men in this matter? [The Ahmedabad Samáchár (77) of the 25th April expresses similar sentiments.]

Some grievances of the Bombay Preventive Service.

A correspondent of the Indian Spectator (1) of the 22nd April says:—From facts which have recently come under my cognisance, I have come to the conclusion that the management of the Bombay Preventive Service is susceptible of improvement, particularly the regulations regarding Custom-House officers. The lower subordinate officers of this branch rejoice in salaries of from Rs. 50 to Rs. 75 per month. Out of this salary an expensive uniform has to be provided which approximates as nearly as possible to that of a naval officer. The work they have to do, if not demanding a strain on the mental faculties, is fatiguing and incessant, absorbing twelve hours of their time daily, and privilege leave is rare. Where there is hard work and small pay, there should at least be prospects. Promotion should be within the grasp of all as vacancies occur and as each man's turn comes for advancement. But is this so in the Preventive Service? Under what rules are outsiders brought in who have had no previous training, and placed over the heads of those whose good service has given them the most just and reasonable of all claims for advancement? This is a queer way of encouraging integrity and perseverance in the service, and is a great deal more likely to lead to confusion and disorganisation than to anything which is desirable or good. It is true that there are a number of young Europeans to be had even for Rs. 50 per mensem. But where is the use of furnishing fine uniforms for men who can obtain the privilege of wearing them by a helter-skelter scramble and whose services are as little valued as those of ordinary day-labourers? Government would do well to institute enquiries and satisfy itself that the mode of treating these public servants is consistent with justice.

Complains of the havoc caused by locusts in the Ratnágiri District.

The Vichárshil (68) of the 16th April complains of the tremendous havoc caused by locusts in the Ratnágiri District. All trees have been rendered leafless and fruitless and the garden lands present to the sight a dreary appearance. The owners of such lands have been put to loss to the tune of thousands of rupees, and such of them as have no agricultural produce to fall back upon cry over their lot and are overtaken by almost a panic and are unable to hit upon any means for protecting themselves. They are at their wits' end to find out means for satisfying the Government demand. It is the duty of Government to come to the aid of the ryots, and having regard to the circumstance that people in the Konkan are generally not as well off as those in other parts of the presidency, they should grant remissions of revenue with unsparing liberality. District officers are generally averse to representing matters to their superiors in their truly unpleasant character, and are actuated by a desire to achieve credit by evincing over-zealousness in recovering Government dues by exercising undue pressure on the ryots. At such a juncture Government should not be guided by the representations of such selfish officers, but should take care to appoint officers who have achieved a name for independence of opinion and firmness of purpose, and should secure through their agency the necessary information for forming an idea of the extent of the distress prevailing in the district and of the remissions of revenue that are called for. The case of the owners of garden lands requires to be treated with special indulgence, inasmuch as their gardens will take between 30 and 50 years to reassume their verdant foliage and to be fruitful. It may also be necessary to grant takávi advances in some cases. [Many other Vernacular papers allude to the same subject and request Government to treat the sufferers leniently. The Poona Vaibhav (47) of the 22nd April also expresses similar sentiments, and while referring to the measures suggested to be adopted for the destruction of locusts by the State Kárbhári of Kolhápur, hints at the feasibility of giving a trial to the shift resorted to in old times, viz. that of destroying locusts by the smoke of different kinds of trees or by burning other similar substances. The Bakul (16) of the 22nd April recommends the deputation of Lieutenant Bor to the Ratnágiri District with the view of preventing the devastation of crops and trees by locusts.]

The Jagan Mitrá (30) of the 23rd April complains of the insufficiency of the present shed at the Ratnágiri Bandar for the requirements of the increasing number of passengers by steam-ferries, and requests the authorities concerned to see for themselves the distress caused to the people by want of sufficient shelter from the sun. It is necessary either that the present shed should be extended or that a new one should be erected near the dharmashála.

Complains of insufficient shelter to passengers on the Ratnágiri Bandar.

In noticing the fire which recently broke out in a steamer lying at the Prince's Dock, the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 24th April observes that the arrangements made by the Port Trust committee for extinguishing petty fires are very satisfactory, but considering the large quantity of valuable goods always lying in the warehouses of the Dock and the probability of large fires frequently occurring among them, it seems desirable that sufficient provision should be made for extinguishing extensive fires as well. At present steam-engines from the city are taken to extinguish fires, but before they arrive on the spot and commence work some time must inevitably elapse and in this interval the fire must commit serious havoc. It is desirable therefore that the Dock should have one or two steam-engines of its own to begin work no sooner an alarm of fire is raised.

Advises the Prince's Dock authorities to have one or two pumping engines of their own.

In alluding to the disturbance created by a large gang of Beluchis at the Dádar station of the B. B. and C. I. Railway on the refusal of the station master to carry them free of charge to certain places in Gujarát, the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 25th April observes that it is not known from what country they have come. They are possessed of a few articles of trade, but the quantity of the articles is so small that it seems probable that they maintain themselves by theft and rapine, and it is very likely that they will prove a real pest to the inhabitants of the villages they visit. It is desirable therefore that Government should prevent them from going into Gujarát and should deport them at the expense of the State to their own country. [The Bombay Punch (81) of the 28th April expresses similar sentiments.]

Requests Government to deport to their country the Beluchis who recently created a disturbance at the Dádar station of the B. B. and C. I. Railway.

The Broach Samáchár (83) of the 26th April says that more than a hundred houses have been destroyed by the recent fire in the village of Jhanor. Not only has great damage been done, but the whole town consisting of about 2,000 houses was in imminent danger of being burnt down owing to the want of means for extinguishing the fire. Fire-engines are kept in towns possessing municipalities, but in many villages and towns of the Broach District where there is no municipality, great damage is done by fires owing to the want of fire-engines. It is therefore advisable that in the present prosperous condition of the local funds fire-engines should be kept in large villages and towns at the expense of those funds. Arrangements should also be made for utilizing the fire-engine up to about five miles from the place of location. The local funds committee would be doing a wise thing by adopting this suggestion.

A suggestion to the local funds committee at Broach.

The Din Bandhu (5) of the 22nd April observes that in Calcutta a system has for some time past been introduced by which letters and packets for the different branch offices of the city are sorted in the railway train and delivered to the branch offices irrespective of any communication with the head office. This system is a great convenience to the trading community and contributes to the prompt transaction of business. Madras has followed the example of Calcutta, but it is strange that the Bombay authorities, notwithstanding the greater briskness of commercial transactions in this city, have not been awakened to the necessity of introducing the system here. The Calcutta mail reaches Bombay at 8-30 A. M. and is delivered at the branch post offices at 12-30 P. M. A system of sub-deliveries organized on the principle above referred to is sure to result in a great saving of expenditure at the General Post Office and to afford the entertainment of a larger number of delivery peons than at present exists. It is reported that the present numerical strength of the post office establishment is shortly to be increased, but it is not unlikely that the sanction accorded will be utilized for providing a few highly paid appointments, and that the present state of overwork observable in the branch offices will remain as it is. If Mr. Stewart has become incapacitated for the efficient discharge of his duties it is better he should retire. It requires a smart and experienced officer to initiate new reforms. Mr. Stewart's position requires that he should have a thorough acquaintance with all the quarters of the town, and that he is wanting in such acquaintance is evident from his slovenly way of doing business. Has Mr. Stewart ever troubled himself with writing to his superior authorities on the subject of the advantages from a reduction in the rates of postage and regarding the means of securing a prompt distribution of letters among the public? The Din Bandhu is certain that if the present rates of postage were reduced by half, the income of the Department would be augmented two-fold or three-fold.

Suggests certain reforms in the postal arrangements at Bombay.

Complains of the early closing of the post at Ránder.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitra (72) of the 22nd April complains of the inconvenience caused to the people of Ránder by the closing of the post at that place at 5 P.M. instead of at 5-30 P.M. as before. Ránder is a respectable mercantile station and the traders have considerable correspondence with Bombay, Siam, Rangoon, Calcutta, &c. It therefore behoves the postal authorities to restore the convenience of a later closing of the post.

Suggests certain arrangements for the comfort of the pilgrims at Yamagnur.

The Chandrodaya (118) of the 21st April says that there is a shrine at Yamagnur in the Navalgund Táluka consecrated to the memory of Raja Bux. A large concourse of people assembles at this shrine on the occasion of the annual fair and the Government realize a revenue of from 10 to 15 thousand rupees by the levy of a capitation tax of one anna on each pilgrim. It is therefore evidently the duty of Government to look to the comforts of the pilgrims, but it is to be regretted that there is not a single tree in the compound to protect the people from the scorching sun. Hundreds of sheep are sacrificed at the altar, and while the sight is offensive to the visitors the stink arising from the streams of blood pouring from the offerings is calculated to affect the sanitation of the place. There are no police guards to regulate the entrance and exist of pilgrims and to check petty thefts. The Chandrodaya hopes that Government will see their way to diverting a portion of the income derived by them to the supply of the above wants of the pilgrims.

Prevalence of small-pox in Káthiáwár.

The Samsher Báhádur (106) of the 20th April hears on good authority that small-pox is raging virulently in Káthiáwár and that children and cattle fall a prey to the epidemic. Chicken-pox is also very prevalent. It is therefore necessary that measures should be taken for preventing the disease from spreading from one village to another. Vaccinators should be sent to the different villages of Káthiáwár and care should be taken to note the results of their work. The Pálitána Darbár has asked for the services of a veterinary surgeon from the British Government. This example should be imitated by the other Chiefs of Káthiáwár.

Hopes that His Excellency the Governor will rescind his order to keep Madras time in Bombay.

The Lok Mitra (74) of the 22nd April remarks that ever since the hasty and ill-advised mandate of Sir James Fergusson went forth that Government offices shall keep Madras, or as it is called official, as opposed to the local time, a great deal of unnecessary confusion and discussion has taken place on the subject, and the supporters of the Governor's fiat and its opponents have had a keen contest over this petty matter. The Senate has resolved by a very large majority that our handsome University clock on the Rájábái Tower shall keep the local and not the official time. The resolution is in harmony with the distinctly pronounced public opinion on the subject, and it is a pity that so much learned disquisition and vehement energy should have been expended over such a trifling matter. From the beginning of the attempt made by Sir James Fergusson to introduce Madras time into the city the people generally have pronounced against it, and after a trial of so many months the Government finds that the public is not disposed to change the time to which it has so long been accustomed. It now remains for the Governor in the face of this consensus of public opinion to retire gracefully from the false position in which he placed himself rather hastily, though no doubt with very good intentions, and to cancel the order for keeping Madras time in deference to the wishes of the public. It is to be hoped that in a matter of such little consequence the Governor will cheerfully yield to popular sentiment, and make no attempt to run counter to the resolution of the Senate.

Disapproves of the refusal of His Excellency the Governor to pay half the cost of lighting and repairing the clock on the Rájábái Tower on the Bombay University Library.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 28th April severely censures Sir James Fergusson for refusing to bear half the expenses of lighting and repairing the new clock on the Rájábái Tower of the Bombay University Library, and observes that His Excellency has refused to pay the cost because the Senate has decided that the clock shall show Bombay time. When His Excellency has seen that his order to keep Madras time has caused great inconvenience to the people, who have loudly complained against it, and when the Senate has by a majority decided that Bombay time shall be kept by the clock, His Excellency should have submitted to the decision of the majority. But Sir James has shown stubbornness in this as in some other cases, which ill-befits the high position he fills, and prejudicially affects the respect from the public due to his high rank. The Jáme advises the public of Bombay to appeal to the Supreme Government, and requests the Municipal Corporation to bear the expenses of lighting and repairing the clock if the Supreme Government should refuse to interfere with Sir James' decision.

Local Self-government.

Complains of the delay in the introduction of the scheme of local self-government into the Bombay Presidency.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 22nd April observes:—The Government of Sir James Fergusson has shown itself to be dilatory and lethargic on several important questions, but nowhere so egregiously as in the matter of local self-government. The Government of Sir James, being not of its own accord interested in the matter, does not probably care much if any delay is caused in carrying out the intentions of the Supreme Government, which to Mr. Ashburner at least savoured of nothing but danger and revolution. We had hoped that with the accession to power of Mr. Peile the honour of the Bombay Government would be soon retrieved, but therein also we are, it seems, destined to be disappointed. The Government of Sir James drafted a Bill on the local self-government question and submitted it to the Supreme Government for approval several months back; but if rumour be correct, it was sent back with several severe remarks for correction and emendation. Some say that Sir James is so conservatively obstinate on some important principles involved in this local question that he will not yield a jot, but will show his Toryism in such a manner that he will be, in the words of Macaulay, "the ballast without which there would be small safety in a tempest." We do not grudge His Excellency his conservative tendencies or idiosyncracies; but what we expect from him is that he should have shown as much alacrity in carrying out the noble intentions of the Government of India when he could not help doing so as other Governments have done. According to the predictions of some politicians both parties will hold out so resolutely that the matter will have to be decided by appealing to the Secretary of State for India. Whatever be the cause and whatever the result of this scandalous delay, the Bombay Government is at present far in the background with regard to self-government. While comparatively less advanced parts of the country like the Central Provinces have begun to enjoy the practical benefits of the Local Self-government Act, the "enlightened" presidency is still in painful suspense as to what is being done for it by its Governor. We frankly say that the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces has by his cordial sympathy with and active steps in furtherance of local self-government put to shame apathetic and dilatory Governments like our own. Leaving, therefore, our ease-loving gubernatorial officer to deal freely with horse-shows, addresses or correspondence regarding the yacht club, we gladly turn to what Mr. Morris has done for the provinces committed to his fostering care. The writer here alludes to certain passages in the circular issued by Mr. Morris regarding the working of the scheme of local self-government in the Central Provinces and concludes:—Well might Sir James Fergusson read this and blush! Well might self-willed and autocratic Collectors and Commissioners of our presidency, who would not willingly part with an inch of their power, peruse the remarks of Mr. Morris and feel ashamed of the narrowness of spirit which characterizes their poor Lilliputian brains! [The Native Opinion (10) of the same date also refers to the Chief Commissioner's circular, and while approving of the views therein expressed advises the Bombay Government to take a lesson from them.]

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Disapproves of the compromise suggested by some Europeans in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill that the European prisoners should be allowed the choice of being tried by European or Native Judges.

After severely censuring the English newspapers of Calcutta for foully abusing Lord Ripon for the part he has taken in the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 23rd April observes that the Europeans who have been opposing the Bill, having seen that the measure was sure to be enacted at last, have suggested a compromise that European criminals should be allowed the choice of being tried by a European or a Native Judge. The suggestion means that when a European criminal is brought before a Native Judge, and if the accused objects to be tried by that Judge, his case should be transferred to a European Judge for disposal. Such a concession as this would enable European prisoners to insult Native Magistrates and Judges by electing to be tried by Europeans only. It is far better to withdraw the Bill than to adopt the suggested compromise. The suggestion has been made in connection with a recent occurrence, in which a Mr. Houston preferred to be tried by the Native Magistrate of Allipore. But it ought not to be forgotten that every European is not so liberal-minded as Mr. Houston. Certainly the planters who make grievous assaults on their Native employés would not like to be tried by a Native Magistrate!

Remarks on the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Arunodayá (14) of the 22nd April says:—The opponents of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill have now resorted to another shift with the intention of deterring Government from proceeding with the proposed legislation. They threaten to withdraw their pecuniary support to the State and thus calculate upon driving Government to a critical position. On the face of it such a threat inspires a belief that Government being generally in want of money will not be able to make a stand against such a contingency. But there is no reason for Government to flinch, inasmuch as Native capitalists will take the place of the English. The policy of utilising Native capital for the purposes of national debt is calculated to prove beneficial to the people by making them gainers to the extent of the interest accruing on such capital. Moreover it is very likely that under the altered circumstances Government would be very cautious in contracting debts. It is thus clear that the agitators against the Bill have, instead of weakening the position of Government and the people, on the contrary strengthened it by holding out the prospect of a beneficial change in the financial situation of the country.

Education.

Complains of the appointment of a low-caste schoolmaster in the English school at Broach.

The Broach Vartamán (84) of the 23rd April says that it has learnt from a reliable source that several Bráhman lads do not attend the English school at Broach owing to the employment of an assistant master of the shoemaker caste. Several lads who attend the school bathe in cold water after coming home in the evening. How long should the students suffer? Will not Government remove this inconvenience by transferring the assistant master to some other place? It is said that the brother of this assistant is also to be appointed a teacher in the same school. Why not then employ teachers of this caste wholesale instead of the present Hindu masters?

Railways.

The Khándesh Vaibhav (34) of the 20th April learns on good authority that the project for the construction of a line of railway from Manmád to Surat has been abandoned in favour of a line either from Manmád to Dhulia or from Chálisgaon to Dhulia. It is well that the project of a Surat-Manmád line has been given up, inasmuch as it was not calculated to develop in an appreciable degree the means of communication in the region through which the line was to pass. As for the alternative projects that are on the carpet, the Vaibhav is of opinion that a line of railway from Manmád to Dhulia is hardly calculated to pay its own way. Málegaon is the only place of commercial importance on this line, and there are three or four hilly passes to be crossed which will involve Government in an enormous expenditure. Besides it would be an inconvenient line for the traffic from east and north, while the distance between Dhulia and Chálisgaon is only 34 miles, and this road is at present generally used for purposes of traffic, and moreover it is not likely that the construction of a railway line from Manmád to Dhulia will divert any portion of the traffic from this road. If on the other hand a line of railway communication were opened from Chálisgaon to Dhulia, it would meet the conveniences of the general public and would serve as a sure impetus to the trade of the country. There are important villages on this line and the country is plain. The only difficulty is about bridging the river Girna, which can be obviated by taking the current of the river further up than near the present road, to the west of the village of Mehunbara or to the east of Dashegaon, where there are plenty of rocks that can serve as sure foundations for the arches of the bridge.

Comments on the proposed construction of a railway line either from Manmád to Dhulia or from Chálisgaon to Dhulia.

The Poona Vaibhav (47) of the 22nd April learns that the station master at Lonávla has employed a shoemaker to assist the Bráhman servant who gives water to passengers by the railway, notwithstanding the complaints raised by the people against the arrangement. The feeling of Hindu passengers must have received a rude shock by being made to take water from a low-caste man, and it behoves the railway authorities and the district officers to see that the cause of complaint is removed.

Complains that a shoemaker has been employed to give water to passengers on the railway station at Lonávla.

The Ahmedabad Samáchár (77) of the 25th April complains of the overcrowding of passengers on the Rájputána Railway. As a limited number of carriages is attached to trains great inconvenience is caused to travellers owing to want of accommodation. Though only 32 persons are allowed by law to travel in one carriage, passengers are packed in the carriages like sheep. When the passengers remonstrate against the injustice of being so pressed together, they are threatened with assault by the railway employés. There is no comfort even in the intermediate classes. As no facilities are provided at the stations for issuing tickets, travellers are crushed in procuring them and sometimes lose their luggage. It is very surprising that Government do not attend to these complaints.

A complaint regarding inconvenience to passengers by the Rájputána Railway.

Municipalities.

In alluding to the appearance of cholera in Bombay, the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 23rd April observes that there are certain thickly populated quarters of the city in which dirt and filth have accumulated so much as to make it unbearable for passengers to pass through them. The quarter lying to the east of the main road leading from the Crawford Market to Sir Jamsetji Jijibhái's Hospital is in this condition. The underground drains of many quarters are more or less choked up with horribly stinking dirt. The Corporation ought therefore to adopt the necessary means to remove the dirt and filth collected in the above-mentioned quarters and to wash off the choked up drains at once in order to prevent cholera from breaking out and committing serious havoc.

Requests the municipality of Bombay to adopt certain sanitary measures in order to prevent cholera from making a vehement attack.

[The Yajdán Parast (117) of the 22nd April also makes a recommendation for the preservation of cleanliness in those quarters of the city that are inhabited by poor people.]

Prays for the suspension of the Contagious Diseases Act in Bombay.

In alluding to the disapproval recently expressed by a majority in the House of Commons of the compulsory operation of the Contagious Diseases Act in England, the Bombay Samáchár (82) of the 24th April refers to the unpopularity of this Act in Bombay and the unsuccessful attempts made before by the Municipal Corporation to induce Government to repeal the Act, and repeats the old suggestion that a charitable hospital for the treatment of such patients suffering from venereal diseases as would willingly present themselves at the hospital should be established. If this suggestion cannot be carried out for want of funds, some arrangement should be made at the several hospitals to receive and treat patients suffering from these diseases. Government are once more exhorted to repeal the Act and the Corporation are advised to make one more attempt to induce Government to do so. [The Bombay Punch (81) of the 28th April expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Advises the Municipal Corporation of Bombay to condemn the working of the Contagious Diseases Act.

The Jáme Jamshed (95) of the 24th April is glad that the House of Commons have condemned the operation of the Contagious Diseases Act in England, and advises the municipality of Bombay to adopt the same course in regard to the operation of the same law in this city. Last year's report on the working of this Act will be soon placed before the Corporation, and will furnish a nice opportunity for condemning it with full force. The precedent set by the House of Commons is quite enough for throwing out the immoral Act and saving the city from a further spread of immorality and waste of money.

Complaint from certain employés of the G. I. P. Railway Company at Igatpuri.

The Din Bandhu (5) of the 22nd April publishes a communication purporting to have been signed by 13 persons, being the employés of the G. I. P. Railway Company at Igatpuri. These persons complain of the injustice of a notice served by the municipality of that place calling upon them to remove their houses, which have been standing in their present site for the last 23 years. The municipality has not shown sufficient reasons for the issue of such a notice, nor has it allotted any other place for the use of the complainants. They have not been compensated for the removal of their houses, nor was any opportunity afforded them for representing their case. The servants of the municipality have thought fit to remove their houses during their absence and thus to expose their families and children to the scorching sun. The writers assert that they have not caused any disturbance to the neighbourhood, but have been treated harshly without any cause, and pray that their case may receive due consideration at the hands of Government.

Native States.

The lesson derivable from the recent exodus from Cambay.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 22nd April says:—The history and the result of the recent exodus from Cambay fully illustrate the dangers which an over-zealous though well-meaning Diwán of a Native State, unsupported by a strong hand, is likely to encounter in the discharge of his duties, and specially in the work of civilization for which he is often specially appointed. At the same time it shows clearly how the subjects of a Native prince can intimidate him by a show of opposition backed by the threat that if their grievances be not redressed they will appeal to the paramount power, who in their turn, it is supposed, would not fail to take advantage of such a timely opportunity of offering their advice to the prince, though in all probability they would turn a deaf ear to all complaints of a similar nature from their own subjects. Our view may appear a little strange; but we are sure that a careful examination of the facts will bear us out. Anyone who reads the Government resolution on the subject will certainly admire the sense of justice of the British Government. Let it be remembered, however, that this is the mole which everyone sees in his brother's eye. For who can say that the British administrators are not guilty of all acts attributed to Mr. Lád? Let us not be misunderstood. We do not wish to make out a case for Mr. Lád and his friends in the administration. By attempting too much at once they failed to please the people and in consequence ought to make room for better men. But is not the rule one of universal application? If so, how many times has it been applied in the British territories? Who can say that the Inám Commission was not less obnoxious than Mr. Lád's alienation department? How was the Military Relief Fund raised? Can anyone assert that no official influence was used in any way to raise it? To come nearer home, can anyone show that in every case when the roads in this city were widened compensation was given? Were not the octroi duties illegally enhanced in this city and a post facto sanction obtained? Is not a market saddled upon us and private property destroyed in consequence before any compensation is settled? All this and more has been done; and yet all the representations of the people affected thereby have received from Government the stereotyped reply that "Government sees no reason to interfere" or that whatever is is right. What a contrast! Is it not strange that while the inhabitants of Cambay receive justice at the hands of our Government, it should be denied to their own subjects? Is it because we do not exaggerate or misrepresent our grievances and leave the district, or because Government have greater confidence in their own officials? If the former, Government are mistaken in their policy; if the latter, in their judgment. Mr. Lád is not a singular instance of an executive officer. Many of the Collectors in the khálsa districts may be found to be of the same type. An intense desire on the part of the chief executive of introducing all western reforms and giving a western appearance to our cities, encouraged by a band of subordinates little distinguished for anything else than their devotion to the work which their superiors allot to them, has been oftentimes the cause of standing complaints from many of our cities. Hitherto Government have been systematically neglecting such complaints; but we hope they will not follow the same course under similar circumstances in future. If anything is to be learnt from the Cambay case, it is this; and we hope the lesson will not be lost both on the people and on Government. The local self-government scheme promises to remove the difficulty in some cases at least, though it yet remains to be seen how much can be done by it.

Approves of the Government resolution on the recent exodus from Cambay.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 22nd April says:—The Government of Bombay's resolution on Mr. Spry's report on the recent khatpat at Cambay is all that could be reasonably desired. Judging from the spirit of the resolution, Mr. Spry's report must be a singularly able document. The Government of Bombay deserves great credit for its candid outspokenness and its desire to do justice to both sides. It is seldom, indeed, that State resolutions in such matters are free from the clever ambiguity which tells you everything except what you particularly want to know. Here it has been made abundantly clear to His Excellency the Governor in Council, and we doubt not to every intelligent reader, that there was gross exaggeration in the more serious charges against the late administration. The Mahájan is an all-powerful body in a small Native State, and when it works its power for evil, as it has partly done in this instance, it must be plainly told not to count upon the sympathy of an enlightened Government. On the other hand we see that Mr. Lád's administration gave some cause for popular discontent. The late administration seems to have been composed generally of 'zealous' officials, men who want a rude and backward community to be at once raised to the position of a civilized people. Mr. Lád and his young lions must give the rustics of Cambay fine roads and tanks and gardens, and lights and latrines and the thousand and one things they know of in Bombay. So they put the screw on wherever they can, and the underlings try to make a penny out of this fashionable civilization. The reforms are certainly necessary; but our reform-mongers must know that even reforms cannot be thrust down people's throats. It strikes us that poor Mr. Lád has tried to follow the zealous District Collector. What he attempted at Cambay, for which he has paid too dearly, is being done everyday by the district autocrat in British service. The decision of the Government in the present instance is eminently just, though in Mr. Lád's case at least we feel that the justice is too rigid. We find against him little more than weakness of judgment. We are glad, however, that the employment of relatives and friends has been so strongly condemned by Government. There are Native States managed by families and clans. A little friendly combination may be necessary, but when it is carried to excess this happy family arrangement is ruinous to the State as well as the subjects. [The Rást Goftár (105) of the same date expresses similar sentiments. The Káside Mumbai (98) of the 23rd April thinks that the resolution will not give much satisfaction to the people.]

Makes remarks upon the Government resolution on the complaints about the mal-administration in the Cambay State.

The Lok Mitrá (74) of the 22nd April observes:—Those who have paid any attention to the circumstances connected with the now famous exodus of the people of Cambay to Kanissa towards the end of the last year will be disposed to accept the general conclusions at which the Government has arrived on a consideration of the report of Mr. Spry, the Commissioner specially deputed to hold the enquiry. We are constrained to say, however, that the resolution is not so outspoken and full as we had a right to expect it to be, though for this hardly any blame attaches to the Government, which had to work with the materials placed at their disposal by Mr. Spry. That these materials were not submitted to Government fully and forcibly there is sufficient evidence in the resolution itself to show, and this accounts in a large measure for the omissions in, and the milk-and-water character of, the resolution. We have drawn our own conclusions of the grievances of the petitioners from the evidence as it has been published, and from what has been brought to our notice by persons in a position to know the real affairs of Cambay about the time of the enquiry; but we will confine ourselves at present only to the results of Mr. Spry's investigation as appearing in the extracts from his report embodied in the Government resolution, with many of which we cannot agree, and in the observations of Government thereon. On the whole, we approve of the Government resolution so far as it goes and agree with our contemporary of the Bombay Gazette that the whole of the evidence adduced before Mr. Spry together with his report should be placed before the public, which will then have an opportunity of judging for itself as to the real character of the administration of Mr. Shámráo Náráyan Lád and his friends, and as to the correctness of the observations and deductions of Mr. Spry. Whatever reason there may be for withholding Mr. Spry's report, which perhaps is regarded as a "confidential communication," (the expression is conveniently elastic) there can be none whatever for not publishing the evidence. [The Yajdán Parast (117) of the same date expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Comments on the resolution of Government regarding the recent affairs at Cambay.

In an article headed "The late Exodus at Cambay," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 23rd April says:—The gods of the Bombay Castle have said their benediction on the recent troubles at Cambay. There is an equal distribution of praise and blame. The late administration has been declared to be faultless, but only a little too anxious for progress and reform, and the poor Cambayites have been charged with exaggerating their grievances, which yet had 'a substratum of truth' in them. So far has officialism been vindicated; but are the public to be content with this? The conscience of Government may rest satisfied with the fact that an enquiry has been made, and a resolution published, as regards the results of the enquiry, for the information of the public. But are the public, we mean the Native public particularly, to complacently believe that several thousands of the usually peaceful and harmless subjects of a Native State left the protection of that State en masse without a more potent cause than the instigation of Mahájans and sowkárs? Secession for the purpose of making a demonstration against the ruling power is a rare phenomenon in this country, and it is not until the cup of bitterness is filled to the brim, until the people are goaded by mal-administration into resistance, that the peace-loving Hindu raises his voice against his má-báp Rája. We are quite willing to admit that Mr. Spry, who conducted the enquiry in this instance, has done his work with uprightness, sincerity, and without conscious bias, but as Political Agent previously connected with the State and the old administration, we fear Mr. Spry was somewhat disqualified to make a thoroughly judicial investigation and impartially report thereon. It was for this reason that we suggested an independent mixed commission of enquiry headed by a judicial officer of the character of Mr. Birdwood. The public would have gladly acquiesced in whatever result such a commission might have arrived at. The wrongs of our fellow-countrymen in Cambay would have been shown to be either real or imaginary; the character of the administration would either have been blasted or saved; but once for all a sure rule for future guidance would have been laid down. As it is, we cannot but think that the Government resolution, based on the report of Mr. Spry, is anything but satisfactory. It acquits Mr. Lád and his coadjutors of any wilful misgovernment, yet suggests their complicity in certain acts which were the subject of the charges, and declares them unfit for their posts. It treats the people who were offended against as the real offenders, but nevertheless admits that many of their complaints were not unreasonable. It approves of the Nawáb's action in dismissing Mr. Lád and others, and yet warns His Highness against showing too great a deference to the wishes of the opponents of progress. Surely the happiness and well-being of our countrymen in Native States is quite as important to the British Government as that of their own subjects, and the fortunes of the British power in India are in a great measure intertwined with and dependent upon the state of administration in the territories of the allied Princes and Chiefs of India. For these reasons we should have wished that a more thorough-going and judicial enquiry had been instituted into the causes of the late exodus of the Cambayites. We regret that all the papers on which the resolution of Government is based have not been published. Those papers would have shown the character of the enquiry instituted, what opportunities were given by Mr. Spry to the people to substantiate their charges, and how far the report is borne out by the evidence recorded. We are sorry for Mr. Lád, but we are still more sorry for the people who were entrusted to his care, and who, we are deeply persuaded, have not obtained full justice in Mr. Spry's enquiry. As we have said above, we do not accuse Mr. Spry with intentionally mincing the matter, but we fear his relation to the State as Political Agent could not have failed to give a certain warp to his mind which must have worked injuriously as regards the case of the complainants. If what appears on the resolution is the whole truth the people do not deserve our sympathy, and the sooner the inhabitants of the Native States are taught to appreciate reform the better. But if, as we fear, the whole truth has not come out in Mr. Spry's enquiry, then a very undesirable effect will be produced on the mind of the people, who will lose all faith in the efficacy of Government interference and official enquiries, and will be discontented and unhappy. Such a calamity the British Government are, we think, bound to avert, and it cannot be so well done by anything as by full and fair enquiries into all grievances, whether of their own subjects or of those of Native States in whose welfare they are vitally concerned.

Comments on the resolution of Government regarding Cambay affairs.

The Gujaráti (91) of the 22nd April says that the resolution of Government on the subject of the recent exodus from Cambay is so inconsistent that while Mr. Gonne styles Mr. Lád in one place clever and competent, in another place he sets him down as devoid of pluck in the administration of the State. The law of morality lays down that without the aid of discretion all virtues are useless or nugatory, and when Mr. Shámráo is declared devoid of discretion it is a thousand pities that anything should be said regarding his strength of character and goodness. Though a great many of the charges of mal-administration preferred against Mr. Shámráo and his colleagues could not be proved, what good can be said to have come out of Mr. Spry's investigation when the offenders have not been punished for whatever was proved against them. It often happens that many truthful statements are incapable of being proved, but then can it be inferred that there is no truth in them simply because they cannot be proved? Among the complaints lodged by the people of Cambay there were many that related to police oppression, but as no allusion is made to them in the resolution, is it to be inferred that a veil has been allowed to fall on them? The resolution of Government deserves approval in so far as it has exposed at least some of the tyrannical doings of the Cambay authorities, but it is not sufficient that the perpetrators of such acts should be allowed to escape with simple censure.

Says that the Nawáb of Cambay did not act rightly in dismissing the late Diwán, Mr. Shámráo Náráyan Lád, from his office.

The Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 22nd April observes that the Government resolution shows the machinations which were at work to bring about the fall of the Diwán and other high officers of the State who were unfortunate enough to give, through inadvertence, some trivial cause for offence to a semi-barbarous community led by designing wire-pullers into committing wild disturbances. The late Diwán, Mr. Shámráo Náráyan Lád, appears to Government to be able, well-meaning and energetic, and to have been fully impressed with the benefits of modern civilization. He meant to serve the State of Cambay to the advantage of the Nawáb and his subjects. However some of the means adopted to secure this end did not tally well with the conservative notions of the people, who are backward in the stage of civilization. The least dissatisfaction on their part with the work of the Diwán was a signal to the intriguers at court and to the disaffected in the bazár. By means of false alarm, false complaints and other means they managed to intimidate the Nawáb into dismissing the minister, whose faults, venial as they were, might under a more powerful and stable regime have at the utmost formed the subject of a mild reproof from superior authority. But the weak Nawáb was apparently unable to check the designs and other illegal proceedings of the intriguers, and submitted himself to their successful intrigues. His Highness and those about him ought to remember that there can be no security for the well-being of the State when the ruler is able to hold his own merely by changing his advisers on the frivolous demands of a mob put up to create disturbances by crafty characters. If His Highness has any sense of his own dignity and self-respect, he must feel humiliated to discover how improperly he was led into believing that his late trusted minister was the occasion of the ruin of the State, when he has comprehended the full meaning of the Government resolution. [The Vartamán Sár (114) of the 24th April advises the Nawáb of Cambay and his Diwán to find out the agitators of the recent disturbances and to duly punish them with a view to make an example of them. It is said that the leaders of the disturbance are forcibly levying contributions from the people to meet the expenses incurred by them and are holding out threats of excommunication if they refuse to contribute. If such pressure is being exercised, it is the duty of the Diwán to get the persons concerned to be punished. The Vartamán Sár also advises the new Diwán to be very cautious in placing confidence in and being guided by the advice of one Mahádev Parjárám, who was said to be one of the leaders of the recent agitation and who was considered a dangerous man by a former Political Agent at Kaira. The Gujarát Mitrá (72) of the 22nd April also offers similar advice.]

Is glad that the alleged complaints against the Gondal administration have been proved to be baseless.

The Bombay Chronicle (71) of the 22nd April is glad that the official enquiry into the complaints against the Gondal administration has resulted in proving the falsity of the charges. It would be well if feasible plans were devised to prevent intriguers from successfully converting the right of the subjects to publicly ventilate their grievances into the means of causing annoyance to their rulers. The instigators or ringleaders should be made amenable to punishment when found guilty of actively inciting ignorant people to create disturbances such as those in Cambay and Gondal. [The Vartamán Sár (114) of the 24th April condemns the conduct of the complainant Dámodar Manji and congratulates Mr. Báwa Miya on his having come off scathless from the ordeal.]

Disapproves of the changes in the Baroda Administration.

The Rást Goftár (105) of the 22nd April says that the British Government is responsible for all the recent changes that have taken place in the Baroda Administration. It cannot be maintained that Sir T. Mádhav Ráo and Mr. Pestonji Jehángir were very popular at Baroda. The former on account of his inclination to subserve to the wishes of the Europeans and the latter on account of his extreme straightforwardness could not succeed in gaining the hearts of the people. But from the demonstration of public feeling on the occasion of the departure of these two officers from Baroda one could gather that the subjects of the State were grieved at the loss of the services of these two valuable officers, whose experience, tact and skill were a guarantee for the proper administration of the State. The Rást however does not wish it to be inferred from this that the British Government had any hand in this affair. That Government may on the contrary have been displeased at the changes effected by the young Gáekwád, but nevertheless they cannot keep clear of any responsibility in the matter. Firstly, Government erred in conferring administrative powers on the Mahárája at an unripe age. With a more mature understanding the Gáekwád would not have so easily deprived himself of the services of such able counsellors. Secondly, Government effected a change in the Residency simultaneously with the bestowal of powers on the Mahárája. Mr. Melvill was Governor General's Agent at Baroda during the greater portion of the Regency, and he was the only officer thoroughly acquainted with the doings of the officers of the State, and he having been allowed to leave it there was nobody that could guide the prince, who was infatuated by his early accession to power, without running on the rock of intrigues. Thirdly, it was a mistake to have allowed Mr. Elliot to continue with the Mahárája on his acquiring independence. Mr. Melvill had recommended the separation of Mr. Elliot from the prince, but no sooner did Mr. Melvill turn his back on Baroda than Mr. Elliot began to exercise his influence in the State.

Berár Affairs.

Over-crowding of fourth class carriages on the G. I. P. Railway in Berárs.

The Urdu Akhbár (12) of the 8th April complains that of late the G. I. P. Railway Company have been over-crowding its fourth class carriages on the Berár line. Though these carriages ought not to take more than fifty passengers, more than sixty are sometimes found in each of them. The railway police in this part of the country is given to annoy and insult poor passengers. A few days ago a policeman serving on the Badnera station beat a poor Mahomedan without cause and drove away his wife and children from the station precincts. The railway authorities ought to enquire into this case and order the policemen not to treat the passengers harshly.

Says that revenue appeals to the Commissioner in Berár should be allowed to be presented at the head-quarters of the office when the Commissioner is moving in the districts.

The Varhád Samáchár (65) of the 23rd April observes that it is the practice of the court of the Commissioner in Berár that appeals in revenue cases should be presented to the Commissioner by the appellants in person. This practice puts the appellants to the trouble of sometimes going from distant parts of the district to the place where the Commissioner may be while moving on circuit. The inconveniences suffered by the appellants are diverse, particularly in the hot season, when the Commissioner is at Chikaldara. In civil and criminal cases appeals are received at the head-quarters when the officers themselves are moving in the districts. If a similar practice be adopted in regard to revenue appeals the inconveniences now suffered by the appellants will disappear. Some cases have actually occurred in which the appellants could not meet the Commissioner in time, on account of their not knowing his whereabouts, and therefore could not present their appeals.

Recommends that extra Assistant Commissioners in Berár should be promoted to the posts of Assistant Commissioners.

In alluding to the report that the Berár administration intends to abolish the posts of Assistant Commissioners and to increase the number of extra Assistant Commissioners, the Pramod Sindhu (50) of the 23rd April observes that it would not be right to do so, because by that arrangement Natives would be the sufferers. Of late Natives alone have been appointed Assistant Commissioners. Their pay is more than that of the extra Assistants though there is no difference whatever in the duties performed by both. The Assistant Commissioner can rise to the post of a Deputy Commissioner. The extra

Assistant has to continue in that post during the whole period of his service. The Assistant Commissioners who are serving in Berár are persons that have not served before in any capacity and cannot therefore get through a sufficient quantity of work. There are some extra Assistants who are able and experienced, and they should be promoted to Assistant Commissionerships while new appointments should be made in the ranks of the extra Assistants.

Suggests that the course of the river at Dongaon should be diverted.

A correspondent of the Varhád Samáchár (65) of the 23rd April observes that the river Dronávati passes through the town of Dongaon, and when the river overflows her banks in the rainy season several houses are washed away and much damage is caused. It will be better therefore to divert the course of her stream. The writer also complains that the present municipal commissioners of the town do not discharge their duties properly, and requests that able townsmen should be appointed in their places.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
5th May 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Administration of India: Comments on the agitation raised in England against Lord Ripon's — 3
Ahmedabad Jail: Complaint regarding the treatment of prisoners in the — 7
Appointments:
Approval of the intention of the Duke of Connaught to take up an appointment in India 3
Comments on the appointment of Mr. Lester de Fonblanque as Deputy Registrar of the High Court 6
Bombay Preventive Service: Some grievances of the — 8
Burmah: The British Indian Government ought to check the vagaries and follies of King Theebaw of — 4
Criminal law: Complaint regarding the injustice caused from a defect in the—of the country regarding the right of appeal enjoyed by Europeans to the exclusion of Natives 7
Export duty on rice: A request to Government to abolish the — ... 4
Irish affairs: Advice that India should take a lesson from the present state of — 3
Law Courts in Upper Sind Frontier: Complaint regarding a change in the jurisdiction of — 5
Local Funds Committee at Broach: A suggestion to the — 9
Locusts: Complaint regarding the havoc caused by — in the Ratnágiri District 8
Madras time: Expression of a hope that the Governor of Bombay will rescind his order regarding the observance of — in Bombay ... 10
Pársi Chief Matrimonial Court: Recommendation for the appointment of a Pársi clerk to the — 7
Pilgrims at Yamagnur: Suggestion of certain arrangements for the comfort of the — 10
Postal matters:
Complaint regarding the early closing of the post at Ránder ... 10
Suggestion of certain reforms in the postal arrangements at Bombay. 9
Prince's Dock at Bombay: An advice to the authorities of the — to have one or two pumping engines of their own 9
Public peace: A request to Government to deport to their country the Beluchis who recently created a disturbance at the Dádar station of the B. B. & C. I. Railway 9
Rájábái Tower on the Bombay University Library: Disapproval of the refusal of the Governor of Bombay to pay half the cost of lighting and repairing the clock on the — 11
Ratnágiri: Insufficient shelter to passengers on the — Bandar ... 9
Salvation Army: Comments on the compromise effected by the Chief Presidency Magistrate with the members of the — 7
Small-pox in Káthiáwár: Prevalence of — 10
Veterinary schools: Prayer to the Bombay Government to open— ... 4
Volunteer corps in India a burden on the State treasury 4

PART II.—Local Self-government—

Local Self-government: Complaint regarding the delay in the introduction of the scheme of — into the Bombay Presidency 11

PART III.—Legislation—

Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill:
Comments on the threat given by Europeans of withdrawing their pecuniary support to Government in the case of their passing the— 12
Disapproval of the compromise suggested by some Europeans in connection with the — that the European prisoners should be allowed the choice of being tried by European or Native Magistrates 12

PART IV.—Education. Page.

English school at Broach: Complaint regarding the appointment of a low-caste school-master in the— 12

PART V.—Railways—

Construction of a railway line: Comments on the proposed — either from Manmád to Dhulia or from Chálisgaon to Dhulia 13
G. I. P. Railway: Complaint regarding the employment of a shoe-maker to give water to passengers on the Lonávla station on the— ... 13
Rájputána Railway: Complaint regarding inconvenience to passengers by the— 13

PART VI.—Municipalities—

Bombay Municipal Corporation: An advice to the — to suspend the Contagious Diseases Act in Bombay:
The Bombay Samáchár 14
The Jáme Jamshed 14
Bombay Municipality: A request to the — to adopt certain sanitary measures in order to prevent cholera from assuming a virulent type. 13
Igatpuri: Complaint from certain employés of the G. I. P. Railway Company against the municipality of— 14

PART VII.—Native States—

Baroda: Disapproval of the changes in the — Administration ... 18
Cambay: Comments on the Government resolution regarding — affairs.
The Bombay Chronicle 18
The Gujaráti 17
The Indian Spectator 15
The Indu Prakásh 16
The Lok Mitra 16
The Mahrátta 14
Gondal: Expression of joy at the complaints against the — administration having been proved baseless 18

PART VIII.—Berár Affairs—

Diversion of the course of the river at Dongaon: A prayer for the— ... 20
Extra Assistant Commissioners: Recommendation for the promotion of— in Berár to the posts of Assistant Commissioners 19
Railways: Complaint regarding the over-crowding of fourth class carriages on the G. I. P. Railway 19
Revenue appeals: Presentation of — to the Commissioner in Berár should be allowed at the head-quarters of the office when the Commissioner is moving in the districts 19

RECEIVED 30 MAY 83 VIA BRINDISI

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 5th May 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayá	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do.	600
12	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do.	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyá Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	100
14	„ Arunodayá	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
20	„ Daivadnyá Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
21	„ Daivadnyá Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
22	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly	425
23	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
24	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
25	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
26	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
27	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
28	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	400
29	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
30	„ Jagan Mitrá	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
31	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*32	„ Karnátak Mitrá[4]	Belgaum	Do.	200
33	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	3,500
34	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
35	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	300
36	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
37	„ Mahárashtrá Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
38	„ Mahárashtrá Mitrá	Sátára	Do.	250
39	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
40	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
41	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
42	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly	700
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Do.	Do.	200
44	„ Nyáyá Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
47	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	250
48	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily	350
*49	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
50	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti) .	Do.	200
*51	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
52	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
53	„ Satyá Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	243
54	„ Satyá Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
55	„ Satyá Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
56	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	275
*57	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Weekly	200
*58	„ Shetakari	Poona	Monthly	400
59	„ Shiváji[3]	Do.	Weekly	200
60	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*61	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
62	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
63	„ Suryodayá	Thána	Do.	240

[1] Marathi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles. [4] Contains articles in Kánarese also

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
64	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
65	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly	250
66	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
67	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
68	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
69	„ Vichárahil	Málvan	Do.	300
*70	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
71	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*72	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
73	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do.	400
74	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
75	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	725
76	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
77	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
78	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
79	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
80	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
81	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
82	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
83	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	950
84	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
85	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
86	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
87	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
88	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do.	1,000
*89	„ Dnyán Prasárak	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
90	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
91	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
92	„ Gujarátí	Do.	Weekly	400
*93	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
94	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*95	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
96	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
97	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*98	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
99	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	700
100	„ Kusum Guchchhá	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
101	„ Nágar Udayá	Do.	Do.	300
102	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
103	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
104	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
105	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
106	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
107	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
108	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	400
*109	„ Saurashtrá Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
110	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*111	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
112	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
113	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár ...	Umreth	Fortnightly ...	62
*114	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
115	„ Vartamán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
116	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
117	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	300
118	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
119	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*120	„ Karnátá Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
	URDU.
*121	The Altáf	Bombay	Weekly	200
*122	„ Armagán	Do.	Do.	200
*123	„ Dabdabe Islám[5]	Do.	Do.	200
*124	„ Khádam-é-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
125	„ Khayir Kháh-e-Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly ...	300
126	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
*127	„ Muzhire Shawkatul Islám	Do.	Do.	200
	PERSIAN.
128	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

[5] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or ā) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

The Lok Mitrá (75) of the 29th April observes :—One remarkable result of the discussion provoked by the Jurisdiction Bill has been the enunciation of the fundamentary principles on which the stability of British power in India really rests. The fact is now being recognised that the greatest safeguards of the British empire in India are neither an adventurous policy beyond its frontiers, nor the terrors of repressive Government within, but the loyalty and gratitude of the people of India to their rulers. People gifted with political foresight, and not blinded by narrow-mindedness, selfishness or bigotry, plainly perceive that at no distant date the political history of the country will pass through remarkable changes, and that it is true statesmanship and sound policy to found the empire in the hearts and affections of the people, and not on bayonets and swords. Politically considered, this is the most important and practical outcome of the Ilbert Bill controversy ; and it is hoped that the fact will now be generally accepted as the true solution of an embarrassing difficulty. It is only by abolishing invidious and galling distinctions between Europeans and Natives, by cultivating friendly intercourse between them, by admitting freely and unreservedly qualified Natives of the country to a greater share in the administration of the country, and generally by treating them not as slaves or an inferior order of beings, but as friends and equals, that the British power in India will be consolidated.

Remarks that the loyalty and gratitude of the people of India to their rulers are rightly considered the safeguards of the British Indian rule.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 30th April quotes the substance of a news letter from Afghanistan, and observes that though the letter does not set forth all the phases of the position of the present Amir, still it sufficiently explains the difficulty which he has to face. The object of his contemplated visit to India in the next season cannot be any other than to beseech the assistance of the British Government to enable him to bring under subjection the refractory tribes that do not recognize his authority and adopt an hostile attitude towards him. And having regard to the circumstance that the British are actuated with a desire to court the Amir's friendship, the conclusion is easy that the British Government will readily respond to the call of their ally on the frontier. A glance at the portion of Indian history relating to the annexation of Oudh and Karnátic shows that the policy of compassing secret political ends by rendering such assistance as is desired in the present case is of a long standing. The Indu however emphatically asserts that the British Government would be committing a serious blunder if they sympathised with the Amir's cause on the strength of that policy and with the view of benefiting themselves. The case of Indian States was very different from that of Afghanistan. The people that the British had to deal with in India were illiterate, weak in numbers, and poor. The Afghans, however, are of a different stamp. They have been accustomed to independence for many years, and have been fully impressed with the idea that they will sacrifice their independence by recognizing the authority of Abdul Rahman. They are a strong and well-built people and death cannot frighten them. The report of the English having assisted the Amir will, instead of filling them with consternation, serve to exasperate and unsettle them. They have already had an idea of the strength of the British, and they might raise a commotion even before the Amir actually received assistance, which is not desirable. Under these circumstances the best plan for the Amir would be to throw off the garb of duplicity and to declare himself either in favour of the English or the Russians, or to be perfectly neutral, and for the English to extricate themselves from this imbroglio, unless they have special political reasons for acting otherwise.

Advises the British Government not to take up the cause of the Amir.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 1st May observes that the opposition raised by Europeans to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill is said to have been caused by their accumulated displeasure with certain measures of Government intended to benefit the Natives. This assertion has been substantiated of late to a certain extent. Several Europeans complain that the Government of India have commenced to gradually deprive Euro-

Says that the complaint set up by Europeans that the Natives are favoured to their prejudice under the present Government as regards their employment under the State is groundless.

peans of their rights by bestowing them upon the Natives, and in support of this complaint they state that certain posts in Government service which were formerly enjoyed exclusively by Europeans are now conferred on Natives. They argue that the Civil Service examinations are held in England for the benefit of Europeans, while the Natives are admitted into the service without having to pass any examination, and this they advance as one of the grounds for complaint. This system was sanctioned by Lord Lytton, whose object in initiating it was not to bestow higher rights on Natives to the prejudice of Europeans, but to tide over the difficulty created by the persistent agitation of Natives for admission into the Civil Service. The Natives represented that many difficulties stood in the way of their going to England for passing the examination, and prayed either that they should be removed or that the examination should be held in India. Lord Lytton and other higher authorities saw that if either of the prayers were granted a large number of Natives would successfully compete for admission so as to leave little room for Europeans, and that after the Natives had passed the examinations it would not do to refuse them admission. His Lordship therefore ruled in favour of the admission of Natives without prescribing any examination test. The Natives have not found such a system beneficial because according to it very few gentlemen are admitted to the service, while a large number of them would have entered it in open competition. Thus this arrangement has benefited Europeans while it has proved detrimental to the interests of Natives. Another complaint of the Europeans is that Natives are now appointed to posts in the uncovenanted service that have been hitherto enjoyed by the former. This score of complaint, however, has its origin in certain arrangements effected during the time of Lord Lytton. In order to prevent Natives from laying claim to all kinds of uncovenanted posts, His Lordship arranged that the higher and more lucrative posts should be reserved for Europeans, while the Natives should be admitted to the lower and meagrely-paid posts. This arrangement is also beneficial to Europeans and disadvantageous to Natives, since the latter have been excluded from the higher posts of the service. The third complaint of Europeans is that among the successful students of the Roorkee Civil Engineering College, Natives are preferred to Europeans for employment under Government. This originated in a protest made by Natives against the policy of allowing the students of the Coopers Hill Engineering College, maintained in England at the cost of India, admission to the Public Works Department to the exclusion of Natives. Instead of meeting this protest satisfactorily, His Lordship tried to soothe the feelings of the Natives by an arrangement under which the students of the Roorkee College are admitted only to the lower posts in the service, while the higher ones are reserved for the Coopers Hill College men. It will thus be seen that the complaints made by Europeans in regard to the employment of Natives in preference to them are groundless.

Is glad that the question of reducing the ecclesiastical expenditure of India is engaging the attention of Parliament.

The Gujarát Mitrá (73) of the 29th April is glad that Mr. Baxter has drawn the attention of Parliament to the necessity of reducing the ecclesiastical expenditure of India. The writer advises Europeans to make a saving out of their enormous salaries that they spend in luxuries, and thus to raise a fund for the maintenance of their Lord Bishops, Archdeacons and Chaplains. By doing so the European community would free themselves from the obligations to Natives and the State. It is also a hopeful sign that the question has engaged the attention of the Government of India. The Viceroy however is reluctant to deal with such a question, which is not very agreeable to his religious feelings, and wishes that it were entrusted to other hands.

Comments on the ecclesiastical expenditure of the Indian Administration.

The Panchánan (45) of the 29th April does not understand why India has been saddled with the cost of an Ecclesiastical Department. Why are so many Bishops and Chaplains maintained at the cost of the State? It may be that they are the religious teachers of the Europeans, but what connection have they with the people of India? The people of India never sent for them, nor did they evince any desire to be favoured with initiation into the truth of the Christian Gospel. Is this consistent with the policy of non-interference with the religious prejudices of the people?

Suggests certain alterations in the rules for the appointment of Natives to the Civil Service.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 30th April says that now that the Supreme Government have undertaken to initiate a reform like the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, they must see that the officers who have to be invested with the power of trying European offenders are well chosen. It is not that such a necessity was not felt and recognized hitherto. However, when the Bill introduced by Mr. Ilbert is passed into law, it will be incumbent on the Supreme Government to see that their nominations to magisterial posts give no cause for complaint, and to devise means by which Europeans will have no reason to be dissatisfied with those that are appointed to the Native Civil Service. The rules that at present regulate the appointments to this branch of the service are not as they should be, and have produced a great deal of discontent among Natives, and it would not be strange if the defects in the rules are made much of by Europeans when the Bill is passed. Under the present system little regard is paid to the education and attainments of the nominees, while interest and family pedigree occupy an important position in the qualifications for admission. This being the case, there is reason to apprehend that the officers appointed will not be able to do justice to the choice and that their incompetency will be a standing topic among the public. The public had from the beginning expressed themselves in favour of a system of competitive examination, but their view was pooh-poohed by the Imperial administration of Lord Lytton, who enacted these unreasonable rules and laid down the practice of preferring birth to merit. The correspondence between the Government of India and the India Office that led to these rules has exposed the narrow-mindedness of the then Viceroy of India. He insinuated that Natives could not come up to the Europeans in point of general ability, and therefore he intended to make a distinction in the treatment accorded to the two sections. But this insinuation has not been verified. The Secretary of State disapproved of many of the suggestions made by Lord Lytton, but he agreed with him in making high birth a paramount consideration and in giving the power of nomination to the Government of India. The result therefore has been that the nominations are not as happy as they should be, and that the interests of deserving men are not promoted. The demands of the Natives have from the commencement been that they should be treated with the same consideration as is shown to Europeans in the matter of admission to the Civil Service, and that an examination similar to the one held in England should be held in India under similar conditions, the standard of age being raised higher. The Natives have already been dissatisfied with the coldness with which their demands have hitherto been received, and the feeling of dissatisfaction will be aggravated if the nominations made by Government under the rules framed by them for admission of candidates to the Native Civil Service are such as will give rise to complaints after the passing of Mr. Ilbert's Bill. The only remedy which can meet such a contingency is that the present system of nomination should make room for that of competitive examinations. Then all cause for complaint will be removed and the bestowal of new powers on Native members will not be taken exception to.

Is grateful to Lord Ripon for several of his administrative acts and desires the prolongation of his Viceroyalty.

The Svadesh Vatsal or the Patriot (112) for the month of Chaitra, Samvat year 1939 (March-April 1883), gratefully acknowledges that various benefits have been derived by India from the British rule, and is convinced that in the end her connection with England will prove glorious. The Patriot dwells upon some of the acts of Lord Ripon's administration, such as the repeal of the Vernacular Press Act, the appointment of an Education Commission, the initiation of the policy of encouraging local industries, the scheme of local self-government, the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, &c., and expresses deep gratitude to His Lordship for the same, and earnestly hopes that the Home Government will extend the period of His Lordship's Indian Viceroyalty as prayed for in the several memorials sent to Her Majesty the Queen.

Expresses an opinion that the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal should be an English statesman.

In alluding to the reports that the Honourable Mr. Rivers Thomson ignored the claims of Mr. Gupta of the Bengal Civil Service to the post of Senior Magistrate of Police at Calcutta, that he promoted two Europeans in supersession of their Native seniors, assisted the Calcutta correspondent of the London Times in sending partial accounts about the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, conferred on the correspondent the post of an Assistant Secretary to the Bengal Government, and opposed the Jurisdiction Bill because he was displeased with the Viceroy, the Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 5th May observes that if all these reports have the foundation of truth the Bengalis are right in desiring that their Presidency should not be entrusted to Lieutenant-Governors of long Indian experience, but should be consigned to the care of able statesmen accustomed to the free atmosphere of English politics. European officials who reside in India for a long time become wilful, and learn to rule with a high hand. It is desirable therefore that Bengal, like the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay, should have a Lieutenant-Governor who is brought up in the purer atmosphere of English politics.

Says that the present system of assessment is faulty.

The Jagaddárdarsh (29) of the 29th April says that the mechanical system of assessing lands according to their quality without regard to the circumstances of the particular localities where they are situated is calculated to cause injury to the agriculturists. Such hard-and-fast tests cannot be reasonably made applicable to all parts of the country. The conditions under which the soil is cultivated in Sind do not apply to that in the Deccan, while those obtaining in the case of Kánara and Ratnágiri may not apply to other parts. It is a peculiarity with the Deccan soil that its crop cannot be anticipated with any degree of accuracy. The cultivators do not reap a full harvest even once in three years. There are no garden lands, while the crop of agricultural lands is dependent on rainfall, which is generally precarious.

Suggests certain reforms for the amelioration of the condition of the Indian cultivator.

The Shetkari (58) for the month of April regrets that the subject of the disadvantageous position of the Indian agriculturist in relation to other countries does not sufficiently occupy the attention of Government. It appears that under similar physical conditions the yield of crops in India is much less than that in other countries. In India wheat is produced at the average rate of 330 seers per acre, while in America the farmer reaps a produce of 800 seers for the acre. With the view of removing this anomaly, the writer suggests the following remedies and says that there may be many others :—(1) The assessment on land should be reduced and made permanent; (2) the assessment should be made leviable in kind instead of in money; and (3) the knowledge of agricultural science should be diffused among the cultivators of the soil. The writer then proceeds to explain the oft-repeated conveniences of levying the assessment in kind.

Complains of an increase in the duties levied at Mozambique on Indian goods imported into that port.

The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 4th May regrets that the Portuguese Government should have raised by twenty per cent. the import duties levied on Indian goods at the port of Mozambique, and hopes that the Government of India, who have already taken up the subject, will induce or, if necessary, coerce the Portuguese Government to retrace their steps. The augmentation in the duties has checked the Indian trade, particularly the rising trade of Bombay in local cotton manufactures, and it is gratifying to find that the Mill-Owners' Association have submitted a memorial on the subject to the Supreme Government.

Disapproves of the Government resolution on the subject of the discontinuance of pensions to the families of Native soldiers serving at Quetta.

With reference to the resolution passed by the Government of Bombay with the sanction of the Government of India, ruling that from the 1st May Native soldiers serving at Quetta shall not be considered as employed on foreign service, and that no claims to pension to their families will be allowed subsequent to that date, the Jáme Jamshed (9) of the 3rd May observes that the decision is an evident piece of injustice to the soldiers. The climate of Quetta is quite different from that of India. The extremes of severe cold and heat and the diseases prevailing at Quetta are unknown in India. The account given of this place by the column that was located there during the recent Afghan war has led the public to believe that it is a very unhealthy place, and that a person intending to visit it should either insure his own life or make his will before going to it. When the Native soldier goes to such a place as this on service, Government ought as usual to show some consideration to him. Every Native soldier is furnished with a copy of an order stating that the next of kin of every sepoy who dies while serving out of India is entitled to pension. This written promise ought to have dissuaded the Government of India from giving its sanction to the proposal of the Bombay Government. It is to be hoped that the Supreme Government will withdraw the resolution, but if this is not done, the heirs of the soldiers who die at Quetta should compel Government through the Civil Court to give them the promised pension. If for certain reasons it is considered necessary to enforce the new order, it should be held applicable to such soldiers as may enlist after 1st May 1883.

Points out the advantages of having a Native volunteer corps.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 29th April, in approving of a leading article in the Bombay Gazette on the volunteer corps in India, says:—The Indian volunteer has indeed been somewhat useful in saving to Government a considerable expense on military accounts, but if attempts had been at the same time made to form, where possible, a Native volunteer corps, Government would now have saved a considerable expense in addition. The arguments which the Gazette has adduced in support of the Anglo-Indian volunteer would apply much more forcibly and truly in the case of a Native volunteer. A Native corps would add as much to the defence of the country if not more as the English corps has done. Besides, in the case of a Native volunteer the annual expense per head will be even less than what it is for the English. Now the question is, are Natives so worthy of the confidence of Government as to be trusted with voluntary military organization? Our reply to this question is in the affirmative. We think that whosoever will carefully observe Native society from its highest stratum to the lowest, will be convinced that there is no disloyalty to Government observable in any class whatever. All that even a biased mind can find is a kind of passive uneasiness under the foreign Government in certain cases. If we inquire into the causes of this uneasiness we shall find that it is only a temporary feeling arising from the oppressive and uncongenial measures of the Government itself, which vanishes away in no time under a Government like that of Lord Ripon, which is distinctly bent upon removing the grievances of the Natives. If Natives are treated, as they were treated under the Government of Lord Lytton, with contempt for almost everything that they have, their habits, manners, religion, their physical as well as mental capacities, and even for their colour and dress, it is but human under such circumstances that those who receive this contemptuous treatment should feel uneasy at it. Another thing is that the feeling of contempt when it is once harboured leads English minds into manifest iniquities and barbarous cruelties, which are perhaps inconceivable to those who observe the Natives and their rulers from a distance. Such then are the causes of the uneasiness which sometimes arises in the Native mind; but it must be observed that the feeling is perfectly passive and politically innocent, for in spite of all its oppressiveness it is everywhere believed, at present at least, that the English rule is the best that India can have. If such is the state of the Native mind, there is no reason whatever why Government should not trust to the Natives this kind of voluntary military organization. There is no possible danger, while the advantages to Government as well as to the people are immense. Government will also have the advantage of adding local knowledge to military tactics in the case of a Native volunteer corps. Such local knowledge is absolutely necessary to make the volunteer system really serviceable. Government will moreover remove all the uneasiness that may be prevailing in any quarter by trusting to the Natives themselves the defence of their country and of the British rule, and by thus removing to a great extent the distinction which up to this time has been maintained between Her Majesty's subjects born in the British Isles and those born in India. By placing more confidence in the Natives, Government will increase the confidence of the Natives in itself. Such confidence is particularly needed when schemes like that of local self-government are undertaken. To the Natives themselves the formation of a Native volunteer corps is as advantageous as anything can be. We, the Maráthás at least, have yet fresh in our minds the traditions of our ancestors who displayed all on a sudden a wonderful military genius and capacities. These traditions are likely to fade away soon under the unceasing pursuit of personal ends. The first and foremost advantage to us then will be the partial revival of that spirit of bravery which our ancestors so prominently displayed. Besides, is it not shameful on our part to see foreigners enrolling themselves voluntarily in military service, apparently at least with the object of our defence? If Native volunteer corps are formed, we shall have an opportunity of showing that we are as anxious to take our share of the defence of our country and our Government as we ought to be.

Comments on the remarks of the Bombay Gazette on the so-called hostile attitude of the Native press towards the Anglo-Indian volunteers.

The Subodh Patrika (11) of the 29th April says:—The Bombay Gazette, in its issue of Tuesday last, complains of the hostile attitude taken by some Native journals towards the Anglo-Indian volunteers and ascribes it to the dissatisfaction caused by the opposition of the volunteers to the Native Jurisdiction Bill. The Gazette is mistaken in its account of Native feeling on this subject. No doubt the undignified, not to say the disloyal, conduct of the Calcutta volunteers in connection with the Jurisdiction Bill has shown them to be utterly unworthy of the confidence hitherto placed in them by the authorities, and has rudely shocked Native ideas concerning European volunteering. It has clearly shown that the Government of this continent of many peoples cannot rely on the support of these volunteers, or rather that it may count on their deadly hostility in carrying out any measures of a large and liberal policy the moment any of those measures appears to them opposed to the narrow and selfish interests of rampant Anglo-Indianism. But the opposition of Native journals to the volunteer movement has not arisen solely from this circumstance. To expect the Natives to sympathize with the volunteer system as it exists at present is absurd; for not only is there nothing to enlist that sympathy, but there is everything in it calculated to repel it. The volunteers look down upon the Natives with contempt, and shun their society to such an extent that the mere proposal to open their ranks to any Native, whatever be his social rank or position, is met with the declaration that they will resign in a body. Such being the relations of the volunteers with the Natives, the only reason why their existence might be acquiesced in would be on the score of economy in the military expenditure of the State. The Indian military system is already the most costly in the world. It costs the State not much less than a third of the gross national revenue, and nearly half of the net national income, and this with such a peaceful and law-abiding population to govern. The national resources are drained almost to the dregs. In order to keep the income up to the requirements of the ordinary expenditure, the State is still under the necessity of keeping up the license tax,—a tax which while it silences agitation by leaving the pockets of the influential classes untouched, presses very heavily on the poorest classes of traders. As regards extraordinary expenditure, it has almost invariably to be met by making large additions to the national debt, which entail an increasing burden of interest on each succeeding generation. If the volunteer system could lead to the reduction of the ordinary force, and thus effect a saving in the military expenditure, it would undoubtedly be welcome to all classes of the people, but it is clearly impossible to turn the existing volunteers to such useful account. The volunteers should be a body of citizens of all classes without distinction of caste and creed—citizen-soldiers in fact, who to save the country an enormous waste of public money on unwieldy standing armies, are ready to do such military service to the State as they are capable of rendering, and if volunteer corps are raised on this principle the Natives will gladly welcome the measure. But what has the present arrangement in common with such a system? The volunteers of the day are a mere supernumerary body and an exclusive class, who are supplied by the State with the means of sporting and exercise, and who superciliously look down upon Natives of all ranks and doubtless consider them as inferior beings and treachercus malcontents whom they are dressed and accoutred to guard. Expenditure on them, therefore, cannot be looked upon as economy, but is a wasteful addition to the already crushing military expenditure of the empire. And with all this the European volunteers have shown by their recent action in connection with the Criminal Procedure Code Bill that their allegiance is not to be relied upon. This was heretofore the one great point on which they prided themselves, but this credit they have forfeited by their unsoldierlike conduct. If you object to have mixed corps, let us have sectional bodies—but let the standing British force in India be appreciably reduced by the substitution of the voluntary system, and let the standing Native army be likewise reduced by the free addition of Natives to the voluntary forces, and then no one will object to the outlay on their account. But so long as Anglo-Indians are not prepared to depend on the sympathy and the co-operation of Natives, secured by equal laws and impartial administration, for the safety of the British power in India, they cannot expect hearty support from their Native fellow-subjects in their volunteering manœuvres. [The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 30th April expresses similar sentiments. The Arunodayá (14) of the 29th April advocates the abolition of the Anglo-Indian volunteer corps.]

Comments on the utility of Anglo-Indian volunteers in India.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 29th April says:—We are quite prepared to admit that the expenditure incurred by Government on account of our volunteers is comparatively small, but does the smallness of expenditure prove either the utility or the necessity of such a force? And if the existence of such a force is felt to be a necessity, can it stand as an argument against the enrolment of Natives as volunteers, when the avowed purpose for which the force is raised is the defence of the British Indian empire? The organization is peculiarly defective in that in the case of a European an amount of cajoling and exhortation is often found necessary to induce him to join the force, while the Native, who is all willingness in the matter, is summarily rejected from the volunteer service. And what are the grounds of his disqualification? Those who oppose his admission cannot accuse him of disloyalty to Her Majesty's throne, because the evidences of the existence of that loyalty are too strong to be gainsaid. We are open to admit that as foreigners our rulers may naturally not have that amount of confidence which they have in their own people; but when our worthiness for such confidence is proved by a course of events showing unquestionable loyalty to the British Crown, it is merely a perversity of intention not to recognize what evidently does exist, and what many an Englishman is so free and willing to admit. A volunteer force is admittedly not considered so effective as a standing army, the purpose of the former being only coextensive with the duties of guarding the different stations in the country where the force is located, when the regular force is sent out on an expedition. If the usefulness of volunteers is so limited, we cannot see how the admission of a number of Natives can be a danger to the British empire in India as some Europeans seem to suppose. Positive historical evidence proves that it was the Native army of the old John Company that placed the empire in the East in the hands of the English, and that historial evidence is enough to rebut the gratuitous assumption we have alluded to above. The worthlessness of the idea underlying such a supposition is patent to every careful observer, and none are more conscious than Natives themselves that their own welfare and that of their country are bound up with the permanence of British supremacy in India. We have often suggested the permanent location of the European army as one of the most efficient means of curtailing our military expenditure. But nobody seems to consider it his business to carefully consider the proposal. The question of the reduction of the expenditure in this branch and the maintenance of the present strength of the European force in India still hangs fire, and though we have been often promised the consideration of the same, no practical move seems to have been made towards a satisfactory solution of it. The Russophobist of every shade urges the increase of the European force on the ground of the near approach of the Russian bear to our frontiers, while others say that the strength of that army may be kept at its present level, though at the same time they propose to make up the required complement by increasing the number of our volunteers. But while both parties agree in the main, they seem to forget that the reduction of the army cannot produce any harm. A European army of sixty or sixty-five thousand men may have hitherto been found necessary, but are not the circumstances of the country changing so as to justify a reduction of the whole by one-third at least, the proportion reduced being made up by offering every facility to Native as well as European civilians to enrol themselves as volunteers? It may be that a volunteer force is not so effective as a standing army; but when a reduction of the strength of the latter is deemed necessary, it is as well that its place shall be supplied by volunteers. For our own part we are not against a volunteer force being raised, but we do object to its sectional character.

Makes certain suggestions for providing lepers with free board and lodging.

The Poona Vaibhav (47) of the 22nd April says that a correspondent of a certain English journal has suggested the advisability of confining all lepers in one place with the view of preventing them from coming into contact with other people. The Vaibhav, however, is of opinion that the sufferers from this disease should be provided with free quarters outside cities, towns and villages, where they should be fed at the expense of the State.

Recommends the removal of the duty levied on toddy and an increase in the duty imposed on spirituous drinks.

In noticing the memorial submitted by the mill-owners of Bengal to the Lieutenant-Governor of that province, complaining that the vice of intoxication has of late increased among their mill labourers, and praying that the sale of liquor may be prohibited within a radius of two miles from the locality in which the mills are situated, the Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 1st May observes that the British Indian Government are responsible for the addictedness of the poor classes of India to the vice of drinking. The poor working classes require some stimulant to drive away the fatigue of a day's labour, and nature provided them with the beverage of toddy, which is at once healthy and cheap. Spirituous liquors on the other hand are a slow poison, the consumer's longing for which increases day by day until it carries him to an early grave. Notwithstanding this fact, a practical bar has been placed on the use of toddy by the poor people by taxing it very heavily. The heavy tax on spirituous drinks also has served to make pure liquors scarce, and the poor people are driven to use adulterated mixtures which are merely poisonous. The cheap adulterated brandy which some of the poor people use is well known, and yet Government have taken no measures to prevent its sale. It is desirable therefore that the heavy duty on toddy should be removed, while a prohibitive tax should be levied on spirituous drinks.

Is not quite satisfied with the Government nominees to the municipal board of Ratnágiri.

With reference to the nominations made by Government to the municipal board of the town of Ratnágiri, the Bakul (16) of the 29th April observes that the selection has not been quite happy. The people of this town have shown that they know better than Government what persons are fit to be entrusted with their municipal government.

Points out the evils arising from the School of Industry at Dhárwár.

A correspondent of the Dhárwár Vritt (22) of the 26th April dwells on the losses that have followed in the train of the School of Industry at Dhárwár. Not only has the profession of blacksmiths and carpenters suffered, but the people have been subjected to a serious loss by being deprived of the cheap assistance of artisans of those classes who have now disappeared. Indigenous manufactures have been supplanted by improved machinery, the productions of which are thrown on the people who have no other alternative but to accept them, though at a cost out of all proportion to the quality of the articles received by them. The writer approves of the contemplated abolition of the school, and exhorts Natives to start an independent factory with the materials that are ready in the existing School of Industry.

The license tax at Broach.

The Broach Samáchár (84) of the 3rd May gives nine cases in which, in its opinion, the parties concerned have been over-assessed in the matter of the license tax, and requests the Collector of Broach to see that justice is done to these poor people.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 2nd May suggests that the postage on letters from correspondents to newspapers should be reduced. This reduction will enable correspondents to write more fully and legibly. than they at present do. The postal authorities are requested to take up the suggestion and obtain the required concession.

Suggests a reduction in the postage levied on the letters of correspondents to newspapers.

The Kaira Vartamán (97) of the 2nd May says that owing to want of repairs water finds its way in the monsoon into the elegant and celebrated building built by Mubarak Saiyad on the banks of the river Vátrak in the Mehmadabad district. It is unsurpassed by any other building throughout Gujarát and many visitors come to see it. It is therefore necessary that Government should attend to the repair of this specimen of ancient architecture, as otherwise it is likely that this valuable and splendid building will become a heap of ruins.

Complains of the want of repairs to an ancient building in Mehmadabad.

In noticing the report that Mr. Hewett, an Assistant Superintendent of the Revenue Survey, wounded his peon at the village of Mojhváni in the Ratnágiri District by firing at him, the Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 5th May observes that in the Bombay Gazette of the 4th idem it is mentioned that Mr. Hewett was kept under surveillance for some time in the traveller's bungalow by the District Magistrate of Ratnágiri, but was released on his furnishing security for his appearance when called for. This statement of the Gazette reminds one of the Viramgam shooting case, in which a Jain priest was accused by a European Inspector of the Salt Department of having fired at him; and though there were no marks on the body of the Inspector, the police kept the priest in the lock-up for several days. In the case of Mr. Hewett, the peon he fired at has been wounded and is lying in a precarious state in the hospital, and yet Mr. Hewett has been released on bail. This kind of invidious distinction between the treatment of Europeans and Natives is noticed by the Native public with displeasure. It is however to be hoped that justice will be allowed to take its due course in this case.

Disapproves of the release on bail of Mr. Hewett of the Revenue Survey who wounded his peon by firing at him.

The Sharabh (57) of the 2nd May says that the disclosures made by Mr. Warburton in his report on the working of the Thuggi and Dacoity Departments in the North-west and the Panjab, regarding the oppressive and corrupt conduct of police officers, call for serious consideration. Apart from the care of life and property, the police are entrusted with the care of the honour of the people and are invested with extensive powers. The Sharabh is of opinion that such failings in the members of police forces are due to imperfect education, and suggests the employment of educated people with the view of putting an end to the commission of such obnoxious acts.

Suggests the employment of educated men in the police forces.

A correspondent of the Suryodayá (63) of the 30th April disapproves of the intention of the authorities to establish a police station at Dongri in the Thána District. He says that this village is quite in a corner of the tract which is frequently disturbed by crimes for the prevention of which the proposed police station is to be established. The village of Gorái is in a central position and a police station existed there in previous years and effectively checked crimes. The latter is therefore the best locality for the establishment of a police station.

Wishes that the police station proposed to be established at Dongri should be opened at Gorái in the Thána District.

A correspondent of the Yajdán Parast (118) of the 29th April observes that the number of policemen at Bandora is small in proportion to the population, and the necessity for an additional police force was shown the other day when the disorderly Baluchis and Afghans visited the place. The Superintendent of the Thána District police is requested to tell off more policemen to this town.

Requests the Superintendent of the Thána Police to appoint additional policemen to guard the town of Bandora.

The Rást Goftár (106) of the 29th April says that it is very discreditable to the British Government and to the police of Bombay that the people about the towns of Máhim, Dádar and Bandora should be in a state of jeopardy regarding the security of their life and property. A gang of nearly 150 Baluchis has been infesting these parts for many days, and it is to be regretted that the police instead of making an attempt to quell the disturbance have joined these gangs. They wander in these parts with the ostensible purpose of trading in false pearls, &c., and hold certificates from Hyderabad authorities certifying to their trading avocation, but their real object seems to be rapine and plunder. It behoves the authorities to adopt some effective measures for putting a stop to the panic that has been caused by these unwelcome visitors. [The Gujarát Mitrá (73) of the same date refers to the same subject and asks the Gujarát police to be ready to deal with these troublesome people.].

Suggests the adoption of certain measures for putting a stop to the panic prevailing in Salsette.

The Rást Goftár (106) of the 29th April is sorry that the University of Bombay has of her own accord brought upon herself a heavy fine by engaging in a trivial and unjust contest with Government, who have declined to pay the cost of lighting and repairing the clock on the Rájábái Tower. And what has been the cause of such a fine? Nothing else than the mere sentiment of not acceding to the observance of Madras time. The Rást has from the beginning been in favour of the adoption of Madras time by the public of Bombay in response to the call of His Excellency the Governor. As all the railway and telegraph offices observe Madras time and as all Government offices have been made to follow suit it is very convenient for the public to adopt the same time even in their private affairs. Madras time is, in other words, a mean time for the whole of India. Madras occupies astronomically such a middle position that it is an honour due to the Madras observatory that Bombay should follow its mean time. A literary institution like the University should be the foremost to do honour to a scientific institution like an observatory, and it is strange that she is beh ndhand in doing her proper service to the public. If however the University has any objection to the epithet "Madras," let her drop it. What we call Bombay time is not the correct time. The proper time is either 16 minutes in advance or 16 minutes behind the time observed in this city, and there is only a difference of 7 or 8 minutes between the real Bombay time and the so-called Madras time. The epithet "Madras" might therefore conveniently be dropped and the mean time might be styled Bombay time if that would soothe the susceptibility of the Bombay public. It is a matter of regret that the Bombay University should have failed to understand such a simple question in its proper bearing, and she deserves the fine that has been inflicted on her for her meaningless opposition.

Says that the University deserves the punishment inflicted by Government for her opposition to Madras time.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 30th April says:—The long expected thunderbolt has after all fallen on the University clock tower. Mr. Premchand Roychand perhaps now regrets that his bounty has been the cause of so much heart-burning in high quarters. The clock has been put up, but it is as good there as if it were not. The resolution of the Senate that it shall keep local time and obey the sun and not His Excellency the Governor has drawn forth the ire of the offended Government, who have now issued a mandate that threatens to mar the usefulness of Mr. Premchand's bounty. The Government refuse to have anything to do with the clock. They will not pay either wholly or partly for its repairs and lighting. They leave the Senate to do what they like with it; and the Senate, while they can meet and resolve, have not money to shame the authorities by taking the clock into their own hands and looking after it. Now that the Government of Bombay have been, after nearly six months' fighting, able to come to terms with the Salvation Army, they ought to find some way of coming to terms with the University Senate as well. It does not add to the dignity of the Government to be splitting hairs on matters so trivial. What will they say in London if they hear that in Bombay the Government and the people are Comments on Sir James Fergusson's conduct in regard to the Rájábái Tower clock.

quarrelling about Madras time and Bombay time? Sir James Fergusson probably sees that he has made a mistake in showing his partiality for Madras time, and His Excellency would probably withdraw his resolution if he could only do so without feeling mortified by a sense of humiliation. But he should look at the question from a nobler standpoint. As Governor of Bombay, he has, no doubt, to guide the public, but in guiding them, he has to be guided himself not by his own feelings but by the feelings of those over whom he is appointed to rule. There is no mortification caused if a Governor yields to a popular desire. In so yielding he only makes himself popular and proves that he is open to persuasion and conviction. Bombay has for years stuck to local time, and under no Governor save under Sir James were the good people of this city told that their local time caused serious inconvenience to both public and private business. The experiment has been tried and public opinion has pronounced itself most clearly against it. Why should Sir James think that if he were to withdraw his resolution he would simply humiliate himself in the eyes of the people over whom he is set to govern? The wiser and more dignified course would be to confess the mistake and rectify it in deference to public opinion. [The Lok Mitrá (75) and the Yajdán Parast (118) of the 29th April express similar sentiments.]

Comments in connection with the action of the Governor of Bombay regarding the keeping of Bombay time by the University clock.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 29th April says:—What an undignified spectacle? The Jupiter of the provincial Olympus is wroth at the Senators of the University because they will have nothing to do with Madras time. His Excellency is riled and well he may. But it must be remembered that he has brought himself to this pass. Autocracy in such small matters is absurd. The enlightened public cannot brook it. In fact it resents it. Sir James must now put up with it instead of fretting and fuming. It would have redounded to his credit had he gracefully given way to the wishes of the public. We think the best course is, now that Government have declined to have anything to do with the tower, to set a subscription on foot. Let it be as low as annas 8 and as high as Rupees 100, and we dare say a sufficient fund will be gathered to pay the expenses of lighting and repairs. The Municipal Corporation can contribute a moiety. [The Vartamán Sár (114) of the 1st May also disapproves of His Excellency the Governor's action in this matter, and remarks that His Excellency is showing his Conservatism, which may be defined as afterthought or even stubbornness in everything. Mr. Ashburner was hitherto censured for coming in the way of public interests, but His Excellency is in no way inferior to him. What fresh boons have the people received during the independent Government of Sir James after the departure of Mr. Ashburner? What has the public got in the matter of the scheme of self-government? Where is the Local Self-Government Bill? To what works has not His Excellency brought forward objections, and in what has he not managed things according to his own wishes?]

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Suggests that every Native Magistrate should be empowered to try European offenders.

The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 5th May quotes a case that recently occurred in Bengal in which a poor Babu was prevented from prosecuting a European offender on account of his inability to lay his complaint before a European Magistrate, and observes that the proper course would be to empower every Native Magistrate to try European offenders. This the Jurisdiction Bill does not do, and yet the Europeans have raised a great outcry against the Bill.

Regrets that the Calcutta High Court has given its opinion against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Yajdán Parast (118) of the 29th April regrets that the Calcutta High Court should have given its opinion against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill. The Bombay High Court, with the exception of a single Judge, recorded its opinion in favour of the Bill. This difference between the opinions of the two Courts may be attributed to the circumstance that while the Calcutta

Court has been influenced by the excitement of passion and race feeling, which have disturbed the European community of Calcutta, the Bombay Court had no such influence to warp its judgment, and therefore it has considered the measure with due calmness and impartiality.

Railways.

Points out the advisability of effecting a reduction in the grain rates at present levied by the G. I. P. Railway Company.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 29th April, in an article headed "The Bombay Chamber of Commerce and the G. I. P. Railway Grain Rates," observes:—When the importance of the growing export of wheat has engrossed the serious attention not only of the traders in that commodity but of the Imperial Government, we may take it for granted that the very opportune representation that has now been made by the Chamber of Commerce will be favourably considered by the G. I. P. Railway Board in England. And to say that that public spirited body of merchants have made out as complete a case as could be desired is to give it but scant praise. For, really the representation is full of facts and figures, the accuracy of which it would be difficult to deny. Coming so soon after that exceedingly interesting and most able pamphlet by the anonymous Calcutta writer, and after the elaborate and statesmanlike observations made on the wheat trade in Major Baring's recent financial statement, the arguments urged by the Chamber derive additional significance and support. The comparative table of grain rates as charged on the G. I. P. Railway stations, from Khangam to Jabalpore on the Rájputána-Málwa line, and on the Sind and Panjáb line, is indeed very striking. It shows clearly how the railway which taps grain fields from the shortest distances charges the heaviest rates, while that which sweeps away the granaries from the farthest places charges the cheapest rates. The percentage of average rate per mile is greater on the G. I. P. than on the Rájputána line by full one pie and a little over or is three times as much. This is most extortionate. Why should this be the case? The Agent of the railway in question alleges that the grain traffic rate does not pay its present share of the guarantee. This is a most fallacious principle to go upon. The Railway Company is blind to the suicidal policy it has maintained for years. And if it is still powerful enough to ignore the voice of the Chamber and the public on grave matters affecting not only private but public interests, it is owing to the entire absence of competition. Were there another rival railway which could side by side tap the wheat traffic of the Deccan and Central Provinces, the G. I. P. Railway Company would soon see the imminent propriety of reducing its rate. In fact, the very force of circumstances will oblige it to do so. The railway authorities think that they can make hay so long as the sun shines, that is, so long as they are virtually the monopolists. It is this pernicious monopoly that is retarding the export of wheat from the Central and Deccan provinces in such quantities as is desirable. It is this that indirectly prevents all stimulus to extension of the acreage of wheat fields in the districts through which the line passes, and it is this profitable monopoly which the railway authorities seem determined to keep in their hands so long as they can. Are the Government of India to shut their eyes to the evils of the monopoly? If the railway authorities will not yield to public pressure, why, the best thing is to build a rival State railway. The Chamber can successfully agitate for it. The G. I. P. Railway entirely forgets the wholesome principle that receipts in the long run increase in proportion to the volume of traffic; and the volume of traffic entirely depends on rates. The lower the rates, the greater the volume of traffic and consequent receipts. The committee of the Chamber has pertinently pointed out the increased traffic on the Rájputána and Sind lines owing to lower rates, and it very reasonably asks the G. I. P. Railway Company to do the same. It has very ably exposed the fallacy of the Agent's reasoning touching the plea of the non-payment by the rate of its share of guarantee. It is therefore to be earnestly hoped that the G. I. P. Railway Directors will see the eminent desirability of complying with the representation now made by the local Chamber for the reduction of the grain rate. It is also to be hoped that the Local and Imperial Governments will fully support that representation, as it is urged on behalf of great public interests.

The Poona Vaibhav (47) of the 29th April complains that great inconvenience is caused to passengers on account of the mail trains of the G. I. P. and the B. B. & C. I. Railway Companies not stopping at their stations at Dádar. There are corresponding stations of both the companies at this place and passengers desirous of taking the mail trains from either line are obliged to undergo a deal of trouble, which would be saved if the managers of both these companies recognized the necessity of stopping their mail trains at this convenient station.

Suggests that the mail trains of the G. I. P. and the B. B. & C. I. Railway lines should be made to stop at Dádar.

The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 3rd May gives credit to the authorities of the B. B. & C. I. Railway for paying due attention to the comforts and conveniences of its passengers without making any invidious distinction of caste or creed, but observes that notwithstanding this there are several stations on this line between Colába and Bandora that do not afford due conveniences to passengers. Though an expensive passenger traffic goes on on this line, yet none of the stations except the Grant Road have waiting rooms. Moreover the stations are ornamental and costly, but are so ill-built as to afford little protection to passengers from the sun, the rain and the cold. There is also such a small number of benches on the platforms that they are quite insufficient for the requirements of passengers waiting for trains, and Native ladies rich or poor are frequently seen standing for want of seats. The Marine Lines and Churney Road stations are particularly wanting in these conveniencies. It is to be hoped that the Company will remove the inconveniences complained of before the commencement of the approching monsoons, and if they fail to do so the Consulting Engineer to Government should compel the Company to remove the complaints at once.

Says that the stations between Colába and Bandora on the B. B. & C. I. Railway do not afford the necessary conveniences to passengers.

The Hitechchhu (74) of Ahmedabad of the 3rd May complains of the insufficient supply of drinking water at the railway stations to third class passengers by the Rájputána-Málwa Railway. The railway authorities have employed two watermen, one of them being a Bráhman, at every station for giving water to passengers free of charge. As the major portion of the travellers are Hindus, one Bráhman waterman is unable to supply water to all the Hindu passengers within the short time for which the train stops at a station, and the result is that most of the Hindu passengers, especially children, have to go without it in this hot season. The watermen are not supplied by the railway authorities with vessels for holding water, and it is hard to expect these watermen to supply themselves with the required vessels with their pay of five rupees. It is also in vain to hope that the Bráhman waterman shall keep an assistant, for he will not be paid anything either by the railway authorities or by the passengers. It is therefore necessary that the railway authorities should employ more than one Bráhman waterman at every station and should supply them with the necessary utensils. Strict supervision should be exercised over these watermen. If the railway authorities cannot do so, they should allow watermen to sell water at the stations. By this arrangement passengers will be kept well supplied with water, for it will be in the interests of the watermen to do so.

Insufficient supply of drinking water at the stations of the Rájputána-Málwa Railway.

Municipalities.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 29th April, in referring to the scheme of extended water catches at Vihár and Tulsi proposed to be undertaken by the Bombay Municipality at an expense of 10 lákhs of rupees, observes :—It is to be hoped that there will be found at to-morrow's meeting of the Municipal Corporation half-a-dozen sturdy citizens who will denounce this fresh folly about to be perpetrated and agitate for a comprehensive system of independent water supply. Mr. Arthur

Says that the Bombay Municipality should take up the Tansa lake scheme instead of wasting ten lákhs of rupees on the construction of extended water catches at Vihár and Tulsi.

Crawford from the beginning condemned the construction of the Tulsi reservoir as a piece of the greatest financial folly. He was firmly persuaded that it would fail to meet the requirements of the growing population of the city, that in fact all the money that might be spent on the "Tulsi tea cup" would be sheer waste. But his advice was never taken. The sage members of a former Corporation sanctioned the works. They were to cost at first 17 lákhs. The estimates then rose to 40 lákhs. And the wonder of wonders, they actually cost 58 lákhs when completed! That is to say, a sum less by 2 lákhs only than that for which Mr. Crawford could give an independent supply equal to that of Vihár by the Tansa lake scheme! Now we are convinced that sooner or later the Tansa scheme will have to be considered. Our advice is that the Corporation should reject the makeshift scheme of 10 lákhs now proposed, as it would scarcely arrest the water famine so much dreaded. Let it courageously face the expenditure of 60 lákhs for the Tansa scheme and agitate for the construction of that lake. Thus it would confer a real boon on the city and save the public funds the present worthless expenditure of 10 lákhs. Let it remember that even now, if the Tansa reservoir is taken in hand, it will cost really a kror and 20 lákhs, for the cost of the Tulsi lake must be added—the Tulsi lake in which 58 lákhs have been wasted away. We repeat it would be financially cheaper even now to build the Tansa lake than to build it 10 years hence. [The Káside Mumbai (99) of the 27th April also does not approve of the municipality involving itself into fresh expenditure by undertaking the construction of extended water catches. The Lok Mitrá (75) of the 29th April expresses similar sentiments.]

Prays for the discontinuance of the Contagious Diseases Act in Bombay.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 29th April says:—The British House of Commons has sealed the doom of the Contagious Diseases Act in the United Kingdom, and that by a considerable majority. It is high time for the new Corporation to imitate Parliament when the expenses in connection with the local Contagious Diseases Act again come before them for consideration. The infamy of the Act is in itself condemnatory. All the capital cities of Europe, with their most perfect organizations, have been unable to bring within their meshes the large percentage of those who clandestinely defy the law. That is the weakest point. But it has for years past afforded the opponents of the Act the strongest argument against its retention. The subject has been threshed threadbare. Committees and Royal Commissions, blue-books and statistics—all combined have now completely attacked the Contagious Diseases Act citadel and dismantled it. And it would be fool-hardiness on the part of the provincial autocrats to persist in their vain attempt to continue the Act in the city. Let them be wise in their generation. Let them acknowledge their fallibility. There is nothing wrong in doing so. Nay, they will rehabilitate the reputation they have long since earned for unreasoning stubbornness by undoing this miserable piece of protective legislation. Sir Richard Temple's so-called scientific nostrums for the health and morals of the city are being slowly condemned as so many devices of the mountebank. The scientific drainage is now unmasked in all its nakedness. And here is this scientific Contagious Diseases Act which was to make this city a highly virtuous one condemned by the first legislative assembly of the world. Oh! What mischievous legacies has Sir Richard bequeathed to Sir James! Will not Sir James Fergusson throw them up and earn the lasting gratitude of the suffering citizens? [The Lok Mitrá (75) of the 29th April expresses similar sentiments.]

Condemns the introduction of the new drainage system into Bombay.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 29th April quotes extracts from an article on "the Sewers of London and Paris" which appeared in the Pall Mall Budget of 6th April, and remarks:—Let the official advocates who have always dinned in our ears the untold advantages to result from the make-believe system of "scientific" drainage foisted on the city by the notoriety-hunting Sir Richard Temple ponder over the statistics of mortality, and let them, if they dare, give their opponents an effective rejoinder. The percentage of deaths in Paris from typhoid fever, diphtheria, small-pox, measles, and scarlet fever has doubled itself in three years from 1879 to 1881. What does this fact indicate? That the underground system of drainage in Paris is creating the same havoc in the population there as here. Similar causes give similar results. Has not Dr. Blaney proved by statistics that since Kámáthipura has been converted into a sewered district the mortality has nearly doubled itself there? How closely the results in the two cities tally? But it must be borne in mind that Paris is situated in Europe and that she is nearly 50 degrees removed from the Equator; while Bombay is situated in Asia and is removed only 19 degrees from the Equator. Again, the Parisians' habits of living are hardly to be compared with those in vogue in a promiscuous population such as we have in Bombay. It should also be remembered that the engineering staff of Paris is incomparable, and that her municipality expends millions of francs on her Health Department. Her organization is almost perfect. And yet here is the precious result that people die from the noxious gases escaping from the sewers at an annually increasing rate of 35 per cent.! These fearful mortality statistics eloquently condemn the fatal system. What has Mr. Ollivant to say to this? What has Dr. Blanc and the sturdy phalanx that surrounded him a few weeks ago in the Framji Cowasji Institute to urge against the Paris mortality? Have not the opponents of the new drainage system repeated over and over again that the system is "utterly unsuited" to this city and the people, that the out-fall at Warli is the most dangerous being windward, and therefore liable to contaminate the pure atmosphere, and that the water-supply is utterly inadequate for the flushing of the drains? Has not the Calcutta Committee of Inquiry shown that an extraordinary quantity of deposits had accumulated in the unflushed sewers for many a month, and that a regular army of halálkhors had to be employed to clear the deposits with the view of facilitating the easy flow of liquid matter? The new system is condemned, and pneumatic drainage, which is simple, unscientific and withal free from all the horrors and dangers of the rival system, is recommended. There is much to be learnt on the subject, and yet there is a class of men in the city who are infatuated enough to make the public believe in the inestimable virtues of the precious system they are unceasingly advocating and endeavouring by might and main to force on a voiceless and helpless people! They are not public benefactors but public murderers. We again raise our voice against the arbitrary attempts of the Municipal Commissioner and his friends to push on with railway speed this most fatal system of underground drainage. Bombay to a man ought to arouse herself and compel the authorities to desist from converting this salubrious and first city of the empire into a vast sepulchral mound.

Requests the Health Officer of Bombay to prohibit the importation and sale of rotten mangoes.

A correspondent of the Kaiser-i-Hind (98) of the 29th April requests the Health Department to prohibit the importation and sale of rotten mangoes in the town of Bombay. It is well known, observes the writer, that poor people use rotten fruit and cholera breaks out as a consequence. In the interests of the health of the city rotten mangoes should not be allowed to the consumed.

Complains that Vihár water was not procurable at the recent street fire in Tamarind Lane, Fort, for two and a half hours after the discovery of the fire.

The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 4th May observes that on the occasion of the recent street fire in Tamarind Lane in the Fort, Vihár water was not procurable for extinguishing the fire for two and a half hours after the discovery of the fire, and that similar great delays have frequently taken place on other occasions. It is really incomprehensible why so much tardiness is allowed in opening the pipe and diverting water to the place of the catastrophe, while the fire spreads unchecked in the meantime. It is therefore to be hoped that the Corporation will not fail to take immediate steps to ensure better arrangements for the future. [The Káside Mumbai (99) of the 4th May complains of the scarcity and bad quality of water at present supplied to the city. It also complains of the want of water, especially on occasions of fires, and requests the municipality to attend to the matter.]

In noticing the proposal made by the Municipal Commissioner of Bombay for the construction of a wide road from the verge of the Esplanade to the Custom House, to pass through the Tamarind Lane in which a fire recently occurred, the Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 3rd May observes that the project is calculated to prove very costly, as the ground in that part of the Fort sells at a very high rate, while valuable buildings will have to be removed to carry out the project. This quarter of the Fort is also very healthy and no heavy expenses need be undergone for the improvement of its sanitation. The Corporation ought therefore to consider the project very carefully before sanctioning it.

Observes that there is not much need for the proposed road from the verge of the Esplanade to the Custom House through the Tamarind Lane.

It is gratifying, observes the Lok Mitrá (75) of the 29th April, that at the last meeting of the Town Council there was some discussion on the subject of cholera, and the Municipal Commissioner stated that he had taken what were considered sufficient precautionary measures for the present against the importation of the epidemic into Bombay. However, the posting of an inspector on the Byculla and Grant Road railway stations to remove persons suspected of suffering from cholera to the hospital, and making provision for disinfection, are hardly sufficient precautionary measures. As Dr. Blanc very properly pointed out at the meeting, cholera is a disease that will not survive in a clean place, and will die out where there is no putrefaction or decomposition. The first thing, therefore, which the Health Department ought obviously to do is to pay greater attention to cleaning the town. The accumulations of filth in some of the lanes in the native town are absolutely sickening, and although no small blame attaches to the lower classes of Natives with their proverbially filthy habits, yet it must be said that Native quarters are not attended to in the matter of scavenging with half the care and activity that is displayed in the parts inhabited by wealthy and influential Natives and Europeans. If the Health Department, with all its costly machinery, cannot or will not attend to the cleanliness of these parts of the city, what is the use of having such an establishment at all? If it is found necessary to strengthen it, or provide it with more efficient and qualified hands, by all means do it, but see that these highly paid officials do their duty instead of frittering away their time and energy, as Mr. Dosábhái Frámji complained, in doing what does not properly appertain to their functions. [The Yajdán Parast (118) of the same date and the Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 30th April express similar sentiments.]

Remarks that the quarters of the city of Bombay in which poor people reside ought to be thoroughly cleaned in order to prevent cholera committing much havoc.

The Gujaráti (92) of the 29th April brings to notice an act of flagrant injustice perpetrated by the Town Council and the Municipal Commissioner and requests the municipal authorities to investigate the subject properly. A new piece-goods market is being built on the site of the house that was lately burnt by fire in the Goldsmith street near Mumbádevi. It is said that a rival of the owner of this market has, with the view of causing injury to the owner, offered Rs. 30,000 to the Municipal Commissioner for the construction of a new road through the site of the new market. The Municipal Commissioner being tempted by this bait laid the matter before the Town Council, who at their meeting on the 13th April acceded to the proposal of the Municipal Commissioner for the construction of a road. On the 19th idem a notice was served on Mr. Tribhuwandás calling on him to give a portion of his land for the construction of the road. The Municipal Commissioner would not have taken this step if he had thought over the consequences of his doing so and had consulted the provisions contained in sections 154 and 156 of the Bombay Municipal Act. In December last Mr. Tribhuwandás submitted to the Commissioner a plan of the market he proposed to build, and the Commissioner permitted the construction of the market. Why did not the Commissioner think of the road at that time? The truth of the whole affair is that piece-goods traders are afraid that the construction of such a market will prove prejudicial to their interests and Requests the attention of the Corporation to an act of injustice committed by the Town Council and the Municipal Commissioner.

that therefore one of their clique has come forward to bribe the municipality to retract its permission—and the Municipality has accepted the bribe. The Commissioner ought to consider whether the offer made is prompted by no interested motives, and even if it were, there is no provision in the law to enable the municipality to purchase property at the expense of a third party. Under section 156 it is incumbent on a municipality to pay for such purchases from its own treasury, and under section 154 such procedure requires the sanction of the Municipal Corporation, which has not been obtained in this case. The very circumstance that the reporters of the public press were not allowed to be present when this question was discussed in the Town Council shows that there is something unfair about the business. If the Corporation were to sift the matter they would know that this is simply a quarrel between two market owners, that Mr. Tribhuwandás' rival anticipates that the plan of the market will be spoiled by the construction of a road to pass through it, and that thus his present position will not be affected by it. Perhaps the rival is unwilling that the defects in the piece-goods exposed for sale should be brought to light, and is therefore willing to sacrifice Rs. 30,000 for the sake of screening deceitful traders. It is to be hoped, therefore, that under these circumstances Mr. Ollivant will see fit to withdraw the notice he has served and not involve himself in personal contests.

Prays the municipality of Chiplun to open a charitable medical dispensary in that town.

A correspondent of the Bakul (16) of the 29th May represents the urgent necessity for a charitable medical dispensary at Chiplun and prays the municipality of that town to establish one. No good Native vaidyas are to be found here, observes the writer, and sick persons suffer very much. It is to be hoped that the committee will not fail to open an institution at once.

A suggestion to the new municipal board at Ahmedabad.

The Hitechchhu (74) of Ahmedabad of the 3rd May says that landlords are required to procure the permission of the local municipality before building or making any changes in their properties. The order given by the municipality sometimes states that the applicant is permitted to carry on building operations according to the sanction given by the City Survey Department. Now when an inspector of the municipality finds that the landlord has in laying the foundation encroached upon four or five inches of the municipal ground, he files an action against the landlord before a Magistrate. The managing committee of the municipality do not visit the place in question, but accord permission for prosecution to the municipal inspector at his request. This system causes unnecessary trouble to the poor and illiterate landlords. It is therefore necessary that the managing committee should visit the place before sanctioning a prosecution. A difference of a few inches generally arises in the measurement of land carelessly undertaken, and therefore the committee ought to be very careful in sanctioning prosecutions. It would be profitable to transfer this work to the City Survey Department. The municipality would thereby save about Rs. 2,000 per annun as the services of three inspectors would be done away with. The municipality will also have to pay nothing to the City Survey Department as it already defrays half of the expenses of that Department. The Survey Department should be instructed not to act against municipal rules in this matter and to adopt a certain form of sanction. The people would, by this arrangement, be saved a good deal of bother. If the new municipal board at Ahmedabad does not like to act upon this suggestion, it should itself decide such cases and not refer them to the City Survey Department.

Native States.

Says that the British Government should encourage mutual intercourse between the various rulers of Native States.

In an article headed "The Independence of our Native States," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 30th April says:—Some months back the Chief of a considerable Native State began to make preparations for a journey of 200 miles. The Chief intended to visit brother States while on his tour, to study the different administrative institutions in them, to secure a solution of certain political problems, and to devise special means for the amelioration of the condition of the people of his State. A rough draft of this project was shown to the British officer accredited to that State, who not approving of it set it aside, and the Chief was then obliged to accomplish his journey without having an opportunity of gaining its collateral objects. Such is the rumour on the tapis, though it cannot be said how much truth there is in it. A reference to the treaties and engagements with Native States, ratified during the administrations of Warren Hastings and Lord Cornwallis, and an observation of the present practice, show that the British Government have taken special care to prohibit mutual intercourse among Native States independently of the knowledge of the British Government, and that they have watched with jealousy any intercommunication between them. The question natually arises, what must be the cause of this feeling of jealousy? The answer is that a sense of fear has taken possession of the British rulers that such intercourse if allowed might develop into intimacy, that might lead to unity of action, which might affect the foundations of the British rule in India. There were strong reasons for the entertainment of such a fear in the days of Lord Lake, when the extent of the British dominion was limited and the Native Chiefs were independent and powerful. But the circumstances have now thoroughly changed. Now the British dominion has extended nearly throughout the whole of India, while the Native States are few and far between, and even those which exist are weak and dependent on the British Crown. Under such circumstances, and with the knowledge that any hostile attempts on the part of Native Chiefs are sure to prove futile, is it not impolitic to look upon them as dangerous men, to keep a strict eye on them, and to prevent all mutual intercourse between them? Even supposing that the Chiefs of all respectable Native States were allowed to hold a consultation, and that they, by comparing their position with that occupied by their forefathers, felt humiliated at the fall they have suffered, what would be the upshot of all this? Nothing. They have no strength to regain their former position. Their armies have been reduced to the lowest proportions and are scarcely sufficient for the protection of their States. On a consideration of these facts the conclusion is irresistible that all the stringent supervision exercised by the British Government on Native States is uncalled for. Such supervision is only calculated to cherish a feeling of disaffection among the States and is an obstacle to reformation. There are various matters on which Native Chiefs can consult their brothers with advantage, and every facility that is afforded for the development of intercourse between them is sure to improve their tone and thus to make them useful to the British Government. Such a line of policy will prove a great step towards the good of the country, and will proclaim the generosity of the English nation. It will also serve to remove the feeling that is rankling in the breasts of Native Chiefs, viz., that they do not enjoy the confidence of the British Government. Lord Canning was perfectly aware of the necessity of fostering a feeling of regard on the part of Native States towards the British Government, and with this view he allowed the right of adoption to the rulers of such States whenever necessary. The policy of Government, however, in this latter respect has begun to change of late, but if Government really are in favour of the continuance of the Native States in their integrity, it is necessary that they should leave the right of adoption intact. In conclusion, the writer suggests the adoption of measures that will remove the defects above pointed out.

Says that the policy of the British Government with regard to Native States is objectionable.

The Gujarátí (92) of the 29th April says:—It is very surprising that the British Government connive at the maladministration prevailing in small Native States, and do not interfere in the affairs thereof so long as their proper interests are not at stake; but when matters come to a crisis, they do not hesitate to administer censure to the offenders irrespective of their authority to do so. If Government possess the power of such interference with Native States, why is it that they do not resort to action in the preliminary stages of such misgovernment? There is every reason to believe that if Government were to take timely measures, much of the trouble that is caused under the present system would be avoided. Moreover the inquiries instituted by Government are through the Political Agents or their Assistants, and the result of such inquiries is unsatisfactory, inasmuch as the kárbháris of the Native States concerned spare no pains to gain over to their side the officers that are appointed to sit in judgment on them. There is a great deal of injustice done in small Native States, and various taxes are levied on the people. There is reason to think that but for the British Political Agent such injustice would not continue. The Diwán represents the condition of his charge to the Political Agent in his own way, who reports the same to Government. The Political Agents are generally watching for an opportunity to put in their own creatures as Diwáns. The Chiefs cannot run counter to the wishes of their Agents, and must accept the latter's nominees whether they will or no. The Diwán then sets himself to the task of providing for his relations or friends at the expense of the State. Persons that are utterly innocent of law are raised to the position of Chief Justice. The dregs and refuse of other places find shelter under the roof of Native States. In many cases responsible posts are conferred on persons that have been incapacitated for further service under British Government; nay, such officers are expected to place the administration on a sound basis. Various instances can be cited in support of the assertion that the kárbháris in Native States are as a rule incompetent, wanting in strength of their purpose and courage of their convictions, and are merely the creatures of the will of the Political Agents. Is it not astonishing then that persons of this stamp should be expected to reform the administrations of Native States? Is it incorrect to say that the policy of the British Government favours such maladministration in them?

Recommends the appointment of a commission for the purpose of determining the rights of the rulers and subjects of Native States.

The Gujarát Mitrá (73) of the 29th April says that it has become a common occurrence with Native States that the people leave their homes and find shelter in neighbouring territory whenever they find cause for dissatisfaction with their rulers. The people of Lunáváda have followed the lesson of Cambay, Junágad and Dhrángadra. The people of this State on a former occasion left the State, but were induced to return on promise of certain concessions in matters of taxation. It is said that the Chief Justice, Mr. Ramshankar, is to a great extent responsible for this state of things. This officer is represented to be uneducated and is nevertheless said to direct the affairs of the State. Though it is but proper that Mr. Ramshankar should be dealt with in a fitting manner, still it would not be fair to place inplicit confidence on all that the people represent. Such occurrences make it necessary for the British Government to interfere in the affairs of Native States, and it is therefore desirable that Government should appoint a commission for the purpose of laying down, in co-operation with the representatives of the States and the people, rules that might regulate their administration in point of public expenditure and dispensation of justice. In some States justice is actually sold, and this causes great vaxation to the people. The Mitrá has no faith in the check and supervision exercised by Political Agents and their Assistants, and therefore recommends the appointment of a commission as above suggested or the adoption of such measures as may appear necessary in this behalf.

Advises Government to take care of the princes that undertake a tour to England.

The Rást Goftár (106) of the 29th April approves of the tendency observable in the Native princes of Gujarát to recognize the advantages of travels to the different part of India and Europe. It is a good sign of the future of these States that their rulers should break through the trammels of the zenana and should show a readiness to imbibe a tincture of European ideas of refinement and civilization. Hitherto their world was the nutshell of their harem and they were the tools of their wives and intriguing ministers, and though such princes are not wanting even at the present day, still the circumstance that two of our princes have returned from England, that two have gone, and that two contemplate undertaking the voyage, bespeaks a tendency towards a much-wished-for reform in the Native princes. The British Government are acting very wisely in encouraging these princes in their object, but it is feared that they do not observe as many precautions as are necessary. The advantages of such travels, though patent, can be neutralised in no time in the absence of sufficient safeguards. England is a place for improvement as also for degeneracy. Ignorant people have greater chances of being led astray than of being improved in the absence of any wholesome restrictions. Government might argue that sufficient care is already being taken of these princes by the appointment of governors to attend on them, but so much is not enough. Such governors, and especially those that are Europeans, are only so in name. They pay more attention to their own enjoyments than to their wards. It might also be maintained that these princes are on account of their education proof against evil temptations, but it would be wrong to say so. The so-called education of these princes is simply superficial and is a mere delusion. It is distressing to hear of several injudicious and high-handed acts of these princes. If therefore Government are in earnest, they must devise sufficient measures for keeping an honest guard on these Native princes during their travels instead of allowing themselves to be led away by the shallow education of the wards and the so-called honest intentions of their guardians.

Does not approve of the contemplated appointment of a Governor for the administration of Kashmir.

The Satyá Shodhak (55) of the 29th April does not approve of the contemplated appointment of a Governor for the administration of the State of Kashmir. It is believed that this new Governor will make his head-quarters at Shrinagar and will manage the affairs of the whole State. It is not, however, clear whether the Mahárája is to be deprived of all his power, but if such a policy is in contemplation it is certainly a mistaken one. Government will lay themselves open to the charge of inconsistency by initiating on the one hand a policy of conferring the privileges of local self-government on the people and at the same time usurping the dominion of a Native Chief on the other. The present ministry are Liberal and their antecedents do not proclaim them capable of such injustice, but it is likely that some clever officer has put such a proposal in their head. It would however be neither just nor advantageous to adopt such a course of action. Even if the Mahárája of Kashmir were guilty of maladministration, such extreme measures do not appear justifiable. He may if necessary be assisted by a competent European and a council of experienced and qualified members elected by the people. This is the only consistent solution of the problem, and it is to be hoped that the Viceroy will accept it.

Disapproves of the Government resolution on the slaughter of the Maiyás by the Junágad police.

The Indu Prákash (9) of the 30th April says:—The resolution of the Government of Bombay on the complicity of the Junágad Darbár in the massacre of the Maiyás is anything but creditable to the fair-mindedness of that Government. There is an air of disingenuous criticism about it which is very disappointing, and instead of being a dispassionate review of the events which led to the dreadful tragedy it has all along the appearance of a special pleading. The Government throughout the resolution betray an anxiety to gloss over admitted facts such as reflect discreditably on the Junágad Darbár. Every sort of ingenuity that the human intellect could devise has been tried in this document to show that the members of the Junágad Darbár are good and honourable men whom it would be ungrateful to punish because they went a little out of the way and indulged in a little bit of barbarity by taking the lives of only 74 miserable Maiyás. One should have expected at this juncture and in such a matter a masterly document from the pen of Government, taking a thoroughly dispassionate and statesmanlike view of the whole case and dealing with its issues on high political grounds. But he who reads the present resolution of the Government of Bombay finds nothing but disappointment and indignation as the result of its perusal. The members of the Junágad Darbár have been let gently down; the poor Maiyás who (according to Government themselves) were in the most cowardly manner butchered and whose heads were afterwards severed from the trunks to be publicly exhibited under the eye of the Junágad Darbár are represented as men who deserved no better fate than that which awaited them at the hands of the Junágad sibandi. The only consoling feature in this by no means fair action of the Government of Bombay is the dissentient minute of one of its members—the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft. That official has had the courage to view the matter in its real light, and his minute is thoroughly in keeping with the opinion which the public has emphatically expressed on this question. He is the only member of His Excellency's Council who has striven to rise above the temptation to support official action and the Káthiáwár Agency through thick and thin, and he puts the whole case in the only way in which it ought to be stated and finds that the uneducated men who form the Junágad Durbár ought to be set aside and the administration of the State placed in wiser, better educated, and more humane and less barbarous hands. And what are the grounds on which the Government of Bombay have so easily declared the Junágad Darbáris innocent? After criticizing the resolution in detail, the writer proceeds to remark:—Placing the admissions made by Government against the Darbár on one side, and the explanation given of those admissions on the other, it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that while the admissions stand, the explanation proves to be weak and puerile. Were the case placed before a jury, we entertain very little doubt that their verdict would go against the Darbár. We regret that Sir James Fergusson has made light of a barbarous atrocity and let the unscrupulous conduct of the Junágad Darbár pass without so much as a rebuke, not to speak of punishment. Even in 1857, when the whole of India was threatened with a mutiny, the English rulers never for a moment jeopardized their position by running wild and meeting massacre by counter-massacre, though the situation was such as could have justified even the most wicked barbarity. Compared to the mutiny, this Maiya secession sinks into nothing. It was no rebellion whatever; there was not the least indication of a desire on the part of the Maiyás to fight; and yet they were massacred in a manner that, it would be idle to deny, was quite abhorrent to human feelings. Still, even admitting that the Darbár acted most injudiciously, the Government of Bombay try to defend them and let them gently down by attempting a miserable explanation of their conduct. To what are we to ascribe this miscarriage of justice? Sir James Fergusson is indeed a conscientious, high-minded, and hard-working Governor. That we are quite prepared to admit; but His Excellency has a failing in him which mars his better nature. He is singularly weak-minded. He trusts too much to official reports and has not the firmness to stand fast by his own views. The present resolution proves very clearly that while His Excellency has been able to see the worst points in the case of the Junágad Darbár, he has not been as able to rise above official blandishments and give those worst points the weight they deserved. What shall we say of a resolution which on the one hand says that the Darbáris acted most carelessly and impulsively, while the Maiyás were in a helpless position and died as hopeless fugitives, never indicating at any time an intention to pillage or plunder, and rushes to say on the other that the Darbáris were right in what they did, because from an obscure paragraph in a Bombay vernacular paper there was reason to believe that the Junágad merchants were leaving their homes for Bombay through fear of the Maiyás. A resolution more inconsistently drawn up we have not perused, and it is sad to think that so humane a Governor as Sir James has defended an admittedly barbarous deed. [The Yajdán Parast (119) of the 29th April and the Pársi Punch (105) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Comments on the Government resolution on Junágad affairs.

In alluding to the resolution of Government on the subject of the massacre of the Maiyás by the Junágad Darbár, the Rást Goftár (106) of the 29th April observes that the Nawáb has been fortunate in escaping from severe punishment on account of the division that took place in the Council of His Excellency the Governor. The Rást is not sorry for the escape of the Nawáb and is of opinion that the Maiyás have won their case. Government have indulged in a gentle rebuke, while the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft has couched the censure in severe language. Though the writer cannot agree with the dissentient member of Council in recommending the infliction of the punishment proposed, still he considers as just the language used by the honourable member. He however does not understand why the Government have thought fit to let the curtain drop on this affair with merely a mild censure. The fact stands that the Maiyás were needlessly massacred. While the extenuating circumstances in favour of the Darbár are that the police and the general administration are in a semi-barbarous condition, that the Maiyás have been vexing them for many years past, and that whatever measures were adopted against the Maiyás were adopted with the express approval and permission of the Political Department. It is not known who began the onslaught, nor is any proof forthcoming to show that the police were the aggressors. It is therefore just that the police should have the benefit of the doubt, and having regard to the vexation hitherto caused to the Darbár by the Maiyás and the furious nature of the Arab forces, it was natural that matters should have assumed the aspect they have done. Under these circumstances it was in keeping with the aims of justice that the Junágad Darbár and the police have been left unpunished for the massacre, but it was unjust that Government should have neglected to notice the conduct of the Darbár more severely than they have done. It has also been made clear that the Darbár ordered the heads of the slain to be piled and borne on carts with all the pomp of a triumph, and that the Nawáb went in a procession to congratulate the police on the perpetration of the massacre; and it is very strange that Government should have treated such cruelty with nothing more than a word of mild admonition. Government should certainly have noticed the conduct of the Darbár with severity and should have punished the Political Officers that were at fault in the matter. [The Bombay Samáchár (83) and the Akhbáre Sodágar (79) of the 30th April express somewhat similar sentiments.]

Comments on the Government resolution regarding Junágad affairs.

The Gujaráti (92) of the 29th April says that the resolution of Government on the subject of the massacre of the Maiyás by the Junágad Darbár is looked upon with dissatisfaction in all quarters. It is difficult to judge of the real gist of the resolution when the senior member of the Council does not assent to it, while the opinion of the junior member cannot be received with any weight inasmuch as he was formerly the Political Agent of Káthiáwár and it was he who sanctioned the imposition of the tax on the Maiyás that was the remote cause of the present crisis. The protest of the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft though severe is nevertheless true, though there are some points on which the Gujaráti differs from the honourable member. Colonel Barton does not deserve to be merely censured in the matter, but should be dismissed with the members of the Darbár who were allowed by the Colonel to exercise their own discretion. It is not proper to reduce the number of guns that are enjoyed by the Nawáb, inasmuch as he was a mere tool in the hands of his kárbháris. There was no reason why the Bombay Government should have passed a resolution in opposition to the views of the senior member of Council. On former occasions Bhávnagar and Porbandar were punished very severely for acts that were insignificant when compared with the massacre of the Maiyás. It is of no use appointing a commission at this stage of affairs, because even if the tax on the Maiyás were reduced there are very few that can take advantage of the girás haks and the remainder must lapse to the State.

Disapproves of the resolution of the Bombay Government on the massacre of the Maiyás by the Junágad police.

The Hitechchhu (74) of Ahmedabad of the 3rd May says that the public will not regard the Government resolution on the slaughter of the Maiyás as just. Colonel Barton's conduct in this affair is more reprehensible than what the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft thinks it to be. The Nawáb of Junágad is not guilty of the massacre as Mr. Ravenscroft thinks, for he is a rash youth, unacquainted with the ways of government and is led by Mr. Bávdin and others. Hence the old and useful officials of the State are responsible for this tragedy. The people knew from the very beginning that the Junágad officials would escape very lightly, as they had influence with the members of Government and the Political Agency. It is not to be wondered at that this view of the people has proved correct. The offer of the Bombay Government to help the commission to be appointed by the Junágad State for the investigation of the rights of the Maiyás is a mere blind. The result of Mr. Hammick's labours in the Gondal enquiry is fresh in the public mind, and if he is appointed on this commission the people will be dissatisfied with his nomination. The people think that this cruel and barbarous massacre has been hushed up. With a view to satisfy the public mind, the Government of India should call for all the papers connected with it. If the Government of India do not of their own accord take up this matter, the widows of the slaughtered Maiyás should go to Simla taking with them the resolution of the Bombay Government and lay their grievances before the kind-hearted Viceroy. If the Government of India refuse to interfere in the matter, two or three courageous Maiya women ought to go to England with a view to lay their grievances before Parliament. As however the helpless women cannot do so owing to want of funds, &c., some kind-hearted gentleman ought to start a public subscription and lay the matter before Parliament through Mr. Bright. [The Vartamán Sár (115) of the 1st May refers to the result of the enquiry into the recent disturbances at Cambay and Gondal and wonders that the people have been found to blame in both of them. It is apparent from the resolution on the massacre of the Maiyás that Government have become the advocates of the Junágad officials. Sir James Fergusson will immortalize his name by his Conservatism and by his resolutions on the scheme of local self-government, the Junágad tragedy and similar other matters, as Lord Dalhousie did by his policy of annexation of Native States. Is he not endangering the safety of the British Empire? Did not Lord Dalhousie's policy give birth to the Indian mutiny? It was a mutiny of a few—that of fanatic sepoys. But if such a thing were to happen presently it would be a great rising of the people. Sir James should therefore exercise foresight. Fortunately the whole of India is not in such hands! We have a sensible ruler like Lord Ripon in India, and Messrs. Gladstone, Bright, Fawcett and others in England. Moreover there is the British Parliament to appeal to. Justice however has not altogether departed from the Presidency. The sentiments expressed by the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft in his minute are undoubtedly very weighty, truthful and crushing. Compared with this minute the Government resolution appears miserable. Mr. Ravenscroft deserves to be congratulated on his minute. The Vartamán Sár concludes by advising the helpless Maiyás to fight out their cause to the end in a constitutional manner, and wishes them success in their endeavours. The Bombay Punch (82) of the 5th May considers it a great misfortune that the oppressors of the Maiyás have not met with even half their desert. It is the good fortune of the Junágad officials that they have escaped so very lightly.]

Prays Government to publish the whole of the papers in connection with the massacre of the Maiyás by the Junágad police.

The Lok Mitrá (75) of the 29th April observes that the tone of the Government resolution on the Junágad tragedy, and the vigorous and outspoken dissent of the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft, make it more than ever necessary for the public to have placed before them the whole of the evidence and the reports of the officials on which the Government resolution is founded. It is impossible not to view with suspicion the carefully softened rebukes which the Government have given to the Junágad Darbár, and the scrupulously polite regrets they have expressed at the part it took in that unfortunate massacre, while the dissenting member of Council has thought it right to express himself otherwise. In view of this strong expression of opinion by such an eminent member of the Governor's Council, the public have a right to call for the papers connected with the incident. No practical good can ever result from such inquiries as those held at Junágad and Cambay on such occasions if the public are to be content with the thrice filtered opinions of Government founded on vague reports. [The Subodh Patrika (11) of the 29th April expresses similar sentiments. The Bombay Chronicle (72) of the same date also requests Government to publish all the documents bearing on the case, and observes that even by the light of the Government resolution and the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft's minute the crime of the Junágad Darbár appears to be one calling for more serious notice than the Government would appear disposed to take. The Maiyás may be blamed for venial faults common to semi-barbarians of their class, but their conduct at the very worst afforded not the least justification for the harsh and thoughtless proceedings pursued towards them; nor could it be construed into any excuse for the brutality perpetrated towards the unfortunate clan, much less for looking with forbearance on the inhuman rejoicings of the Darbár at the savage butcheries perpetrated by the Junágad police.]

Comments in connection with the enquiry into the recent disturbances at Cambay.

The Subodh Patrika (11) of the 29th April says:—The result of the recent inquiry held at Cambay, the report of Mr. Spry, the Political Agent, and the Government resolution regarding that investigation all point to one conclusion, namely, that the troubles of the late Diwán of the State, Mr. Shámráo Náráyan Lád, were due to his over-zeal for the good of the State he was serving. Before the investigation began it was widely rumoured that the Diwán and his subordinates had by their oppression driven the people mad, but no disclosure of any deeds of oppression has been made, and we are glad to see that Mr. Spry not only absolves Mr. Lád from the charge of misbehaviour, but gives him credit for able management. Mr. Lád's only fault appears to have been his introduction into the State of measures of reform which are always freely adopted everywhere under British administration, but for which it seems the ignorant people of Cambay were not prepared. The measures were looked upon by the people as innovations depriving them of their rights and privileges. Under such circumstances it is to be regretted that the Nawáb hastily dismissed Mr. Lád from his service instead of waiting to see the result of the investigation. With the experience that he has gained and with a due caution from the Political Agent, Mr. Shámráo would have seen his mistake and curbed his zeal if he had been allowed to remain in the State.

Comments on the resolution of Government regarding Cambay.

Referring to the resolution of Government regarding Cambay, the Gujarát Mitrá (73) of the 29th April recommends the restoration to their original places of officers that were proved to be innocent, and suggests that officers like Mr. Dámodardás should receive the costs incurred by them in defending themselves against the charges brought against them. It is also necessary that the intriguers who caused such an amount of trouble to the State and the British Government should be hunted down and visited with severe punishment in order that the subjects of other States might take a lesson from them.

Comments on the result of the Gondal enquiry.

The Samsher Báhádur (107) of the 27th April, in referring to the result of the Gondal enquiry, remarks that it was difficult to prove the truth of the allegations made by the complainant against the Mahomedan officials of the State as long as they were not removed from their posts during the time for which the enquiry lasted. The complainant had urged the same thing from the very beginning. No courageous man could ever come forward to give evidence against a tyrannical officer so long as he was on his post, and it is possible that the same thing has happened in this case. The intrigues prevailing in Native States are not a matter of secrecy. When a courageous man comes forward to expose the oppression prevailing in them, he should be given sufficient help. Otherwise mismanagement cannot be put a stop to.

Berár Affairs.

Makes suggestions in connection with the new rules for the examination of pleaders.

The Pramod Sindhu (50) of the 30th April observes that the eighth section of the new rules for the examination of pleaders requires that persons already practising as vakils shall procure a license from the Resident on payment of certain fees within two months from the date of the promulgation of the rules, and that the application for the license shall be accompanied by a certificate from an officer the Resident may name. The rules came into force on 2nd April, and though nearly a month has elapsed, yet the name of the officer required to be named by the Resident has not been published. The rules for the examination of vakils ought to have been translated into Maráthi and circulated for the information of all vakils, since those practising in small towns are not likely to be cognizant of their existence unless specially informed of the same. The Sindhu hopes that the necessary steps in the matter will be immediately taken.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
12*th May* 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Ábkári: Recommendation for the removal of the duty levied on toddy and for an increase in the duty imposed on spirituous liquors ... 10

Administration of India: Expression of gratitude to Lord Ripon for several of his administrative acts and of a desire for the prolongation of his term of office... 5

Amelioration of the condition of the Indian cultivator: A suggestion regarding certain reforms for the— 6

Amir of Afghanistan: The British Government should not take up the cause of the— 3

British Indian rule: The loyalty and gratitude of the people of India to their rulers rightly considered the safeguards of the—... ... 3

Civil Service of India: Suggestion of certain alterations in the rules for the appointment of Natives to the— 5

Complaints: Regarding want of repairs to an ancient building in Mehmadabad 11

Duties levied at Mozambique on Indian goods: Complaint regarding an increase in the— 6

Ecclesiastical expenditure of India:
- Comments on the— 4
- Expression of joy at the question of the reduction of the — engaging the attention of Parliament 4

Employment of Natives: Groundlessness of the complaints raised by Europeans regarding the extensive — under Government ... 3

Judicial matters: Disapproval of the release on bail of Mr. Hewett of the Revenue Survey who wounded his peon by firing at him ... 11

Land assessment: Faulty character of the present system of — in the Bombay Presidency 6

Lepers: Suggestions for providing — with free board and lodging ... 10

License Tax at Broach: Complaint regarding the assessment of the— ... 10

Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal: Expression of an opinion that the — should be an English statesman 5

Municipal Board of Ratnágiri: Disapproval ot the Government nominees to the— 10

Pensions to the families of Native soldiers serving at Quetta: Disapproval of the Government resolution on the subject of the discontinuance of— 6

Police:
- A request to the Superintendent of the Thána Police to appoint additional policemen to guard the town of Bandora ... 11
- A suggestion for the employment of educated men in the — forces... 11
- The proposed police station at Dongri should be opened at Gorái in the Thána District 11

Postal matters: Suggestion for a reduction in the postage levied on letters of correspondents to newspapers 11

Public peace: Suggestion for the adoption of certain measures for putting a stop to the panic prevailing in Salsette 12

Rájábái clock tower on the Bombay University Library: Comments on Sir James Fergusson's conduct in regard to the—
- The Indian Spectator 13
- The Indu Prakásh 12
- The Rást Goftár 12

School of Industry at Dhárwár: Evils arising from the— 10

Volunteer Corps:
- Advantages of having a Native— 7
- Comments on the remarks of the Bombay Gazette on the so-called hostile attitude of the Native Press towards Anglo-Indian— ... 8
- Comments on the utility of Anglo-Indian— 9

PART II.—Legislation—

Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill:
- Expression of regret at the Calcutta High Court having given its opinion against the— 13
- Suggestion that every Native Magistrate should be empowered to try European offenders under the— 13

Page.

PART III.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I. Railway: Want of conveniences to passengers on the stations between Colába and Bandora of the— 15
G. I. P. Railway Company: Advisability of effecting a reduction in the grain rates at present levied by the— 14
Mail trains: A suggestion for stopping the — of the G. I. P. and the B. B. & C. I. Railway lines at Dádar 15
Rájputána-Málwa Railway: Insufficient supply of drinking water at the stations of the— 15

PART IV.—Municipalities—

Bombay Municipality:
A condemnation of the introduction of the new drainage system into Bombay 16
A prayer for the discontinuance of the Contagious Diseases Act in Bombay 16
A recommendation that the quarters of the city of Bombay in which poor people reside should be thoroughly cleaned in order to prevent cholera from committing much havoc 18
A recommendation to the — for taking in hand the Tansa lake scheme instead of wasting ten lákhs of rupees on the construction of extended water catches at Vihár and Tulsi 15
A request to the Health Officer of Bombay to prohibit the importation and sale of rotten mangoes 17
Needlessness of the proposed road from the verge of the Esplanade to the Custom House through Tamarind Lane 18
Requests the attention of the Bombay Municipal Corporation to an act of injustice committed by the Town Council and the Municipal Commissioner 18
Want of water at the recent street fire in Tamarind Lane, Fort ... 17
Municipality of Chiplun: A prayer to the — for opening a charitable medical dispensary in that town 19
Municipal Board at Ahmedabad: A suggestion to the new— ... 19

PART V.—Native States—

Cambay: Comments on the Government resolution regarding—
The Gujarát Mitrá 26
The Subodh Patrika 25
Gondal: Comments on the result of the enquiry regarding— ... 26
Junágad: Slaughter of the Maiyás:
A prayer to Government for the publication of the whole of the papers in connection with the— 25
Comments on the Government resolution regarding the—
The Gujaráti 24
The Hitechchhu 24
The Indu Prakásh 22
The Rást Goftár 23
Kashmir: Disapproval of the contemplated appointment of a Governor for the administration of— 22
Native Princes who undertake a tour to England: An advice to Government to take care of the— 21
Policy of the British Government with regard to Native States: Expression of an opinion that the — is objectionable 20
Rights of the rulers and subjects of Native States: Recommendation for the appointment of a commission for the purpose of determining the— 21
Rulers of Native States: The British Government should encourage mutual intercourse between the various— 19

PART VI.—Berár Affairs—

Pleaders' examination: Suggestions in connection with the new rules for the— 26

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

RECEIVED 6 JUN 83 VIA BRINDISI

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 12th May 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do.	600
12	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do.	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
20	„ Daivadnyă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
21	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
22	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly	425
23	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
24	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
25	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
26	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
27	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
28	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	400
29	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
30	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
31	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*32	„ Karnátak Mitră[4]	Belgaum	Do.	200
33	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	3,500
34	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
35	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	300
36	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
37	„ Mahárashtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
38	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
39	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
40	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
41	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
42	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly	700
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Do.	Do.	200
44	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
47	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	250
48	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily	350
*49	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
50	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*51	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
52	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
53	„ Satyă Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	243
54	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
55	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
56	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	275
*57	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Weekly	200
*58	„ Shetakari	Poona	Monthly	400
59	„ Shiváji[3]	Do.	Weekly	200
60	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*61	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
62	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
63	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

[1] Marathi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles. [4] Contains articles in Kánarese also

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
64	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
65	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3] ...	Akola	Weekly	250
66	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
67	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár ...	Bassein	Do.	175
68	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
69	„ Vichárahil	Málvan	Do.	300
*70	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
71	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*72	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
73	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do.	400
74	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
75	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	725
76	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
77	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
78	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
79	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
80	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
81	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
82	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
83	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	950
84	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
85	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
86	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
87	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
88	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do.	1,000
*89	„ Dnyán Prasárak	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
90	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
91	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
92	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*93	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
94	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*95	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
96	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
97	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*98	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
99	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	700
100	„ Kusum Guchchhá	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
101	„ Nágar Udayá	Do.	Do.	300
102	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
103	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
104	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
105	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
106	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
107	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
108	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	400
*109	„ Sauráshtra Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
110	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*111	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
112	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
113	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár ...	Umreth	Fortnightly ...	62
*114	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
115	„ Vartamán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
116	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
117	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	300
118	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
119	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*120	„ Karnátá Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
	URDU.
*121	The Altáf	Bombay	Weekly	200
*122	„ Armagán	Do.	Do.	200
*123	„ Dabdabe Islám[5]	Do.	Do.	200
*124	„ Khádam-é-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
125	„ Khayir Kháh-e-Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly ...	300
126	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
*127	„ Muzhire Shawkatul Islám	Do.	Do.	200
	PERSIAN.
128	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

[5] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

The Arunodayá (14) of the 6th May says:—In reply to a question from a member of the House of Commons Mr. Cross is said to have observed that it was difficult to carry on the administration of British Burma on the lines followed in the case of British India, and that it was therefore necessary to leave to the Government of India the discretion of adapting the administration to particular circumstances. This shows that the present administration of British Burma is not in harmony with that of British India, and it is of importance to the Indian people that they should pay proper consideration to this circumstance. This matter gives a fair idea of the meagre information possessed by English politicians regarding India, and lends a colour to the supposition that Indian affairs are virtually solely directed by the Secretary of State. Formerly it was a practice with the Bombay Government to charge interest at the rate of half a pie per day on the arrears of land revenue. This was tantamount to charging interest at the rate of Rs. 7-13-0 per cent. per month, or Rs. 93-12-0 per annum, by a Government that now deprecates the levy of interest at a higher rate than 1 per cent. per mensem. This course was followed for many years, and when on one occasion the justice of it was openly questioned in Parliament, that House,—nay, even the Secretary of State,—doubted the existence of such a practice. When, however, conviction was brought home to them by adducing unimpeachable proofs, the Parliament and the Secretary of State denounced the tyrannical nature of the policy and ordered its abolition. They are, however, not aware of the shift resorted to by the Local Government to meet the above order of the superior authorities. The Bombay Government abolished the system objected to by the Home Government and substituted for it a more extortionate one, by which it was made legal to levy one-fourth of the amount of revenue due as a fine for non-payment at the stated period in addition to the revenue demand. This was a change from King Log to King Stork, inasmuch as under the new policy an interest of 48 pies is being charged on deferred payments, while only ½ pie was charged under the old system. It must be said however that such a fine is not inflicted as a rule, but Revenue Officers are allowed the discretion of resorting to such measures in extreme cases. This instance sufficiently explains how far the English public are aware of the details of the working of the Indian administration. The hold of the British Government on the Province of British Burma is not as firm as that on the provinces in India, and considering its proximity to a foreign power it is natural that it should be treated more leniently than the Indian Peninsula. If, however, such a policy is merely the thin end of the wedge of which India has had ample experience in connection with the annexation of her Native States, it simply serves as an additional proof of the ignorance of the Home Government of the drift of the policy of the Indian Government.

Says that the Home Government and the English public are ignorant of the general policy of the Indian Government.

In noticing the motion made in the House of Commons by Mr. Stanhope on the 9th May regarding the necessity of economizing Indian expenditure, the Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 11th May observes that the administrative expenditure of this country has latterly considerably increased. To meet this increase in expenditure the revenues have been augmented by resorting to additional taxes that bear heavily on the people of the country. The national debt has also grown and there is no prospect of the financial situation ever resuming its normal condition. It is therefore gratifying that Mr. Stanhope has brought this important question before Parliament, and that Mr. Onslow has expressed a desire to assist him in his good work. It is to be hoped that the question will receive due attention from the Home Government. [The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the same date expresses similar sentiments, and observes that whenever the question of retrenchment in public expenditure engaged the attention of Government, the mistaken policy of applying the sheers to the lower grades of the service was generally observable. There are many departments in which a considerable reduction of expenditure can be effected. A good beginning

Says that the Indian expenses need to be curtailed.

should be made by taking up the volunteer corps and the Public Works Department as offering a wide field for retrenchments, and the practicability of substituting cheap Native for the more expensive European agency should be seriously considered.]

Points out the evils arising from the present system of frequently transferring Govment officers from one post to another.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 6th May says:—One of the evils inherent in the system of administration in this country is the constant mutability of the men entrusted with high offices. Officers are sent from pillar to post without allowing them even breathing time. No sooner is a Collector told off for duty in one district than he is gazetted to officiate for somebody who is either called away to fill up a similar officiating post or obliged to go home on furlough. There is no continuity of work. When it is considered that many a province of the empire is equal to or even larger than Spain, Italy and France, it stands to reason that the person who is called upon to govern it cannot make himself even tolerably acquainted with the multifarious duties devolving on him till he is at least two or three years old in that office. The government of an Indian province is no easy task. It is more difficult than the work which a proconsul had to undergo in the glorious days of the Roman empire. In fact, it is no exaggeration to state that the varied duties of a Chief Commissioner or Collector in India are taxing to the greatest degree and have no parallel in any part of the civilized States of the world. When such onerous and responsible duties need all the abilities of a comprehensive and quick intellect to be mastered in two years at the earliest, is it not detrimental to the interests of the country to make interminable changes? In the very nature of things provinces would make quicker progress and thrive better were the administrative system to undergo some radical improvement, whereby heads might be enabled to continue at their posts for a tolerably long period to leave a permanent impress of their works. The people will then take a better and more lasting interest in their proceedings than when Collectors or Commissioners go out or come in every six or even twelve or twenty-four months. The longer the period that a District Collector or Provincial Commissioner remains in his district or province, the more he gets himself closely identified with many a work of public importance and utility he may undertake and carry to completion. His merit or demerit will be fairly criticised in proportion to the good or evil he may do. In short, he will be judged according to the fruits of his administration, and where the fruit is most abundant and productive, there the administrator has the best chance of earning the gratitude of a grateful people. Such are the general results of maintaining in one office for years together an administrator whose abilities and energies may have in the earlier stages of his rule made a visible mark on his province. The interests of the people and the Government alike make it imperative that he should be allowed to develop the resources of the province, exercise his ingenuity in opening fresh fields and pastures new, whereby all may be profited, and lastly, to endear himself to a grateful and loyal population by the wisdom and liberality of his policy and by the generous attempts he may make for their moral, material and political advancement. For it must be remembered that the more an administrator strives to attain these beneficent objects tending to increase the contentment and happiness of the people, the more he will be instrumental in drawing the bonds of union closer between the rulers and the ruled. It is to be devoutly hoped, therefore, that the Government of India will give their serious attention to the improvement of the present system of administration whereby the ends above set forth may be most successfully gained.

Advises Government to make a reduction in registration fees.

The Mahárâshtrâ Mitrâ (38) of the 10th May requests the attention of Government to the evil effects of the heavy rates of registration fees charged by Government. The avowed object of the legislative measure known as the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act, which is amply signified by its very name, is to relieve the agricultural classes in the Deccan of the heavy incubus of debt which has caused a depression in their condition; but it is certainly not intended to resort to fresh measures of relief and at the same time to allow other matters that contribute in no small degree to the indebtedness of the cultivator to have their full swing. If Government are in any way responsible for the unpleasant condition of the ryots, they must take thought of any changes that may be called for in their administration. Under the present circumstances a contract for a debt of five rupees entails on the debtor a preliminary expense of Rs. 1-1-0 on account of stamped paper, registration, copying and other fees, &c. Besides this preliminary expense the borrower is obliged to pay interest on the principal as also on the money borrowed for the preliminary expenses. All these come to about Rs. 2-12-0. He is thus required to pay for a debt of five rupees interest at the rate of nine pies per rupee per mensem. This shows the tendency of the law to involve the ryots in indebtedness, and at the same time to deprive them of the assistance of money-lenders, which was very valuable to them in times of emergency. If Government do not recognize the necessity of effecting a reduction in the rates of registration fees, the inevitable effect will be to compel all agriculturists to seek a compromise with money-lenders for the payment of contracted debts without having recourse to the execution of documents. It is however not desirable that matters should come to such a pass, inasmuch as such compromises are not calculated to assist the object of granting relief to the agriculturists. Under these circumstances it is of paramount importance that Government should effect a general reduction in all registration fees and should do away with the fees at present charged for giving copies of extracts from Government registers.

Suggests the adoption of certain measures for improving the wheat trade of India.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 7th May dwells on the necessity of adopting some measures for developing the wheat trade of India, and expresses an opinion that this is one of the sources from which the advancement of the material prosperity of the country can be secured. At the present day England has a considerable demand for wheat, which is met by exports from America and India. As however the American wheat sells cheaper than the Indian, it secures a larger market to the great disadvantage of India. The Bengal Chamber of Commerce, who have represented the matter to the Supreme Government in all its bearings, are of opinion that if all the money that goes to countries other than India on account of wheat imported from them flows into the latter country, the necessary effect will be that the agricultural industry of the country will receive a sure and strong impetus, a greater quantity of the corn than at present will be produced, labour will be sufficiently remunerated and the general condition of the country will be improved. The Chamber are further of opinion that the poverty of the Indian people is mainly traceable to the want of a market for the excess produce of the country. There is much truth in these remarks so far as some parts of the country are concerned. Though it is well known that in some tracts the produce of the soil is barely sufficient for the requirements of the inhabitants thereof, still it is no exaggeration to say that some parts are so fertile that they can under the present crude state of the industry yield an outturn that can cope with the demands of a country ten times as extensive. It has been made clear that the cost of production of wheat in America is twice as much as that in Bilaspur in the Central Provinces, but the means of communication in that part of the country not having been sufficiently developed, the cultivators have no idea of realizing a profit by exporting the corn to other provinces. Such difficulties ought to engage the attention of Government. There are two ways of dealing with the subject. Firstly, it is necessary to adopt measures for increasing the outturn of the wheat crop throughout the country and to improve the means of export, and secondly, to bring about a reduction in the present rates of railway charges with the view of bringing them to the level of American rates. The first of these questions does not present an easy solution, inasmuch as it involves divers complicated issues. The second, however, admits of a prompt settlement if only Government set about the work in right earnest. Practical experience shows that a reduction of rates eventually leads to increased profits by augmenting the quantity of traffic carried on by a railway, and it therefore does not appear likely that the railway authorities will oppose any proposals made in this sense. It is also necessary that the public should recognize the gravity of the situation and set about the task of agitating on the subject.

Expresses gratitude to the Government of India for directing their attention to the increase in the customs tariff of Mozambique.

In noticing the memorial adopted by the Bombay Mill-Owners' Association in response to the desire evinced by the Government of India to elicit the opinion of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce in regard to the modification made in the customs tariff of Mozambique, the Bombay Chronicle (72) of the 6th May observes:—The prohibitive import duties which the shortsighted Portuguese Government of Mozambique have imposed upon foreign goods under the newly modified tariff will prove a source of grievous burden on the exports of Bombay to Mozambique, chiefly her cotton manufacturers. The duty leviable on the same is about 20 per cent. in excess of what it used to be. The levy of this heavy impost appears to have been suggested by no principle whatever either of political economy or of fiscal policy. For while American and English goods similar to those of India and imported into Mozambique are left intact, the Indian imports only are declared subject to the enhancement complained of. Seeing this and also that neither Portugal nor Mozambique has any cotton manufacturing industry of its own, the new tariff cannot be said to be the outcome of a desire on the part of that Government to protect any concern in which it may have a national interest. The motive, therefore, of the foolish policy tried to be pursued by the said Government cannot be higher than the gratification of blind jealousy of the prosperity of British India. The Government of India doubtless deserve the warm acknowledgments of the people of this Presidency for the early attention they have paid to a subject that so much concerns the prosperity of one of its important and rising industries. They have acted with commendable promptitude in ascertaining the views of those immediately concerned with the business and likely to be greatly affected by the foolish conduct of the Portuguese Government.

Says that the European volunteer force in India is an element of danger to the country.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 6th May observes:—We fear the Bombay Gazette has not quite understood the drift of the opinion recently expressed by the Vernacular press touching the volunteer force in this country. What many of the Native papers have urged is this—whether it is safe for the Government of India to wholly rely in times of emergency on a force which is apt, in the whim and caprice of the moment, to be swayed by considerations more or less opposed to the object of its maintenance. It is all well to talk in times of peace of the value of such a force. But the raison d'ètre of its existence can only be tested in times of trouble or commotion, be it within or without. The Vernacular press sensibly asks whether a volunteer force of Europeans which assumes an attitude of impudent defiance and actually holds out a threat to the constituted Government of the country, and that too in a time of profound peace, is one that can be safely depended upon for the purpose for which it is maintained from the public funds. Is it politic or expedient that it should threaten Government because Government in its wisdom has thought fit to introduce a particular legislative measure which it considers necessary for the better admistration of the country? The real issue involved in the attitude that was lately assumed by the volunteers in Bengal and Northern India is this—whether the Government of the country is to be carried on at the behest of a few foreigners who are here to-day and may go to-morrow, and whose permanent interests in the welfare of the country are almost nil. Is the Government to be reduced to a state of imbecility by the terrorising of a handful of fire-brands and irresponsible men? Are these European volunteers to be allowed to sit in judgment upon the deliberations of the constituted authorities and to dictate to them what is right and wrong? Are they to be the sole judges of what is good for the Government of the country? Here are a couple of thousand men, so many drops in this vast and surging ocean of Indian humanity, pretending to set the recognised Government of the country at defiance, because they do not like a measure which it has deliberately determined to adopt on lines of statesmanlike policy laid down for nearly a century past. The will of these officious and irresponsible men is to be complied with as if they were the only persons for whose interests the Government of the country ought to care, ignoring the interests of the 200 millions of subject races! And who are these men after all? Are they not an irresponsible set of men? Do the cares of Government rest on their shoulders? Are they responsible to Parliament for the administration of the country? They come to make a living here to-day, and as soon as they have earned a decent competence to-morrow, they depart "bag and baggage" of their own free will and accord. What are the Natives of India to them? Have they any thoughts for their political and intellectual advancement? Are these the persons at whose behests a Government of order and stability—a Government that talks of humanity and elevation of subject races,—a Government that talks of Christian tenets of peace and good will,—shall be guided? Are these the persons upon whom it can safely rely in an hour of need? That is the question. The Vernacular press asserts, and well enough, that a Government that relies on such a defensive force relies on a broken reed. No doubt, when the volunteer force remains loyal to the core to the Government its value is great. But there is a dark side to the picture also. Bearing in mind the events of the last few weeks, and especially the grave warning uttered by Lord Lawrence, we cannot refrain from drawing attention to the mischief the force may do at a time when the Government of India has on the anvil a piece of domestic legislation which is imperatively necessary in the interests of the Indians but which is resented by the Europeans in the country, and when Government is at the same time involved in a foreign war. By all means have a volunteer force, but let the Government of India take care that it does not show the dragon's teeth which may at once devour it and bring untold grief on this country. It is to the abuse which the volunteer force may make of its privilege that the Vernacular press has drawn attention, and we cannot help remarking that it is no unmixed blessing, as the Government of India may fondly suppose, to have a purely European body of volunteers for which the Natives of India must pay four lákhs of rupees per annum. In its great mistrust of the Natives the Government is running a danger by going to the opposite extreme and maintaining a purely European body of volunteers. Why not enrol Native gentlemen of birth and undoubted loyalty irrespective of caste and creed? It must be remembered that after all European volunteers have no permanent interests in India. All the elements which combine to make the English volunteer force a source of strength in England are wanting. There are no permanent ties and traditions. At the best it is a fugitive force. Let them talk as much as they like about the danger of a mixed volunteer force, we are deeply convinced that in such a measure alone lies the safety of the British Government. It is a measure that ought to commend itself to any unbiased statesman who is ready and willing to look into the far future and to strengthen the foundations of the British empire in this country.

Comments on the suggestion of the Pioneer that the North-Western Provinces should be favoured with an independent Legislative Council.

The Arunodayá (14) of the 6th May says:—The Pioneer, writing on the question of the necessity of an independent legislative body in India, remarks that the time for the establishment of such a Council in the North-Western Provinces has arrived. There is no doubt that the appointment of such bodies is calculated to ensure a uniform administration of the country and to contribute to the public good; but the question is, how should they be started and how should they receive support from organs like the Pioneer, from men like Mr. Branson of Calcutta, and from Bengal European planters of the stamp of Mr. Cock? If notwithstanding the unobjectionable nature of the proposed amendment in the Code of Criminal Procedure which has been frankly admitted by various Europeans of liberal views, and in the face of the assurance given by the Government of India that only two Civilians throughout the whole of the country will in the beginning be invested with the contemplated additional powers, the Pioneer and others of that coterie have stoutly objected to the passing of the amendment, where is the guarantee that Europeans in England and India will not oppose in a body any measures that are calculated to confer independence on Legislative Councils on the plea that they have a tendency to imperil their commercial interests. If the Ilbert Bill has served to unsettle their minds to such a degree that volunteers have threatened to lay down their arms and capitalists have resorted to the intimidation of taking off their capital from the Indian market, there is no doubt that the introduction of a Bill proposing to confer legislative independence on the Natives of India will call into play their worst passions. If the scheme of local self-government had been allowed full and free play at an early date and the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill vouchsafed a safe passage in the Indian Legislative Council the people of India would by this time have shown their administrative capacity and thus proclaimed their fitness for legislative independence such as is now advocated by the Pioneer. Such a state of things would have induced the Government to seriously think of the subject, would have paved the way for a feeling of friendship between the rulers and the ruled, given the lie to the opinion that the English are swayed by purely selfish motives in their administration of India, superinduced a conviction that the English, though foreigners, are actuated by good motives towards India, and made the maintenance of a volunteer corps unnecessary. But the advent of such an auspicious day has been delayed by the action of papers like the Pioneer, and the above suggestion, emanating as it does from that organ, does not wear the appearance of earnestness and stability. The Pioneer moreover states that the North-Western Provinces have become fit for the concession advocated by it. It is not clear why the claims of this province have been advanced before those of others when it is considered that the people of those provinces are on the same level with those of others in matters of education and reformation generally. In the opinion of the Arunodayá, however, credit is due to the Government of the provinces for making the people fit to wield the important powers proposed to be granted, and the writer therefore prays that the Bombay Presidency may be favoured with an equally good Government.

Disapproves of the conduct of the Bombay Government in ignoring the claims of Colonel Grant to the Judicial Commissionership in Sind.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 6th May says :—Verily the Government of Bombay has lost its touch. It is daily going down in popular estimation. The attitude it has lately assumed in many a matter affecting the public is indeed most undignified. A few more instances of unreasonable obstinacy and defiance of public opinion, and it will soon render itself contemptible. We sincerely wish that better counsel prevailed at head-quarters to enable Government to avert that fate. Now just look at the latest instance of its neglect of public opinion. All Karáchi to a man has loudly clamoured for the appointment of Judge Grant as Judicial Commissioner in place of Mr. Birdwood, who is gazetted to act for Mr. Justice Kemball on the bench of the High Court. Colonel Grant has been in Sind for nearly fifteen years. He has twice filled most satisfactorily the acting appointment of Judicial Commissioner. His acquaintance with the character of suitors in Karáchi is said to be unique. There is a consensus of opinion that so deserving and respected an officer of the State should not be left out in the cold. He richly deserves the appointment. And yet it is given away to another on a purely technical plea which will not stand the test of argument or precedent! Is not this a grave injustice in the administration of the Presidency? We have every respect for the ability and qualifications of Mr. Candy. But we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that in promoting him over Judge Grant, the Government of Bombay has overridden public opinion and laid itself open to the reproach of being unjust to a meritorious officer. It is to be hoped that Government will see the propriety of righting this injustice.

Suggests that Collectors and others should personally hear the complaints of the people by going to their villages.

A correspondent of the Mahárashtrá Mitrá (38) of the 3rd May complains that the Collector of the district of Sátára does not visit even important villages in a táluka, nor does he manage to see the ryots and hear their complaints from their own mouths. The stringency of forest laws has caused great distress to the population of táluka Jávli, and it would have been better if the Collector had enquired into the subject minutely. How can the grievances of the people be redressed if officers like the Collector content themselves with the information derived from the reports of Mámlatdárs and others? It is the duty of such officers to proclaim to the public their arrival in villages, to appoint a day for receiving visits from the inhabitants thereof without the intervention of Mámlatdárs and chief constables, and to thus initiate the wholesome policy of giving a willing and direct ear to the complaints of the people.

Approves of the action taken by Government in the matter of destroying locusts in the Sangmeshvar Táluka.

A correspondent of the Bakul (16) of the 6th May describes the great havoc committed by the several flights of locusts that have appeared in the Ratnágiri District since October last, and expresses gratitude to His Excellency the Governor for ordering Mr. Vináyak Rangnáth Purandhare to adopt immediate and effective measures for the destruction of these voracious insects. Mr. Purandhare and the Mámlatdár of the Sangmeshvar Táluka have destroyed a large number of locusts and minimised the evil to some extent. The measures they took for the destruction of the insects ought to be extended to other tálukas of the district. The locusts are said to lay eggs about this time, and Mr. Purandhare should be employed on the special duty of discovering and destroying the eggs.

Complains of the want of vaccinators in Málvan and the surrounding parts.

The Panchánan (45) of the 6th May complains that notwithstanding the prevalence of small-pox in the portion of the district about Málvan, the authorities concerned have not considered the advisability of sending more vaccinators to that part. It is very strange that Government should force vaccination on unwilling persons, but should not care to send vaccinators where their assistance is needed.

Complains of the inconvenience caused to the people by the dharmashálas in Khed and Chiplun being used for illegitimate purposes.

A correspondent of the Bakul (16) of the 6th May observes that although Government have ruled that no European, whether a Government servant or a private gentleman, shall be allowed to take his quarters in a Hindu dharmashála or temple, yet on the 27th April the Mámlatdár of the Khed Táluka drove away the travellers from the dharmashála in that town in order to make room for the Postal Inspector, who on his arrival next day put up in that building. Even the Collector of the district sometimes puts up in the same building. There is a dharmashála near the Govalkot jetty at Chiplun built at the expense of the local funds, and yet travellers are not permitted to use it. A portion of the building is occupied by the agent of Messrs. Shepherd & Co., and the rest is used as a waiting room by passengers waiting to take the company's steamers. The municipality of Chiplun receives some rent for the occupation of the building by the company, although the dharmashála really belongs to the Local Funds department.

Makes certain suggestions to the postal authorities in connection with postal savings banks.

The Gujarát Mitrá (73) of the 6th May, while approving of the establishment of postal savings banks, recommends the adoption of proper measures for guarding against the possibility of commission of fraud on depositors. It is also necessary that precautions should be taken with the view of identifying persons that may be in need of withdrawing their deposits. It may happen that some rogue who gets possession of the pass-book of another person may present the book at the bank and demand and receive payment to the great prejudice of the real depositor. The Mitrá also advises the officers of the Postal Department to be civil and courteous to those who come in contact with them.

Recommends the grant of an extension of service to Major Probyn, District Superintendent of Police, Khándesh.

The Khándesh Vaibhav (34) of the 4th May notices with regret the approaching retirement of Major Probyn, District Superintendent of Police, Khándesh, on account of the 55 years rule. The writer dwells at considerable length on the good parts of this officer and on his ways of doing work by which he made himself popular. He also recounts the various acts of this officer that have received special commendation at the hands of Government, and requests them to grant an extension of service for four or five years to this deserving officer of the State.

Alluding to the sentence of two months' simple imprisonment passed on Bábu Surendranáth Bánerji by the High Court of Calcutta for contempt of court, the Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 8th May observes that the great excitement created by the case among the Natives of Calcutta appears to have arisen from the case having occurred at a time when much irritation has already been caused by the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill. If the case had occurred in ordinary times, no such notice as is now taken would have been considered necessary. The feelings of Europeans and Natives have been excited, and the comments which have appeared in English and Native newspapers appear to have fanned the flame of excitement. As Mr. Surendranáth admitted the guilt, he deserved some sort of punishment. Had the apology he tendered been accepted as recommended by Mr. Justice Mitter, or had a nominal fine been inflicted on him, justice would have been satisfied. [The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 7th and the Akhbáre Sodágar (79) of the 7th and 10th May express somewhat similar sentiments. The Bombay Samáchár and the Jáme Jamshed of subsequent dates say that the merits of this case call for interference by the Viceroy with the extremely severe sentence passed by the High Court. They also express their approval of the action taken by the various political associations in the matter. The Káside Mumbai (99) of the 9th May does not believe that the civilized world of the present day will approve of the sentence passed on such a person as Mr. Bánerji. Since the appointment of Mr. Norris as a Judge of the High Court at Calcutta no good feeling appears to have prevailed between him and the Native public; and it is to be feared that this event will widen the gulf at present existing between Europeans and Natives. It is to be regretted that the people of Calcutta, notwithstanding their knowledge of law, should have hissed and hooted the Judges and thrown a brick-bat at the carriage of Mr. Justice Norris. The Deshi Mitrá (88) of the 10th May also disapproves of the conduct of the people of Calcutta in hissing and hooting the Judges, and advises the Praja Hitavardhak Sabha of Surat to follow in the footsteps of the Poona Vaktritwottejak Sabha and convene a meeting for expressing sympathy with Mr. Bánerji.]

Observes that the sentence of imprisonment passed upon Bábu Surendranáth Bánerji by the Calcutta High Court for contempt of court is very severe.

The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 12th May observes that the imprisonment of a respectable editor for the crime of contempt of court is an infringement of the liberty of the press and a strong deterrent to Native editors from the proper performance of their duty. It is surprising that the Viceroy does not possess authority to interfere in cases of contempt of court while he has it in cases of murder. When the Governors of presidencies can appoint Judges of the High Court, why is it that they cannot interfere with their decisions when necessary? The Jáme severely censures the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal for not exercising his authority in curbing the Englishman, the Pioneer and other Anglo-Indian newspapers of Bengal in their unjustifiable rant against the Viceroy. The same of the 11th May observes that the argument that even the Crown in England has no authority to interfere in cases of contempt of court cannot hold water in India, inasmuch as there is no equality between the laws administered in the two countries, and expresses a hope that the Viceroy will not hesitate to exercise his authority for a modification of the severe sentence passed on Mr. Bánerji.

Says that the Viceroy ought to have authority to interfere with the decisions of the High Court when they are wrong.

Education.

A correspondent of the Bakul (16) of the 6th May requests that an English school may be opened at Rájápur in the Ratnágiri District. The town contains a large population and carries on an extensive trade. It is a táluka station, and the municipal and local funds revenues are large. These funds can well afford to contribute towards the maintenance of an English school.

Prays for the opening of an English school at Rájápur in the Ratnágiri District.

Railways.

Points out the advisability of opening a railway station at Sopára.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 6th May says:—A petition, largely signed by merchants, traders and other civil population of the town of Sopára and its neighbourhood praying for the opening of a new station near the "Nila hill" for the convenience of their trade and other purposes, has been presented to the Agent of the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company. Looking to the fertility of the soil of Sopára and its neighbourhood, and its vicinity to the Bombay market, Sopára must gradually rise in importance as the supplier of vegetables, &c. This town is inhabited by a large number of merchants and traders, but since the bandar of the place is now almost silted up, the inhabitants are put to an amount of trouble and inconvenience which greatly hamper their trade with Bombay. This difficulty can be easily removed by opening a small station at the above-mentioned place. The Company may have to incur a little additional expenditure, but that will be compensated for by the realizations from passenger and goods traffic. Besides a number of fairs are frequently held there, which are likely to add to the Company's profits. We think the prayer of the petitioners is very reasonable and should be granted at the earliest convenience of the Company.

Municipalities.

Prays for the discontinuance of the Contagious Diseases Act in Bombay.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 7th May says:—Here is another nut for the Government of Bombay to crack. The House of Commons has set its foot upon the English Act, and so far there now remains no doubt that in England at least, after nearly four years' experiment, lock-hospitals have been found to be a nuisance instead of a blessing. On last Thursday our Municipal Corporation took advantage of this conclusion arrived at in Parliament. Some members declared that the working of the Act had lessened disease, but a large majority adhered to the view held by the former Municipal Corporations against the Act. In Calcutta too the question has been disposed of in the same manner. The Government of Bombay ought now to give way. The case in favour of the Act has entirely broken down, to judge from the verdict pronounced against it by no less a body than the House of Commons. [The Bombay Chronicle (72) and the Lok Mitrá (75) of the 6th May express similar sentiments.]

Complains of scarcity of water in the hot season in Bombay.

The Yajdán Parast (118) of the 6th May observes that the complaint about scarcity of water is heard year after year in spite of the repeated assurances of the municipal officers that a sufficient supply will be secured, and in the face of the large sums spent upon the Vihár and the Tulsi water-works. Certainly this state of things is disgraceful and the Corporation should try to improve it. [The Kaiser-i-Hind (98) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Comments on the unsatisfactory arrangements of water-supply on occasions of fire.

The Rást Goftár (106) of the 6th May severely animadverts on the unsatisfactory arrangements of water-supply of the Bombay Municipality. The Rást refers to the recent fire in the Tamarind Lane, and says that no water was available for 2½ hours after the fire was discovered though fire-engines were ready to work. Nearly a kror and a half of rupees have been spent on the water-works of Bombay. With the network of telephone and telegraph wires over our heads it is disgraceful that a sufficient quantity of water was not brought to bear on the fire until two hours had elapsed. [The Kaiser-i-Hind (98) and the Yajdán Parast (118) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Says that the suggestion to lay down a new road through the Tamarind Lane should be well considered before being sanctioned.

It has been suggested, observes the Lok Mitrá (75) of the 6th May, that the portion of the Meadows Street destroyed by the late fire should be reconstructed so as to admit of free access to light and air in that locality. The suggestion is a very good one if the funds required for such a project can easily be spared. But is this not a project that will require a considerable outlay, and moreover one which need not be attended to at once? How many other localities are there in the city more unwholesome than the one proposed to be rebuilt, and has it ever struck the municipality that their reconstruction on the lines suggested for the Meadows Street will be less costly and more useful? It is to be hoped that the municipality will not launch into such a costly scheme without a careful consideration of all the circumstances.

Complains of the heaviness of the toll levied on vehicles passing over the Hope Bridge at Surat.

A correspondent of the Surat Akhbár (76) of the 7th May says that four annas are charged for a vehicle passing over the Hope Bridge at Surat with one maund of goods. This toll is very heavy, is injurious to the commercial interests of the city, and is opposed to principles of political economy. Even the railway companies do not charge such high rates. It would be a blessing to the village people and an encouragement to the trade of the city if at least one Bengal maund of goods were allowed to be conveyed over the bridge free of toll.

Suggests the substitution of a toll in place of the house-tax at present levied in the suburbs of the city of Ahmedabad.

The Hitechchhu (74) of Ahmedabad of the 10th May, in referring to the appointment of a sub-committee by the local municipal board to investigate the complaints against the levy of the house-tax on the suburbs of Ahmedabad, remarks that the levy of the house-tax is not in accordance with law. The Hitechchhu from the very beginning objected to this system of levying different taxes in different parts of the municipal jurisdiction. Its continuance is injurious to the municipality and the public. The estimated income from this source is set down in the municipal budget at Rs. 5,000 per annum, but the realizations will fall short of the estimated amount. Several houses are unoccupied and there are several cottages that can yield nothing. The house-tax is most unsuitable to the city and in vain creates dissatisfaction among the people. If a toll be levied in the suburbs of the city instead of this tax, a good sum will be realised and the people will not feel the impost as burdensome. It is to be hoped that the sub-committee will take this suggestion for what it is worth.

Native States.

Comments on the Government resolution regarding the massacre of the Maiyás.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 6th May says:—A very long interval has been allowed to pass between the occurrence of the massacre of the Maiyás and the publication of the views of Government thereon, and it cannot be denied that the Junágad Darbár has utilised this interval to the best advantage. It will however be scarcely fair to charge Sir James Fergusson's Government with injustice to the weak; but the discriminating public cannot get over the impression that the tone of the resolution is too apologetic and that there is a good deal of unnecessary special pleading in extenuation of actual guilt. It is unpleasant to contemplate the fate of the seventy or eighty men murdered almost in cold blood—much more so to think that their deaths remain unavenged. For all these reports and resolutions are not worth the paper they are written upon when they fail, or rather avoid, to bring the murderers to book. But horrible as the crime itself is, the preliminaries strike us as more horrible still, as also the revolting barbarities subsequent to the commission of the crime. We have tried honestly to form a judgment on the merits of the case, anxious to give the benefit of every small doubt to those responsible for this bloody business. But it is idle to infer that nobody is responsible for it. Who then is to blame? To accuse the young Nawáb is preposterous. He knows no more about the affairs of the State than did his worthy father before him. Nor can we directly charge Diwán Sále Hindi with the blunder, though the responsibility will have to be fixed upon him of all other Darbár officials. It is certain that had poor Gokalji Zála been living, he would never have suffered matters to drift into such a desperate state. And this not because he was a Hindu or that he respected the rights of the poeple to such an extent as to displease his master. But Gokalji was a man of more than ordinary intelligence, and his sense of justice was as keen as that sense in his Moslem successor appears to be blunt. Sále Hindi is at best partly to blame for the trouble he has brought upon his State and from which he has had a very lucky though by no means an unexpected deliverance. Next to Sále Hindi the judge must turn to his Hindu assistants. But these were mere instruments—they were there to interpret, as if it were, between the Agency and the Darbár. They were irresponsible subordinates, and ran little or no risk on their own account. The sibandi force with their Musalmán leader come in for immediate responsibility. But we repeat that the leader—a petty Jamádár—is not the blood-thirsty monster he has been mistaken for. The poor man is said to have done his best to control the demoralised mob under him. Taken at their worst, both Jamádar and men acted as instruments. Thus then the massacre of the Maiyás cannot with strict justice be laid at the door of any Darbári except perhaps Diwán Sále Hindi. So far as published official reports show, the Junágad Darbár has been guilty of a discreditable bungle for which Mr. Sále Hindi may have to render an account, if not to-day, some other day. But then who is to blame for the affair at Mandarda? We must here turn to Mr. Ravenscroft's excellent minute of dissent. The honourable gentleman has seen through the business. We entirely agree with the greater part of his minute. We think Colonel Barton, the Political Agent, is primarily to blame. He seems to have done all he ought not to have done, not doing exactly what it was his duty to do. We have made ample allowance for the position in which that officer was placed. But his best friends cannot deny that he strained his power to a guilty extent in encouraging the Darbár to bring the Maiyás to terms such as even thieves and rebels (which the Maiyás are not) have a right to resent. The Maiyás may have tried his patience as they undoubtedly taxed the patience of the Darbár. But we doubt if any other Political Agent in these days would have ordered out British reinforcements for a powerful feudatory against some of its recusant subjects. Colonel Barton did this! Then he had no right to sanction the despatch of the sibandi force against the fugitives before the latter assumed a practically hostile attitude. As a matter of fact, the Maiyás not only did not provoke hostilities, but had neither the means nor yet the intention. It is all very well for Colonel Barton to say that he could not foresee the result. He ought to have known that once the fiat goes forth from the Political Báhádur, who makes and unmakes Nawábs, there is no knowing where the strife and bloodshed may stop. That the Darbár frightened Colonel Barton into complying with the request to sanction the despatch is not impossible; that the Darbár made an unworthy use of that sanction looks probable. But in the eye of law Colonel Barton is himself responsible for the unfortunate accident, if that description of the massacre will soothe the official conscience. It is useless blinking at facts, and the Mandarda massacre is a hard, black, horrible fact, which no amount of friendly sympathy can whitewash. We are sorry to have no alternative but to hold the Political Agent mainly responsible for the occurrence of January last, for we have had an almost superstitious regard for Colonel Barton personally. He appears to have ended his career as unhappily as he is said to have begun it: he began by hanging so-called outlaws, he ends by having seventy helpless fugitives shot down without scruple and without ceremony. Mr. Ravenscroft deserves the highest credit for his generous defence of the victims: it is not every man, certainly not every official, who can afford to defend the dead at the risk of offending the living. We admire this manly regard for truth as much as we respect the outspoken and compromising condemnation of high-handedness in the most high-handed department of the State. The resolution under notice may, for one thing, put a stop to the employment of foreign mercenaries by small and generally mismanaged Native States. These ill-conditioned ruffians are often as much a source of annoyance to the Chief as to the people, and we believe many Darbárs will welcome their disbandment. Junágad is to be congratulated on its very narrow escape; and it is to be sincerely hoped that with a finer sense of justice than some Anglo-Indian Politicals can afford to show, the Nawáb and his Diwán will provide for the victims of that amusing little 'fracas' which has given free scope to Mr. Gonne's well-known talent for compromise where the Darbár and the Agency understand each other. [The Samsher Báhádur (107) of the 4th May says that the conduct of the Bombay Government in hushing up the matter is unpardonable. The Bombay Government have in vain taken the side of the Junágad State, which is not creditable to Sir James Fergusson. Though the massacre of about 75 persons has been confirmed, the Junágad State has not been brought to book for it. The Government of India ought to attend to the matter. The minute of dissent written by the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft is just and satisfactory. It is to be regretted that the Bombay Government did not act up to the suggestions made in Mr. Ravenscroft's minute and acted instead according to the suggestions of Mr. Peile and hushed up the affair. The Deshi Mitrá (88) of the 10th May also disapproves of the resolution and remarks that truth will at last prevail when the matter is brought before Parliament. Though Junágad has achieved success by spending money in engaging counsel to plead its cause before Government and by sending its Diwán to Bombay, the truth will be out at last. The opinion expressed by the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft in his minute is just. The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 7th May reviews the correspondence on this subject published by Government and expresses sentiments similar to those of the Spectator. In the opinion of the Indu Mr. Bápálál Máneklál was solely responsible for the massacre, being the moving and guiding spirit of the administration. The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 8th May and the Bakul (16) and Kaiser-i-Hind (98) of the 6th May also criticize the resolution of the Bombay Government in the same spirit.]

Makes remarks on Gondal affairs.

The Gujarát Mitrá (73) of the 6th May is informed that Government have passed their decision on the petition that was submitted to them by certain Hindu inhabitants of Dhoráji complaining of the oppression practised on them by the Musalmáns and Major Nutt. This petition was forwarded by Government to the Political Agent of Káthiáwár for report. After investigating the matter the Agent is said to have reported that the complaints embodied in the petition were unfounded. The Government in rejecting the above petition have also intimated that any further representations that the petitioners might desire to make should be made to the authorities of the Gondal State. The question therefore naturally arises that if Government wanted to leave the petitioners to the mercy of the Gondal authorities, why did they not do so in the first instance? Why did they ask the Political Agent to report on the matter, and after the matter was reported upon and the complaints declared unfounded, why did not Government punish the complainants? It is a matter of deep regret that Government should adopt such a lukewarm policy towards Native States. A tinge of the same policy was observable in the recent Cambay affairs, where also Government did not take any steps towards reinstating the aggrieved officers of the State and meeting the offenders with condign punishment. According to the information of the Mitrá, the recent commotion in Gondal was caused by the officers that left the State on account of their being found guilty of certain crimes. If such be really the case, these traitors should be unearthed and severely dealt with. Mr. Báwa Miya has already been permitted to prosecute Mr. Dámodardás, but it is not known why he is not yet moving in the matter. If all the dregs have to be removed from the State it is necessary to prosecute all the intriguers. But who knows that the real state of affairs is what it is represented to be from without? The Mitrá trembles to think of the future of Native States.

Requests Government to publish the papers in connection with the investigation into the alleged charge of poisoning one Mr. Johnson laid against the Kashmir Darbár.

The Arunodayá (14) of the 6th May refers to the acquittal of the Kashmir Darbár from the charge of poisoning one Mr. Johnson, and requests Government to publish the whole of the papers for the information of the public.

Berár Affairs.

Is dissatisfied with the reply of the Resident to the prayer of the inhabitants of Umrávati to be allowed to enlist in a volunteer corps.

Alluding to the reply received by the Native inhabitants of Umrávati from the Resident of Hyderabad that except for special reasons no sanction could be given for the formation of a volunteer corps of Natives, the Pramod Sindhu (50) of the 7th May observes that the Resident has not defined the special reasons, but they appear to be the frequent occurrence of disturbances and dacoities in the country. If this be the correct interpretation, it may be remarked that as the people of Berár have been disarmed they are unable to defend themselves from dacoits, &c. The police force is insufficient to check crime. Under such circumstances the starting of a volunteer corps is highly desirable. Recently the Rohillas created a disturbance at Vani and the Tahsildár had to leave the place. About ten months ago the Rohillas murdered an Inspector of police in a thickly populated part of the town of Umrávati. The disarming of the civil population has encouraged the nefarious acts of robbers and dacoits, and to remove this evil the Arms Act should be repealed. But since Government are not prepared to do this, they should allow Natives throughout the country to form themselves into a volunteer corps.

Puts forward the claims of Mr. Aitken to the post of the Director of Public Instruction in Berár which is to fall vacant in October next.

The Urdu Akhbár (12) of the 6th May observes that the present Director of Public Instruction will retire from 1st October next, and expresses a hope that the claims of Mr. G. C. Aitken, the Head Master of the Akola High School, to the vacant post will not be overlooked. Mr. Aitken has been in the Educational Department for the last seventeen years and has rendered valuable service. He moreover once acted as Director of Public Instruction for two months and acquitted himself creditably.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
19*th May* 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Administration of India: The Home Government and the English public are ignorant of the general policy of the — 3
Appointments: Disapproval of the conduct of the Bombay Government in ignoring the claims of Colonel Grant to the Judicial Commissionership in Sind 8
Bengál: Contempt of Court case: The sentence of imprisonment passed upon the editor of the Bengáli newspaper by the Calcutta High Court for contempt of Court is very severe 10
Customs tariff of Mozambique: Expression of gratitude to the Government of India for directing their attention to the increase in the — . 6
Dharmashálás in Khed and Chiplun: Complaint regarding the inconvenience caused to the people by the — being used for illegitimate purposes 9
European Volunteer force in India: An element of danger to the country. 6
Expenses of Indian administration: Necessity of curtailing the — ... 3
Grievances of the people: A suggestion that Collectors and others should personally hear the — by going to their villages 8
Judicial matters: The Viceroy ought to have authority to interfere with the decisions of the High Court when they are wrong 10
Legislative Council for the North-Western Provinces: Comments on the suggestion of the Pioneer regarding the grant of the boon of an independent — 7
Locusts: Approval of the action taken by Government in the matter of destroying — in the Sangameshvar Táluka 9
Postal Savings Banks: Suggestions to the Postal authorities in connection with — 9
Public Service: Recommendation for the grant of an extension of service to Major Probyn, District Superintendent of Police, Khándesh ... 9
Registration fees: Advisability of making a reduction in the heavy rates of — 4
Transfer of Government officers: Evils arising from the present system of the frequent — 4
Vaccinators: Want of — in Málvan and the surrounding parts ... 9
Wheat trade of India: A suggestion for the adoption of certain measures for improving the — 5

PART II.—Education—

English school at Rájápur in the Ratnágiri District: A prayer for the opening of an — 10

PART III.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I. Railway: Advisability of opening a railway station at Sopára on the — 11

PART IV.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad Municipality: A suggestion for the substitution of a toll in place of the house-tax at present levied in the suburbs of the city of Ahmedabad by the — 12
Bombay Municipality:
Comments on the unsatisfactory arrangements of water-supply on occasions of fires 11
Complaint regarding scarcity of water in the hot season at Bombay 11
Prayer for the discontinuance of the Contagious Diseases Act in Bombay 11
Suggestion to lay down a new road through the Tamarind Lane should be well considered before being sanctioned... ... 11
Surat Municipality: A complaint regarding the heaviness of the toll levied on vehicles passing over the Hope Bridge at Surat ... 12

PART V.—Native States—

	Page.
Gondal: Remarks on — affairs	14
Junágad: Massacre of the Maiyás: Comments on the Government Resolution regarding the —	12
Káshmir: A request to Government to publish the papers in connection with the investigation into the alleged charge of poisoning one Mr. Johnson laid against the — Darbár ...	14

PART VI.—Berár Affairs—

Appointments: Claims of Mr. Aitken to the post of the Director of Public Instruction in Berár which is to fall vacant in October next ...	15
Volunteer Corps: Expression of dissatisfaction with the reply of the Resident at Hyderabad to the prayer of the inhabitants of Umrávati to be allowed to enlist in a —	14

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

RECEIVED
13 JUN 83
BRINDISI

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 19th May 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayá	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do.	600
12	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do.	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyá Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	100
14	„ Arunodayá	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
20	„ Daivadnyá Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
21	„ Daivadnyá Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
22	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly	425
23	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
24	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
25	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
26	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
27	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
28	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	400
29	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
30	„ Jagan Mitrá	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
31	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*32	„ Karnátak Mitrá[4]	Belgaum	Do.	200
33	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	3,500
34	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
35	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	300
36	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
37	„ Mahárashtrá Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
38	„ Mahárashtrá Mitrá	Sátára	Do.	250
39	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
40	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
41	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
42	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly	700
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Do.	Do.	200
44	„ Nyáyá Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
47	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	250
48	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily	350
*49	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
50	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti) ...	Do.	200
*51	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
52	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
53	„ Satyá Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	243
54	„ Satyá Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
55	„ Satyá Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
56	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	275
*57	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Weekly	200
*58	„ Shetakari	Poona	Monthly	400
*59	„ Shiváji[3]	Do.	Weekly	200
60	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*61	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
62	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
63	„ Suryodayá	Thána	Do.	240

[1] Marathi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles. [4] Contains articles in Kánarese also

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
64	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
65	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3]	Akola	Weekly	250
66	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
67	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
68	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
69	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*70	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
71	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*72	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
73	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do.	400
74	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
75	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	725
76	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
77	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
78	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
79	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
80	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
81	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
82	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
83	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	950
84	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
85	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
86	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
87	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
88	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do.	1,000
*89	„ Dnyán Prasárak	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
90	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
91	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
92	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*93	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
94	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*95	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
96	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
97	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*98	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
99	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	700
100	„ Kusum Gachchhá	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
101	„ Nágar Udayá	Do.	Do.	300
102	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
103	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
104	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
105	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
106	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
107	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
108	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	400
*109	„ Saurashtrá Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
110	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*111	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
112	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
113	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár ...	Umreth	Fortnightly ...	62
*114	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
115	„ Vartamán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
116	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
117	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	300
118	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
119	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*120	„ Karnátá Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
	URDU.
*121	The Altáf	Bombay	Weekly	200
*122	„ Armagán	Do.	Do.	200
*123	„ Dabdabe Islám[5]	Do.	Do.	200
*124	„ Khádam-é-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
125	„ Khayir Kháh-e-Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly ...	300
126	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
*127	„ Muzhire Shawkatul Islám	Do.	Do.	200
	PERSIAN.
128	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

[5] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ā.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Comments on the policy of the British Government in India.

The Poona Vaibhav (47) of the 13th May says that it is a sad truth that notwithstanding the prevalence of peace in this country under the auspices of the British Government, the people have been reduced to a state of starvation. The reason is that our rulers are a commercial people and have therefore monopolized the three professions that are generally said to afford means of maintenance to the people, viz., agriculture, trade, and service. Though on the first view the agricultural profession appears to be in the hands of the people, still having regard to the general powers of Government with regard to it, it must be admitted that Government have the power of turning it as they will. The variable character of the assessment on land offers no incentives to the cultivator to labour for augmenting the fertility of the soil. It is sometimes observable that Government officers levy an assessment equal to the produce of the land. A different policy is, however, adopted in the case of European planters of indigo, &c. They are allowed the use of land on long leases free of assessment, while no encouragement is offered to the Natives of the soil for growing an exotic crop. This clearly shows the intention of Government to supplant Native by European agriculturists. As regards trade, the Indian people have not even the least concern with it, and the policy of Government is unmistakably in favour of depriving India of all commercial independence. The traffic by country carts and pack bullocks has already been superseded by railways. The gains expected to be derived from the export of the products of this country like opium, cotton, wheat, &c., are absorbed by Government by the imposition of excise duties. All machinery and building material are invariably imported from England; and trade in money deposits, bills of exchange and money orders has been taken by Government into their own hands to the serious prejudice of Native money-dealers. With the ostensible purpose of contributing to the happiness of the people the savings banks system has been extended to villages and towns. The Native capitalists have not the pluck and courage to compete with Government in these different branches of trade, while Government are not behindhand in fanning the flames of mutual jealousies between Natives with the intention of guarding against unity of action. Instances of this nature can be multiplied to show that Government have monopolized all trade concerns, and this tendency to monopolize bids fair to assume enormous proportions. As regards service, the third and the last means of maintenance, it is well known that Europeans have taken up all the fat berths that are available under the administration, while unimportant and meagrely-paid appointments are given to Natives. In these circumstances there are two ways in which the regeneration of the people can be effected: either that Government should take pity on the fallen condition of the people, or that the people should take heart and undertake the management of concerns that are at present undertaken by Government with a singleness of purpose and unimpeachable honesty. The Viceroyalty of Lord Ripon is a fit opportunity for Native capitalists to be awakened to a sense of their duty, and if they move in the matter they stand a fair chance of receiving Government aid in the accomplishment of their object. But if the people content themselves with their present passive attitude, they must count upon being reduced to the lowest stage of poverty and famished to death by the avaricious policy of Government.

Is sorry that Indian matters do not receive in England the attention they deserve.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 14th May is sorry that Indian affairs do not receive that attention in Parliament which they deserve. Various public associations have worked in this direction, but there has been no appreciable change in the attitude of indifference to Indian affairs which has been known to exist from very early times. Questions of very little significance relating to English affairs are hotly discussed, while those relating to India, though involving momentous issues, are summarily disposed of. The Indu cites half a dozen cases as instances in point, and says that the long and short of the whole affair is that India does not engage even a hundredth part of the attention she deserves at the hands of the Home Government. Such a state of things is very prejudicial to the interests of this country. The writer feels sure that if the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, which has been allowed to lie over till November next, were taken up by the Parliament without waiting for the decision of the Government of India in the matter and without heeding the unreasonable opposition of some of the mean Anglo-Indians here, it would be promptly disposed of. The same may be said of other questions. But what should be done? When can India be so fortunate as to attract so much attention? The English can never understand the real importance of Indian questions, and so they can never hope to discuss them in all their bearings. The only way in which the desired end can be secured is to admit Indian representatives in the English Parliament. Such representatives must be admitted, if not for the good of this country, for the benefit of England.

Points out the necessity for a reduction in the expenditure of the Indian administration.

The Lok Mitrá (75) of the 13th May remarks:—Although it may be doubted whether Mr. Stanhope's motion for reduction in the expenditure of the Indian administration will lead to any practical good, it is as well that efforts should constantly be made to call the attention of the English public to the subject in the hope that some good may ultimately result from persistent agitation. Everything, however, will depend on the energy and earnestness of the members of the House of Commons who take an interest in the welfare of this country, and it may be hoped that far from being disheartened by the probability of defeat and disappointment in their object, they will make their best efforts to press the subject on the attention of Parliament whenever an occasion presents itself, and there is no doubt that when once the gravity and importance of the subject is recognized by that body, it will not be slow to relieve the country from the daily increasing burden of expenditure and debt.

Says that the enormous Home charges need to be curtailed.

In alluding to the demand made by England on India for the outstanding dues of two krors of rupees, the Bombay Chronicle (72) of the 13th May reserves its opinion on the subject until particulars of the demand are forthcoming, but observes that the Home charges have reached the large amount of twenty krors. It is true that a portion of this sum is absorbed in the payment of interest on railway capital and loans raised in England, but the remaining large portion is of the nature of a tribute exacted from India for the British rule. The cost of the military depôt in England established for recruiting the European army in India ought not to fall on this country, inasmuch as the soldiers of the depôt are engaged to serve England. But India is dumb, and has not a sufficient number of advocates in Parliament to fight for her cause and secure justice to her. The people of India, however, need not despair of ever getting their grievances redressed, since if they continue to press on the notice of the great national tribunal the injustice done to them in this matter, they will ultimately gain their object.

Says that the claim for two krors raised by the Home Government should be met without additional taxation.

The Gujaráti (92) of the 15th May says:—News has been received from Simla that the Home Government has laid claim to two krors of rupees, being the amount due from the Indian Government on account of certain military pensions. But why was this payment allowed to lie over till this time? Would England be willing to pay a similar sum if it was found to be due from her? We have reason to say that such demands would be set aside by Parliament as being time-barred? As it is, the sum ought to be paid by India, but it is to be hoped that the Viceroy will see his way to meet the demand without throwing any additional burden on the people.

Approves of the reply given by Mr. Gladstone to a question in the House of Commons regarding the recall of Lord Ripon from India.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 14th May says:—We hear from Reuter's telegram that on Thursday last Mr. Ashmead Bartlett, M.P., put a question in the House of Commons whether in view of the agitation caused in India by Mr. Ilbert's Criminal Procedure Bill it was the intention of Her Majesty's Government to recall the Viceroy. Mr. Gladstone in reply said that he hoped every future Government would be able to secure the services of a Viceroy so admirably qualified for the office as the Marquis of Ripon. The Prime Minister's reply appears to have been very happily conceived. It is as witty and happy as the statement which the Marquis of Hartington made in the last Parliament when he characterized Lord Lytton, the then Viceroy of India, as being "everything that a Viceroy of India ought not to be." Mr. Gladstone's reply serves to clearly indicate the nature of the confidence which the Marquis of Ripon inspires in Her Majesty's Government, and we may further add that Mr. Gladstone's reply in the present case simply re-echoes the unanimous sense of the different Native races in India, who have already given expression to their supreme confidence in the Marquis of Ripon by having publicly adopted humble petitions to Her Majesty the Queen praying Her Majesty to allow the Noble Marquis to continue in his exalted office until the various reforms His Lordship has already inaugurated are in a fair way of becoming accomplished facts. We have no doubt that Mr. Gladstone's reply will be read with peculiar satisfaction by all classes of the Native community throughout the country. This circumstance leads us to predict almost with perfect confidence that should Mr. Gladstone obtain a fresh lease of power at the next general elections and should the Marquis of Ripon himself consent to continue in his exalted office for a further term, the prayer of the people of India will be cheerfully granted by Her Majesty's Government. [The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 14th May expresses similar sentiments. The Deshi Mitrá (88) of the 17th May approves of Mr. Gladstone's reply, and remarks that if all European officers serving in India were of Lord Ripon's stamp there would be no necessity for the British Government to maintain an army in the country. The people of India do not for the present ask for their lost kingdom, but what they want is good, kind, merciful and just officers like Lord Ripon. If this were secured there would be no end to the good fortune of the Europeans and Natives. The Bombay Samáchár (83) of the 14th and 19th May and the Vartamán Sár (115) of the 15th idem point out the necessity of observing the 18th of May as a public holiday in commemoration of the scheme of local self-government inaugurated by Lord Ripon. Public prayers should also be offered for the generous Viceroy on the same day. All political associations are advised to take the hint and to celebrate the occasion with pomp and eclat.]

Censures the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal for not taking measures against the Englishman and other journals for their rabid writings.

The Rást Goftár (106) of the 13th May takes the Bengal Government severely to task for their culpable weakness in conniving at the seditious and rabid preachings of Anglo-Indian journals like the Englishman and others. Is it becoming that such papers should be allowed to have their own way when a Native publication like the Bengali has been visited with an unduly severe punishment for indulging in language that did not constitute sedition but mere contempt of court? There is no doubt that the severe remarks in which the writer in the Bengali vented his thoughts were brought on by the irritation that was engendered by the scurrilous agitation raised by the Anglo-Indian journals, and the severity of the sentence is also attributable to the working of the same agitation. When such repressive measures are adopted in the case of Native journals, why are their Anglo-Indian equals allowed to stray away how they will and not checked with a high hand? Why should there be any difference between the treatment accorded to Native and European journals in the matter of irresponsible writings? The Bombay Gazette says, and says truly, that the Bengal Government are to blame for the unfettered course of sedition pursued by the Englishman and others. Mr. Rivers Thomson has by his passive conduct under the present trying circumstances betrayed weakness and want of capacity to face the critical situation. If Sir Richard Temple or Sir Ashley Eden were in office at this juncture, they would not have allowed such sedition-mongers to hold their own even for a single moment. The Gazette rightly raises the question whether such a weak Governor as Mr. Rivers Thomson cannot be ordered to make room for an abler administrator. It behoves the Government of Bengal as also the Supreme Government to take precautionary measures in time to check the disturbance which is being fanned by irresponsible writers, and to crush the originators by the force of law. If any of the Native papers had made bold to suggest Lynch Law as has been done by some Anglo-Indian journals, it is inconceivable what measures the Bengal Government would have taken to bring the offender to punishment. But as matters at present stand, the offenders are Europeans while the sufferers are Natives, and the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has been allowing matters to drift to a crisis either through fear of offending his countrymen or through a desire to favour their cause. [The Gujaráti (92) of the same date and the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 14th May make similar remarks. The Lok Mitrá (75), the Bombay Chronicle (72), and the Yajdán Parast (118) of the 13th May, the Varhád Samáchár (65) of the 14th and the Akhbáre Sodágar (79) of the 16th idem express similar sentiments.]

Comments on the Bengali contempt of court case.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 13th May, in writing on the Bengali contempt of court case, remarks:—At a time when the relations of the Native and the European population are so strained, it is deeply to be regretted that incidents should arise which are calculated to make the breach wider and to intensify those race antipathies which have unhappily sprung up between the rulers and the ruled. It is scarcely fair to say that the paragraph which appeared in the Bengali was likely to bring the Calcutta High Court into contempt. It was certainly calculated to bring Mr. Justice Norris into contempt, and who shall say that Mr. Norris' conduct during the short time he has been on the Bench is such as is not deserving of blame? It appears that the honour of a seat on the Bench has come to him much too soon. With ripening age he might have learnt to exercise greater caution and greater patience on the Bench. We believe the learned Judge has never breathed the serene and sobering atmosphere of Westminster Hall. He was, we understand, practising in a very modest way at Bristol, when he was suddenly honoured with a Judgeship because he had been a good political partisan and had rendered some service to his party. Ever since he has been on the Bench he has excited unfavourable comments by his conduct. His vagaries and extravagancies have been the subject of severe comment. His ungentlemanly reference to the ex-King of Oude, his treatment of a man who came into the witness-box with betelnut in his mouth, and his unjustifiable action towards a juror who did not understand English, are incidents calculated to lower any Judge in the estimation of the public. If then a man chooses to be guilty of certain vagaries, if he chooses to excite public notice by conduct which will be characterized by anything but judicial calmness, we maintain that if occasionally his conduct is inadvertently misrepresented and his action misunderstood, he has nobody to blame but himself. To charge a man with a serious offence and then to give him one clear day to defend himself in, is a great hardship. Mr. Bánerji had barely time to get an affidavit prepared. He had not time to make inquiries and to calmly think over the line of defence he should adopt. The question raised in the affidavit as to whether the Court had jurisdiction to try Mr. Bánerji summarily was one which, to say the least, is arguable. The sentence of the Court was not only severe, but it was intended to be exemplary and to have a deterrent effect. How far it will have that effect remains to be seen. We are fully convinced of one thing, and that is that if the Judges had simply accepted Mr. Bánerji's apologies and discharged him after a warning, it would have gone a long way towards raising the dignity of the Court. The Judges would have asserted the power they had without exciting the hatred of the people which they have now done. The impression on the public mind is that the infliction of punishment is merely the result of the rancour which has sprung up between Europeans and Natives with reference to the Jurisdiction Bill. The case of Taylor, who reviled a Native Judge of the High Court, and who for eight days after conviction refused to apologise and thus added to his offence by contumely, and who was afterwards released on making a half-hearted apology, stands in glaring contrast to this case. Mr. Justice Mitter's dignified protest does him honour. Mr. Bánerji has lost little but gained much in popularity, while the Court, we regret to say, in trying to assert its dignity has succeeded in completely losing it and has earned the odium of the people of Bengal. [The Mahrátta (2) of the same date expresses similar sentiments. It observes that as in Taylor's case the supplementary apology was accepted and the prisoner released even after the sentence was passed, the same course can be pursued in the present case even now. Almost all the vernacular papers of this week are dissatisfied with the decision of the High Court in this case and express sentiments more or less similar to those of the Indian Spectator.]

Censures the Bábus of Calcutta for their conduct towards Justice Norris.

The Akhbár Sodágar (79) of the 15th May observes that the Bábus of Calcutta have without cause created a great row and raised an outcry, and this conduct of theirs will, it is feared, come in the way of the bestowal of important rights and privileges on Natives. The conduct of the Bábus towards Justice Norris was reprehensible and was tantamount to contempt of the throne of justice. If they think they have a grievance they should seek redress by constitutional means. Englishmen have made Natives happy and prosperous, and it is to be regretted that race animosities should have arisen between the two classes. India is at present fortunate in having a liberal-minded Viceroy and a just English Premier at the helm of her affairs and all grievances should be represented to them. Lord Ripon has bestowed upon Natives more benefits than were taken away from them by Lord Lytton. Natives therefore ought to be peaceful and should direct their energies to securing the good-will of the ruling race.

Criticises the conduct of Sir Richard Garth in the matter of the quarrel between Mr. Branson and the Native solicitors of Calcutta.

In noticing Sir Richard Garth's interference in the quarrel between Mr. Branson and the Native solicitors of Calcutta, the Lok Mitrá (75) of the 13th May observes:—But so far as differences of opinion go, we have no reason to quarrel with the learned Chief Justice. Two opinions might be allowed on the question, but what we would wish to point out is that the Chief Justice himself having averted the threatened application to the judicial powers of the court, it was not quite seemly that he should be at so much pains to declare with quasi-judicial authority in effect that the Calcutta attornies were on the wrong side in the controversy, and then to impute bad faith to them, or somewhere among them, simply because a public newspaper put before the world its own impression of the general opinion on the subject. We respect the Native attorneys of Calcutta for the promptness with which they deferred to the advice of the learned Chief Justice. They certainly deserve credit for respecting public opinion so much that they declined to withdraw their resolution until the departure of Mr. Branson from Calcutta mitigated the general feeling in Native circles regarding his conduct. Sir Richard Garth appears to have respected their scruples, for the understanding ultimately arrived at was that the attorneys should have their own time to withdraw their resolution. Sir Richard would then naturally be offended if it should really appear that there was no disposition to carry out the arrangement, and the paragraph in the Hindu Patriot might naturally have the effect of creating the first impulse in an ordinary mind that a "sell" was intended. But Sir Richard's is a judicial mind, and is accustomed not to arrive at any conclusion without evidence worthy to be acted upon. It would have been sufficient, therefore, if he had publicly put the matter right by placing the true version of the affair before those who were misled by the representations of the Patriot, and allowing the attorneys an opportunity of contradiction. The Patriot and the attorneys too withdrew their resolution, and here we should have supposed the affair would have ended. But His Lordship was still not satisfied, and he penned a letter to the attorneys, which, to say the least of it, is extremely illogical, and couched in terms which good taste would have avoided. The Calcutta attorneys were surely not responsible for the impression which the paragraph in the Hindu Patriot created on His Lordship's mind, or even amongst the public. They emphatically denied that they ever contemplated an act of bad faith, and respectfully protested against any such assumption by His Lordship. But Sir Richard Garth, who would not convict the meanest criminal without some evidence to go upon, did not accept the word of the attorneys, or rather accepted their word with very bad grace, and without giving any grounds for his belief. Where, in the name of justice, is this undefined limbo? Where is this want of "good faith" imputed to the attorneys, except it be "in the clouds," to use a legal phraseology? Sir Richard simply repeats the refrain "somewhere"! We really think this insult might have been spared, for it quite gratuitously assumes that there are amongst the Native attorneys of Calcutta men base enough to be guilty of breach of faith, which the Chief Justice supposed had been perpetrated. If assumptions like this can be made only on the strength of arguments of the "Hoc tantum possum dicere" type, it will be difficult for any man with sense or self-respect to undertake the performance of an obligation of honour, unless he is prepared officially to prevent any person in the world from misrepresenting such tacit or private understandings. But this is exactly what the Chief Justice quarrels with the Calcutta attorneys for not doing.

Prays Government to revise the decision of the Madras High Court punishing the Shankarácharya for excommunicating a certain person.

The Poona Vaibhav (47) of the 13th May comments on the conduct of the Madras High Court in passing a sentence on the Shankarácharya, the acknowledged religious head of the Hindus, for excommunicating a certain person for assisting in the performance of a widow remarriage, and prays Government to revise the decision of that court. Religious neutrality has been one of the fundamental principles of the British rule in India from its very beginning. Nay, the British Government have pledged their word to preserve in their integrity the ancient usages and customs of the country. The deep root that the British administration has taken in the Indian soil is mainly attributable to this avowed policy of the Government. If when the English conquered the Indian provinces one after the other they had committed the impolicy of interfering with the religious prejudices of the people, they would not have found the work of conquest as smooth as they did. It is therefore a matter of regret that Government should pay no regard to considerations that have been fruitful of so much good to them. A violation of such wholesome principles is calculated to create dissatisfaction among the people. The conduct of the Shankarácharya in the case under notice does not deserve the punishment that has been inflicted on him. He was justified in excommunicating a person that acted in contravention of the Hindu law, and in the absence of any legal enactment prohibiting him from doing so it is simple high-handedness to punish him for it. The Vaibhav exhorts the Hindu public to move in the matter with the view of maintaining the position of their religious head.

Suggests a lowering of the limit of age prescribed for candidates for the Public Service Examination.

A correspondent of the Satyá Shodhak (55) of the 13th May requests the attention of the authorities concerned to the necessity of lowering the limit of age prescribed for candidates appearing for the Public Service Examination. If the limit of age has been reduced from 17 to 13 or 14 in the case of candidates for the Matriculation Examination, there is the more reason why the case of candidates for the Public Service Examination should be treated with similar consideration. Such a concession will facilitate the progress of sharp and clever candidates, who will be in a position to pass the prescribed test at an early age and will utilize the interval between the date of passing and attaining the age necessary for eligibility for admission to Government service in the acquisition of a knowledge of other useful subjects.

Complains that municipal officers and officers of Government in the Vaccination and Police Departments behave to Natives in an objectionable manner.

The Prabhákar (48) of the 12th May says that it behoves the officers of the Vaccination Department in Bombay to deal with the people with greater civility and courtesy than they at present seem to do. A case lately came in the Police Courts in which a vaccinator charged a person with assaulting him while he has acting in the discharge of his duties, and though the Magistrate, accepting the truth of the complainant's allegations, punished the defendant, still the circumstances of the case went to show that the conduct of the complainant in the defendant's house was improper. It is generally observable that Government servants, whether European or Native, do not act with Europeans in an uncivil and careless manner, but they often behave themselves in an objectionable manner with Natives. They do not enter the premises of the houses of European gentlemen without permission, while they not only enter the houses of Natives without permission but sometimes encroach on their private apartments, and if there are no males in the house they engage in conversation with females. This behaviour is very objectionable, and it behoves the officers of the Police, Vaccination and Municipal Departments to devise measures for repressing it.

Some of the grievances of the Indian cultivator.

The Samsher Báhádur (107) of the 11th May observes that as the public do not know what advantages result to the cultivators by the money spent from the local funds, the details of the expenditure from the funds ought to be published in newspapers for the information of the public. The village roads are full of dust and bullocks find it very difficult to drag carts. Travellers are tired of the dust flying about on the way. The education given to the sons of cultivators does not prove beneficial, for agricultural education is not imparted in village schools. The villagers have no great regard for the sort of education imparted in them, but if they find the training useful to them in their calling they will avail themselves of it very freely. With a view to the encouragement of agriculture it is advisable that books on agriculture should be prepared and suitable standards fixed for the purpose. Why do not Government speedily put into operation the Act for lending money to the cultivators at a cheap rate of interest?

Says that the decision passed by Mr. Cooke in the matter of the complaint of the inhabitants of Waduth is unjust.

A correspondent of the Native Opinion (10) of the 13th May quotes an extract from the decision passed by Mr. H. R. Cooke, First Assistant Collector of Sátára, in the matter of the complaint of the inhabitants of the village of Waduth regarding the vexation caused by certain converts to Christianity by using the landing place used by the Hindus for purposes of washing and drawing water (reported at page 9 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 14th April 1883) and observes that the decision does not at all settle the point of dispute. The very road to the use of which by converts the inhabitants objected has been declared by the Assistant Collector to be open to the Native Christians, and the latter have therefore received a stimulus to fight for their usurped rights. The contention of the inhabitants simply is that the Christian converts should be made to draw water from near the bridge as they hitherto have done, and to use the road to the river they have hitherto used. It is very strange that the Magistrate, without having regard to a long standing custom the force of which is recognized by law, should have arrived at a decision at once revolting to the prejudices of the public and calculated to bring a deep stain on the fair name of British justice. The people will not accept this decision without protesting against it to the best of their powers. For the protection of their religion they will sacrifice wealth and even their lives. They are even prepared to abandon their village. They will see if reasonable and adequate redress cannot be secured to their just grievances. In conclusion, the writer advises Government to study the lesson that history teaches and to think of the dire consequences that generally follow in the train of religious agitation. It is to be regretted that Government should, with the intention of favouring the cause of a handful of Native Christians, violate the pledges given by Her Majesty the Queen in behalf of securing the religious independence of the people of India. The editor of the Native Opinion says that the letter sufficiently shows the pitch to which the public feelings may be wrought up when their religious prejudices are offended, and advises Government to enquire into the subject-matter of the complaint. [A correspondent of the Bakul (16) of the 13th May expresses similar sentiments.]

Censures the Bombay police for not being able to trace the whereabouts of Káku Wádia.

The Rást Goftár (106) of the 13th May says:—It does not speak well of our detective police that Káku Wádia, who has committed such gross frauds on the Anglo-Indian mills, should still be allowed to be at large. The way in which the man recently defended himself in the High Court leaves no room to doubt that he is within or in the vicinity of Bombay. Certainly a man who is reached by his solicitors and barristers should be reached by the police. The delay of the police in laying their hands on the accused has created astonishment and even a panic among the public, and has given rise to various rumours and scandals. People believe that some rich and influential relations of the accused have been working to screen him, and they look up to the well known police of Bombay for the arrest of the offender and his accomplices. It is now time that Government should interfere in the matter.

Comments on a certain case tried by the third Presidency Magistrate in Bombay in which the complainant was allowed to withdraw his complaint without the consent of the other party.

The Din Bandhu (5) of the 13th May invites the attention of the Legislature to a case recently tried by Mr. Presidency Magistrate Ryan in which one Bohra laid a complaint against his wife for leaving his house with ornaments worth Rs. 600, against her father for abetting her in the commission of that offence with the view of contributing to the adulterous intentions of another person, and against two other persons for assisting in the theft of the ornaments to facilitate the escape of the wife. At a subsequent stage of the proceedings the complainant's counsel requested permission to withdraw the prosecution, which was granted by the Magistrate, who thought that the complainant had a right to withdraw. The defendants however urged the Magistrate to compel the complainant to support the prosecution or to pay damages to the defendants for the annoyance caused to them, but the Magistrate said that he had no power in that behalf. The Din Bandhu is of opinion that the absence of such power offers a nice opening for ill-meaning persons to injure the reputation of others, and deserves to be seriously considered.

Disapproves of the sentence passed upon one Mr. Joseph of the Rájputána-Málwa Railway for the murder of a Native.

The Deshi Mitra, a comic paper (88) of the 17th May, in referring to the sentence of two months' simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200 passed on Mr. Joseph, an inspector on the Rájputána-Málwa Railway, for the murder of a Native shoemaker, sarcastically remarks that magistrates have now-a-days begun to deal very strictly with European culprits. The spleen of the Native was swollen to five times its size! How can Mr. Joseph help it if such a spleen burst? Is it not hard to punish Mr. Joseph for it? Such justice can never be put up with! The people should therefore strike work throughout India and go in mourning for Mr. Joseph, unanimously adopt a long petition to Government and get him released! He will be very useful to persons with rotten spleens, for he is brave in committing assaults!

Suggests the appointment of a post master and a peon for the Náringre post office.

The Panchánan (45) of the 13th May says that a post office has been newly opened at Náringre. The receipts of the office are Rs. 30 per mensem. The duties of the post master are entrusted to the school-master at that place, but there are no peons to distribute the letters in the town, and the work is managed through the agency of ignorant and young boys of the school. If this be the real state of things, it is possible that important letters may sometimes be lost to the great prejudice of the addressees. The school-master is also said to be unacquainted with English. If the receipts afford the expenditure, why should not a peon and an English-knowing post master be entertained?

Local Self-government.

Says that the system of elections by wards is better suited to Sind than the system of elections by panchàyats now introduced.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 13th May says:—In Sind the ward system has been eschewed in favour of election by panchayats. But on reading the rules framed for regulating elections we are surprised at their indefiniteness, their meagreness, their inconsistency, and above all their unfitness for being practically worked. There is not a word in the rules about the representation of the Pársi or the Christian community. Both these communities are important and influential in Karáchi. As a matter of fact, the Collector of Karáchi divided the Pársis into two sections and allowed the Christians to elect a representative. The rules that have been published, however, did not authorize him to do so. No rules for regulating the Christian election have been framed. The actual election was made by a show of hands in the Frere Hall and the hands shown were those of Europeans, Eurasians and Portuguese—of masters and their servants alike. Thus the Christian community was given something like a manhood suffrage, but under what authority we are unable to say. The Hindus, on the other hand, were divided into seven sections and the Mahomedans into five. All the Hindu and two of the Mahomedan sections were subdivided into sects. The rules, however, provided for ascertaining the wishes of a section composed of sects, but not of a section not so composed. There is no rule regulating the election of such sections, and in the absence of any such rule we fail to see how three of the elections at any rate can be legal. The wishes of a section are to be ascertained through the sects, and the wishes of a sect through the panchâyat of the sect, or if no panchâyat exists, then through the committee of headmen. But who is to nominate this committee of headmen? The rules mix up sects and sections "with most admired disorder." We are told in Rule I. that a section alone can elect a member and yet Rule III. clearly contemplates election by a sect. If the sects forming a section have panchâyats of their own, their "recognized heads" have to nominate ten "leading men" to act as representatives for the purpose of electing a member. There is no provision, however, for compelling the recognized heads to consult the members of their sect before nominating a representative, though there is such a provision when a member is elected for a sect (cf. Rules III. and IV.). Thus not only sect and section but election and nomination are confounded with each other. The fulcrum of the whole system is the "committee of headmen" and the "recognized heads," and a distinction is made between these two without a difference. The rules introduce election by panchâyats, and yet admit the non-existence of panchâyats in some section of the population. Under clause 2, section 7 of the Municipal Act, the rules must provide for "the manner of the election and the qualification of the electors." This clause does not warrant the introduction of manhood suffrage among Christians and election by headmen among Natives. Serious complaints have been made that the panchâyats and sects were not asked to name their headmen, and that the lists of headmen were composed and the sects grouped by officials or former municipal commissioners without the least consultation with them. The first Hindu elections were nearly all set aside. The fate of the next elections is not yet known. We hear that the Collector of Karáchi concurs with the enlightened portion of the Native community in recommending the ward system of election for the city of Karáchi. The population of Karáchi is too heterogeneous to be compressed and squeezed into artificial sects and sections. It is moreover the most advanced population in the whole of Sind. "The movement of the progressive societies," says Sir H. S. Maine, "has hitherto been a movement from status to contract." The panchâyat system presupposes the existence of a solid and united body able to administer effectually the internal concerns of the community. But the advance from status to contract in Karáchi—an advance which few can deny—has extinguished most of these bodies, and introduced diversity of feelings and interests, division and discord, into those which still exist. The panchâyat system may under better rules and with more effectual safeguards turn out successful in Hyderabad and Shikárpur, but in Karáchi and probably in Sukkur it will be nothing but a failure. Elections must be conducted on a uniform basis, and not on two or more divergent principles in one and the same city. The European populations in Karáchi and Sukkur are entitled to a representative, and panchâyats are unknown to them. This system of election, therefore, surely cannot be introduced among them, and if it cannot, how can it be among the Natives in the same city? The ward system will suit both, and the sooner it is adopted the better for all parties.

Says that the Government nominations to the municipal board of Poona are faulty.

Referring to the nominations by Government to the municipal board at Poona, the Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 14th May says:—We have no doubt that some of these official nominees will prove an acquisition of strength to the new corporation, and that their nomination will give universal satisfaction; but it must be confessed that there are others who have no claim whatever to the distinction beyond the fact that they are "magnificent nobodies." We are glad that a defect in the elections has been supplied by Government as they have appointed a Mahomedan gentleman to represent the interests of that class, though we wish the choice had fallen upon some other more eligible gentleman. There is however one feature connected with the nominations which is very objectionable. Having regard to the fact that there was already one Pársi gentleman returned by the rate-payers, we do not see where the necessity was of appointing two more Pársi gentlemen on the corporation. The Pársi element is almost conspicuous by its absence in this city, and if the two families represented by the two nominated gentlemen be excluded, we doubt if there be any other Pársi families residing within the municipal limits numerically sufficient to have so many representatives of their class on the municipal corporation. It would have been proper, therefore, on the part of the Divisional Commissioner, who has been empowered to exercise this power of nomination, if he had contented himself with nominating Mr. Dorábji Padamji, and had nominated another Mahomedan gentleman in the place of Khán Báhádur Hosháng Jamáspaji Dastur. Next to the Hindu community the Mahomedan community has the largest number of people in this city, and it is really a pity that this important community is to be represented by only one member. In their resolution on local self-government dated the 19th September last, the Government of Bombay assign as a reason for reserving in their own hands the power of nominating a portion of the non-official members of municipal and local fund boards that in case the interests of any particular class of people happen to be ignored in the election by the rate-payers Government may step in to restore the balance by their nominations. Now if this explanation be true, are we to believe that the interests of the Mahomedan community in the city are quite safe in the hands of the single gentleman nominated? Again, we do not see whom the first two of the nominees, Messrs. Ráste and Sánglikar, represent, for it is generally known that they do not represent any one besides themselves. Among the elected members there was already a sufficient number of Bráhmans of position, respectability and education, and so where was the necessity of appointing these two gentlemen, who, we make bold to assert, would not be accepted as their members by any constituency in this city? Under these circumstances it would have been much better if in the place of these two gentlemen had been nominated representatives of classes quite unrepresented in the body. We may here mention as an instance that the Bania or the Gujaráti community has no representative in the body as now formed. To be true to their explanation referred to above, the authorities ought to have taken care to include as far as possible a representative for every important community left out. For the reasons given above we consider the nominations to be extremely faulty.

Comments in connection with Mr. F. D. Ghaswálá's election to the new municipal board at Poona.

In an article headed "The Disputed Election in Poona," the Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 17th May says:—We are simply surprised at the view Mr. Robertson, the Commissioner of the Central Division, has taken of the subject. Any one possessing even a smattering of the English language can understand, when he reads the Poona municipal election rules, that in order to entitle a man to a vote or to be a candidate for election he must possess any one of the qualifications (A. to K.) mentioned in Rule III. in addition to his being a resident within the municipal limits for six months. The rule is as clear as the noon-day sun upon this point. Mr. Robertson was not, however, content with this stultifying exhibition of himself, but aggravated his folly by recommending to Government the passing of a special rule,—and a rule with a retrospective effect be it remembered,—conferring a vote on persons within a radius of three miles!!! Mr. Robertson would not have looked so foolish as he does now if he had recommended that Wánowri should be included within the municipal limits of Poona. The privilege of voting principally and of right belongs to rate-payers only, that is, those who pay the direct rates. If the franchise is extended to others than direct rate-payers, it is so extended on the ground that if not directly, at least indirectly, they contribute to the local revenues. Briefly then none besides those who directly or indirectly contribute to the local revenues ought to have a voice in the administration of local affairs. Under such circumstances what right can persons residing outside any given local area, but within a radius of three miles thereof, have to claim a voice in the management of the local revenues of that area? [The Mahrátta (2) of the 18th May also disapproves of Mr. F. D. Gháswála's election, and remarks:—One is surprised to find the Collector, as well as the Commissioner, taking such a deep interest in the matter; for otherwise the Commissioner had no reason to ask Government for a special favour, nor had the Collector any business to take the responsibility of holding a Government resolution in abeyance. Mr. Gháswála, for aught we know, may be a very good, obliging, energetic and zealous man; but what of all that? We have energetic men in Bombay. Why not make the radius a little longer and get them here as well? We think the Collector and the Commissioner both committed a mistake; if they had recommended that the case of Mr. Gháswála should be declared to be a special one, Government might probably have consented on the ground that Mr. Gháswála was specially gifted, but the Commissioner wanted Government to lay down a rule which they would not do. Mr. Moore may be said to have set at naught the orders of Government conveyed to him in resolution No. 1606, for he has directed that the order be held in obeyance. But this is perhaps pardonable in an officer who likes to read a lecture even to the Government of India. It is not that he is insubordinate, but that he is sincere to a fault. The Collector has in this matter shown how very easy of belief he is; the Commissioner has proved how he wishes Government to make and unmake rules to suit his choice; and Government have shown that miscarriage of justice is an exception and not the rule. Should Government not set aside their resolution, they will only show that Government are blind as well.]

Education.

Makes certain suggestions for reforming the Educational Department.

The Dhárwár Vritt (22) of the 10th May says that the present is the fittest opportunity for making suggestions for reforming the Educational Department, and observes that the Educational Inspectorships are superfluous and ought to be absorbed in the Directorship. The Director has generally very little to do and can very easily manage the work now performed by Educational Inspectors. The Vritt also invites the attention of the authorities concerned to the necessity of increasing the staff of schools in proportion to the increase in attendance, and of setting aside larger sums than at present to be spent in the distribution of prizes to school boys.

Suggests the observance of uniform dates for the commencement of the May vacation in different schools.

The Gujarát Mitrá (73) of the 15th May requests the attention of the Educational Inspector, N. D., and the Director of Public Instruction to the want of uniformity observable in the periods of vacation granted to High and Anglo-Vernacular Schools during the hot season. The Mitrá says that the dates from and to which the vacation should be granted have not been fixed and the Head Masters have generally an eye to their private convenience in granting the vacation. This causes a great deal of inconvenience to the Assistant Masters and boys. The Surat High School was not closed for the vacation till May 13th and the Nadiád High School was not to be closed till the 17th or 18th idem.

Prays for the confirmation of Ráo Báhádur Gopáljibhái Surbhái as Educational Inspector, N. D.

The Samsher Báhádur (107) of the 11th May approves of the appointment of Ráo Báhádur Gopáljibhái Surbhái as Acting Educational Inspector, N. D., and remarks that it cannot understand why Europeans are generally nominated to such posts. What can be the reason of appointing Europeans instead of Natives to such offices when Natives are capable of performing the duties of such and even more responsible posts in a satisfactory manner? Such a policy is a slur on Natives and is calculated to increase race animosities. The Viceroy ought to remove this distinction and deal out justice to Europeans and Natives with an even hand. Europeans are given high posts, but the work is really done by their Native subordinates. Ráo Báhádur Gopáljibhái possesses a good deal of experience and is quite fit for the post of Educational Inspector. If he is confirmed in this appointment the Native public will be greatly satisfied.

Railways.

The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 15th May observes that it is stated that a company has been formed in London to construct the proposed railway from Hyderabad to Chanda, and a capital of six krors of rupees has been raised. The Nizám's Government has guaranteed interest on this capital at the rate of 5 per cent., which will amount annually to thirty lákhs of rupees. In order to secure this payment the British Government will retain in their hands the districts of Gulbarga and Aurangabad. The people of Hyderabad are afraid that the Nizám's Government will not be able to pay this large sum, and the British Government will then take possession of the two districts in the same way as they did with the Berárs, and this has created a panic among the people of Hyderabad. They also say that the late Sir Salar Jung proposed to introduce certain improvements in the administration at a cost of thirty lákhs of rupees per annum, and those improvements are calculated to benefit the State considerably. The construction of the proposed railway, however, will prevent the introduction of those improvements, inasmuch as the State cannot afford to undertake both these projects simultaneously. It is desirable, therefore, that the railway project should be given up for the present. There is a clause in the late Nizám's will that so long as the present Nizám is a minor no important steps shall be taken for the improvement of the State, and this is an additional argument why the railway project should be laid aside until the Nizám attains his majority, which will be in January next. Several people of Hyderabad also believe that the proposed railway is a military project, and that therefore the British Government are trying to impress on the Hyderabad State the necessity for its adoption. As there are no important cities or towns on the proposed line there is no chance of any appreciable income being derived by the State, and it is doubtful whether the coal mines at Chanda and Shargaon can be worked with advantage. It is also said that committees have been formed in different places to oppose the railway scheme, and that a large meeting will be shortly held at Hyderabad with the object of submitting memorials to the Nizám and the Viceroy on the subject. Nawáb Ikbáuddowla will preside at this meeting and influential citizens have promised to take part in it. It is believed that the memorials will be signed by upwards of a lákh of people, because two rich Nawábs have promised to obtain fifteen thousand signatures each. A telegram has been despatched to the Viceroy praying him not to give his sanction to the railway project until he receives the memorial. About fifteen hundred noblemen and other influential persons sent a petition condemning the project to the Regency Council, but the secretary refused to lay it before the Council. It cannot be said, observes the Jáme, how far these rumours are worthy of belief, but so much is certain that the people of Hyderadad have been misled in this matter. The same of the 18th May observes that though the illiterate people of Hyderabad are mistaken in believing that the projected railway is a mere trick to deprive them of their independence, still the British Government will do well to persuade the administration of the State to defer the execution of the project until such time as the people are convinced of the advantages thereof. The Jáme then tries to answer some of the objections raised against the scheme, and adds that since the Nizám is said to be opposed to it, it is advisable to wait until His Highness attains his majority.

Says that the people of Hyderabad have been misled in regard to the project for the Chanda Railway and advises Government to defer the execution of the project till the Nizám comes of age.

The Jáme Jamshed (96) of the 17th May observes that numerous grain bags are lying at several stations of the G. I. P. Railway for transmission to Bombay and new bags arrive at those stations daily. But as the company do not possess a sufficient number of waggons and engines to send on the goods they are lying at the different stations. This must cause great loss to merchants who may have contracted to bring grain within a specified time. Again, the rains are fast approaching and they may cause damage to the grain. The company ought to ask for waggons and engines from other railways and send the goods on to Bombay at once.

Says that large quantities of grain are lying at different stations of the G. I. P. Railway for transmission to Bombay.

Municipalities.

Suggests that members of the Bombay Municipal Corporation absenting themselves regularly from a certain number of its meetings should at once be deprived of their right of representation.

The Yajdán Parast (118) of the 13th May observes that only a month ago a new Municipal Corporation for Bombay was formed, and yet within this short period a sufficient number of members was not present at two of their meetings, which were therefore dissolved without doing any work. It is therefore desirable to rule that a member absenting himself regularly from a certain number of the meetings of the Corporation should be deprived of his right of representation at once. Such a strict rule as this will alone exact regular attendance from members.

Requests the municipality of Bombay to explain to the public the difficulties that were experienced in working the Panvel Brick Factory at a profit.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (98) of the 13th May regrets that the municipality of Bombay has not been able to work the Panvel Brick Factory at a profit and has therefore offered to sell it. Very probably the expensive establishment employed in connection with it made the bricks more costly than those to be had in the market. But if the municipality publicly explains the real difficulties it experienced in carrying on the works at a profit, some private person with the requisite capital may find out the means of removing those difficulties and come forward to purchase the works.

Suggests a plan for widening the narrow roads in the Mándvi.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (98) of the 13th May invites the attention of the municipality of Bombay to the desirability of widening and improving the roads in Mándvi outside the Fort. In this quarter of the town trade is briskly carried on and the buildings are very closely set together, while the roads are narrow. If the Corporation buy certain lanes for the purpose of widening them and sell the excess plots, the enterprise will be remunerative as happened in the case of the Elphinstone Circle. The success of such an undertaking is sure to encourage private capitalists to form themselves into companies and to undertake the widening of other roads on a similar plan. There is a large balance of the loan raised for the drainage works in the hands of the Corporation, and the Corporation ought to lay it out temporarily in the enterprise mentioned above.

Advocates the maintenance of the Contagious Diseases Act in Bombay.

The Din Bandhu (5) of the 13th May says that it will not be just to abolish the Contagious Diseases Act in Bombay simply on the precedent furnished by England. The climate of England is very cold while that of India is very hot, and it is undeniable that the disease spreads with greater rapidity in hot than in cold climates. The operation of the Act has produced good results in the city of Bombay, and the Act rather deserves to be maintained than abolished.

Complaints against the municipality of Mahád.

A correspondent of the Kesari (33) of the 15th May says that there is anarchy prevailing in the municipality of Mahád in the Kolába District. The sum of Rs. 3,000 raised for supplying the town with water has been spent by the president on local fund works; the landing place on the bandar has been sold by auction by the Mámlatdár; and the authorities are exacting the scavenger cess notwithstanding the resolution of the committee that no such cess shall be levied until public privies are erected in the town. The Kesari invites the attention of Government to the above complaints.

Native States.

Recommends the removal of Colonel Barton from Káthiáwár.

The Gujaráti (92) of the 13th May recommends the immediate removal of Colonel Barton from Káthiáwár as being urgently demanded by the public. The policy of Colonel Barton has been liberal to all appearances, but there has been much mismanagement and mal-administration under his regime. Every one of his acts as Political Agent was distasteful to the people, who were never so dissatisfied under any other rule. His policy was throughout imperial and the Junágad affair was the crowning piece of the whole. Notwithstanding the measures taken by the British Government to screen him from censure, it is not known why he should not be removed from Káthiáwár.

Approves of the resolution of Government regarding the Junágad massacre.

The Arunodayă (14) of the 13th May approves of the Government resolution on the subject of the massacre of the Maiyás by the Junágad Darbár, and observes that it is strange that the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft should have written a minute censuring the Darbár and recommending a reduction in the number of guns enjoyed by the Nawáb as a salute. The Arunodayă is further of opinion that the censure passed on the head of the Junágad police is also undeserved.

Says that Diwán Sále Hindi should be removed from his post and that a Council of Regency should be appointed for the good government of the Junágad State.

The Vartamán Sár (115) of the 15th May says that almost all the vernacular and English newspapers of this Presidency consider the Government resolution on the massacre of the Maiyás by the Junágad police as unjust. They think that no reliance has been placed on the reports and enquiries of the Political Agent and other officers. They all look upon Mr. Ravenscroft's minute of dissent as true and just. The Junágad authorities have undoubtedly escaped unhurt, but Government have taken no thought of the possibility of their running wild some time hereafter on account of such an escape. The Diwán of Junágad and his deputy and the Political Agent have indeed acted arbitrarily in this matter and are undoubtedly liable to punishment, and they should have been punished as recommended by Mr. Ravenscroft. The writer does not however consider the Nawáb himself deserving of punishment, for he is a puppet in the hands of the Diwán and others, possesses no administrative abilities, and is unacquainted with the ways of governing the State. As long as Mr. Sále Hindi is not removed not only from his post of Diwán but also from Junágad, the government of the State will not be properly conducted. Has any enquiry been made regarding the number of villages held by the Diwán, the income derived from them, and the extent of his property? The real Nawáb is the Diwán himself and the State is managed according to his wishes. Diwán Sále Hindi was and is competent as a police officer, but he is quite unfit as a Diwán. This opinion will be borne out by a reference to the files of the Gujarát Mitră and other vernacular papers. But when do Government attend to complaints appearing in newspapers? If Diwán Sále Hindi had been removed from the Diwánship as recommended some time back by the Gujarát Mitră and his place supplied by an experienced, learned and proper man, say Mr. Manibhái Jasbhái, the Maiya massacre would never have taken place. But it is not too late yet. The Diwán Sále Hindi can still be removed from his post and a Regency established. The Nawáb is so very unfit for carrying on the government of the State that it is necessary to establish a Council of Regency. If even Mr. Narsinhprasád were in the service of the State at this juncture, nothing like the massacre would have happened. But when will the Junágad authorities allow such good and accomplished gentlemen to enter the service of the State, so that the government may be placed on a better footing than at present? [The Samsher Báhádur (107) of the 11th May considers it wonderful that under the benign rule of Her Majesty the Queen and the administration of Lord Ripon the Maiyás should not receive justice at the hands of the Bombay Government and that the Junágad State should escape scot-free. The Bombay Government appear to encourage such a dreadful massacre by their conniving at the wicked act. This will have a bad effect on Native Princes, who will sometimes be tempted to imitate Junágad in the treatment of their disaffected subjects. The Nawáb and his Kárbháris ought to have been severely punished with a view to set an example to others. But how can they be punished when the Honourable Mr. Peile is favourably inclined towards them? It is said that when Mr. Peile was Political Agent, he expressed himself against the Maiyás and in favour of the Junágad State. The Samsher ridicules the justice of the Bombay Government and hopes that the Government of India will take up the cause of the poor Maiyás. Government ought to have taken thought of the helpless condition of the widows and children of the massacred Maiyás and dispensed justice to them. The Maiyás and their advisers ought to fight out their cause to the last and bring the injustice done to them to the notice of the Home Government. They should collect in a pamphlet form the minute of dissent of the senior member of the Bombay Council and the opinions of English and Native papers on the subject, distribute them amongst Members of Parliament and pray for justice. The Bombay Chronicle (72) of the 13th May is of opinion that the Nawáb, his principal advisers and the police must be taken to task for the barbarous act. The punishment recommended by the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft ought to be carried out. If this is not done the people in the Native States will have just grounds to question the truth of the assurance of kind protection and paternal care vouchsafed to them by the Paramount Government.]

Berár Affairs.

Says that Mr. Jatár should be appointed Director of Public Instruction in Berár on the retirement of the present incumbent in September next.

The Varhád Samáchár (65) of the 13th May discusses the question who ought to be appointed Director of Public Instruction in Berár on the retirement of the present incumbent Ráo Báhádur Náráyan Bhái Dándekar in September next. Of the two claimants to the place, Mr. Shrirám Bhikáji Jatár and Mr. Aitken, the Samáchár selects the former, and says that Mr. Jatár is an able graduate of the Bombay University, and has been holding since 1876 the appointment of Educational Inspector—a position second in rank to the Directorship. He has always been a trusted adviser of the successive Directors. Mr. Aitken's claims are inferior to those of Mr. Jatár. This post has been reserved for Natives, and a Native ought to get it.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
24th May 1883.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Administration of India: Necessity for a reduction in the expenditure of the— 4

Bengali Contempt of Court case:

Censure on the Bábus of Calcutta for their conduct towards Justice Norris in the matter of the— 7

Comments on the— 6

British Government in India: Comments on the policy of the— ... 3

Chief Justice of Calcutta: Criticism on the conduct of the — in the matter of the quarrel between Mr. Branson and the Native solicitors of that city 7

Claim for two krors of rupees raised by the Home Government: No additional burden should be thrown on the people to meet the— ... 4

Complaints: Regarding the objectionable manner in which municipal officers and officers of Government in the Vaccination and Police Departments behave towards Natives 8

Decision passed by Mr. Cooke, Assistant Collector of Sátára, in the matter of the complaint of the inhabitants of Waduth: Injustice of the— 9

Home charges: Necessity for curtailment of the— 4

Indian affairs: Expression of regret at — not receiving in England the attention they deserve 3

Indian cultivator: Some of the grievances of the— 9

Judicial matters:

Comments on a certain case tried by Mr. Ryan, Third Presidency Magistrate, Bombay, in which the complainant was allowed to withdraw his complaint without the consent of the other party... 10

Disapproval of the sentence passed upon one Mr. Joseph, of the Rájputána-Málwa Railway, for the murder of a Native ... 10

Madras High Court: A prayer to Government to revise the decision of the — punishing the Shankaráchárya for excommunicating a certain person 8

Police: Censure on the Bombay — for not being able to trace the whereabouts of Káku Wádia 9

Postal matters: A suggestion for the appointment of a post master and a peon for the Náringre Post Office 10

Public Service Examination: A suggestion for lowering the limit of age prescribed for candidates for the— 8

Rabid writings: Censure on the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal for not taking measures against the Englishman and other journals for their— 5

Recall of Lord Ripon from India: Approval of the reply given by Mr. Gladstone to a question in the House of Commons regarding the—... 4

PART II.—Local Self-government—

Elections by wards: The system of — is better suited to Sind than the system of elections by panchávats now introduced 10

Municipal Board of Poona:

Comments in connection with Mr. F. D. Ghásválá's election to the new— 12

The Government nominations to the new — are faulty 11

PART III.—Education—

Appointments: A prayer for the confirmation of Ráo Báhádur Gopáljibhái Surbhái as Educational Inspector, N. D. 13

Educational Department: Suggestions for reforming the—... ... 13

May vacation: A suggestion for the observance of uniform dates for the commencement of the — in different schools 13

PART IV.—Railways—

Chanda Railway: An observation to the effect that the people of Hyderabad have been misled in regard to the project for the — and an advice to Government to defer the execution of the project until the Nizám comes of age 14

G. I. P. Railway: A complaint regarding large quantities of grain lying at different stations of the — for transmission to Bombay ... 14

Page.

PART V.—Municipalities—

Bombay Municipal Corporation: Members of the—absenting themselves regularly from a certain number of meetings of that body should be at once deprived of their right of representation 15

Bombay Municipality:

Advocacy of the maintenance of the Contagious Diseases Act in Bombay 15

A request to the—to explain to the public the difficulties that were experienced in working the Panvel Brick Factory at a profit ... 15

Suggestion of a plan for widening the narrow roads in Mándvi ... 15

Mahád Municipality: Complaints against the— 15

PART VI.—Native States—

Junágad: Massacre of the Maiyás:

Approval of the Government Resolution regarding the— ... 16

Diwán Sále Hindi should be removed from his post and a Council of Regency should be appointed for the good government of the—State 16

Káthiáwár: A recommendation for the removal of Colonel Barton from—. 15

PART VI.—Berár Affairs—

Appointments: Mr. Jatár should be appointed Director of Public Instruction in Berár on the retirement of the present incumbent in September next 17

RECEIVED
19 JUN 83
VIA BRINDISI

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 26th May 1883.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayá	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Do.	600
12	„ Urdu Akhbár	Akola	Do.	280[1] / 160[2]
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyá Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	100
14	„ Arunodayá	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[3]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
20	„ Daivadnyá Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
21	„ Daivadnyá Samáchár	Do.	Do. ...	500
22	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Weekly	425
23	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
24	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
25	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
26	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
27	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
28	„ Israel[3]	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	400
29	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
30	„ Jagan Mitrá	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
31	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*32	„ Karnátak Mitrá[4]	Belgaum	Do.	200
33	„ Kesari	Poona	Do.	3,500
34	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
35	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	300
36	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
37	„ Mahárashtrá Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
38	„ Mahárashtrá Mitrá	Sátára	Do.	250
39	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
40	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
41	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
42	„ Nibandh Mála	Poona	Monthly	700
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Do.	Do.	200
44	„ Nyáyá Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
47	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Do.	250
48	„ Prabhákar[3]	Bombay	Daily	350
*49	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
50	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*51	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
52	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
53	„ Satyá Prakásh	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	243
54	„ Satyá Sadan	Alibág	Weekly	400
55	„ Satyá Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
56	„ Satyavádi	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	275
*57	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Weekly	200
*58	„ Shetákari	Poona	Monthly	400
59	„ Shiváji[3]	Do.	Weekly	200
60	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*61	„ Srihtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
62	„ Suryakánt	Kilichpur	Do.	150
63	„ Suryodayá	Thána	Do.	240

[1] Marathi portion. [2] English portion. [3] Frequently admits English articles. [4] Contains articles in Kánarese also

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
64	The Svadesh Mitrá	Bombay	Tri-weekly ...	600
65	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[3] ...	Akola	Weekly	250
66	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
67	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár ...	Bassein	Do.	175
68	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
69	„ Vichárshá	Málvan	Do.	300
*70	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
71	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*72	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
73	„ Gujarát Mitrá	Surat	Do.	400
74	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
75	„ Lok Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	800
76	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
77	„ Suryá Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
78	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
79	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
80	„ A'ryá Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
81	„ A'ryá Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
82	„ Bombay Punch	Do.	Weekly	500
83	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
84	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
85	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
86	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
87	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
88	„ Deshi Mitrá	Surat	Do.	1,000
*89	„ Dnyán Prasárak	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
90	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
91	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
92	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*93	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
94	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*95	„ Hitopadeshak Ratná	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
96	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
97	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*98	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
99	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly ...	700
100	„ Kusum Guchchhá	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
101	„ Nágar Udayá	Do.	Do.	300
102	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
103	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
104	„ Nyáyá Prakásh	Surat	Weekly	200
105	„ Pársi Punch	Bombay	Do.	225
106	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
107	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
108	„ Satyá Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	400
*109	„ Saurashtra Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
110	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*111	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
112	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
113	„ Tatwá Dnyán ane Dákor Samáchár ...	Umreth	Fortnightly ...	62
*114	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly ...	200
115	„ Vartamán Sár	Surat	Weekly	200
116	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
117	„ Vidya Mitrá	Bombay	Do.	300
118	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
119	The Chandrodayá	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*120	„ Karnátá Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
	URDU.
*121	The Altáf	Bombay	Weekly	200
*122	„ Armagán	Do.	Do.	200
*123	„ Dabdabe Islám[5]	Do.	Do.	200
*124	„ Khádam-é-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
125	„ Khayir Kháh-e-Islám	Do.	Tri-monthly ...	300
126	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
*127	„ Muzhire Shawkatul Islám	Do.	Do.	200
	PERSIAN.
128	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300

[3] Frequently admits English articles.

[5] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or ā) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Points out the necessity of curtailing the public expenditure of India.

